One of the ablest papers read at the convention was by Mr. Raab, the Superintendent of Education of Illinois. From Saratoga many of those who attended the convention went to attend the Educational Institute which is to be held at the White Mountains. Two thousand delegates are expected to be present, among whom are some of our leading educators, Gen'l John Eaton, Dr. William T. Harris, Mr. Bicknell, president of the Association, Dr. Orcutt, and others. Concert Hall was well filled with drawings sent from various schools of the country, which would surprise most people with the progress that that art is making among our school children. An English gentleman, Mr. Mather, from Manchester, gave an account of evening schools established in that city for teaching boys to draw, which was infinitely better than that gross imposition upon the workmen, called Odd-fellowship, which was gotten up by Manchester bosses to keep their employees in subjection.

The convention has been very interesting, and is full of promise as an institution of the country.

SECTS AND SECTISM.—Bro. R. W. Lyman of Arcade, N. Y., is grieved by a letter from the editor to Bro. Joseph Travis of the Free Methodist. He thinks the effect of that letter, "baneful and damning upon the world." We are sorry to grieve so good a man. We abhor sect and sectism as much as he does. The editor of the Cynosure never had any sectarianism or any negro hatred to repent of. When we joined a Congregational church at 17 or 18 years of age, two years after experiencing the new birth by faith in Christ, we joined the whole church of Christ on earth; all who "profess and call themselves Christians." We have steadily "hewed to that line" ever since. Wherever we have since found a living faith in Christ, we have found and hailed a Christian brother. We agree with our brother as to the wrong of sectarianism, but our remedy is,

1. We belong to a simple church of Christ, without sectarian name or designation.

2. We commune with all Christians in the Lord's Supper who will permit us to do so, and love them as they seem to love Christ.

3. We teach that Christ is not "divided," and with John D. Montfort, D.D., of the Presbyter and Herald, Cincinnati, we hold and teach that the names of the sects and the things they represent must be laid aside before Christ reigns on earth.

BRO. GAULT'S PLAN of organic church union has a place elsewhere. Though bordering on the region of topics foreign to the Cynosure, the candor of the suggestion need not provoke controversy. Some considerations which may not have occurred to Bro. Gault are these:

Our government is a representative Republic in reference to its legislative and executive capacity; when we come to the judicial, our jury system provides for the trial of every case by a man's neighbors and peers. The Presbyterian system of church courts differs materially as we understand it, both legislative and judicial functions being exercised by the same body. The New Testament discipline given by Christ (Matt. 18: 15–17) is something much simpler. But the union of all Christians in form of church government or worship is not the end of religion, it may never be accomplished by the church militant. What we need is the spiritual union in Christ. When this is made perfect the other questions will adjust themselves, or fade out entirely. If this be the end we seek, whatever may be our sect name, God will be well pleased and we shall not labor in vain.

THE OBERLIN JUBILEE was attended by Rev. C. C. Foote of Detroit, who had prepared a brief address to be delivered during the anniversary, a privilege which his relation to the institution justified, and which the arrangements allowed. He found such an army of talent and scholarship from all parts of the country that he was himself confined to a few minutes. Nevertheless along with Bro. Burr he distributed thousands of pamphlets and tracts which will go everywhere testifying for a neglected truth. The address he hopes will reach many for whom it was originally intended through these columns. May God speed it to eye and heart.

—A business letter from Bro. E. D. Bailey, New England Secretary, says that Mrs. B. is slowly gaining in strength but is not able to leave Dorset, Vermont, and may not be for weeks; but the hope of her recovery, we are happy to learn, is good. The letter also conveys the sad news of the death of Bro. George H. Williams of Putnam, a contributor to the Cynosure, the Christian Witness, and the New England American, a holy man, beloved of all good men. He died very suddenly, though not unexpectedly, for on the very morning of his death he wrote and mailed a letter to Bro. Bailey, requesting an immediate visit. The brethren in Connecticut have lost in him one of the best and bravest of their number.

—Bro. A. H. Springstein, of Pontiac, Michigan, is holding a series of meetings at Detroit. He is, writes a friend, "making it lively for the craft."

—Miss Lillie Honeywell, grand daughter of that most earnest of reformers, Enoch Honeywell of Altay, N. Y., was awarded the first prize in an oratorical contest at Hedding College, Abingdon, Ill., lately.

—Gov. Butler having in his speech at Williams College commencement spoken highly of revealed religion, the Baptist Weekly quotes the passage with the triumphant comment that Butler was brought up in a Baptist college and hence his adherence to orthodox principles. Now, it cannot be denied that it would require thorough drill to keep a right conviction of Christianity sound through thirty-three degrees of Freemasonry; but if it did so much as this, why did it not keep him out of the lodge altogether and the thousand other pranks that have been laid to Butler's account?

THE WASHINGTON BUILDING.

The annual business meeting of the N. C. A. was not largely but fairly attended. No signs of compromise were shown, and no disposition to abate efforts for the extermination of the lodge appeared. The presence of friends from abroad was an inspiration, and the speech in Farwell Hall was a fitting close to the day's labors. The approach to Washington, and the entrance secured there, was very briefly but favorably considered, and received the commendation of all who alluded to it. There seems to be but one opinion among friends, and that is, to go forward, while our opponents show a concern and earnest solicitude least the movement should prove a success. Bro. Hinman's published communications and his private correspondence show the importance of the point, and the absolute necessity of holding it with a firm hand. Friends are expressing their appreciation of this undertaking by a reasonable degree of liberality, but they should not forget that it requires a goodly number of small contributions to aggregate seven thousand dollars. I have recently paid $88.39 semi-annual tax and $146.25 semi-annual interest on the unpaid principle. I hope between Sept. 1st and 10th to reduce the amount materially on which interest is paid, and to rent rooms so that in future interest will be diminished and receipts increased. The amount paid will of course depend upon the amount contributed.

J. P. STODDARD.

PROF. E. G. PAINE of Wasioja Seminary, Minnesota, called at this office on his way to Bloomington, Ill., where he is to spend a short time in special studies preparing for the next year of the institution. The commencement at Wasioja passed off this year very pleasantly, the feature of excellence being the address of Prof. L. N. Stratton of the Theological Seminary, Wheaton, on the "Enthusiasm of Genius." It is enough to say that the address gave universal satisfaction, even those opposed to the principles enunciated being forced to give unwilling praise. The next term opens September 5th, and from the present outlook there have seldom or never been so hopeful indications for a prosperous year. For information address Prof. E. G. Paine, Wasioja, Minn.

—The total number of students during the past year at Oberlin was 1,493. This is 122 more than in any preceding year, and shows an increase of over 55 per cent. in three years. They come from fifty-three States, Territories and foreign countries—Europe, Asia and Africa. The total number of graduates is 2,047.

—Col. Geo. R. Clarke, of the Pacific Garden Mission, Chicago, gave an address before the Y. M. C. A. of Milton College, Wis., during the late anniversary of that institution, from the text, "For we are laborers together with God."

The corner stone of the new building for the University of Vermont at Bennington, which was originally laid by Lafayette in 1825, was relaid with Masonic ceremonies on Tuesday, the 26th ult. We are at a loss to see why the order of Freemasons should be called in to officiate on such an occasion. They have no special relation to education, and it is equally well known that they have no relation to the practical art of stone-cutting. Besides, they are a sort of religious organization whose teachings and ceremonies are exceedingly offensive to a large portion of the citizens in all our States. We do not invite Romish priests to officiate in their sectarian character in ceremonies in which all the people are equally interested. The employment of Freemasons on such occasions is equally unreasonable, and ought never to pass without protest.—Christian Statesman.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

TWO GOVERNMENTS.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

The magnificent building that stands on Capitol Hill is supposed to be the seat of government. There annually assembles our national Congress, and its embodied wisdom is supposed to be national law. The President of the United States and all officers both State and National, are sworn to conform to and execute its mandates.

But there is another government that shapes our legislation, controls the execution of our laws and lays its strong hand on the pulpit and the press. Once slavery ruled the nation. It dictated all legislation and controlled all appointments. Slowly and painfully did the nation awake to struggle with that dreadful incubus, and it lives to-day, only because by the Divine blessing its dominion was overthrown.

The power of the secret lodges is less bold and defiant, but not less potential and malignant. It has its seat in the Masonic Temple on the corner of 9th and F streets, and its Most Puissant Sovereign Grand Commander has his office in the same block from which I write. Nowhere else is its reign more apparent and more harmful.

Just as slavery once muzzled the press and the pulpit of this District, so that no man dared speak or write what he thought, so to-day with scarcely an exception men fear and tremble before the lodge, and if they speak at all it is only in its praise. It asks and receives from the National Congress a charter for a Masonic Association and proceeds to erect its Temple and transact an immense business and yet denies to the power which created it all right of control or inspection. It enacts a hidden code of laws, and swears its members to absolute obedience, and through its secret, far-reaching power it selects about five-sixths of all the officers of the nation from those who, when they swear to support the Constitution and the laws, are under a prior oath to obey the laws of the order. That these two governments are not more markedly in conflict with each other, is due to the fact that Masonry has so largely controlled our legislation. Slavery made no war on this nation so long as it was in power. It only rebelled when adverse legislation was threatened. So it is and has been with Freemasonry. In the language of Seward, Spencer and other great statesmen of New York, "It tramples on every government that it cannot control." In no single instance has any legislation adverse to the interests of the secret orders been met with cheerful obedience. In all instances has there been a powerful and generally a successful resistance. Masonry defied the legislature of Pennsylvania, compelled the legislature of Rhode Island to compromise with it, and utterly defeated the execution of the laws of New York. Hon. J. C. Spencer after five years of effort to secure the punishment of the murderers of Morgan, declared that "The sword of Justice had fallen pointless and blunted at the feet of Masonry." To-day a little handful of 150,000 Mormons, through the power of a secret oath-bound government, utterly defy and defeat the mandates of the nation. The Mormon problem remains unsolved until it shall be determined whether citizens of the United States can bear allegiance to two supreme governments at the same time.

The power of secret combinations in this District is abundantly evident. The detective police of this city, chosen by Congress and drawing pay from the National Treasury, are morally convicted of inciting, planning and protecting the thefts, robberies and arsons they were employed to suppress. But no steps seem to be taken for their punishment, and they doubtless glory in their triumph. Dorsey, Brady and company rob the nation of millions. No reasonable man has any doubt of their guilt or that reasonable proof of it has been presented; but a six months trial has afforded the opportunity to draw vast sums from the Treasury, and then a befooled and besotted jury, render a verdict of not guilty, which is duly celebrated by profane libations to Bacchus. Capt. Howgate, a high Mason, steals some $300,000, which he squanders on profligate men and women, and no power of this government can reach him. The great majority of the officials of this District and the nation have sworn under death penalty to conceal all of his secrets except murder and treason.

Paul living and writing under the administration of Nero, declared that "Rulers were a terror to evil doers and a praise to them that do well" and they were to be obeyed because they bore "not the sword in vain," but now "judgment is turned away backward, and justice standeth afar off, truth is fallen in the street and equity cannot enter. Yea, truth faileth and he that departeth from evil maketh himself a prey" and God saw it and it displeased him.

How long shall the nation suffer a two-fold government to divide the allegiance of the people, and defeat the administration of the laws? How long shall they select as our rulers those who are under prior obligations to another government, and other laws which the people are forbidden even to know, whether they are in harmony or in conflict with our own?

LITERARY.

The July-August number of the Missionary Review has a continuation of the statement of the case between the American Board and the American churches. The candid and able presentation of these difficulties are a valuale, though unpleasant, contribution to the history of missions. From the standpoint of Christian brotherhood as taught bp Christ, the management of the Board must fall under much condemnation. Already the public discussion of this management is having the effect to introduce new arragements with the Armenian churches quite favorable to their growth and peace. "The native members of the India Conference," "Tamatave," "The Enforced Opium Traffic," are among the articles worth reading in this magazine. Princeton, N. J.

The Faith Missionary quarterly is again sent out from Oberlin by Dea. O. M. Brown. "Ten Year's Work in Mexico," by the missionary Watkins, who, having for several years occupied an independent position and has seen great success attend his work. He is now receiving aid from friends in San Francisco who have organized a missionary board for this pupose. The department of missiorary correspondence is good.

A Sermon to Young Christians was preached by Rev. Joel Martin in the Wesleyan church, Pleasant Valley, Mich., at the close of a revival meeting, and has now been put in type and published in a handsome pamphlet which may be had of the author at Brighton, Mich., for 5 cts. each, 35 cts. per dozen. It contains excellent councels for young Christians and would be valuable to put into the hands of every young convert.

"A gentleman in India went into his library one day and took a book from the shelves. As he did so, he felt a slight pain in his finger like the prick of a pin. He thought that a pin had been stuck by some careless person in the cover of the book. But soon his finger began to swell. then his arm, then his whole body, and in a few days he died. It was not a pin among the books, but a small and deadly serpent. There are many serpents among the books now-a-days. They nestle in the foliage of our most fascinating literature; they coil around the flowers whose perfume intoxicates the senses. We read, we are charmed by the plot of the story, by the skill with which the characters are sculptured or grouped, by the gorgeousness of the word painting—we hardly feel the pin-prick of the evil that is insinuated. But it stings and poisons us." Thus writes one to us unknown. The truth was never more pertinently told. Not only do we need a reform in cheap literature; we should be scrupulously select in our choice of that which is ranked higher. The snake of skepticism, of false education, hides on many a bookshelf. —American Reformer.

The Congressional Library contains, according to Mr. Spofford's annual report, about 480,000 volumes, and about one third as many pamphlets. Dr. J. M. Toner's gift of 27,000 volumes is stored in the crypt, and over 100,000 other volumes are practically inaccessible.

President Bartlett is reported as saying that the graduation of Daniel Webster at Dartmouth was one of the worst things that ever happened to the college, because every student of low standing referred to him as one of his kind who afterward rose to eminence.

The London Times sprang from a dingy little sheet, about twice as large as a sheet of foolscap, printed on coarse paper, without a leader. The original name was The Daily Universal Register, which was changed to the Times in 1788.

The Drawer in Harper's Monthly gives this good example of a mixed metaphor, uttered by a Doctor of Divinity: "These seeds of pride are bursing with flame which might lay the foundations of a deluge that would with its fangs envenom my soul."

—H. W. Beecher, whose influence and instruction has certainly not helped his disciples to love the principles of the Pilgrim Fathers, in a lecture the other evening at Evanston, Ill., acquitted them of moroseness and undue severity of manners in these terms: "The idea of opposition to riches comes from the Puritans, but they hated amusements because in their day they were the manacles which bound men down, and they hated them because it appeared in the persons of sculptors and painters' alliance with their oppressors. Puritanism had been condemned for sternness, but they did not hate beauty or amusements in themselves, but as they cramped the people and kept them from God. New England now is the very priest of beauty, but there still lurks the love of plainness and strength and an opposition to that which is garish."

—Rev. L. C. Matlack, president of the institution at Wheaton before it became Wheaton College, and one of the founders of the Wesleyan Methodist church, died June 24th, at his home in Maryland. After leaving Wheaton he entered the army, and afterward returned to the Methodist Episcopal church and became a regular conference preacher.

THE HOME.

FORGOTTEN WORKERS.

They lived, and they were useful, this we know, and naught beside;
No record of their name is left to show how soon they died;
They did their work, and then they passed away, an unknown band,
And took their places with the greater host in yonder land.

And were they young, or were they growing old? or ill, or well?
Or lived in poverty, or had they wealth of gold? No one can tell;
Only one thing is known of them; faithful they were and true,
Disciples of the Lord, and strong through prayer to save and do.

But what avails the gift of empty fame? They lived to God;
They loved the sweetness of another name, and gladly trod
The rugged ways of earth, that they might be helper or friend;
And in the joy of this their ministry be spent and spend.

No glory clusters round their names on earth; but in God's heaven
Is kept a book of names of greatest worth, and there is given
A place for all who did the Master please, though here unknown;
And their lost names shine forth in brightest rays before the throne.

Oh, take who will the boon of fading fame! but give to me
A place among the workers, though my name forgotten be;
And if within the book of life is found my lowly place,
Honor and glory unto God redound for all his grace!

RELIGIOUS TOLERATION IN THE COLONIES.

There are but two of the early Colonies of which the claim can be seriously made that they were founded on any principle of religious freedom. These two are Rhode Island and Maryland. It was said of the first by Roger Williams, its spiritual founder, that "a permission of the most paganish, Jewish, Turkish, or anti-Christian conscience" should be there granted "to all men of all nations and countries." Accordingly, the colony spread such shelter on a very wide scale. It received Anne Hutchinson after she had set the state as well as the church in a turmoil at Boston, and had made popular elections turn on her opinions. It not only sheltered but gave birth to Jemima Wilkinson, prophetess of the "Cumberland Zealots," who might under the stimulus of a less tolerant community have expanded into a Joanna Southcote or a Mother Ann Lee. It protected Samuel Gorton, a man of the Savonarola temperament, of whom his last surviving disciple said, in 1771, "My master wrote in heaven, and none can understand his writings but those who live in heaven while on earth." It cost such an effort to assimilate these exciting ingredients that Roger Williams described Gorton, in 1640, as "bewitching and bemadding poor Providence," and the grand jury of that city was compelled to indict him as a nuisance that same year, on this count, among others, "that Samuel Gorton contumeliously reproached the magistrates, calling them Just-asses." Nevertheless, all these, and such as these, were at last disarmed and made harmless by the wise policy of Rhode Island, guided by Roger Williams, after he had outgrown the superfluous antagonisms of his youth, and learned to be conciliatory in action as well as comprehensive in doctrine. Yet even he had so much to undergo in keeping the peace with all these heterogeneous materials that he recoiled at last from "such an infinite liberty of conscience," and declared that in the case of Quakers "a due and moderate restraint and punishment of these incivilities" was not only no persecution, but was "a duty and command of God."

Maryland has shared with Rhode Island the honor of having established religious freedom, and this claim is largely based upon the noble decree passed by its General Assembly in 1649:

"No person whatsoever in this province professing to believe in Jesus Christ shall from henceforth be any way troubled and molested for his or her religion, or in the free exercise thereof, or any way compelled to the belief or exercise of any other religion against his or her consent."

But it is never hard to evade a statute that seems to secure religious liberty, and this decree did not prevent the Maryland colony from afterward enacting that if any person should deny the Holy Trinity he should first be bored through the tongue and fined and imprisoned; then, for the second offense, should be branded as a blasphemer, the letter "B" being stamped on his forehead; and for the third offense should die. This was certainly a very limited toleration; and granting that it has a partial value, it remains an interesting question who secured it. Cardinal Manning and others have claimed this measure of toleration as due to the Roman Catholics, but Mr. E. D. Neill has conclusively shown that the Roman Catholic element was originally much smaller than was supposed, that the "two hundred Catholic gentlemen" usually claimed as founding the colony were really some twenty gentlemen and three hundred laboring men; that of the latter twelve died on shipboard, of whom only two confessed to the priests, thus giving a clew to the probable opinions of the rest; and that of the Assembly which passed the resolutions the majority were Protestants, and even Puritans. But granting to Maryland a place next to Rhode Island in religious freedom, she paid, like that other colony, what was then the penalty of freedom, and I must dwell a moment on this.

In those days religious liberty brought a heterogeneous and often reckless population; it usually involved the absence of a highly educated ministry; and this implied the want of a settled system of education, and of an elevated standard of public duty. These deficiencies left both in Rhode Island and in Maryland certain results which are apparent to this day. There is nothing more extraordinary in the Massachusetts and Connecticut Colonies than the promptness with which they entered on the work of popular education. These little communities, just struggling for existence, marked out an educational system which had then no parallel in the European world. In the Massachusetts Bay Colony, Salem had a free school in 1640, Boston in 1642, or earlier, Cambridge about the same time, and the State, in 1647, marked out an elaborate system of common and grammar schools for every township—a system then without a precedent, so far as I know, in Europe. Thus run the essential sentences of this noble document, held up to the admiration of all England by Lord Macaulay in Parliament:

"Yt learning may not be buried in ye grave of or fathrs in ye church and commonwealth, the Lord assisting of endeavors—It is therefore ordred, yt evry township in this jurisdiction, aftr ye Lord heth increased ye to ye number of 50 householdrs, shall then forthwith appoint one within their towne to teach all such children as shall resort to him to write and reade: * * * * and it is furthr ordered, yt where any towne shall incrcase to ye numbr of 100 families or households, they shall set up a gramer schoole, ye mr thereof being able to instruct youth so farr as they may be fited for ye university."

The printing-press came with these schools, or before them, and was actively employed, and it is impossible not to recognize the contrast between such institutions and the spirit of that Governor of Virginia (Berkeley) who said, a quarter of a century later, "We have no free schools nor printing, and I hope shall not have these hundred years." In Maryland, convicts and indented servants were sometimes advertised for sale as teachers at an early day, and there was no public system until 1728. In Rhode Island, Newport had a public school in 1640, but it apparently lasted but a year or two, nor was there a general system till the year 1800. These contrasts are mentioned for one sole purpose; to show that no single community unites all virtues, and that it was at that period very hard for religious liberality and a good school system to exist together.—T. W. Higginson in Harper's Magazine for July.

BEYOND OUR PHILOSOPHY.

STRANGE EXPERIENCES RELATED BY BISHOP BOWMAN.

In conversation with a reporter of the St. Louis Republican, Bishop Bowman once said:

"I am not a believer in modern Spiritualism and do not believe that spirits upset chairs and move tables, but I can say that I have never been able to account for many remarkable experiences I have had during my life under different circumstances. We are much nearer the spirit world than we think, perhaps, and the spirits of the departed dead, I believe, have a certain influence over our minds.

"When voyaging on the Red Sea I made it a practice to pray every night and morning for my wife, from whom I was absent and who at the time was an invalid. One evening I knelt down as usual and tried to pray for her, but found I could not do it. This worried me very much, but I attributed my incapacity to pray for her to nervousness, as I had preached a sermon to the passengers on board that afternoon. On the following morning I again tried to pray for Mrs. Bowman, experiencing the same difficulty that prevented me from accomplishing my purpose on the evening previous. I wondered what had happened. Was I losing my senses? At length the thought occurred to me: 'Your wife may be dead.' But this I considered improbable, as I had received a letter a few days before, stating that she was much better than she had been for a long time. However, I was anxious to reach a point where I could expect to receive additional tidings relative to her condition. Finally, on my arrival at Rome, I found a letter awaiting me conveying the news that Mrs. Bowman was dead and buried. She had died on the same evening that I found myself unable to pray for her while voyaging over the Red Sea. This experience I was never able to account for, yet I shall never forget it."

"About the same time my daughter had another extraordinary experience, but it was not similar to mine.

"When in Paris she would shut her eyes and could then see her mother's face distinctly. On the evening of her mother's death she attempted to do this, and was so terrified at not seeing the face as usual that she ran out of the room into another apartment. She felt that something had happened, but her friends told her that her fears were all imaginary. Subsequently she received news that her mother had died about the time she found it impossible to see her face with her eyes closed.

"In this house [referring to his residence, where the conversation took place], about this time last year, I was lying sick, at the point of death, the physician being unable to predict whether I would live or die. Then I had some very happy visions, as I stated in a sermon delivered recently in Music Hall at Boston."

THE SEQUEL TO A DREAM.

"One of the most remarkable occurrences I ever heard of was related to me this morning," remarked a State street broker yesterday. "I was told to-day by a leading City Hall official, whose trustworthiness is undoubted, that a daughter of the late Harvey Jewell (who was so well and favorably known in Boston in legal and business circles, and was a brother of the late Marshall Jewell) had recently a very queer and unusual experience, and one calculated to make a deep impression upon the strongest mind. Some weeks ago she had a dream in which she distinctly saw an undertaker drive up to her residence with a hearse. He was a peculiar looking man. His queerly shaped nose, which looked as if it had been broken and was twisted to one side, gave his countenance an expression which would have made identification easy and certain. He came directly toward her, and, as he said, 'Are you all ready?' she suddenly awoke.

"The dream seemed a peculiar one, but did not attract very much attention in the household until, a few days or a week later, it was repeated with exactly the same characteristics, down to the 'Are you all ready?' and the awakening.

"And now comes the strangest part of the story. Some little time afterward the young lady was visiting in Cincinnati and went to an apartment hotel to call upon a friend. She stepped into the elevator with others, and was startled to hear 'Are you all ready?' from the man in charge. She was still more startled on looking around and beholding the exact picture of the man of the dream, even to the misshapen nose. It made such an impression upon her mind that she requested to be let out of the elevator at the first landing. She stepped out, and the other occupants went out at the next landing, and the man remained. The elevator machinery gave out; suddenly the car went up and then down and the man was instantly killed.—Boston Globe.

HOME AND HEALTH.

SLEEPLESSNESS.

Physicians who used to prescribe bromide of soda or potassium for sleeplessness now urge their patients to take beef tea instead. The writer, after trying various prescriptions with little benefit, was at length so fortunate as to receive such advice. At first beef tea was used with some light bread or biscuit broken in it, sipped from a spoon as warm as it could be taken. Afterwards, milk just scalded, not boiled, was substituted, and, to make it more easy of digestion, a tablespoonful of lime-water was added to a half tumbler of milk. To facilitate matters, a pocket-stove with an alcohol lamp, or an arrangement for the gas-fixture should be at hand. If neither beef tea nor milk can be easily procured, hot water with an infusion of hops or mint may be substituted, or even hot water alone will quiet restlessness and induce sleep. A darkened room that the moonbeams cannot enter, a little fresh air from an open fireplace or window, are valuable assistants in making the sleep continuous.

When once the habit of wakefulness is broken up, the beef tea or milk may be taken cold, but not iced. If you are always a poor sleeper, it will be well to continue this late supper as a permanent thing in your daily life.

Provide for it in the case of aged and delicate persons who may be under your roof; and as the troubles of life appear most weighty when scanned in the midnight hours, you may be able to lighten the load for the rest of their journey.—Christian Union.

SICKNESS AMONG STRANGERS.

Very many people who leave homes in cities for the country, seashore, or mountains, in summer, have a dread of illnesses which may occur during their absence. It is certainly bad enough to be prostrated by illness when at home, surrounded by friends and good nurses, and attended by physicians who understand the idiosyncrasies or morbid tendencies of individuals; but it is far worse to be prostrated in crowded hotels or boarding-houses, with none but strangers to attend upon one's wants. Money will aid in providing for all usual wants, but the comforts of home and one's own bed cannot be purchased when away as summer tourists or boarders.

It is well for those who go away to provide a few simple remedies, which may be used with safety in cases of accident or sudden illness. The fluid extract of ginger is to be named first as a valuable remedy. It is a cordial aromatic, useful in sudden colds and chills, for disturbances of the digestive organs and bowels. It is all that is needed as a remedy in more than one-half the indispositions of travellers. Another remedy exceedingly valuable and safe in the hands of sensible, intelligent persons is what is known as Dover's powder. It is compounded of opium, ipecac, and sulphate of potassa, and is valuable as a diaphoretic and hypnotic. In cases of slight febrile symptoms, with hot skin and thirst, it is almost a specific, and the same may be said of it in cases of disordered bowels, diarrhœa, etc. As much of this as can be held upon half the surface of a small penknife blade is a safe dose for an adult. Of course if travellers happen to be ill where educated physicians are at hand, this remedy had better be given under their directions. Mustard plasters are now prepared in very neat and permanent forms, and should be placed in the catalogue of useful agents; and also adhesive plasters, to be used in cases of cuts and other wounds.

Aperient remedies are often necessary, and Sal Rochelle is about as safe and useful as anything. We are not advocates of dosing; it is better, if you can, to bring all medicines back with you on your return; but it is well to know that you have them, in case of absolute need.—Popular Science News.

CHILDREN'S CORNER.

A LULLABY.

Sleep, my child! the shadows fall;
Silent darkness reigns o'er all;
Bird and bloom are lost to sight
In the folded arms of night;
Stars from out the cloud-towers peep;
Sleep, my darling, sweetly sleep.

Sleep! Thy Father guards thy rest;
Lay thy head upon his breast;
Safer than these arms which hold thee,
His dear love will firm enfold thee;
Higher love than mine shall he
Give, beloved one, to thee!

Sleep! The waves have long been sleeping;
Angels o'er thee watch are keeping;
O'er us both the pale stars shine
With a radiance half divine.
Slumbers, innocent and light,
Fall from heaven on thee to-night.

HARRY MILLER'S STURGEON.

Thirty-four years ago, boys who lived on the shores of Lake Champlain were very fond of catching the big sturgeons that abounded in its clear waters. Not more so, perhaps, than boys would be now if fine fish were as plenty and as easily captured; but then other sports were not so common in that day, and fishing had much less competition. Often six or seven would go out together with long seines, and some famous catches they used to make.

One spring day several lads about eighteen years old hauled in a splendid sturgeon, whose good nature and intelligence won him quite a local fame, and whose story ought to have been written long ago.

He was such a fine handsome fellow that Harry Miller, a kind-hearted boy who was fond of pets, determined to take him home and try to tame him.

The rest of the party were all willing to give up their share in the prize, so the big captive's fate was settled then and there. Harry took him to his home at Cedar Point, near Port Henry, and put him in a box which he had sunk in the water, and fastened to a landing at the edge of the lake.

The box was about eight feet wide and thirteen feet long, so that the sturgeon could have plenty of room, even if he was over three and a half feet long, and weighed about one hundred and fifteen pounds, as this one did. Harry was careful that there should be plenty of chance for the fresh lake water to flow all through this novel aquariam, so that it was always fresh and pure. He also made a door which could be securely locked, so that he could take his pet out when he wished, and yet be sure that no one would steal him.

The next thing was a name, and commonplace Tom was chosen, just as it might be for a horse or a dog. It did not take Tom long to learn his name, and as he had all the worms, meat, and kitchen scraps he could eat, and was always treated kindly, he grew very tame and fat. He was ready whenever any one came to feed him, and when his master playfully patted his sides, he would roll over just as roguishly as a pet puss might.

A Frenchman who lived near Harry Miller's home was wonderfully skillful in training animals, and he persuaded Harry to let him see what he could do with Tom. He found a most docile pupil, and succeeded amazingly, to Harry's intense delight. After several weeks, he considered his task accomplished, and returned his charge to his young owner.

Tom was now ready to do something practical in return for his master's kindness; in fact, he had become a real "sea-horse," well broken to harness, or rather rope, for that is all that is needed to pull a boat.

A heavy ring was fastened through the thick cartilage just behind into the dorsal or back fin, and a stout rope was snapped into this ring when Tom was "Hitched up, just as a rein often is into a bit.

The other end of the rope was held or made fast in the boat, so that all one had to do to have a fine ride was to attend to the steering. A long pole did duty for reins, and a slap on the water either side of Tom would turn him in the opposite direction.

If he grew lazy, as he sometimes did, a sharp splash just behind would quicken him up. There was never any trouble about getting home after a ride. Just as soon as Tom had a chance to turn around, he would start straight for his box, and swim with all his might until he was once more snugly housed.

While Tom was being trained, he was allowed only about six feet of rope, but after Harry felt sure that he could trust his pet, he let him go twenty or thirty feet from the boat, and instead of short rides he used to stay out as long as three or four hours.

Just think, boys, of going fishing with a fish to do the sculling! Naturally Tom was kept quite busy towing fishing parties, and he worked all the better when he had plenty to do. A vacation of two or three days would make him behave like a colt the next time he went out.

At first he would rush off at a great rate, drawing two men in a good-sized boat nearly as fast as one could row, but he would soon cool down until he hardly wanted to stir at all.

Work every day was what Tom needed to make him willing and steady, and if he had it he was a model of good behavior.

Of course a great many other boys thought it would be fine to have a trained fish, and many sturgeons were caught and petted, but all in vain. None of them could be induced to work, and Harry Miller's Tom remained without a rival, the pride of his master, and the envy of other boys.

Most of the sturgeons which boys tried to train killed themselves by staying too long under water when they were taken out into the lake, and others pined away and died before any progress could be made.

For three years Tom did his master good and faithful service, but at last he changed owners, and nothing is known of his history from the time he was sold. Harry was forced to part with his pet because the Millers moved away from the lake, but the twenty-five dollars he received was a poor recompense to him for the loss of such an accomplished fish.

But though he never heard of him again, he has always cherished his memory.

Mr. Harry Miller is now a middle aged gentleman, living in the town of Warren, Pennsylvania, where he often entertains his young friends with the story of his wonderful sturgeon Tom, every word of which is strictly true.—Harper's Young Folks.

ABOUT CORALS.

Little Alice came home from school one day with a wonderful lesson. It sounded like a fairy story. "Insects which live under the water," she told us, "when they get to a rock they somehow stick there, and turn into a rock themselves."

She meant the coral workers, which, after all, are not insects, but jelly-like animals called polyps. The beautiful coral is their skeletons, their bones, and not their work at all. They are so much like flowers that for many years everybody thought they were plants. They are often star-shaped, like the wind-flower, or like asters and mushrooms, and they look like the mosses. Other kinds grow into groves and forests in the sea, like blossoming branches—branches of salmon-color, rose-pink, and dark red. So it was no great wonder that people were mistaken.

LOVE YOUR ENEMIES.

A great boy in a school was so abusive to the younger ones that the teacher took the vote of the school whether he should be expelled. All the small boys voted to expel him except one, who was scarcely five years old. Yet he knew very well that the bad boy would probably continue to abuse him.

"Why, then, did you vote for him to stay?" said the teacher.

"Because if he is expelled perhaps he will not learn any more about God, and so he will be more wicked still."

"Do you forgive him, then?" said the teacher.

"Yes," said he; "papa and mamma and you all forgive me when I do wrong; God forgives me, too, and I must do the same."

TEMPERANCE.

At the recent annual meeting of the Church of England Temperance Association, it was stated that the membership of the society now reached 428,076, while there were 24,019 members in the seamen's branch. The secretary computed that there are 25,000 total abstainers in the British Army and 12,000 in the Royal Navy.

The New York Retailer, a liquor organ, tells the truth when it says. "Everywhere and in every State the liquor question is pushed to the front. It has not been dragged in by politicians, but it forces itself in spite of politicians. It is prohibition in one place, taxation in another, Sunday suppression in another. Under the general head of temperance this now foremost question is breaking through party lines, overruling time serving politicians, and demanding to be heard."

The town of Pullman, a suburb of Chicago of 10,000 inhabitants, built and owned by the Pulman Car Company, has no saloons. An anti-prohibition paper of Chicago thus describes this abode of workingmen: "Their homes are large, roomy and clean; their furniture and carpets new and tasteful; the air they breathe is pure from moral and physical standpoint; there is absolutely no drunkenness; their children are well fed, well clothed, and healthy; the men and their wives are well dressed and seemingly contented. For amusements they have reading-rooms, singing societies, debating clubs, lectures, and everything to make life pleasant and profitable, with increased vigor of mind and body—the invariable result of a correct manner of living. They have no police, jail, or bridewell, and no saloon-keeper to cheat the children of their food, clothing, and education.

The city council at Dalton, Ga., unanimously refused to grant license to sell intoxicating liquors in that city. It is not to be sold in any drug store under the name of bitters, nor from any other place nor in any quantity. Out of a voting population of 400, the petition for this action by the council was signed by 330. Cartersville, Ga., is moving in the same direction, a committee of six, four white and two colored, being appointed at a recent meeting to circulate a petition asking the city council to absolutely prohibit the sale of intoxicants from and after June 30. Both men and women are permitted to sign the Cartersville petition, and it is affirmed that the result will show eight out of ten of the entire population in its favor. The high license experiment does not appear to have found favor anywhere in the South outside of Missouri, and there it is recognized as the liquor dealers' measure.

TREATING.—A party of three or four gentlemen who were in a hotel in this village a few days before election were invited to "take something" by one of their number. After they had taken it and chatted a few minutes, another of the party solemnly suggested that it would be well to "take something." They accepted the invitation, and took something again. They then started out, and in a few minutes another of the party stopped them and said:

"Let's go in and 'take something.'"

"Why, that's a drygoods store," said one of the party.

"Well, what of it? Come in."

In they marched, and arranging themselves before the counter, the gentleman who had invited them propounded the question, "What will you take?"

One of the party took a box of collars, another took a clean shirt. When the bill had been settled, and they had walked out, they looked at each other rather sheepishly, and began to see for the first time the foolishness of the "treating" business.—Middleton Press.

TOO BAD TO BE TRUE.

We do not know how much of truth there may be in the paragraphs below concerning the "Harvard boys," but it is quite certain that grave responsibilities rest upon those who have the training of the young, at that period of their lives when character forms most rapidly and most surely. The temptations to drink add by far the greatest weight to that load of responsibility. If parents only knew how much they could ease these burdens, and how much they might do to provide safety for their sons in college and elsewhere by banishing the rum fiend from the land, would they not do it?

The remark is often heard, "If you want to find Harvard College students, do not go to Cambridge, but look into certain saloons of Boston." "Parker's" is a favorite, "The Revere" and certain saloons in close vicinity to the theatres furnish special attractions for these young men.

We find the following paragraph in a New York paper:

"Late on Saturday night a gentleman having occasion to see some one at Parker's, Boston, had to go to the billiard-room, and there were over one hundred and fifty Harvard students continually drinking from little tables filled with bottles and glassee of liquors scattered abundantly among the billiard tables. Some of them were deeply intoxicated already, and their self-control and sense of surroundings gone. How the night could end safely for some who were there he could not conceive."—Sabbath Recorder.

THE CHURCHES.

—Rev. Dr. Noble, of the Union Park ehureh is one of the few Chicago pastors that stay by their work through the summer.

—The editor of the Cynosure preaehed for the Streator church last Sabbath. At the same time Pres. C. A. Blanchard preaehed in the Lineoln Park Congregational ehurch, Chicago.

—Rev. Joseph Travis, of the Free Methodist is spending much of the summer, traveling and visiting eampmeetings. After a brief stay in the city from one trip he began another of six weeks on Saturday.

—Miss Rathbone, who for six years has been a missionary abroad, has brought to New York the first Burmese woman who ever landed on our shores. The new-comer will study for five years in this eountry before returning for missionary work.

—The chief of the Spokane Indians in Oregon wants a ehureh built upon his reservation. As Seeretary Teller says, there are no appropriations within his reaeh for the purpose, but there ought to be money enough in the home missionary boards of the churehes to grant sueh an unusual request.

—Through the efforts of Mrs. Martha Riggs Morris, about $15,000 has been raised toward erecting a home for girls of the Dakota tribe of Indians, at Sisseton Agency, Dakota. The object of the home is to teaeh them the principles of Christianity, the ordinary branches of study and practieal housekeeping. The sum raised is almost one-half the amount needed for the enterprise.

—The census of missions to be taken next year will, it is said, show an increase of 200,000 native Christians in India, Ceylon and Burmah for the last ten years—500,000 iu all.

Some of the Methodist mission schools of high grade for boys and girls iu the cities of India are full to overflowing, and are obliged to stop advertising and enlarge their aceommodations.

—An eneouraging report comes from the Fiji Islands. In one district more than one hundred have been propounded for admission to the ehurch, and one of the old chiefs has given $750 toward a house of worship, whieh is to be both fire and hurricane-proof.

—The feeling in favor of lay preaehing is growing rapidly in England, especially among the Noneonformists. It is felt that a more liberal use should, and might advantageously be made of the lay element in the ehurch for evangelistic purposes. Meetings are being held in the interest of the movement, whieh is warmly endorsed by many of the most influential among the elergy.

—A "Believers' Meeting for Bible Study" will gather at the village of Niagara, on the Canada side of the Niagara river, on the 25th inst. It will be attended by Major D. W. Whittle, Geo. F. Pentecost, the Erdmans, and many other well kuown evangelists and Bible students.

—When the ladies of Shelbyville, Ind., began their crusade in 1870, among the saloon-keepers was Captain Maze, a man who had served with distinetion during the late war in the Federal army. He finally opened his saloon door to the ladies. He gave up his saloon, giving his key to the ladies and started for Kansas. He is now a very successful revivalist. While at Morriston over three hundred persons professed eonversion under his ministrations.

—An all-day holiness meeting was held in the Free Methodist ehureh on North Morgan street, Chicago, July 4th. The attendanee was good and the exereises spirited. A portion of the time was devoted to prayer for missionary efforts.

—E. F. Ward, an independent missionary at Burhanpur, India, writes to the Free Methodist that he has just completed a new mission house 45x50 feet in size of briek with tile roof. Other out-buildings are being eonstrueted at a total eost of 4,000 rupees ($1,760), all paid for. The location is healthy and the mission successful. A native helper has been engaged who is to begin a school for boys in the city. The mission house is loeated outside the city walls.

—The semi-centennial anniversary of the First Presbyterian ehurch of DuPage, Ill., was observed the 15th inst. This is one of the ehurches organized by the Rev. Jeremiah Porter, half a eentury ago. The Rev. E. R. Davis, of Chicago, preached the historical sermon in the morning, and in the afternoon was given a history of the Sabbath-school by Supt. Rob't. Patterson, an address to the ehildren, by the pastor, addresses by visiting brethren, and other interesting exereises.

—There are twenty-nine ministers in eonneetion with the "Danish Evangelical Lutheran ehureh in Ameriea," a synod which maintains eeclesiastieal relations with the church in Denmark. There are other Danish ministers eonneeted with the "Conferenee," the Augustana, and the Norwegian Synods, in all not less than fifty. The Danish mission in and around New York city is under the management of Rev. R. Andersen. He has no less than eighteen preaehing stations seattered over the States of New York, New Jersey, Massachusetts, and Conneetieut.

—Dr. Harkey, Chairman of the Lutheran General Synod's Committee on State of Religion, closes his report as follows: "Three million, three hundred and thirty-six thousand, seven hundred and eighty-eight dollars as the annual contributions of Lutheraus in Ameriea for the support of Christianity! We do not make this exhibit in the way of a boast, or to intimate that we are doing all that we can do or ought to do; but we desire to eneourage our people, and by aetual faets forever to shut the mouths, (if sueh a thing be possible), of those who have always been trying to belittle our Lutheran Zion, or to ignore it altogether."

—George Muller, of the Bristol Orphanages, England, has just returned home from an evangelical tour through Russia and the Continent, and expeets soon to visit India on the same glorious mission.

—The Rev. Arthur T. Pierson, D. D., who recently resigned the charge of the Second Presbyterian church, Indianapolis, has been ealled to the pastorate of Bethany Presbyterian church, Philadelphia. Bethany is the ehureh which grew out of a mission founded by John Wanamaker. It is now the largest Presbyterian ehurch in Philadelphia, and has a Sunday-school of about 2,000 scholars. The ehureh has for more than a year been without a pastor, and has been longing for some man suffieiently talented and energetie to fill its pulpit.

—At Boston, Mass., the friends of Christian work for the people, both laymen and clergymen, of different denominations, have arranged a series of Gospel meetings for every evening during July and August. By a unanimous vote an invitation was extended to the Boston Young Men's Christian Association to take eharge of these serviees. Mr. Moody opened the series by preaehing in Musie Hall Sunday evening July 1. After that the meetings were to be held eontinuously in the Windsor Theatre. A good chorus choir, a staff of ushers, and workers have been organized. It is intended to make these meetings fill the gap neeessarily made by the partial eessation of the work in the ehurehes during the vacation months.

—Mrs. Anadibai Joshee, a Brahmin lady, has embarked at Caleutta, in eompany with several missionary ladies, for America, intending to study medicine in the Women's Medieal College at Philadelphia. By this aet she breaks her easte. Before embarking she delivered an address at the Serampore College, in whieh she said that in going to Ameriea to study her objeet was to prepare herself to promote the elevation of her sex in India.

—Emperor William, of Germany, has ordered that the 10th and 11th days of next November be observed as the four hundredth anniversary of the birth of Martin Luther. In the decree the Emperor says: "I pray that God may listen to the supplieations in whieh I and all the evangelists unite that the eelebration be produetive of lasting benefit to our Evangelical church."

—At a stated meeting of the Board of Managers of the Ameriean Bible Soeiety, held at the Bible House on Thursday, July 5th, a eommunieation was received from the Gaboon and Corsico Mission of the Presbyterian ehurch, asking the Soeiety to print the Old Testament in the Mpongwe version, whieh has been prepared by the Rev. William Walker. Letters from the Society's ageut in Yokohama report considerable progress made in the preparation of Scriptures for Corea, on the basis of the Chinese version, with speeial marks adapting it for

—Joseph Cook says that Baboo Keshub Chunder Sen, the head of the Somajists of India, holds "Universalism" in contempt. This great lecturer and thinker, after sixteen or eighteen hours interview with the Baboo, judges him to be honest, sineere, and possessed of a religious eharacter and experience, based on conscience rather than the intellect. Universalism has no heart. The system of the Baboo has. Joseph Cook considers him the most eloquent living Asiatic. But his system leaves its advocates or admirers without salvation in the dark yet. But they break away from mueh of the abhorent of heathenism and for this should get credit.

—The Rev. Dr. Angus, of London, believes that the Protestant ehureh is able to have the Gospel preached to every creature within ten years. He says: "Under the least favorable conditions we might need fifty thousand preaehers and their support might need from ten to fifteen millions a year. It seems a great company—fifty thousand preaehers—and yet it is not more thau one per eent. of our evangelical ehureh members. England sent as many to the Crimea, to take a single fortress, and to keep up for a few years a Mohammedan despotism. Ten times the number fell on eaeh side in the American war to set free three or four millions of slaves. Cannot 50,000 redeemed men be found to win baek the world for Christ?—The Gospel to all Lands.

—The official statisties whieh have been lately published concerning the Soeiety of Friends show that in Great Britain and Ireland the total number of members is 17,977. There are, it appears, 5,790 regular attenders of the Friends' meetings who are not in full membership. Some 25,000 scholars are instrueted in their Sunday-schools; but only about 3,000 of these attend the Friends' meetings. Although this is but a very small church, numerieally eonsidered, it has great politieal influence, with its ten members of parliament—the illustrious John Bright at their head. Although it has been in the past notable for its rejection of honors and titles, it now ineludes in its ranks one baronet and two knights. The Mayors of Birmingham, Bradford and Leeds are Quakers, and probably of not a few other towns. Its Provident Institution has aeeumulated funds to the extent of $1,622,907. It has a quarterly magazine and three monthly journals.

—The Free Chureh of Seotland is strong in its South African missions. Lovedale Institution is the centre of its activity. The institution is deseribed as "a theological eollege, a teaeher's training sehool, a series of boys' and girls' sehools, a boarding establishment, a medieal dispensary, a missionary assoeiation, a farm, a book-store, printing-press, newspaper publishing office, and bookbindiug, earpenter's, wagon-maker's and blaeksmith's shops. There are 481 native boys and young men, apprentices, and girls in all the departments last year, and these supplied in fees alone $10,000 of the expenditure. What a Christianizing and civilizing foree is this for all South Africa!"

—A United Presbyterian convention is to be held in the Fourth U. P. ehureh, Pittsburgh, August 14th and 15th. The object of this convention is says the eall, "to devise ways and means by which we can do all in our power to preserve the simplicity and purity of worship that has been one of the distinctive features of the United Presbyterian chureh during her existeuee. To do this is an obligation resting upon every one who desires to be faithful to the uniou-pledge made twenty-five years ago. The neeessity for sueh eonvention will be seen when we reeall the faet that the aetion of the last Assembly virtually seals our lips and ties our hands as teaehers in our respeetive eongregations and Presbyteries. . . .

We are eompelled, therefore, to keep silent or disobey the authority of an Assembly whieh we do aud ought to respeet. Before, therefore, we ean put ourselves in opposition to what we believe to be the usurped authority of the Assembly we must meet and eonsider again whether we be right or wrong; and if, after hearing the counsel of the tried and the best men of our church, we conelude, as we now believe, that the Assembly has made a great mistake and is wrong, we shall feel under no obligation to cease agitation on this subject. We ought to obey God rather than men. Let us gather together and wait upon the Lord that we may be direeted by him." J. M. F.

THE

CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE

A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

It is now owned and published by the Accidentally Cured of Consumption.

When death was hourly expected, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting with the many herbs of Calcutta, he accidentally made a preparation which cured his only child of consumption. His child is now in this country, and enjoying the best of health. The doctor now gives this recipe free, only asking two 3-cent stamps to pay expenses. Address Craddock & Co., 1032 Race street, Philadelphia, naming this paper.

☞This Organ is a triumph of the Organ Builder's Art. IT IS VERY BEAUTIFUL IN APPEARANCE, BEING EXACTLY LIKE CUT. The Case is of Solid Walnut, profusely ornamented with hand-carving and expensive fancy veneers. The Music Pocket is of the most beautiful design extant. It is deserving of a place in the millionaire's parlor, and would ornament the boudoir of a princess.

SEVEN SETS REEDS. Five Octaves, handsome appearance. It will not take the dirt or dust. It contains the Sweet VOIX CELESTE Stop, the Famous French Horn Solo Combination, New Grand Organ Right and Left Knee Stops, to control the entire motion by the knee, if necessary. Seven (7) sets of GOLDEN TONGUE REEDS, as follows: A set of powerful Sub-Bass Reeds; set of 3 Octaves of VOIX CELESTE; set Soft Cello Reeds; set Brilliant Saxaphone Reeds; set of FRENCH HORN REEDS, and 2 1-2 Octaves each of Regular GOLDEN TONGUE REEDS. Besides all this, it will be fitted up with an OCTAVE COUPLER, which doubles the power of the instrument. Lamp Stands, Pocket for Music, Beatty's Patent Stop Action, also Sounding Board, &c. It has a Sliding Lid and conveniently arranged Handles for moving. The Bellows, which are of the upright pattern, are made from the best quality of Rubber Cloth, are of great power, and are fitted up with Steel Springs and the best quality Pedal Straps. The Pedals, instead of being covered with carpet, are Polished Metal of neat design, and never get out of repair or worn.

A SPECIAL TEN-DAY OFFER. If you will remit me $59 and the annexed Coupon within 10 days from the date hereof, I will box and ship you this Organ, with Organ Bench, Book, etc., exactly the same as I sell for $83. FARM NOTES.

STRAWBERRY BEDS.

A good strawberry bed is a luxury that every person that lives in the country can have for a little work. Owing to the nature of the plant sending out runners and making a mat of the bed, it is difficult, if they are not taken care of in time, to keep the bed frec from weeds. A constant supply of good fruit can be obtained the easiest by setting out small beds every year. The plants for these can be obtained by taking the runners that have started from the old plants in August or September, and then setting out the new bed.

When possible to obtain the pots, it is better to fill small pots that are about three inches in diameter or less with good dirt, and inscrt them in the ground between the rows of strawberry plants in the old bed, and let the runners root in these pots. As soon as the runner is well started, the plant can be detached from the mother plant, and a good potted strawberry plant is the result.

These plants, if set out and taken care of, will bear a good crop of fruit the next year. The old bed can then be thoroughly cleaned from weeds, and mulched with either straw or prairie hay, when it will be ready without further carc to bear a good crop the next season. It must be borne in mind that if this strawberry bed is mulched with hay with seed in it, the bed will be thoroughly seeded down and choked with grass and weed, so that it will amount to little or nothing the next year. Some take cornstalks and run them through the hay cutter, and mulch their strawberry beds with this; some mulch their beds with long corn-stalks, and in the spring, after the leaves start, they arc drawn back from the top of the plants and left between the rows.

Young plants, a year or two years old, are much more hardy and vigorous than old ones that have cxhausted themselves by bearing fruit. What is called the hill culture will produce larger berries than when they are left to grow thickly matted in rows from eight to twelve inches wide.—Live Stock Journal.

SWEET CORN.

Sweet corn is one of the most nutritious and pleasant vegetables that can be secured for the table. All know how to cook and enjoy sweet corn while it is fresh, but many have difficulty in putting it up for winter use so that it is palatable and as nice as it is in the summer. Canning it is unsatisfactory, and cutting it off from the cob and drying it, besides being a great deal of work, does not produce a very desirable article. We have eaten field corn put up in another manner, which has made it almost equal to sweet corn. We are told that sweet corn can be put up in the same way, and is just as delicious and palatable in winter as it is in summer, when taken fresh from the cob. This mode of putting it up is as follows:

Cook it on the cob very slightly, only enough to keep the milk from running when cut off. Take a stone jar, place a layer of salt in the bottom; cut off enough corn to make a layer an inch and a half or two inches thick in the jar; sprinkle this over with another layer of salt, and put in more corn as at first. These layers of salt and corn should be repeated until the jar is full. Put a plate on top of the last layer, with a brick or stone on it to keep it down. If enough moisture from the corn is not produced to cover the corn with brinc, a little water should be added.

When this corn is to be used it must be freshened in the manner of salt fish, by soaking at least over night, and if that is not sufficient, a day and night; this will remove the salt, and it should be seasoned the same as fresh corn.—Sel.

FOR FENCE POSTS.

A writer in an exchange says: "I discovered many years ago that wood could be made to last longer than iron in the ground, but thought the process so simple that it was not well to make a stir about it. I would as soon have poplar, basswood or ash as any other kind of timber for fence posts. I have taken up basswood posts after having been set seven years that were as sound when taken out as when first put in the ground. Time and weather seemed to have no effect on them. The posts can be prepared for less than two cents a piece. This is the recipe: Take boiled linseed oil and stir in pulverized coal to the consistency of paint. Put a coat of this over the timber, and there is not a man that will live to see it rot."

HOLDEN WITH CORDS.

From "The Free Methodist."

"Holden with Cords, or thc Power of the Secret Empire." Price, postpaid, handsomely bound in cloth, $1.00; paper covers, 50 cents.

There is no important history extant but has connected with it numerous other histories of which was thc initial point or the dominating influence. The abduction and murder of Morgan set ten thousand secret springs in motion as the surrender of the charters of so many lodges at that time, and the severing of their connection with the order of some forty thousand of its members indicated. The story is one of these histories, and is a collection of facts woven into a story. It cannot fail to be read with interest. Address National Christian Association, 221 West Madison St., Chicago.

Smith's Tonic Syrup

FEVER and AGUE

Or CHILLS and FEVER.

AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient.

The genuine SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP must have DR. JOHN BULL'S private stamp on each bottle. DR. JOHN BULL only has the right to manufacture and sell the original JOHN J. SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP, of Lonisville, Ky. Examine well the label on eaoh bottle. If my private stamp is not on each bottle do not purchase, or you will be deoeived.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity □ No. 191, Holland, Mich , and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper covers, 60 cents; per dozen, $5.50. First three degrees (376 pages), in cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.00. Paper cover, 40 cents; per dozen, $4.00. ☞The Masonic quotations are worth the price of this book.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Freemasonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degrees of Jephthah's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Valance's Confession of the Murder of CAPT. WM. MORGAN. This confession of Henry L. Valance, one of the three Freemasons who drowned Morgan in the Niagara River, was taken from the lips of the dying man by Dr. John C. Emery, of Racine County, Wisconsin, in 1848. 10 cents each; per dozen. $1.00.

History of the Abduction and Murder OF CAPT. WM. MORGAN. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

The Broken Seal: or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees OF FREEMASONRY. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' LETTERS on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 85 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a LEAGUE WITH THE DEVIL. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian RELIGION. A clear, cutting argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents,

Judge Whitney's Defense before the GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25

ON ODDFELLOWSHIP.

Revised Odd-fellowship Illustrated. The complete revised ritual of the Lodge, Encampment and Rebekah (ladies') degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate; with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order, over one hundred foot-note quotations from standard authorities, showing the character and teachings of the order, and an analysis of each degree by President J. Blanchard. This ritual corresponds exactly with the "Charge Books" furnished by the Sovereign Grand Lodge. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $8.00. Paper cover, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

Odd-fellowship Judged by Its Own Utterances; Its Doctrine and Practice Examined in the Light of God's Word. By Rev. J. H. Brockman. NEWS OF THE WEEK.

—President Arthur, with a few invited friends, will leave about the 1st of August for Chicago, where he will be joined by General Phil Sheridan, Secretary Lincoln, and a few other specially invited guests, who, when all together, will constitute a party of about twenty. The party will leave Chicago about the 5th of August for a thirty days' jaunt in the Yellowstone Park. The President, General Sheridan, and Secretary Lincoln will be the only officials in the party. They go by the Northern Pacific route.

—Dr. Paaren, the Illinois State Veterinarian, reports glanders prevalent in nineteen counties of Illinois. The legality of the statute for diseased equines is questioned, and the doctor is now in consultation with the State authorities at Springfield about the matter.

—Near Plainville, Conn., Monday evening, a passenger train dashed into a gravel, causing the death of two men, injuring one fatally, and badly shaking up the passengers. The bodies of two of the victims were thrown forty feet over the telegraph wires.

—Three children of David Seeling, of Milwaukee, aged 12, 7, and 3 years, were burned so death in their residence early Tuesday morning. Mr. and Mrs. Seeling and four other children escaped.

—There was a remarkable shower of ice on the lake near Chicago Thursday evening. Nuggets of ice fell as large as geese eggs. One great missile was preserved aud brought into the habor. It was as large as a brick and weighing two pounds.

—At Roauoke, N. Y., Saturday morning two women and a little girl were killed at a railroad crossing, and also the horses attached to their wagon.

—It is predicted from Rochester, N. Y., that a sunstorm is coming into view, and the Northern States and Canada will be visited by violent thunderstorms and tornadoes this week.

—Fire broke out iu the hotel at Cockatoo, Minn., Saturday morning, which spread rapidly, aud consumed three-fourths of the towu. In the hotel three men were burned to death, and one was injured by jumping from a window.

—In accordance with the new State law in Missouri saloons and hotel bars remained closed in Kansas City on Sunday. Iu the central part of the city only one saloon kept open iu defiance of law. Tobacco stores and other lines of business generally, except drug stores, also closed. There were only three arrests for drunkenness to-day; the usual Sunday average being about twenty. No arrests were make for violation of the law, but the police were instructed to report the names of all offenders.

STORMS.

—Soldier City and Cimarron, Kan., were visited by a tornado Tuesday evening, four lives being lost at the former place and several wounded. No person was killed at Cimarron. A number of structures were wrecked in both towns.

—During a terrible thunderstorm at Dubuque, Monday night, several structures were struck by lightning, and the Bothwell family, in East Dubuque, were reudered unconscious by the electric fluid, and remaned so all night. No person was killed.

—The school-house at Underhill, Vt., was struck by lightning Friday, and all the childreu were more or less injured. One little girl was reudered deaf, and a boy had the sole taken from one shoe and the uppers from another.

—The Indiana University at Bloomington, was struck by lightning Thursday night and consumed, the library, museum, Owen's cabinet of specimens, and Professor Jordan's collection of fishes, all being burued up. The total loss is placed at $200,000.

—Thursday night and Friday afternoon the westeru and southern part of the country was visited by a fierce rain, hail, aud thunderstorm, in some localities assuming the proportions of a tornado. One followed the course of the Missouri River, doing much damage in Kansas City, St. Joseph, and Moberly, Mo. Heavy rain in St. Louis flooded cellars, while the wind unroofed structures and released river craft from its moorings. The section about Lincoln, Neb., suffered severely by hail, especially the crops, and some buildings were demolished. Many structures were wrecked at Malden, Mo., and at Harrisonburg, Va., a deluge of rain created havoc. Central and Western Illinois also loses considerably on damaged duildings and ruined crops, especial havoc being created about Cordova, Paxton, Clinton, Carlinville. Gibson City, and points in Mercer, Logan, and DeWitt counties. Scott and Fremont counties, in Iowa, suffer great damage, the hail in these sections falling as large as hens' eggs, and laying vegetables flat. In the towns of McPaul, Plum Hollow, and Percival several stores and residences were wrecked, and ten persons injured. At Maryville, Mo., the best business houses, the county jail, court house, city hall, and Presbyterian church were partially demolished, and one person was wounded. At Joplin and Webb City, in the lead-mining reagion in southwest Missouri, an immense amount of rain fell, which flooded the mines to such an extent that it will take a month or two to put them in working order. In the meantime several thousand miners will be out of work. At Maryville the damage is now put at $150,000. The loss of crops is not estimated, but may be imagined when it is said a strip of country five to six miles wide, right through the country, is totally devastated.

MORE THAN 50,000

copies of Hon. Thurlow Weed's letter to the Batavia Convention of Sept. 13, '82, exposing and opposing Freemasonry have since then been printed and put in circulation. It is not improbable or impossible that the old political opponent of "the secret empire," through this letter written just before his death, may slay more lodge heathen, than Samson, the distinguished judge of ancient Israel, did at his death, when he took hold of the pillars of their temple and buried 3,000 Philistines in its ruins. These letters of Weed are being scattered far and wide by the National Christian Association, and men of mind and national influence are quietly reading them and pondering their orucular utterances. The truths they contain, like leaven, are working silently and potentially for good, and though to thoughtless thousands their influence, like the seed germinating under the soil, may not be seen or even suspected, the good time coming when this nation shall be freed from the sorcery and fatal enchantment of lodgeism will reveal that Weed, the life long enemy of secretism, did a noble work when he penned that letter, which like the Emancipation Proclamation of Lincoln, freed millions from the bondage under which all their lives they had groaned. —Sandy Lake News.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandalgua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

THE PUREST IS THE BEST.

In the selection of SUNDAY-SCHOOL PAPERS, the most important point to be considered is the moral tone of the subject matter. If this is of a questionable character, the papers should be shunned, no matter how large, how attractive, or how low the price. Such papers are

COSTLY AT ANY PRICE.

The country is being flooded with S. S. literature that is largely composed of what may be properly termed "RELIGIOUS FICTION," the tendency of which is to create a distaste for sound reading and foster an appetite for fiction of a more deleterious character.

The engravings of these papers are equally objectionable. In many cases a lady or girl dressed in the height of fashion is made the HEROINE OF A STORY, thus putting the highest sanction to extravagance and pride. With such instructors in our Sunday-schools we cannot expect the children to grow up with a love for sound literature and with correct ideas of Christian propriety. With a view of supplying S. S. papers, of a pure and elevating character, the publishers are issuing

FOUR MONTHLY PAPERS.

They are FREE FROM FICTION, and the cuts are chosen with great care. While they are thus carefully edited, they are not lacking in attractiveness. They are well printed on beautiful tinted paper. The children are delighted with them. The very low price at which this line of S. S. papers is issued, places them within the reach of even schools of limited means

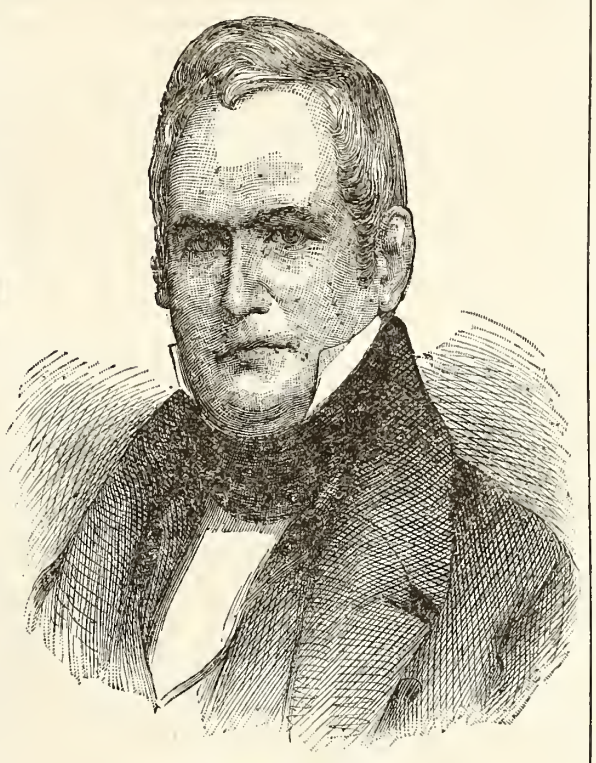
JOSEPH RITNER.

THE ANTI-MASONIC GOVERNOR OF PENNSYLVANIA.

The Ritners represent German Nationality—Out-swimming and holding on with their teeth—Michael weaves his way into life—His son Joseph marries the Maid of the Mill—A Mason astounded at his own trick—Judge Baird, a Presbyterian Elder makes Ritner a pre-Morgan Anti-mason—Ritner as Governor—The United States Senate, turned into a secret lodge, wrongs and robs Ritner of an appointment by General Harrison, Ritner's old Commander—His anecdotes of Scott and Lundy's Lane—Conquerers of the Conquerers of the World.



Nations, like persons, have characters. The German national character will be elucidated by this sketch.

Michael Ritner, father of Joseph, came to this country from Germany, when a boy. He went early into the Revolutionary war; fought under Washington; swam Long Island Sound, after that terrible disaster, where hundreds of our soldiers whose muscles were weaker or swimming-skill less, went down before reaching shore; and brought over his musket, by its strap, in his teeth. His countrymen, courageous, cool, saving and strong-limbed, have held on by their teeth here ever since. They are holding on still.

After that terrible disaster to our army at Long Island, Michael Ritner, whose ardor was a little cooled by his long bath, went to live on the Schuylkill, and began his fortune by weaving, as Continental money would not support a wife, whom he was punctual to get. But his native love of liberty and hatred of oppression took him back to our half-starved army, off and on, and he was "in at the death" at Yorktown, Oct. 19, 1781, when Cornwallis laid down his arms at the feet of Washington and LaFayette, Michael Ritner was "there to see."

While he was thus alternating between fighting for liberty, and weaving for bread for his wife and little ones, the second son, Joseph Ritner, was born, March 25, 1780, on the Schuylkill near a village now included in the city of Philadelphia. That same year Charleston, S. C., surrendered to the British with six thousand persons; the Americans were defeated at Camden; the British at King's Mountain and Arnold played Judas Iscariot at West Point. All this in one year. It is not said whether the child and future governor heard the guns or hated the traitor. If a few years older, he would have done both.

Peace came 1783, and Michael wove his way to Lancaster county, where his sons, Joseph and John, (who was two years older) gained the rudiments of learning. When Joseph was twelve years old, his father went to live at Carlisle, and apprenticed the son to a farmer named Myers, three miles from the window where this sketch was penned. The writer has passed the old stone barn, with long slits in the wall, of which the stones and timber were hauled by young Ritner. The Myers were parents to him. Long years after, when Ritner had become a popular man, he visited that second home, and good old mother Myers said mournfully, "If Joseph had not got married, he would have lived with us now." But he did get married, to "the Maid of the Mill," a few miles out. The old mill is torn down and a new one has taken its place. The maiden's name was Susan Alter. This mill was owned by a Mr. Alter, from Canton Berne, Switzerland. He was a Moravian, a miller, a member of Legislature and a United Brethren preacher, of the Isaac-Long's-Barn stripe, with Otterbein, Boehm and Newcomer.

JOSEPH RITNER.

This Mr. Alter's daughter Susan had a brother-in-law named Lafevre, who joined farms with Myers where young Ritner lived. They met, loved, and were married May 26, 1801. He was 21 and she a few months younger. They began life in a rented cottage; he working as a day laborer. His earnings until 21 all went to his parents.

Their landlord's name, who owned the cottage, was Showalter, whose roaming bachelor brother had joined the Freemasons. One day Mrs. Showalter asked this brother, "What good did you get by joining the Masons?"

"Why," said he, "I learned to raise the devil."

"Did you?" she replied, "Do raise him up, I should like to see him."

"Agreed," said he, "but you must open the doors and windows so he can get out, or he might hurt us."

So the doors and windows were opened, and the Mason-devil raiser began to mutter and pound on the wall of the room with a stick, which frightened an old goat that had gone upstairs into a granary to get grain. Scared at the thumping, the goat came plunging down stairs, which so frightened the Mason that he nearly fainted away, while Mrs. Showalter, who knew the beast and his trick of stealing grain, laughed herself fat, and the story is fresh to-day. The house is shown where the incident took place.

Mr. Alter, Ritner's father-in-law, moved into the forests of Washington county, west Pennsylvania. He sold to his son-in-law Joseph Ritner and his loving Susan 140 acres of his land, and there Ritner lived till he was elected Governor of the State. He took Niles' Register, which reprinted articles from Richie's Richmond Whig, and was then and since the treasury of American politics. This Niles' Register Ritner read with Webster's Dictionary by his side, and looked out every word whose meaning, orthography or pronunciation he doubted. He was a Jefferson Democrat, and became the rising man of the State.

Six consecutive years he was in the Legislature. Three times he was chosen Speaker; once (which never happened before or since in the history of the State) by a unanimous vote. In that unanimous vote were counted learned and prominent men who afterward rose to national distinction. No one of his rulings was ever reversed, and Clay, once present, complimented highly his ability as a presiding officer. When he became an avowed Anti-mason, the sworn slanderers of the lodge called him "an ignorant Dutchman," who could scarcely or not at all either read or write; and by simultaneous repetitions from end to end of the land, they made multitudes believe the slanderous lie. Years afterward, though he wrote his own messages, made public speeches, presided in conventions, and had been celebrated by the poet Whittier's matchless encomium, read on both sides of the Atlantic—

> "Thank God for the token, one lip still is free;
> One heart is untrammeled, unbended one knee,"

Masonic slander had done its work so effectually that there were Democrats living in the valleys of the Alleghanies, who expressed surprise when they learned that Ritner could read and write!

Ritner had left the Democratic party when that party forsook the doctrines of Jefferson. He often repeated Jefferson's familiar words, "I tremble for my country when I remember that God is just." "The Almighty has no attribute which can take part with oppressors," etc. In short, Ritner, like Jefferson, was an Abolitionist. This was not all, he was an Anti-mason, while Jackson was a lodgeman, and his Secretary of State was the Masonic High Priest. From his entrance into the legislature the lodge beleagured him and the Masons besought him to join them. They would, by a dispensation, give him seven degrees in a night, and besides, "The kingdoms of the world and the glory of them."

Why did he not join the lodge? His reasons were many. This was one: Long before Morgan; a man came to Washington county from Brownsville, where he left a worthy wife and children, opened a tavern in Washington county in a little country village and married another woman. One day he was told a lady wished to see him. He opened the door, looked at the woman, who was his wife, and exclaimed, "My God! Mary, is this you?"

"Yes; it's me, John. I have heard you were married again. I would not believe it till I had it from your own lips. You were never unkind to me, nor, so far as I know, did I ever deserve unkindness. Is it true, John?"

"Yes. It's true."

"Very well, John. I've not come to trouble you. I will go back and get on with our children the best I can."

He gave her fifty dollars, and hired one Wilson to take her back to Brownsville. Thos. M. T. McKennan, afterward member of Congress, prosecuted the bigamist, swore Wilson as witness, and asked him whether, when employed to take the forsaken wife back, the bigamist "told him she was his wife." Wilson replied, "All he said to me was given me as a Masonic secret." Old Judge Baird, who figures in the Stevens' sketch, replied, "In that case it would be dishonorable for you to reveal it." McKennan, who was left-handed, struck the table with his left fist, so the books leaped up. "This," said he, "is the first time I ever heard from a court that it was dishonorable to reveal crime!"

The old Judge, who was a Mason and a Democrat, (not a Whig as was stated through wrong information in the Stevens' sketch) was terrified. He blandly allowed Wilson to answer. The bigamist was convicted and received a nominal sentence!

So when Ritner, years afterward, ran for Governor, and Masons denied that the lodge governed courts, he used to relate this horrible case of bigamy, and si-

CIVIL GOVERNMENT.

BY H. H. HINMAN.

Our Saviour in the passage (Luke 20: 25): "Render therefore unto Cæsar the things which be Cæsar's, and unto God the things which be God's" recognizes and defines the two-fold obligation to both human and divine governments. I desire to call attention to some things growing out of this obligation.

1. All power and all authority is of God. His will is the supreme law, and hence any command or regulation of human government, that recognizes what he has forbidden, or forbids what he requires, carries with it no obligation or permission of obedience. "We ought to obey God rather than man."

2. Of this duty to God, every soul must be the judge. It is immediate, and personal, and cannot be assumed by, or delegated to any other being. Even a child must obey his parents only in the Lord.

3. This duty to God includes a careful study of his Word, an humble recognition of his Providence, and earnest prayer for the guidance of his Spirit.

Our duties to human governments are:

1. Subjection. "Let every soul be subject (submissive) to the higher powers." (Rom. 13: 1). There are instances in which the spontaneous and united resistance of a people to their existing government, have the divine approval. Such was the case when the people refused consent to the death of Jonathan. (1 Sam. 14:45.) Also when Jehoiada and the people deposed Athaliah the queen (2 Ki. 11: 13–20); but except when such resistence is the spontaneous act of the great mass of the people, is manifestly indicated of Providence, and can be accomplished without war, it is always wrong. We may not obey any command to do wickedly, but we may and ought to submit to even a wicked government without active resistance.

2. Duty to the government requires loyalty; cheerfully paying our taxes; and hearty co-operation in every good work. The design of government is to establish justice, promote domestic tranquility, and secure the blessings of such liberty as is consistent with the rights of others; and though it may largely fail of its accomplishment, we ought always to assume that this is the object. Experience shows that even the worst governments do much to protect their subjects, and are inconceivably better than none. It was under the government of Nero that Paul wrote that "He is the minister of God to thee for good; a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil. Wherefore we must needs be subject not only for wrath, but for conscience' sake." (Rom. 13: 4, 5). Included in this, is the duty to pray "for kings and all that are in authority, that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty." (1 Tim. 2: 1, 2.)

3. A third duty that we owe to the government is that we use all lawful means to secure a good government, of good laws, executed by good rulers. Under a despotic government the powers of the subject are greatly restricted. The primitive Christians had no opportunities for, and hence no responsibility for civil rulers, except as their prayers might prevail for them; but under a republican government there is the opportunity and consequent obligation to choose righteous rulers. This obligation grows out of the general obligation "to do good to all men as we have opportunity," and to the well known fact that "when the righteous are in authority the people rejoice, but when the wicked bear rule the people mourn."

It is still further enforced by the law under the Jewish theocracy, which law, is in its spirit, still binding: "Moreover thou shalt provide out of all the people able men, such as fear God; men of truth, hating covetousness; and place such over them to be rulers. (Ex. 18: 21.) Queen Esther had laid upon her a grave responsibility when she was called on to go in to the king. This responsibility she might not evade. A similar responsibility is laid on every American voter. To us there is committed the interests of this great nation, God says to us: "If thou altogether holdest thy peace at this time, then shall enlargement arise from another place, but thou and thy father's house shall be destroyed; and who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this? (Esther 4: 14.)

OBJECTIONS.

All human governments are selfish and wicked. The great mass of men are sinners, and Christians being in a hopeless minority cannot expect to prevail.

I answer that a righteous civil government is for the best interest of all. We can often convince even wicked men of this, and persuade them to vote for righteous laws and aid in their enforcement. It was not because all the people of the United States had become righteous that they adopted the 13th Amendment of the Constitution abolishing slavery, but because they had been led to see that slavery was a curse to the nation, and must be destroyed or it would destroy us. It was not because a majority of the people of Iowa and Kansas have become Christians, that they adopted the prohibitory amendment, but because through faithful Christian testimony they had seen the evil of the whisky traffic. Our success in these questions, leads us to hope that we can convince the people of the evil and danger of the secret orders and of the necessity for their suppression.

It is objected that governments are based on force, and that as Christians have no right to engage in war, they have no right to elect officers who shall do so, or who shall be sustained by war.

I answer that there is a broad distinction between the use of a police force, and international or civil war. The former is right. The civil magistrate "bears not the sword in vain." The latter is wrong, but is not essential to civil government. All international or inter-state questions have been and can be settled by peaceful means.

It is objected that our government does not in terms recognize the existence and authority of God. We cannot swear to support an atheistic government, nor can we vote that others shall do so.

I reply that it is a recognized principle in all civil codes, that "laws in conflict with fundamental morality are in their nature void," and that the Divine is always the paramount law. I greatly desire a fuller recognition of the authority of God's law in the Constitution, yet I see no reason why I may not ask men to execute laws in subordination to the laws of God, and hence all Christians should unite in the great work of political reformation.

Washington City.

HIGHLY IMPORTANT.

To those who are in a hurry to change worlds these sure recipes are addressed. They constitute a panacea for the ills of this world by a somewhat speedy removal to the next.

1. We would recommend strangulation. What, hanging? Yes, virtually self-hanging. But the halter is to be tightly drawn about the waist. To fit it to the neck is less popular and does execution somewhat quicker. But who but an absolute suicide would want to do such a thing? That is not the fashion? Chinese women cramp their feet merely, and that is counted heathenish. Civilization frowns that down, and then cramps the vital functions to death.

2. We recommend poisoning—pungent and quick poisoning is less fashionable than the slower mode. Strychnine is the most active and effective. Much used in modern drinks. Alcohol will kill, but this mixed with strychnine is much better for men and dogs too. It is given to dogs clear, on bread, as they will not drink whisky. About 100,000 men are, each year, translated by this compound out of this world of alcohol and tobacco. Tobacco and opium come next, and are grand agents of transfer to the unseen world.

To those who want the quicker transport, opium is allowed to be best. Tobacco makes men blind and breeds cancers—an uncomfortable way to go hence. Opium, perhaps, tends more rapidly to stupor and mental imbecility than tobacco. So in our free country men are at liberty to select any one of these transports to the beyond; all of which are quite quick in making the trip across the stream of life. To attempt to detail the scores of agents, all more or less nimble transports to eternity, would make this recipe too long.

ORION.

ONE IDEA MEN.

It is usual to sneer at what are called one-idea men; the popular view is that such men are out of balance, and are more to be pitied than criticised; that they are narrow minded, and therefore cannot be depended upon as leaders. It is not worth while to notice that these views are confined to men of unworthy, unimportant, impractical, and few ideas. The men who have been most successful in their callings, have been of the same species with the men of one idea. They have had one great, worthy, practical and all-controlling idea; they have made a hobby of it and have ridden it to mill, to market, and to meeting; they have talked, laughed, wept and prayed about it; they have spent and been spent for it. Columbus rode a hobby from court to court till he found a patron, and then he rode his hobby westward over unknown seas until he found a new world. Palissy, the discoverer of the glaze upon porcelain, was counted by his neighbors as a wild enthusiast, when by his experiments, he impoverished his family, and finally threw his furniture into the kiln where he was baking his pieces, because he had neither fuel, money nor credit. Edison, spending tens of thousands in experiments, would have been called still more wild had he lived in the times of Palissy. What would Henry Bergh accomplish for the suffering dumb animals, and for the suffering little human animals that are not dumb, were it not for his unabating application of his one idea? And what would Wesley have accomplished, had he lost sight of his purpose, expressed in his saying, "Let me be a man of one Book?" And what cannot that man accomplish who does his work as if there were no other work to do? —Northern Advocate.

PUBLIC SENTIMENT AND REFORM.

But waiting for public sentiment! What kind of an attitude is that for a true and earnest man to take in the presence of a needed moral reform? Paul did not wait for public sentiment to support him in preaching the Gospel; he went to work and made public sentiment. Richard Cobden did not wait for public sentiment to be well defined and clamorous before he began his agitation for corn-law repeal; he set out solitary and alone, and winning John Bright and a few other able men to his side, he traversed the land, planning, speaking, agitating; he created a public sentiment before which Sir Robert Peel and the whole Tory party were only as so much chaff before the wind. Bismark did not wait for public sentiment to push him to the task of unifying and solidifying Germany; he pushed the people, and brought them to his own mind. The heroic Garribaldi did not wait; he saw clearly what ought to be done to redeem Italy from the thraldom of the Pope, and make it a nation amongst nations, and he threw himself into the breach and led the way to victory. The dead Gambetta did not wait; he took the people in their hour of despair and trained them into hope; when they were in confusion and organized them; when parties were plotting, and dethroned dynasties were scheming for reinstatement, and made France a Republic. Neal Dow did not wait for public sentiment to support him in his demand for prohibition. Month after month, year after year, he and his faithful co-workers wrought at the business of making public sentiment, and they did it.

Public sentiment does not make itself. Public sentiment does not move forward of itself. When there is a vigorous public sentiment on any question of morals it is because somebody has taken an advance position, and educated and drawn the people up to it. If all who think and even say it would be a good thing to close liquor saloons, and to put out the fires in these distilleries and breweries, and to stay the vast waste of strength and thought and time and money, and homes and hopes and lives, would only say it without any "ifs," and "ands," and "buts," and having said it would stand by it, public sentiment on this liquor business would swell and press on like an incoming tide, and in a little while there would be laws looking to the suppression of this evil which would have in them the force of the Right Hand of God.—Dr. F. A. Noble.

COLLEGE SOCIETIES—SECRET AND OPEN.

[In a well-considered article on "The Relation of the Literary Society to Western Education," by Sidney Strong in the Oberlin Commencement Annual, June 28th, 1883, the decline of the college literary societies before the secret fraternities is presented in a forcible argument.]

A writer in the University Quarterly, of 1860, deplores the decadence of "Linonia" and "Brothers of Unity," the one-time famous debating societies of Yale College. President Robinson, of Brown, in a recent address performs a dirge upon the same theme pertaining to all the colleges of the East. No remark, I believe, is more commonly made by returning graduates of the East, than the one referring to the glorious times in the old society room, and also to the alarming disregard paid nowadays to the literary culture, which the society affords. It is beyond question, that in Harvard, in Yale, in Princeton, in Williams, in Amherst, and in other colleges, the literary society not only forms a small part of college life, but that in these places it is fatally "let alone" by the vast majority of college men.

I recently spent a year at a neighboring institution. On going there I joined a fraternity and a literary society. My year's experience convinced me of this fact—which I never yet saw disputed—that a literary society cannot thrive (I do not say exist) along with secret fraternities. The reasons are manifold, and besides it is worthy of note that no one ever claimed that fraternities were, in the least, beneficial to literary societies. That they are harmful, is so old and obvious a fact that I will only give a few of the ways in which literary societies are undermined and weakened by them. (1.) There is only a certain amount of time and energy outside the regular college work, and the fraternity, simply by existing, consumes what would otherwise (and more profitably) go to the literary society. (2.) The fraternity offers something more fascinating. There is the mystic tie of secrecy. Then, too, the social feature of the fraternity is attractive, and made still more attractive by the club-room, and the sense of good fellowship, and quite often by the spirit of deviltry. which hides itself under the cloak of silence. (3.) Fraternities divide the college community into several antagonistic clans, which furnish a very poor soil in which the literary society may grow. The feeling of antagonism always makes itself felt wherever the representatives of two or more fraternities meet. The literary society in consequence must suffer, as it always does, where there is a lack of proper feeling. (4.) Fraternities invariably adopt the practice of "rushing" men, i. e., each fraternity moves heaven and earth to influence choice men to join its circle. The means and methods are often questionable. But where the practice prevails, it is exceedingly natural for the literary societies to fall into the same habit of fighting each other—with what results many a weakened or dead society will bear testimony. (5.) But if perchance, a literary society does flourish under these adverse circumstances, the fraternity is still present to introduce disturbing forces. Is there an election to some honor, the lines are sharply drawn. If there are several honors, harmony can only be secured by a division of "the spoils;" no matter if all the men of worth chance to be in one fraternity, each one of these beasts must be fed. Fraternity cliques make the literary society the grounds of their operations, and the society becomes simply a catspaw for an exhibition of a fraternity's strength. College history is full of the breakages and wrecks, which the fights of fraternities have brought down upon the literary society.

These are the lessons that the West will learn from the East if she be wise. One cannot look at the powerful athletic associations, and the many secret societies of Yale and Harvard, and their one and two beggarly-supported literary societies, without feeling that the atmosphere which causes one to grow is fatal to the other. What then shall the college men of the West do? Undoubtedly steer wide of the rocks upon which their Eastern brethren have gone to pieces. Western educators must view with alarm the coming of secret societies, whose roots are already finding too congenial a soil among us. These must ever—if allowed to exist—take the lion's share of the time and energies which fall to college men outside their regular duties. Last year Ann Arbor's foot ball team visited the colleges of the East. Everywhere they received a severe drubbing; and I, for one, was glad of it. I rejoiced in the West's defeat. Ann Arbor's success would have meant a trip East this year, and then as distance would render impracticable the union of East and West into one association, the need of an association would be felt among Western colleges, to which would be gradually transferred, with all its evils, the spirit that now governs the sporting world of Eastern colleges. Western men cannot too strongly feel the magnitude of these evils, and if the literary society is to be secured, in its vigor and purity, there must be some sharp-shooting, some strong preventive action taken.

What Western men need is that they be characteristically Western. The West already, in its college life has imitated too much the manners of the East. And not uncommonly, like him who would seek to possess himself of the manner of some great orator, the West has imitated the faults without the graces of the East. The East doubltess possesses many things worthy of imitation. But the West can ill afford to exchange its system of education, whose whole aim is to turn out scholars, for a system, the half of whose turning out is made up of "fashionables" and men of muscle. I am assured that Eastern scholarship is not maintained by these elements. The sporting world and the fraternity are the great weight and hindrance to scholarship and this scholarship would rise much higher if it were cut loose from them. I am equally convinced that Western scholarship is maintained, in spite of the disadvantage that the want of endowment brings, by the superior and single aim of the students for mental culture. Western scholarship is equal to Eastern simply because it has not to struggle with the weights which lie upon colleges in the East.

—Nebraska is often cited as one State in which high licese has worked admirably as a temperance measure. Some think that this is still an open question, at the most. In Crete, which is a town of about 2,000 inhabitants, having a Christian college and where good influedces are supposed to predominate, there are, we are informed, six saloons in full blast, each paying a license of $500. If this is true, and we do not doubt it, then high license did not reduce to any great extent, the number of saloons in Crete.—Advance.

COLLEGE SECRET SOCIETIES.

A LETTER FOR PREPARATORY STUDENTS.

[From the N. Y. Witness.]

One of the first questions which most young men have to face upon entering college is, as to whether they will join one of the Greek letter societies. As probably there are many who are just making up their minds to enter college next year, this article is written to bring the question of secret societies clearly before them and their parents. Although, undoubtedly, I will be denounced as being prejudiced by those within the magic circle of these societies, yet I will endeavor to state both sides fairly and fully.

A young man comes to our college, being unacquainted and without friends, and he says to himself: "How can I most quickly become acquainted and make some friends?" He is watched closely, and if he shows some signs of being bright, so that he probably will take a good standing in his class, and in addition, apparently, has a little money, he will soon be approached by a fraternity man and sounded as to whether he wishes to join the Greek letter society. He knows well enough that all the members of the society are sworn to be friends, and to stand by each other through thick and thin. He is told that if he gets sick, he will have careful watchers every night until he gets well; that if he gets behind in his board bill he will be assisted; that if he gets into a fight on the campus, he will have friends to back him, and that in every way he will be "hail fellow, well met" by all the members of his fraternity. The bait is a tempting one, and about two out of three students in our college bite at it, and some morning you are surprised to see them come into class-room wearing upon their coat-lappell that much-coveted gold pin with its mysterious letters and designs, and from thence on in their course they are alluded to as —— fraternity men.

Surely no one can say I have not presented the matter in its best light. Yet there is another side to be seen that shows these societies in altogether another light, and, after seeing which, I think there are few parents but will hesitate before giving permission that their sons shall take those vows upon them, thereby throwing up a wall of secrecy between themselves and their beloved offspring. A writer in the North American Review for May, 1881, says: "When in college I lived in the circle of the most spirited youths of their quadrennial; and at times I had to drink, especially at certain meetings of the Greek letter society of which I was an enthusiastic member. My pen cannot describe the force of the resistance I had to offer. I enjoyed more than others our social meetings. I was always the most adventurous and most hilarious of them all. But next morning what langour and lassitude!" Of course, I do not accuse our students of participating in any such nightly ogeries, but I do say that the curtain has been raised for an instant and we have caught a glimpse of the cloven hoof; and if it does not present its hideous form in the shape of midnight debauches at our college, there are a dozen evil ways in which it does show itself, some of which I will endeavor to make apparant.

In the first place, as to expense. Most of the young people who come here are poor, and can ill afford the expense of joining a fraternity. There are expensive pins, costing from five to ten dollars, to be purchased; a hall must be rented and fitted up, and as the fraternities are small, this is a heavy expense, especially as some of the halls are finely carpeted, and in every way fitted up in a superb manner. Then there is generally an annual supper and many incidentals. You see at a glance that a young man must spend at least from twenty-five to a hundred dollars during his four years' course. They will indignantly reply, "What is that to you how much we spend as long as the money is our own?" Yes, but should a young man go into such a thing blind, without knowing what demands are to be made upon his pocket-book? Again, in the case of "beneficiaries," has any young man who is being supported by the church and educated for the ministry any right to squander twenty-five or a hundred dollars of the church's money when there is no occasion for so doing? As, to my knowledge, there are several such young men in the fraternities, it is self evident that several hundred dollars are thus squandered every four years in this college alone. The proper officials should endeavor to see that a stop is put to this unnecessary leakage.

Now, as to making friends. It is a notorious fact that fraternity-men are intensely bitter against every other fraternity except their own, and that they ask for no other cause to be at bitter enmity towards another young man (of course there are many exceptions to this rule) and the mere fact that he is a member of a rival fraternity. Thus, you see, you will meet many young men whom you really admire and would like to be friendly towards, but this clan-feeling interposes, which is far more bitter than party-feeling during a heated political campaign. If you doubt my word, spend several years within the walls of a college and judge for yourself. It springs up on the campus, in the corridors, and, especially, in the debating societies. Then, as to making friends in your own society. You join a society on entering college without being but very slightly acquainted with its members. Think of a man's marrying a woman on a week's acquaintance and afterwards finding her a vixen.

"But if I am sick they will take care of me, and if I get out of money they will assist me, and also back me up in my fights." Yes, they will take care of you if you are sick, and detail two young men to sit up with you, who, if they find some other college chum with you, will inform him that he is not wanted, and you will have the pleasure of their forced company, although both of them may be reeking with tobacco, and may be of such a frivolous character that you woul far rather be alone. And then it is a mere business matter—I will take care of you, and you must take care of me. Do you suppose that in any of our colleges if you get sick you are going to be neglected? We had a case of a non-fraternity man who was sick for several weeks this last winter, and he certainly received as good Christian treatment as he would have received as a fraternity man? And then there was some heart in the attention he received which is something money cannot buy nor business agreements procure. As to the money, did ever one of the professors refuse to lend money when it was actually needed or cannot any young man of good character get a loan in the college or village whenever necessary? Indeed, cases have come under my observation where money has been freely given to students. Develop some manhood and you need have no fear of finding yourself some day "strapped" and unable to get home.

As to having forced friends into a fight, that is contemptible and should not be considered by a high-minded youth. In the first place keep out of fights, and in the next, if you get into one and are in the right, drive ahead and you will generally have plenty of assistance.

The fact is, a man generally joins a fraternity because he has not the manhood to stand on his own feet. He possibly hopes for rapid advancement in the debating society if he runs for an office; or probably his mind runs on to commencement week, and he remembers the pile of books and other things that are carried upon the platform when a fraternity man his given his oration. The public may imagine it shows the regard in which the young man is held by his fellow students. Fudge! Everyone of them that is not in the fraternity sneers at the ostentation. They look up, and if they see a dozen books carried upon the platform they say: "Thirteen in that fraternity!" We all know it would be far cheaper for the young man were he to go out and buy his books, for he must on every occasion that one of his fraternity men appears on the stage, go to the expense of buying a volume to augment the pile. Here comes a young man not a fraternity man, who holds a good place in his class and is looked up to and generally beloved, but he must tremble, if he has any sensitiveness, as to going on the platform, because he knows unless his friends go to some unnecessary expense, he will only receive a few tokens of regard, while some one who follows him, whom he would not tolerate in his room, receives a small library.

The whole thing is rotten from beginning to end. The faculty do not know what moment a formidable opposition may be hatched against them in some fraternity. We have heard ourselves the remark, "Prof. —— has the —— fraternity down on him for treating —— so and so, and he had better look out for himself." The Bible says of works that are done in secret, "Every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds shall be reproved."

Let every young man and every parent meditate upon the foregoing facts and remember we have not exhausted the subject. Let the former hesitate to join a fraternity, and let the latter require a promise from their sons that they will have nothing to do with them before consenting to send them to college.

Dr. Crosby's plan of allowing one grog-shop to the thousand inhabitants would still furnish Cleveland with about 160. Now, suppose we would also allow 160 mad dogs, 160 brothels, 160 gambling hells, 160 counterfeiters. Neither of these alone, hardly all of them put together, would be more damaging to public interests and morals than the grog-shops.

WEEK-DAY SERMON.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

We are a Christian nation without doubt. Our land is sown broadcast with churches and Sunday schools, yet a very perceptible current of heathenism every now and then rises to the surface. This is at once a material and a credulous age. We have dropped many of our old superstitions it is true, and very few people could now be found willing to confess that they believed in witches or ghosts, or even in the general unluckiness of Friday. Yet how long is it since our newspapers printed startling articles emanating from highly scientific sources to the effect that an era of unprecedented trouble and disaster was approaching for all dwellers on this terrestrial globe? There was going to be a conjunction of the four chief planets!—a thing that had not happened before for thousands of years; and as according to these same learned writers it could be historically proved that famines and pestilences had marked the years when two or even three planets were in conjunction, how terribly fatal and malign must be the influence of all four concentrated at a focus on our poor little world! How much they believed of their own nonsense is a question, but they found plenty of readers weak-minded enough to believe them and be scared half out of their wits at thought of what the world was drifting to.

Passing by the fact that but a few months ago our whole fishing interest was struck as with sudden paralysis, and not only ignorant fishermen but intelligent Christian people who ought to have known better, shook in their shoes because some unknown weather prophet had foretold a disastrous storm in March! how long is it since our last comet scare to which even Proctor lent the sanction of his name? How many church-going, Bible-reading people felt vaguely alarmed as they thought, "What if the comet should fall into the sun!"

It is humiliating that in this land of wide-spread knowledge, any newspaper writer with a little smattering of history and science and with or without the authority of some great name can make an intelligent Christian people lapse into the veriest heathenism. Don't think me too severe but take your Bible, turn to the tenth chapter of Jeremiah, second verse, and read what God himself says about it: "Thus saith the Lord, Be not dismayed at the signs in heaven, for the heathen are dismayed at them."

God may possibly choose a comet to destroy this world. Weather prophets, when they predict stormy weather in March and hot weather in July may even prove true oracles. And no year whether marked by a conjunction of the planets or not ever passed without tempest, plague or famine in some quarter of the globe. But why should a Christian be like the heathen, dismayed at signs in the heavens? Why should comets or meteors, or anything peculiar in the position of the heavenly bodies fill him with terror? Why should he mind all the foolish sensational paragraphs that go the round of the papers? Let us remember that God's own Word has stamped all such fear as heathenism, has forbidden his children to indulge it. As Christians we have other work to do than to stand trembling before the signs in heaven. If some disturbance of the solar equilibrium is to end our little world to-morrow let us be found at our posts doing our duty, calm and unaffrighted, for "blessed is that servant whom his Lord when he cometh shall find watching."

—The Congregationalist truly says: "The church of Christ is on every side yielding to the pressure of a Christless world. It is adopting the customs and habits of a thoroughly worldly society. There is but one thing for earnest souls to do. It is to become singular, to bear any degree of reproach or loss for Christ's sake. Let the world call us Puritans, let it deny us recognition in its high places, let it hinder our success in business; if all this is for Christ's sake, happy are we."

—The Evangelical Messenger says of the mission of the Evangelical Association in Japan: "The protracted meeting in our mission in Tokio, was still in progress at last accounts, the superintendent speaking nearly every night, sometimes in the native language, and sometimes through his interpreter. The meetings are well attended and successful. Another baptismal service has been held and a number of converts have been baptized by the superintendent. The 'promise of the Father' is being fulfilled to the joy of many hearts. May the wonderful work go on, and may the church at home be faithful in helping together with earnest prayer for still larger results."

It is a mistake to suppose that those who hearken attentively to our language believe every word we say.

lence them with, "Gentlemen, you know better!"

Ritner served in the war of 1812 six months with Harrison and Scott, the heroes of Tippecanoe and Lundy's Lane. At the last place the British officer called to his red coats: "Charge men! Charge the gray-coat militia! Give 'em a taste of British steel!" On the red coats came. Till then, the rule was to charge with fixed bayonets, on unloaded muskets. Scott reversed that rule. He told our men to load their muskets, fix their bayonets, and hold their fire till they could see the whites of their enemies eyes; then at the word, to fire and charge them while stunned. They did so. Hence the victory of Lundy's Lane.

This British officer who was quite a gentleman, had said to Scott, "General, you can't see the Niagara from our side. You must win a victory first." After Lundy's Lane, when taken prisoner he said, "Now, General, you can view the Falls from whichever side you please."

At the close of Governor Ritner's administration occurred "the Buckshot war," a piece of infamy which requires and will receive a volume. The Democrats and Freemasons of Kensington and Spring Garden, drew off from the Whig judges, counted out Ritner and the Whig members, and sent up false returns, not signed by the sheriff of the city and county of Philadelphia as the law directs. The Whig judges sent up returns properly endorsed. A mob of roughs, Freemasons, saloon-keepers, and desperadoes, from the liberties of the city of Philadelphia, burst into the House and Senate; made speeches; threatened the life of Stevens, Burroughs, Penrose and others; enacted a scene like that in Music Hall, Boston, in 1880. Sober Democrats begged the threatened men to leave to save bloodshed, which they did and the Freemasons and Democrats counted out the hated Antimasons. This was the outcome of the Buckshot war.

General Harrison was elected President in 1840. He was a hale, temperate man. He once made a temperance speech to the Cincinnati Presbytery at the writer's request. He died within a month after his inauguration, as is now widely believed, by poison. He loved Governor Ritner and appointed him Treasurer of the Mint, an important office, requiring capacity and integrity. He knew Ritner had both. The Senate in secret session refused to confirm Ritner; and, contrary to law and custom, the injunction of secrecy was never taken off and the vote defeating Ritner remains unknown, that is to say was Masonic. The lodge again succeeded and wickedness triumphed. After all "the triumphing of the wicked is short, and the joy of the hypocrite but for a moment."

But "the most unkindest cut of all" was, the Henry Clay Whigs defeated Ritner in 1838. A private letter was written from Philadelphia to Clay asking, "Shall we vote for Ritner?" Clay replied, "We have as much to hope from the Democrats as from Ritner." This letter was got by a friend and sent to Ritner. He was sad and silent at so base a betrayal by his own party, and took no part in the Clay canvass, till the Democrats, observing it, their Ohio Central Committee wrote him to come out and make them a speech.

Ritner abhorred a pro-slavery Democracy and so broke silence and spoke and labored against that party till the Republican party came to the front, when he stood by it, saw its glorious triumphs, and voted with it till he died, just as, if now alive, he would vote with the American party, till secret politicians shall be compelled, in the words of Burke, to "bolt out of all their holes," or be smoked to death in them; when the stars of our flag shall shed light and not darkness, and the names of such men as Governor Joseph Ritner, shall be had in "everlasting remembrance."

This sketch has not touched the chief glory of this great and good man. Stevens' mighty eloquence broke down opposition to the schools in Pennsylvania, but Ritner's wisdom built them up. His judgment in finance was better and sounder than Stevens' at first. And after a severe struggle, Stevens, who was always the pink of honor, said to his friends, "Well, after all the old Dutchman knew more and better than all of us."

The bankrupt Bishop Purcell said, years ago, in Cincinnati, "I can govern the Irish, but I cannot govern the German Catholics." The world owes the relaxation of the grip of popery on the throat of mankind to German fearlessness, firmness and honesty; even as the Middle Ages saw come out of German forests the conquerers of the conquerers of the world. And Governer Ritner was a German, a Christian German. This is enough to say.

MOUNT ROCK, Cumberland Co., Pa., May 12, 1883.
I am the son of Governor Joseph Ritner. I have carefully examined the above sketch and certify that it is correct.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

GEORGE H. WILLIAMS—THE WORK GOES ON.

WORCESTER, Mass., July 15, 1883.

Last week I returned here to resume labors. Mrs. Bailey is still in Dorset, improving in health, but hardly able yet to return home.

It is my sad duty to chronicle the death of brother George H. Williams of Putnam, Conn. He died July 6th and was buried on the 9th at his former home, Pomfret, Conn. Since I came to New England he has been one of my most constant counselors and a liberal helper in reform work. His history is altogether remarkable. When a young man he went to New York and was long associated with the Tappans in their anti-slavery work. He married and had one child, but mother and child soon died, leaving him alone in life. He told me that he then formed plans of Christian work which rendered it impracticable to maintain a family and hence he never married again.

In business in New York city he was successful and accumulated a large property. His business capacity was excellent and no man of my acquaintance was more careful in all his transactions and in the details of his work than he was. His great care to have everything done with exactness was remarkable.

One of the local papers contains the following deserved tribute:

"George H. Williams, who died on Friday, had many friends in this vicinity. Mr. W. had for the past few years kept a book store, chiefly for the sale of religious books and Bibles. He was an anti-secret society man, and opposed every known order of whatever name if secret, and he always had the courage to speak his mind freely. He was a scholar of ripe attainments, speaking and writing six languages fluently, and but for the infirmity of deafness would have been a marked man. That he filled the Golden Rule and was a Christian no one doubts."

After a successful business career Mr. Williams abandoned business and devoted himself entirely to Christian work in the city, continuing in this until he had exhausted his fortune and was broken down in health. It is said that he at that time mastered several of the modern languages in order to converse with immigrants on their first arrival in this country. A more unselfish, unostentatious, consecrated man of God it has never been my privilege to know. His views upon all the leading questions of the day were clear and sound. In his bookstore he would sell nothing that he did not consider useful in the highest sense. On one of the books which he sold was an advertisement of another book which was recommended to the Christian public. He became satisfied that the book advertised was unchristian in character and accordingly he had a slip printed stating his convictions and pasted it over the advertisement, warning the purchaser of the bad character of the book, nor would he allow a book to go out without this warning notice.

He entered with great zeal into the anti-secrecy reform. During the past year he has devoted all his time and strength to the cause. At the time of his death he was engaged in loaning "Holden with Cords" to his townsmen, with the full conviction that the sentiment of the people could be aroused by this book to activity in the reform. Already he had accomplished much by his efforts.

Several persons in Putnam related to me one incident of striking interest. After he came to Putnam to live he was at one time in very straitened circumstances. He himself took a paper and went to his friends asking for a contribution to his necessities, with the understanding that if fortune again favored him he would return it. His friends contributed freely and cheerfully with no idea of ever receiving back their money. Years afterward he took that same paper, went to every contributer and paid every dollar with interest.

Mr. Williams refused to keep silence in the church prayer-meeting on the subject of secret societies. His brethren were sometimes greatly incensed but he would not desist. I was told that sometimes men would leave the meeting and, on one occasion at least, a man called him a liar in the meeting. He was waited upon by a committee of the church to induce him to desist, but he told me, he felt as if he could not keep silence, for the souls of men were in jeopardy. Notwithstanding this persistance he was universally respected in his town and his pastor at the funeral, among other highly eulogistic utterances, pays him the following tribute:

"His intelligenec was conspicuous. To men in general it manifested itself prominently in his familiarity with the Scriptures. Those who listened to his unfolding of Bible passages in the social services of the church, his knowledge and skill in tracing words back to their original meaning, and comparison of Scripture with Scripture, will acknowledge the truthfulness of this tribute. He had a marked Biblical culture. He carried religion into business. He would not, certainly in his latest years, deal in articles of whose use and worth he could not approve."

His death was sudden. Friday morning he wrote me a note saying he was very weak and wished to see me so that he might give me his personal effects. He rode out as usual, mailed the letter to me, returned home, remarked that he didn't know as he should rally from this; went to his room and was found about 3 P. M. in an unconscious condition, passing away about 5 o'clock. He had been free in the use of his means, during his life, for our reform and did not forget us in the disposition of the last end of his property.

We are already stirring the reform waters, preparing to be early in the field for fall work. During my absence brother O. C. Bailey has had charge of the office. One event is too good to pass unnoticed. The gentleman at Westerly, R. I., who gave notice that after I had left town he would reply to me, advertised to speak a certain Sunday evening. Friends in that place sent us word. Accordingly there were some forced marches undertaken and at the close of his Sunday evening harangue O. C. Bailey rose from the audience and gave notice that on the following evening he would reply to the gentleman, in the same house! This brought out a large audience and the gentleman's address was duly overhauled and for once a Masonic dodge was circumvented. Since then Rev. Mr. Morton of that place has preached on the subject and I believe also Mr. Melville has spoken. The latter proposes to lecture in other towns in that vicinity. Thus the work goes on.

The past two Sabbaths O. C. Bailey has preached in the Congregational church at Old Boylston, where John B. Gough worships.

Has the lodge already marked Senator Bruce for vengeance? A Boston paper uses this curious language about him (I quote from memory): "It is said Senator Bruce's chances for the governorship of his State have gone 'where the mountain goat ebbs and flows twice in twenty-four hours.'" As that is the place where the lodge buries the victims of its wrath it is a natural inference that this paragraph is a notice to all good Masons as to what they must do with him politically. The lodge hounds are thus set on.

REFORM NEWS.

IOWA.

The Iowa Christiau Association opposed to secret societies will meet at Albia, Aug. 28, 1883. An unusually interesting programme is prepared and it is designed to make it the best of its kind. Hon. S. C. Pomeroy of Washington city, is to deliver an address; other noted men appear on the programme. Prohibition, Sabbath observance, Christ in government, and other living questions will be presented by able speakers.

FIGHTING A GOOD FIGHT.

GLEN HAVEN, Wis., July 13, 1883.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—I am still at work in the good cause, holding forth in Grant county. I have spent five weeks in this county, have laid out my work to spend abroad twelve more. I shall visit about every village and church. I have not been denied one yet. I preached last Sabbath at Beetown, Elmdale and Hurricane. The Sabbath before at Potosi, Waterloo and Rockville. At the latter place I was threatened with the rot ten-egg argument. It was on this wise. I called on a Mason as I was canvassing from house to house and as soon as I had told him my business, he began to heap on me all the bad epithets he could think of and his very amiable wife helped him as well as she could. He finally told me that if I staid all night he would treat me to rotten-eggs. I told him that my engagements was such that I could not possibly stay, otherwise should be happy to do so, as I was sure I could beat the rotten-egg argument every time. By the by I called at four places in Rockville to stay all night but no one could keep me, I had to go two-and-a-half miles to another Mason's house and he kept me free of cost. I would be glad to mention his name but forbear as it might raise a persecution against him by the brethren.

The next Sabbath I was at Hurricane in the evening, and some thirty or forty young fellows from Rockville and Bois Creek bought eggs at the store and came into church nnd began to disturb the meeting. But three men of the congregation, by the name of J. Treleure, J. Allen Cooms and J. Snyder went and sat among them and stopped all their demonstrations. They even went out into the streets and commenced their disturbance, but the same men followed them out and kept them quiet until meeting closed. They then went onto the road where they thought I was going to pass to waylay me, but there was a much shorter way from the church to Mr. Coom's house, so we went across and missed the crowd and the rotten eggs. All they did was to fire off a few guns and pistols after they found their game had escaped. We did not know that they had waylaid us until we heard their shouts and guns after we got home. So the Lord delivered us out of the mouths of the young lions and we are safe and I am very sure he will deliver us if we trust in him.

I have made arrangements to preach next Sabbath in Cassville Baptist church in the morning, at the Methodist Episcopal in the country at 2 P. M., and Congregational church in the evening. At Beetown a doctor turned me out of his office because I was giving him the proof of the truth of the books I am selling. It was so strong his stomach could not bear it. There are a great many Masons in the same fix. I am sorry for them, but cannot help them in any other way. I do not know as I shall live to get over the State as I have commenced. So I hope you will send on about four more; there would be plenty of work for us all. Yours as ever,

I. BANCROFT.

THE "BLACK HAND."

THE SPANISH ANARCHISTS—ORIGIN AND EXTENT OF THE MOVEMENT—ARRESTS, TRIALS, AND CONTICTIONS, ETC.

There is no more lovely valley in the world than that in which the city of Xeres is placed. Luxuriant vegetation fringes the rivers which traverse it majestically. Vast herds feed on the slopes. Wealth untold and still unsought lies hidden in the rocky soil. A patient population, accustomed to poverty, till the fields in patience, paying to others the fruit of their labor, earning for themselves a scanty subsistence. Middle-men of the class best known in Ireland and Egypt gather their rent or serve them with notices of eviction. Their landlords are grandees who live in Madrid, buzzing round the court of the young King Alfonso, never moved to visit their territories in the south.

But their came a time when the peasants refused to recognize the claim of the land-owners—refused to pay rent to the middlemen. Civil guards and soldiers were against them. Then began a carnival of crime. Robbery on the highway, cattle-stealing, incendiarism, distruction of vineyards, moonlight attacks—these were for months the burden of the newspapers. Threatening letters were received by the authorities; land owners fled from the rural districts. Among the wine-growers of Xeres the socialist propaganda had been spread. Many murders were reported in lonely parts of the county; dozens of people mysteriously disappeared; judges came down with extraordinary powers; civil guards conducted the most rigid investigations, bnt nothing of importance could be learned. At last a servant called on his master, told him he was deputed by and gave information where the leaders of the society might be found. On the following night an attack was made on a lonely farm; the assailants, driven off, left one of their number behind, and he, being at the point of death, made a confession, attributing the deed to the instigation of a secret society.

Thus was discovered the organization of "The Black Hand." Its leaders were a schoolmaster, a smuggler, and a brigand. Its inspiration came from the defunct "Internationale." Its plan of action was to tempt the discontented operatives and farm laborers into its ranks, offering them relief in sickness or old age, and promising that their material condition should be improved. Within the circle of casual recruits was formed an inner circle, which gave itself the name of "The Black Hand," and printed a black hand on every warning missive which it sent out. It held its sessions by torchlight, the members wearing masks. It decoyed its victims into lonely glens, slew and buried them there. It established secret juntas over the entire region, and partly by persuasion, partly by force, compelled 50,000 persons to join its ranks. It boasts that it had branches in Murcia, Estremadura and Portugal, and allies in every socialistic society in the world.

THE PRINCIPLES OF THE MANO NERA

are a sort of communism, as may be judged from the following passage of their programme: "Land," they say, "exists for the common good of mankind, and all have an equal right to its possession; it was made what it is by the active labor of the working classes. The existing social organization is both criminal and absurd. The workers produce and the rich do nothing but benefit; and not only so, but have a hold on the workers; therefore it is impossible to feel too deep a hatred for political parties, for all are equally despicable. All property acquired by the labor of others, be it revenue or interest, is illegitimate; the only legitimate possessions are those which result directly from personal exertions. Consequently our society declares that the rich be held to participate no longer in the rights of man to his fellow, and that to combat them, as they deserve, all means are good and necessary, not excepting steel, fire, and even slander." Their mode of action is exactly that of the Nihilists in Russia, and that employed also for the agrarian crimes in Ireland. The tenents of the popular or secret tribunal resemble also those of Nihilism. They are headed by the following declaration: "Whereas the government, by its refusal to accept the international law, has prevented a peaceful solution of the social question, it has become necessary to establish a secret revolutionary organization. Victory is still far distant. Sins are daily committed which must be punished, and as all the members of this society are bent on a chastisement being carried out, a popular tribunal is charged with the condemnation and punishment of the crimes of the middle classes. Members of this revolutionary tribunal must belong to the international league, and be capable of executing the task they undertake. The middle class may be chastised in every possible way—by steel, fire, poison, or otherwise."

IN THE FOURTEENTH CENTURY SOCIALISM

in England had very similar notions, save the reference to the employment of force. The following words are put into the mouth of a priest, John Ball, speaking in the name of the peasantry, by Froissart: "Good people, things cannot and will not go well in England till all shall be in common; that there be neither lord nor vassal, but we shall all be united. To what good are those we call lords masters over us? Why do they hold us in bondage? And if we be all descended from the same father and mother, Adam and Eve, how can they show themselves better than we, save only in that they spend what we earn? They are clothed in silks and camocas, in velvets and furs, while we wear the poorest cloth. They have their wines, their savory dishes, good bread and cakes, while we sleep on straw and live on rye bread and water. They have their manors and palaces, which they enjoy in idle luxury, while we labor in the wind and rain to earn a scanty nourishment, and yet it is our labor that gives them their plenty."

In March last it was reported that the total number of persons arrested in Andalusia for complicity in the anarchist movement was 1,200. Of this number 300 were charged with being abetters of the Black Hand Society. Sixty of the prisoners up to that time had confessed their complicity in four murders. The information received by the government shows that the secret societies must have contained in the provinces of Jerez, Sevilla and Cadiz alone over 9,000 members, and the documents, lists and letters seized, as well as the confession of the adepts of the inner circle, prove that they had admitted into their ranks unfortunately very numerous in southern Spain. The documents that have come into the hands of the police at Xerez and Cadiz clearly prove that the leaders of this socialist and anarchist campaign, like their compeers in France, in Italy, and in Russia, aimed at both political and economical ends, and were in close correspondence with the most noted revolutionists in Switzerland and the other centers of revolutionary action. Their plan seems to have been to develop a state of agrarian agitation, parallel with a movement among the working classes, already much devoted to the tenets of the Internationale in Madrid, in Barcelona, in Saragossa and in southern towns, in order to keep such elements ripe and trained for future outbreaks or political disturbances. They found in the local condition of Andalusia, in towns and in the country, very excellent condition to promote their propaganda, and might have slipped detection had they not let loose the ferocious instincts of their more degenerate allies. As usual when detection takes place, the foreign and the principal native agents of these secret societies appear to have bolted, and their peculiar mode of organization only allows the police to lay hands on the local ring-leaders and the brutal executioners of the decisions of the Xerez and other branches of the secret junta and tribunals.—Inter Ocean.

—The recent ukase of the Russian Czar granting freedom of conscience and worship to the "Raskolnyks," schismatics of the Russian established church, will bring over 3,000,000 of exiles back into the heart of Russia. The "Raskolnyks" were not banished in chains to Siberia, but, being dissenters from the Greek church, whenever they began to get strong in any particular section the clergy of the established church complained of them and had their community removed to some remote province in the empire, which their intelligence and industry soon developed into productiveness, and increased the imperial revenues. They have always been noted as patriotic people, and the czars have always been favorably disposed towards them on account of their loyalty and thrift, and their good example wherever they went.—United Presbyterian.

—Joseph Cook says that Baboo Keshub Chunder Sen, the head of the Somajists of India, holds "Universalism" in contempt. This great lecturer and thinker, after sixteen or eighteen hours interview with the Baboo, judges him to be honest, sincere, and possessed of a religious character and experience, based on conscience rather than the intellect. Universalism has no heart. The system of the Baboo has. Joseph Cook considers him the most eloquent living Asiatic. But his system leaves its advocates or admirers without salvation in the dark yet. But they break away from much of the abhorent of heathenism and for this should get credit.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE GRAND LODGERY FAMILY IN CANADA.

Your notice of the special to the Times concerning this "Happy family" (if it didn't quarrel so) viz., the several grand lodgeries in Canada, interested me perhaps more than some of your readers, for I had lived some of my manhood years in that country, and know pretty well the characteristics of its people.

First, there was the supremacy of the old country grand lodges; naturally enough Canada desired a grand lodge of her own, aud the English Grand Lodge assented to the desire in 1855. But in 1865 the French, I suppose, of Quebec wished one for themselves, which was refused, and caused such dissent that they set up one independently of the consent of the Canadian Grand Lodge, nor would they accept a charter from even the English Lodge on the terms proffered. The result is that the Quebec Grand Lodge is left out in the cold, being unprotected by acts of the Canadian parliament, which, as stated, exempted the Freemasons from certain penalties against secret societies enacted at the time of the rebellion in 1837.

This is merely a case which shows that the national or race instincts which have ever existed in Canada are by no means subdued by the much-vaunted bonds of the oaths of the Masonic brotherhood.

But the concluding remark of the special embodies a fallacy when it says that "this subject is now . . . wid ening the breach hat has so long existed between Canadians and old country alliances." The breach exists more or less between every race in every country where there are different races. In Canada it is merely between the two languages or races of Quebec, and the Dominion at large, as it might be between a lodge in French Louisiana and the other parts of this country. The breach has no political significance whatever—albeit there is no doubt that Canada is already as much as, or even more self-governing than any State of this Union. And it is equally certain that whenever "the people" of Canada shall constitutionally express their desire to be separated altogether from the United Kingdom (which of course would exclude them from the immense advantages of the world-wide protection of her flag, and, in some degree, from the immense commercial advantages of her free trade policy) there will be no objections made by the present ministry, uor probably by their successors, to be relieved of the onus of protecting them when wars occur.

A BRITON.

Y. M. C. A. READING.

ST. PAUL, Minn., July 10th, 1883.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—As a little experience with the Young Men's Christian Association of this city may be of interest to your readers in other places, I submit the following:

The secretary of this Association undertakes to prevent the distribution of tracts exposing the secrets of Freemasonry. He informs me that the Board of Directors are unanimous in their decision that such tracts shall not be given away in their apartments; and that he himself has formed a favorable opinion of Freemasonry.

Possibly some of the readers of the Cynosure may upon examination find a similar state of things in Christiau associations in their own communities. And inasmuch as "a good tree cannot bring forth corrupt fruit" it becomes a matter of duty before God to investigate the principles which govern these men who rule these Christian societies. "Every tree that brings not forth good fruit is cut down and cast into the fire."

Let us look, not "through a hole in the wall," but at the sources in plain sight of all the people, whence people iu general, and this secretary in particular, may get their favorable opinions of Freemasonry. And we shall thus examine not only their fruit but the tree that produces their fruit. "Judge Daniel H. Whitney, Worshipful Master of Belvidere Lodge, No. 60, who was arraigned before the Grand Lodge of Illinois, October, 1851, on charge of unmasonic conduct in bringing Samuel L. Keith, the murderer of Ellen Slade, and a member of his lodge, to justice," says that "A Masonic lodge is the strangest medley of priests and murderers, deacons and whore-masters, church members and gamblers, decent men and loafers, drunkards and rowdies, that the All-seeing Eye looks down upon."

A great Masonic author has the sublime audacity and confidence in the depravity of human nature to set it forth as one of the beauties of the "Mystic Tie," that a pirate on the high seas, if a Mason, will have mercy upon his Masonic captives, by virtue of his Masonic obligation. Surely this is Satan's parody upon the Christian hymn, "Blest be the tie that binds."

Just imagine a Masouic preacher, as, for instance, Dr. Lorimer, with all of his brethreu in the ministry who assemble with him every Monday morning at the Grand Pacific Hotel, to be captured on the high seas by a pirate ship, and the captain of that ship, after pillaging his captives, says, "Dead men tell no tales," and orders them all to "walk the plank" at the point of the sword; and Dr. Lorimer then makes the grand hailing sign of a Freemason in distress. The captain, being a Freemason, remembers his own Masonic obligation, and orders Dr. Lorimer to the cabin, while all the other captives find a watery grave at the point of the sword. The freebooter then assembles all of the Masonic portion of his officers and crew in the cabin, where all join with Dr. L. in singing, "Hail! Masonry Divine, glory of ages shine," or, "Blest be the tie that binds." Now it follows, as matter of course, that if at some future time Dr. Lorimer meets that brother Mason on shore in any difficulty, Dr. L. must remember his Masonic obligation to extricate him from any difficulty, right or wrong, under penalty of himself being brutally murdered.

Dr. Lorimer, on the 30th of March, 1880, in the hotel parlor, and in the presence of another Mason whom he called Dr. Parker, told me that it was an insult to ask a Freemason if he regarded his Masonic obligation as binding upon him; and repeated the Masonic formula that there was nothing in Masonry that could conflict with a man's duty to his God, his country, his family, his neighbor or himself. And when, by holding the "Masonic Ritualist" before his eyes, I called his attention to that passage in the Ritual where the candidate is taught that he experiences the new birth into divine light, he exclaimed, "Well, that is all right; that is what we are all striving after!" He also said that he was not aware that the name of Jesus Christ was rejected by Masonry. Now every intelligent reader of the Cynosure knows that "Blue Lodge Masonry" does profess to impart the new birth, to save the soul from sin in this life, and translate it to bliss in the world to come. While it is unmasonic to mention the name of Jesus Christ in Blue Lodge or in Chapter Masonry. Dr. Lorimer told me at that interview that he was both a Mason and a Knight Templar; that he joined the Masons eighteen years ago, and that he regarded his Masonic obligation as binding upon him.

The same Masonic author mentioned above gives us as another example of the beauties of that "Mystic Tie" in this: "If a lady who is related to a Freemason makes that fact known to a Freemason who may be about to insult her, that Freemason will relinquish his purposes concerning her." And this grim beauty of the "Mystic Tie" is verified by the esoteric work of the lodge room in cipher now lying before me. I quote from it as follows: "I furthermore promise and swear that I will not violate the chastity of a Master Mason's wife, mother, sister or daughter, knowing them to be such." And kneeling almost naked with hands on the Bible he kisses that book, swearing to be brutally murdered if he commits the Masonic adultery in his Masonic obligation. This same cipher also informs us that the Entered Apprentice is taught to say that he was prepared to be made a Mason in his heart before he entered the preparation room of the lodge.

Now these facts make it obligatory upon us uninitiated (or Masonically speaking, "profane,") people to consider whence our Christian leaders get their favorable opinion of Masonry. No doubt many get it from the "blackguards" mentioned by Worshipful Master Judge Daniel H. Whitney, while some get it from the advantages likely to accrue from Masonic fellowship with pirates, and others get it from the libertinism of the Masonic lodge, made so plain in the Master's degree and set forth as one of the beauties of Masonry in the "Mystic Tie." Where did our Secretary get it? Perhaps he got his favorable opinion from his presiding elder, Samuel G. Smith, who is a worshiper in that "Mystic brotherhood" of Freemasons. Or, perhaps he got it in his heart direct from the Grand Master of the Grand Lodge above, who can be none other than the "prince of liars." At any rate he is firmly settled in his favorable opinion for he tried to prevent the distribution of tracts, not only in the rooms of the Y. M. C. A., but in the street also in the vicinity of their rooms. But inasmuch as we are our brother's keeper, silence concerning the horrid obligations and penalties Freemasons are continually imposing upon young men would be a betrayal of humanity, a betrayal of that allegiance every man owes to the truth, to God and Jesus Christ.

In the light of the above Masonically attested facts, how shall we account for the action of this Board of Directors to blind young men to their danger from the secret lodges? All know that this is a fallen world. The action of this Board of Directors is one evidence of it.

In conversation the other day with an apparently sincere professing Christian, and, at the same time equally sincere Mason, I called his attention to the obscene symbol of the Mason's god, the obscene god of their fathers on the plains of Moab, the point within a circle; when he indignantly told me that he knew how to keep within the boundary of his circle, evidently placing the Masonic law, before alluded to, above the Seventh Commandment.

John Milton refers to the first introduction of sin into this world as folsows:

> "Earth felt the wound; and Nature, from her seat,
> Sighing through all her works, gave signs of woe
> That all was lost! Back to the thicket slunk
> The guilty serpent."

And it is not at all straining the figurative language of Milton to say that that thicket aptly symbolizes a Masonic lodge.

NOT THEN BUT NOW.—Do not keep the alabaster boxes of your love and tenderness sealed up until your friends are dead. Fill their lives with sweetness. Speak approving, cheering words while their ears can hear them and while their hearts can be thrilled by them. The things you mean to say when they are gone, say before they go. The flowers you mean to send for their coffins, send to brighten and sweeten their homes before they leave them. I would rather have a bare coffin without a flower, and a funeral without an eulogy, than a life without the sweetness of love and sympathy.—Scrap Book.

There are nearly four thousand drinking saloons in Chicago; and it is estimated that thirty million dollars are expended annually for intoxicating liquors in that one city.

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON VI, August 5. The Cities of Refuge.—Joshua 20:1-9.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us.—Heb. 6: 18.

"Appoint out for you cities of refuge." Literally of reception, because the authorities of the city received the fugitive and protected him from wrong.—Johnson.

THE OBJECT OF THE CITIES OF REFUGE,—justice mingled with mercy. Places of refuge were not unknown among the ancient heathen. The jus asyli, or right of shelter and impunity, was enjoyed by certain places reputed sacred, such as groves, temples, and altars. Among the Greeks and Romans the number of these places became in process of time very great, and led, by abuse, to a fresh increase of criminals. Among the Jews the cities of refuge bore some resemblance to the asylum of the classic nations, but were happily exempt from the evil consequences to which reference has been made.—J. R. Beard. The evil consequences were avoided, (1) because the cities of refuge did not shelter a wilful murderer, but the authorities, after a fair trial, were to deliver him up (Deut. 19: 11-13). The surer the punishment the fewer the criminals. (2) Because no money, as among Bedouins and Arabs, and as allowed by the Romans, could buy off the wilful murderer (Num. 35: 31, 32). Thus the Jewish law showed a just regard for human life, and put the poor on the same footing as the rich. No pity, no money could shelter the murderer; so only "would it be well with them." So only will it be well with us. On the other hand, the cities of refuge were an institution of mercy, saving any who had accidentally killed another from being executed as a murderer. Such an one would have a refuge, a fair trial, and yet suffer such consequences of his deed as would make him careful in regard to his neighbor's safety. Thus the community would be safe, and the evils of blood revenge running through the generations would be avoided.—Peloubet,

"That the slayer that killeth any person unawares." In accordance with these regulations a wide distinction was made between the man who committed wilful murder, and one who slew another by mistake, in ignorance, and unintentionally. (a) In the former case the guilty criminal met with no compassion from the Mosaic code. He was regarded as accursed. The horns of the altar were to be no refuge for him. He was to be dragged from them by force to suffer his doom, nor could rank or wealth exempt him from it (Num. 35: 31, 32). (b) In the latter case, where life had been taken unawares, a more merciful system of legislation intervened. In contradiction to the customs of the Greeks and Romans, and even of the middle ages, which made places of sanctuary available to criminals of every kind, the Jewish lawgiver reserved them for unintentional acts of murder, and for these alone.—Cambridge Bible.

"Until the death of the high priest." This limit was for various reasons, among which may have been (1) the fact that the custom of blood revenge was so fixed among the Israelites, that no greater check than this limitation of it by the death of the high priest could be attempted. (2) The need of punishing in some way the carelessness which results in accidental manslaughter, so as to make every one careful, and (3) the typical significance of the high priest's death, who prefigured Christ, through whose death all penitent souls are set free from bondage.—Johnson. (4) The death of the ruling high priest, "the head of the theocracy and representative of the whole people." was regarded as of such importance that any other death was, so to speak, forgotten in consequence, and an amnesty ensued. during which the manslayer was at liberty to return to his home.—Cambridge Bible.

Christ our city of refuge. Christ is the city of refuge, who preserves all those who flee to him for mercy; he does that because he is the divinely appointed Saviour, able to save to the uttermost them that come unto God by him.—Remember, none but Jesus can save you. But if God shall enable you to see your danger and fly to Christ, he will have mercy upon you forever, and the avenger of blood will never find you out. No, not even when the red lightnings shall be flashing from the hand of God in the day of judgment. That city of refuge shall shelter you; and in the heart of Jesus, triumphant, blessed, secure, you shall sing the righteousness and the blood of Christ, who shelters sinners from the wrath to come.—Spurgeon. It is not the church, it is not the altar; it is Christ himself who is the one and only sacrifice for sin, and therefore the one and only hiding-place to which the sinner can repair. In no place, person, or thing,—in no buildings, sacrifices, or rites,—is there any refuge for the guilty, save the atonement of the cross; but there such a refuge is provided as will meet the case of sinners of every class, not excepting the wilful murderer himself.—T. Smith.

BAND OF HOPE BIBLE LESSON.

THE WORDS AN INDEX TO THE HEART.

Matt. 12: 31-37.

31. Wherefore I say unto you, all manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men; but the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven unto men.

32. And whosoever speaketh a word against the Son of man, it shall be forgiven him; but whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, neither in the world to come.

33. Either make the tree good and his fruit good; or else make the tree corrupt and his fruit corrupt; for the tree is known by his fruit.

34. O, generation of vipers, how can ye being evil speak good things? for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh.

35. A good man out of the good treasure of the heart bringeth forth good things; and an evil man out of the evil treasure of his heart bringeth forth evil things.

36. But I say unto you that every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment.
37. For by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh.

CENTRAL TRUTH.—We must watch our words, and pray as well as watch.

1. Blasphemy is speaking reproachfully or irreverently about God, and saying things regarding his character which are not true.

2. The Pharisees committed blasphemy against the Holy Ghost when they accused our Lord of doing his wonderful works by the help of Satan.

3. It was not the mere sinfulness of the words which was unforgivable; but they evinced a state of mind so hopelessly hardened that repentance was impossible, and without repentance there can be no forgiveness.

4. A good man's thoughts are pure, and as speech is only the expression of thought his words will be the same.

5. The heart of a bad man, on the contrary, is full of corrupt thoughts, and his speech must partake of the same character.

6. Idle words are only vain, frivolous, foolish talk that does no good either to ourselves or others.

7. Words are important because they show what is in our hearts.

8. No one can rightly estimate the power for good or evil that may lie in a single word.

9. Many people think idle words are harmless; but foolish, ill-considered speeches have done a great deal of mischief.

10. Men very often get such a habit of swearing that when they try to break off from it they find that profane language slips from them when they are not aware of the fact. It is just so with a habit of scolding, fretting, or talking lightly and foolishly.

11. We can keep our hearts pure by admitting only pure thoughts.

PRACTICAL TRUTHS.

Pure words come from a pure heart.

Idle words may shut us out of heaven, just as a crop of useless weeds may spoil the harvest.

Only by watching and prayer can we keep from sinning in our words.

WHAT DOES THE BIBLE SAY

of hasty words? Prov. 29: 20. What of those who are sparing of their words? Prov. 17: 27, l. c. What is said of the words of the pure? Prov. 15: 26, l. c. What of a word fitly spoken? Prov. 25: 11. How is a fool's voice known? Ecc. 5: 3, l. c. Are we always conscious of the evil in our words? Is the Bible any foe to innocent mirth? Prov. 17: 22. How can we keep our hearts pure? What prayer should we use? Ps. 141: 3.

LESSON TALK.

A good man, filled with pity for a poor, miserable drunkard, stepped up to him and touching him kindly on the shoulder invited him to sign the pledge. The poor victim of appetite had neither money, friends, nor self-respect, but this unlooked for kindness from a stranger roused in his heart such a desire to recover his lost manhood that he signed the pledge and became a reformed man. Then he went to work to save others, and became the most famous temperance lecturer of this or any age—John B. Gough. And a few kind words did it. What if this man, who was neither rich nor great nor learned, had neglected this opportunity; had reasoned that he had no money or shining talents to devote to the temperance work, and so he would not do anything—how many drunkards would have gone unsaved. It is a great mistake to think that foolish talk is harmless. The absence of good is in itself a great harm. The editor of a religious paper once asked a Masonic friend his opinion of Masonry. "It is the most foolish and the most harmless thing in the world," was the reply. Now any bright boy or girl can see the contradiction involved in this answer. Folly and sin, if not identical, are very closely related. All sin is folly, and foolish acts or words have usually more or less sin mixed up with them. All exaggerations of speech come under the head of "idle talk." It is much better to think beforehand what we are to say, and then say exactly what we mean. The habit of exaggeration grows upon a person like other bad habits. One who habitually exaggerates is not believed even when he means to tell the exact truth.

LESSON HYMN.

Speak gently—it is better far
To rule by love than fear.

"All crimes on earth," says Lord Bacon, "do not destroy so many of the human race and alienate so much property as drunkenness."

Dr. Williard Parker of New York: "Alcohol is the one evil genius, whether in wine, or ale, or whiskey, and is killing the race of man."

STRONG ENDORSEMENT.—"The charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State legislatures should be withdrawn."—American Platform, Art. 4.

"Incorporation is a privilege granted to associations on the ground of public utility. It follows logically that it is an abuse and a fiction to incorporate a secret society of any kind."—North American Review, June.

In Russia the government has become tired of relying on the inclination of its subjects as a chief source of revenue, and has consequently set at work to diminish the number of liquor shops. Formerly it encouraged their multiplication, and punished as disloyal some public advocates of temperance.

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,
JONATHAN BLANCHARD,
OF ILLINOIS.

For Vice President,
JOHN A. CONANT,
OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

SHORT SERMON.

TEXT:—If we let him thus alone, all men will believe on him: and the Romans shall come and take away both our place and nation.

MY BRETHREN:—There are thousands of good, well-meaning men who think that if they should vote for the Anti-masonic cause, the Democracy would come into power and utterly destroy the Republic and all the fruits of the war of the Rebellion. These good, honest souls believe in Anti-masonry; they know that the Anti-masonic cause is a just cause; they can plainly see that Anti-masonry is the only way to save our ancient American institutions; they know that the lodge is running the Republican party, just as the cunning Pharisee was running the party in power in his day; yet in spite of all this, they are so much afraid that the Democracy will destroy the nation that they go on voting for political Masonic knaves who are as much worse than the Democracy, as the Democracy is worse than George Washington.

My friends, the country can never be saved by such men. Such men are voting for the Masonic lodge, and not for the Constitution of the United States. Their great concern is how to save the Republican party, just as the concern of the Pharisees was how to save the Synagogue. As the Saviour came to restore and save the essence of the Mosaic institutions against the corruption and fraud of the Pharisees, so we Anti-masons are striving to restore and save the essential character of our American institutions against the corruption and fraud of the Masonic lodge. But what do we behold? Why, some of our best men are going on voting for the lodge as if they thought that the salvation of the country depended upon the lodge instead of upon the principles of the Constitution.

My friends, be not deceived; he who votes for the Republican party votes for the lodge; just as he who sustained the synagogue sustained the Pharisee. And he who sustained the crafty, subtle, tricky Pharisee was helping to ruin the cause which the Saviour came to save; just as voters who sustain the Republican party are helping to ruin American institutions.

My friends, somebody must dare to do right and vote against the lodge, even though the Democracy or even the Romans themselves should come in power. There is no greater danger to the country than that which comes from a party like the Republican party whose animating principle is Freemasonry. The heart of the Republican party is Freemasonry; just as the heart of the Democracy is Ku-Kluxism. Let every true, honest American dare to vote against both. SO MOTE IT BE!

FREE TRADE AND TARIFF.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 13, 1883.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I approve what you say about the Anti-monopoly platform in your issue of the 12th. While it is manifestly defective in what it omits, it has much to approve and little to condemn. I wish especially to commend the tariff plank, which looks to free trade as an ultimate result. In my opinion all tariffs are wrong, because

1. They can never be so adjusted as to afford equal protection to all interests. They tax certain classes for the benefit of others.

2. A tariff tax costs more for collection than any other. Consider the immense cost of our Custom Houses. One in New Orleans cost $15,000,000 and is not yet completed.

3. They greatly multiply the number of Federal officers, increase greatly the patronage and opportunities for corruption, and vastly increase the expense.

4. They sometimes develop industries that by reason of climate are exotic and abnormal, and can only be sustained by a perpetual and ruinous tax. Such is the sugar culture in Louisiana. Fifty millions of people must pay from 25 to 35 per cent duty on a prime article of food for the benefit of a few planters who could not continue in the business without it. They could raise other products to profit without a tariff, but sugar-cane belongs to the tropics, and is a costly exotic north of the Gulf of Mexico.

5. The burdens of a tariff are not in proportion to men's ability to bear them. A large poor family consumes more sugar and so pays more tax than the small rich family; and yet its ability to pay this tax is less, and the demands of the government ought to be less. This is true of all articles largely consumed.

6. A tariff on articles of legitimate commerce is wrong per se. Every man has a natural right to sell the products of his labor in the market where he can sell them the best, and buy other products where he can buy them the cheapest. This is one of the rights of labor, and any interferences with it on the part of a society or the government is simply oppression. No sudden changes ought to be made in long established methods of commerce, but sound political economy and universal philanthropy point to ultimate free trade as the destiny of this and all truly Christian nations. H. H. HINMAN.

A GOOD RECOMMENDATION.

In November last a committee of clergymen, members of the National Arbitration League, brought the subject of arbitration before the President of the United States in an able address, entreating him to recommend in his forthcoming message to Congress some measures providing for the establishment of international courts, or commissions of arbitrition. The President accordingly referred to the subject in his message in a very favorable manner, in which occurred the following admirable sentiment:

"I am unwilling to dismiss the subject without assuring you of my support of any measures the wisdom of Congress may advise for the promotion of peace on this continent and throughout the world, and I trust that the time is nigh when with the universal assent of civilized peoples all international differences shall be determined without resort to arms by the benign processes of arbitration."

It was reasonable to expect the legislative branch of the Government, a majority being of the same party of the President, would candidly examine a matter which the executive so heartily commended to their attention. The league, through its committee, prepared the following appropriate joint resolution, which was introduced early in the session in both Houses, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

"That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to negotiate with all civilized powers who may be willing to enter into negotiations, for the estrblishment of an international system, whereby matters in dispute between different governments agreeing thereto may be adjusted by arbitration, and if possible, without recourse to war."

The same committee also prepared an able and elaborate memorial, showing the favorable action of the legislative departments by most of the civilized governments of Europe within a few years past, on resolutions endorsing the principles of arbitration, which was presented to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

—The work of evangelization in Japan is in a very encouraging state. Prof. Wyckoff, writing May 30th, from Yokohama, says of the work there, "Rev. Mr. Inagaki baptized eight persons last Sunday (besides thirty-two others babtized since June 1st), and has several others under instruction preparatory to baptism. The interest still keeps up here, and is spreading to other parts of the empire. There is little excitement, but a quiet and powerful work of grace is surely going on."

The Rev. E. G. Booth says, "The field is certainly 'white for the harvest." There has been a wonderful movement among the people during the past four months. The good work in Yokohama and Tokiyo has been marvellous, and reports come in from various parts of the country stating that the people have an increasing desire to hear the Gospel. Many of our pastors and church members have enjoyed a great reviving. One of the pastors said to me a few days ago that now he was able to preach a Gospel which he had both seen and felt Certainly we have every reason for encouragement for the speedy evangelization o Japan.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JULY 26, 1883.

THE WORK TO BE DONE NOW.

A way for the railroad track is found through mountainous regions by skillfull engineering. Where the inhabitants are hostile the task is doubly difficult. But surveying is only preliminary work; very important in its order, but left to itself it will not construct the track or set the wheels in motion. It requires money and men and equipments after the route is located, and the right of way secured.

Reforms advance by similar stages. The survey, the right of way, the money, the men, and the necessary equipments, come in their order. The fact that a reform is needed implies obstacles to be overcome in the midst of inhospitable surroundings. To explore an enemy's country and seek out his strongholds will never conquer his forts or subdue his anger. This applies to our efforts at Washington. The Anti-secrecy, Prohibition, Government-Reform movement will never revolutionize the administration by simply proclaiming the dawn of a political millennium. It will take careful engineering and hard work to lay the track that will carry a good man and a pronounced Christian reformer over the rough road "beset by thieves and it may be by murderers," and land him safely in the "White House." We may as well look the fact fairly in the face at the beginning, and make up our minds to take things in their order, for it will come to this at last.

A good beginning has been made and the way well prepared for a more rapid advance than we have before witnessed. Up to a recent date the movement has had little political significance. Appeals have been mainly to the conscience and intelligence of the people rather than attempting to secure general concert of action in a thoroughly organized political movement. This method has developed a sound constituency that will "stick" to their principles until, like the old-line Abolitionists, they carry the country. Providence seems clearly to indicate that the time for increased activity is at hand, and that more vigorous efforts should be made to secure the adoption of the principles of the American party platform by the American people.

Washington is literally the "seat of government" in the United States. Its supreme energies are devoted to governing and taxing the people. It is the point where political parties are made and controlled by a few men whose strong hold is in the "secret empire." If the American party is to influence the old parties in their action or win a victory for its principles, it must get near enough to these political machinists to watch their movements and report to the people. The way has been opened to do this and something already accomplished. Brother Hinman pioneered the way and sustained by a few discreet helpers quietly holds the situation. Others followed to make a more careful survey, and in due time the right of way was secured. Three important steps have been taken in their order, and this marks our material progress in Washington up to date, and brings us to the point where money is required to make further advances. An encouraging start has been made toward paying for a suitable location and building, and friends have only to continue in the way of well doing to become firmly established in the very center of political influence and power. The facts and figures have already appeared from time to time in the Cynosure, but I will put them in form convenient for reference that you may have the situation before you.

1st. I purchased a lot and building for the National Christian Association located at No. 215, 4½ street, N. W., less than three blocks from the Capitol and near Pennsylvania Avenue, which is estimated to be now worth $10,000 by competent judges.

2d. It was deeded to me January 1st, 1883, by Vice-Admiral S. C. Rowen, for a consideration of $6,875. Hon. S. C. Pomeroy examined the title and made the papers without charge.

3d. Vice-Admiral Rowen was unwilling to deal with a corporation, and for that reason the papers were made in my name.

4th. I paid $2,000 at the time of purchase and I gave my note for the balance of $4,875 at 6 per cent. interest, payable semi-annually, on which $200 has been paid, making a total of $2,200.

5th. My note is due three years from date, but may be paid at any time previous in installments of not less than $1,000.

6th. The total expense incurred to date, July 18th, 1883, is: Purchase money $6,875; repairs and improvements, $600.27; chairs and furniture for chapel and agents room, $177.56; half year's interest, $146.25; half year's tax, $88.39; insurance, $15.00; total, $7,902.47. Amount paid $3,227.47, leaving $4,675.00 incumbrance.

7th. There has been received by the N. C. A. treasury to date, July 18th, 1883; cash for the Washingington fund; $1,401.78; notes or written pledges, $1,303.00; total, $2,704.78, or $522.69 less than the amount paid. Besides the above a number of friends have made verbal pledges, which may in some cases be relied on, and to which reference has been previously made.

8th. By request of the N. C. A. Board ofDirectors, I have executed a deed in due form conveying this property to the National Christian Association, which deed remains in escrow until my note to S. C. Rowen is paid, when it will be delivered and put on record, and the title vest in the N. C. A., whether I am dead or alive. In this way the rights of the Association, the rights of contributors, and my rights are properly protected.

Brethren, you have the case before you and the conclusion is so perfectly evident, that it does not require a statement. The man who does not see that the next thing to do is to take the debt off the Washington purchase and equip that important center with men and means suitable for the work, has less insight into the present and prospective needs of our reform than the men had who sent Bailey to Washington and started the National Era to oppose slavery. A number have said, I will give if others will do so and so. This is good, but would it not be better to make up your mind that this thing is going through, and give in cash or a written pledge what you can afford for the sake of the cause, and let others do the same. Our energies should not be expended and our time occupied with this debt. It should be cancelled at once and our united endeavors directed to the work for which this is only preliminary. Bro. Hinman should be strongly reinforced and a paper started, a mass convention should be held and a more thorough and systematic campaign organized for 1884. From Washington as a political center of the American as well as other parties, Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, Boston, and the large cities of our country should be visited and the wheels put in motion along the whole lines of political, social and practical reform. Can we afford to lose a day or expend money in paying interest, when it is needed to meet the demands of the hour for tract work, lecturers and campaign literature?

J. P. STODDARD,
General Agent, N. C. A.

GOVERNOR RITNER.

STATESMAN, REFORMER, CHRISTIAN.

In the American Volunteer, Carlisle., Pa., we have two long and able articles from Peter Ritner, Esq., son of Gov. Ritner; in vindication of his father from Masonic aspersions and falsehoods. The editor of the Cynosure knew Gov. Ritner personally, at Harrisburg, while he was in office. He was then, as well represented in the picture of him in this paper, a noble, intelligent, fine looking gentleman, and a devout and consistent Christian. Yet, so cunning, universal and malicious were the arts by which he was traduced, though none dare impeach his integrity, many believed him ignorant and incompetent, from the uniformity and the universality of the methodical slanders of the lodge.

Before Ritner was inaugurated and sworn in, men came to him applying for office. His son testifies that his father told one of these who offered him money for a promise of office, that he might have his horse and leave by early morning, and that nothing but the rain and darkness prevented an order to leave the house that night. Ritner signed bills covering many millions of money and left office purer than he went in. David R. Porter, his Democratic successor, left office rich, and was commonly said, (not of course proved) to have made his money by receiving gifts, which are commonly called by harder names.

Ritner was the only Governor who refused the insolent demands of the slave-State governors that Abolition freedom of speech, should be crushed. He was also the only executive who wiped out the infamous lodge-falsehoods concerning Washington; and the only man whom the lodge pursued into the United States Senate, and there defeated by Whig and Democratic votes, cast by Freemasons in secret session, from which, against law and custom, the injunction of secrecy has not been removed.

Seward was a great man, a politician and Anti-mason. Chase wrote Wirt an Anti-masonic letter in 1831, but was silent thereafter. Stevens fought politically, till the lodge played 'possum and feigned dead. Charles Francis Adams was less a Roman than his great father. But all these were moral and political giants. Ritner, a farmer, confronted Gen. Jackson, his party and the lodge. And when two hundred and twenty-eight thousand voters left the field, he sold out his property in Washington county, went back to the farm in Cumberland county which he knew when a boy, and where all knew his faults and failings; in sight of the farm where he met young Susan Alter, in years long gone; and there, as a Republican, he stood by and fed the furnace which God was heating up to consume American slavery. And when his history is written, as it will be, not as it has been by four different authors, he will stand in the halls of memory like the prophet Samuel, pure from the corruptions of his age, a soldier, citizen, Christian and statesman, unblemished and complete.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS' LETTERS.

ANOTHER FRENCH LETTER.

PARIS, 38 De Varennes St., June 30, 1883.

Rev. Blanchard, Pres't. of Wheaton College:

DEAR SIR:—I owe to your kindness in the Christian Cynosure, Feb. 22d, an extract from Charles Francis Adams' preface to President Quincy Adams' Letters, in which he so strongly opposes Freemasonry. I wish to obtain the passage complete, with the title of the volume in which it is found. I have in vain searched Paris for the book; and I think that you, who voluntarily oppose the lodge, will be willing to aid me. Believe me, dear sir, ever your devoted friend,

CLAUDIO JANNET.

ANSWER.

WHEATON COLLEGE, July 17th, 1883.

To Prof. Claudio Jannet, Catholic University of Paris, France,

DEAR SIR.—Yours of the 30th ult. received and read.

President John Quincy Adams's "Letters on the Masonic Institution," were written after he was defeated for the second Presidential term in 1828, by General Jackson. Morgan was kidnapped in September, 1826, while Adams was President. President Adams was a good man and opposed the lodge, as were almost all the political leaders in the free States. Fifteen hundred lodges out of 2,000 went down before popular discussion. Masonry then became a Southern institution. Gen. Jackson was a slave-holder and a Freemason. The secret lodge defeated Adams when he ran the second time, and ruled the country until Lincoln's election in 1860. The country was governed by Anti-masons during the war, against the lodge-and-slavery which were one. John Quincy Adams was, and is now, generally considered one of the greatest statesman the United States ever had. A Masonic paper in Boston published that Mr. Adams was a Mason. Being questioned, he said: "I am not, and never shall be!" These few words defeated him. After his defeat by Jackson in 1828; he wrote the "Letters" against Masony to which you refer. They were addressed to Edward Livingston, Secretary of State under Jackson, and to several other prominent men and civilians. They were published in a volume of near 300 pages, after being printed in newspapers throughout the country.

On the decline of the Anti-masonic party in 1832–6 the Freemasons began slowly to re-open their closed lodges, and creep back into power, as still as the pestilence. and as dreadful. The lodges had one rule, to burn every book, paper and print, which opposed Masonry. I have had books so burned by lodgmen. To meet this vandalism, a wealthy man in Boston, Henry Gassett, printed several Anti-masonic books, Adams's "Letters" among the rest, and placed them in almost every public library in the United States, and in Great Britain.

The volume of Adams's "Letters" was sent by Mr. Gassett to the following libraries and the receipt acknowledged, viz.:

To the British Museum, London, Dec. 13, 1847.

To Glasgow University, Scotland, June 27, 1850.

To University College, Bedford Square, London, 1850.

To University of London, Somersett House, Aug. 30, 1850.

To London Library, St. James Square, Oct. 14, 1850.

University of Cambridge, England, Nov. 21, 1850.

To University of Edinburgh, Scotland, Oct. 23, 1850; with several others.

I send you the above list of libraries to which Adams's Letters were sent thinking you or your friends may be across the channel in London and can, in one of those libraries, see Pres. Adams's "Letters" and many other volumes of Anti-masonry sent to those libraries along with it.

You say you have searched Paris in vain for the "Letters." The book was sent the Library De la Ville de Paris and the receipt acknowledged May 3d, 1850, by Mr. Prosper Bailey, under-librarian of that library. I hope French Masons have not destroyed it. If not, you will find it there along with three other important Anti-masonic books received and acknowledged by Mr. Bailey at the same time.

Seventeen years after his famous letters were published, and multitudes of books had been burned by the Masons, Mr. Gassett and others published this and other volumes of Anti-masonic literature, not for sale, but for gratuitous distribution, as stated above. Ex-President Adams was then too feeble to fulfil his promise to write out his then present views of the secret lodge system, and his son, Charles Francis, undertook and ably executed the task in a close-printed preface of forty pages. The extract which you enquired for is on the thirteenth page of that preface. The country was then still. No Anti-masonic party existed, and this long and wonderful preface, therefore, contains the cool, deliberate estimate of the lodge by an ex-President of the United States and his son, afterward United States Minister to Great Britain.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE.

THREE UNDENOMINATIONAL CHURCHES are organized by the City Mission in New York. They accept the Apostle's Creed, choose their own officers, and are said to be flourishing and doing good. The "Mission Society" is supported by denominational churches. Which is the right way for churches?

OCCASIONAL LAWLESSNESS" heads an excellent article in The Independent on those who approve of young Nutt shooting Dukes, who debauched Nutt's sister and shot his father. The editor of the Cynosure was in an adjoining county soon after Dukes was said to be cleared by a Masonic jury; which verdict caused the second murder. Is it not "passing strange" that The Independent, with its vast means and ability knows nothing about lodge-verdicts and consequent assassinations?

ANOTHER LIBERAL, Charles W. Park, called by the Howard Avenue church, New Haven, was lately refused installation by a council, and so has got a cheap celebrity of a modern fashion. On probation after death, he said, "I claim and I exercise the right of all thinking men to form my own opinions, and cherish my own hopes." All right. So said the council and refused to install him. On baptizing infants, he considered baptism an "outward sign of an inward fact" which "cannot be said to occur in infants"; not as circumcision, a sign of the parents' faith. He did not believe in infant baptism, but "if parents insisted" he "would not refuse to administer the rite"! In Andover, in 1834, there was a Mr. Park, brother of Professor Park, whose ideas and spirit were like the above.

"Whoever resists established order," says Junius, "will always find abettors. Those who know not what he means, hope he means rebellion."

Joseph Cook has given the Sabbath desecrating press another opportunity to shriek at him. Redpath's Lyceum Bureau offered him $300 to speak one Sabbath at Highland Lake. Henry Ward Beecher had set the example in the White Mountains and elsewhere; and thousands might hear and be affected who would not otherwise be benefitted, who might indeed be spending the day in vanity and sin. But Mr. Cook was neither to be tempted by the golden bribe, nor swerved from duty by the plausible argument that people who chose to hear him as a preferable kind of amusement would get any particular benefit from listening. It would lead to Sabbath desecration on the part of others, and would be countenancing the same sin on his own part. Hence he refused to have anything to do with the matter.

The telegraphers' strike which took place Thursday last is one of the remarkable conflicts between capital and labor, more especially because of the effect upon all kinds of business the country over. The strikers have attacked one of the wealthiest and most powerful monopolies in the country and expect to succeed because their secret combination has drawn into its net a large proportion of the skilled operators in the country. They demand about 15 per cent. more pay and 20 per cent. less work all at once. The company has wealth and power, but this cannot give skill and experience in a day. It also before the struggle began made material advances in the pay roll. No doubt there are thousands of those who joined in the strike who were satisfied with their wages and whose only motive was the command of unknown superiors. The secret order to which the telegraphers belong is a branch of the boasted "Knights of Labor," one of whose principles is "no strikes." The methods of this secret lodge in ordering the strike were characteristic. The word which was to begin the performance was "Gen. Grant is dead." This message, transmitted all over the country, of course got to other ears than those for which it was intended and caused a brief and painful sensation. At a wink from the local officers of the order the operators filed out upon the street and into some convenient hall where they went into secret meeting. Several days have passed and the world is not yet upset, everyone reads as much telegraphic news as he needs, and business goes on with little friction. The companies are in some places fully supplied with operators and expect to carry on their business. They may not succeed, but it is quite probable that the secret order of telegraphers will have to take up some other means of living in a few weeks.

—The Weed pamphlet was last week advertised through mistake at 25 cents. The price is only five cents as at the first. Get and read this great letter and see that copies are circulated in your community.

—Joseph Ritner, the Anti-masonic Governor of Pennsylvania, lived to a good old age, and died so late as 1869, while the present movement against the lodge was yet in its cradle. He is described in the "Library of Universal Knowledge" as "an advocate of total abstinence and of Anti-slavery." The public school system of Pennsylvania, whose figures speak eloquently of its success in the same encyclopedia, was inaugurated only in 1834. It became firmly established in 1835, under the official care of Governor Ritner. The article following his name in this work has the general failing of encyclopedias of to-day—it omits entirely any notice of his Anti-masonry.

—We should have preferred to read the Telescope's flattering notice of Finch, the temperance lecturer, had there been at least a caveat respecting his advocacy of the secret temperance orders. Mr. Finch has gained popularity as a temperance speaker, but when he publicly uses this advantage in establishing Good Templarism, the value of his work must be taken at a large discount.

—Elder A. Osgood, of Lostant, Ill., is visiting friends in Nebraska and Colorado. He preached on a recent Sabbath in the Presbyterian church at Hanson, Neb., where he found but one Mason in town. He left a quantity of tracts in the place, and secured the reading of the Cynosure in one household at least.

—Bro. H. B. Mullenix of the Junior class, Wheaton Theological Seminary, prepared and read before the late meeting of the Minnesota Ministerial Association of Wesleyan pastors, an essay entitled "Does the Bible Standard of Christianity Demand our Anti-secret Tests of Church Membership?" It is a very lucid and logical argument which we are glad to see preserved and published in the Wesleyan.

—Iowa friends are reminded that the last Tuesday in August is the 28th and not the 21st, as was incorrectly stated lately in the Cynosure. That is the date of their annual State gathering which meets this year at Albia. We understand that Hon. S. C. Pomeroy, Pres. C. A. Blanchard and Rev. M. A. Gault are among the speakers expected. They will help make a convention worth attending by a thousand Iowa Anti-masons.

—Albany, Mo., was disastrously visited by the severe storm which swept over Kansas and Western Missouri lately. The American Freeman office was uninjured, though damage to the amount of many thousand dollars was done in the town. The Freeman issued an extra immediately.

—"Tom Thumb," the celebrated dwarf, whose death was announced last week received some attention from the Masonic lodges, who claimed him probably as a sort of honorary member. Masonic emblems were upon his coffin and a lot of Knight Templar Masons marched with his body, but there is no notice that any Masonic ceremony was performed at the grave.

—A few days since a Mr. J. A. Goulden of Pittsburgh, the head of a Catholic society, known as the Emerald Beneficial Association, delivered an address in Chicago for the benefit of his society, a branch of which he wishes to establish among the Catholics here. This society numbers some 15,000 young men in the United States and Canada, which have libraries, reading rooms, engage lecturers, etc., The speaker denounced secret societies, declaring them to be demoralizing in their tendencies with all young men, and claimed that his organization was entirely anti-secret in its character.

Some of the Methodist mission schools of high grade for boys and girls in the cities of India are full to overflowing, and are obliged to stop advertising and enlarge their accommodations.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

THE ORDER OF KNIGHTS OF ROBBERY.

It is conceded on all hands there is in this city an alarming number of thefts, burglaries, and other crimes. The newly appointed detectives find their hands tied and all their efforts for the suppression of crime are thwarted. Thieves when arrested are at once surrounded by a host of strong friends, have able counsel, get straw bail, and are quite sure to escape. The secret criminal combinations are too powerful for the government, and slowly the people are becoming awake to the danger that threatens the subversion of all authority. The following articles from the National Republican of the 13th and the Star of the same date, point to general conviction and the probable cause:

The recent arrest of Burns and Logue, the noted cracksmen, and the failure to hold them for a definite offense, has set a good many people to talking in a way that does not speak well for the efficiency of the Washington detective department. On the other hand, the present detectives frankly admit that they are laboring under great disadvantages, and that their service is not so thorough as the law contemplates. They openly charge that they are hampered in the pursuit of criminals by the old detectives, now under indictment, who, for purposes of their own, throw every obstable in the path of justice. In fact, it has been a matter of common street talk for some time that the old detectives, especially McElfresh, McDevitt, and Miller, are engaged in a scheme to break down the new detectives by covering the tracks of those who ought to be in the clutches of the law.

The above is a fair reflex of the prevailing sentiment in and around headquarters. The indicted detectives are held largely accountable for the prevalence of crime. Most of the officials are open in the opinion that the presence of so many cracksmen here is due to an understanding between them and the old detectives—the object being a matter of mutual advantage.—National Republican.

It may be the fault of the present police force and its present head, as some allege, and it may be the fault of the late detective force, as others charge. It may be partially the fault of both, and it may be that neither are responsible for the present condition of things; but what is certain is the self-evident fact that there is a little too much burglarly in the city just now.—Star.

It will be remembered that these ex-detectives are now under inditment for inviting, planning and protecting thefts, robberies, and arsons. They have employed such counsel as R. J. Ingersoll and some United States Senators, and since morally sure of escape though convicted at the bar of public opinion. It is widely believed, and highly probable that they continue the same nefarious business, that they receive stolen goods, and, for a sufficient reward, return them to the owners, and share this reward with the thieves. They thus secure the gratitude both of the robbed and the robbers, and make a nice thing for themselves.

Some of these men are known to be Masons and Oddfellows, and perhaps rely largely on them for protection. But they constitute in themselves a secret powerful brotherhood, bound together by ties not less enduring than Masonry, and quite as effective in the time of trouble. I respectfully suggest, that they be accorded a place in the list of "fraternities" and that the above be considered their corporate name. And, inasmuch as they had their original appointment by Act of Congress, I suggest that the same power might give them a charter; help them build a temple, and set them up regularly in the secret order business. But seriously, I look upon all these developments of the nature and power of secret combinations as the presage of a better state of things. Not until all such associations are regarded as criminal, and are suppressed by law will we have "peace on earth and good will to man."

SLANDER.

JULY 14, 1883.—The National Republican of July 13th published a meeting held at these rooms on the previous evening, which is a tissue of injurious falsehoods from beginning to end. The reply below was refused an insertion. Let people ponder and consider whether they can afford to support Masonic slanderers.

"Editor of National Republican:

"DEAR SIR:—The article in your paper of to-day on "Anti-secret Societies" contains many misstatements. The building at 215 4½ St., N. W., does not advertise board and lodging. The man who sat at the table was not T. G. Hinman, and was not 'the same person who caused so much trouble at a funeral in East Washington.' There was no recess, no colored person, no policeman, no Chinaman. Owing to the rain our meeting was small, but everything was done decently and in order.

Respectfully, H. H. HINMAN."

The allusion to "the person who made so much trouble at the funeral at East Washington" is a poor attempt to perpetuate the bare-faced slander against President Blanchard. Much good will doubtless come from these poor attempts to bolster Freemasonry with lies, but the good will not come to the liars. Yours for truth,

H. H. HINMAN

THE HOME.

SONNETS ON PRAYER.

I.

Oh, leave thyself to God! and if indeed
'Tis given thee to perform so vast a task,
Think not at all—think not, but kneel and ask.
O friend, by thought was never creature freed
From any sin, from any mortal need;
Be patient! not by thought canst thou devise
What course of life for thee is right and wise;
It will be writteu up, and thou wilt read.
Oft like a sudden pencil of rich light,
Piercing the thickest umbrage of the wood,
Will shoot, amidst our troubles infinite,
The Spirit's voice; oft, like the balmy flood
Of morn, surprise the universal night
With glory, and make all things sweet and good!

—Thomas Burbidge.

II.

Lord, what a change withiu us one short hour
Spent in thy presence will prevail to make,
What parched ground refresh, as with a shower!
We kneel, and all around us seems to lower;
We rise, and all, the distant and the near,
Stands forth in sunny outline, brave and clear;
We kneel, how weak; we rise, how full of power.
Why, therefore, should we do ourselves this wrong,
Or others—that we are not always strong,
That we are ever overborne with care,
That we should ever weak or heartless be,
Anxious or troubled, when with us is prayer,
And joy and strength and courage are with Thee!

THE STRONGEST PROOF.

The Gospel was given to save men, and in saving them gives the crowning proof of its divinity and truth. The proof is indispensible. Without it, it would be impossible to prove the truth of Christianity; which is only saying what was implied by the Apostle—that, if the Gospel were not "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth," it would be a gross imposition, of which all men should be ashamed. We talk about the Christian evidences, too often overlooking the fact that they would be incomplete, and, indeed, of no value, without Christian experience.

"Christianity can be proved by argument," says one; and so he goes to work to prepare an elaborate display of "external, internal and collateral evidences" which frequently confuse rather than convince his hearers.

The way to prove the truth of the Gospel is to see whether it can do what it proposes to do. Subject it to the test of experience. "If you wish to be assured of the truth of Christianity, try it," said Coleridge. He who denies its truth, while refusing to adopt this test, is like the man who denied the existence of Jupiter's moons, and yet refused to look through the telescope of Galileo for fear he should see them. And, on the other hand, the believer who attempts to prove the truth of Christianity, while ignoring Christian experience, acts as wisely as the blind man whose sight was restored would have acted, if he had attempted to prove Christ's divinity from Moses and the prophets, while ignoring the fact that Christ had healed him. The Pharisees wanted him to deny the miracle and engage in the argument, but he refused to do either, and simply and wisely appealed to his own experience, saying, "This one thing I know; whereas I was blind, now I see." So it is the business of the church, to appeal continually to the work of spiritual healing, as conclusive proof of the truth of Christianity, and to resist all the efforts of skepticism to divert attention from that work.—Pittsburg Christian Advocate.

WHAT'S THE HARM?

How many find themselves in unhappy circumstances from beginning a career of wrong-doing by the use of cards! When they began there were no stakes. They did not play for money, nor cigars, nor drink, but merely for amusement. By and by the game ceased to amuse; and, to make it interesting, a small wager was laid, perhaps a single cent, but this grew larger and larger, until dollars were played for, and a passion for gambling created. With this came, as a matter of course, drinking and other vices. Card-playing at first seems innocent enough, but at the last how often does it ruin everything? There are rooms in cities where old and young men congregate evenings, and spend more than the profits of the day, or week, or month, at the gambling table. Sometimes t ; their own money, sometimes the money of their employers. They manage to escape detection and disgrace for a while, but, by and by, a defalcation or a forgery comes o ligh and then follows flight or imprisonment, and a good name gone down in the darkness.

A correspondent of the Philadelphia Times says: "There is a man in Washington who is now a common gambler, but who, in other years bore a splendid name. He was a graduate of Harvard College, and was elected, at the close of the war, to the United States Senate, from one of the Southern States. He served in this and other offices with great distinction. After his term in the Senate, he was appointed Assistant Secretary of Treasury. Here his fall began. He became too fond of wine and cards, and finally lost his office and landed in jail.

"After getting out of jail he was, for a time, wretchedly poor. He rallied a little, and got appointed to a twelve hundred dollar clerkship. His friends thought he might recover himself in this position. But he did not. He had a terrible passion for gambling, and under the baleful influence of this, he lost his clerkship and his money too. Now he goes about, borrowing a dollar or two, whenever he can, which he takes into the gaming rooms, and plays with until it is gone. If he has no money, he sits by and keeps the score for the low wretches who frequent these hells on earth. He once had a charming family of boys and girls; but he knows not where they are now."—Sel.

REPROOF.

"Reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine." The days of reproof and rebuke seem to be well-nigh passed. The prophets that "prophesy smooth things" seem in the majority, and iniquities are connived at, winked at, and laughed at much more frequently than they are reproved. But the men who shut their eyes to the iniquities that are around, and who are so blinded by a few smooth words that they see nothing wrong, and nothing to rebuke, are not likely to do great work for God or humanity. God's watchmen must not be "dumb dogs;" nor must they be deceived and cajoled by honeyed words.

The servants of the Most High God are not to look on in cowardly silence while wrongs and crimes are perpetrated. They are not to pass by on the other side, when "truth is fallen in the streets and equity cannot enter." They are to be faithful and honest, and "valiant for the truth upon the earth;" and by reproof and protest they are to resist, and, as far as possible prevent, the wrong doing of others. He who fails to do this becomes a partaker of the evil deeds of others; and, though he may gain earthly advantages by his prudent silence, he will not receive the blessing of heaven on such a course.

A man who serves God in a world like this will frequently have occasion to utter solemn warnings, earnest reproofs and stern rebukes; and a religion which walks this world without lifting a warning cry is not the religion of Jesus Christ. It is not the religion of prophets, apostles, reformers, or godly men of any age. It is the religion of blind guides; of prophets who are dumb dogs. It is the religion which thinks a soft word more important than an honest one; which tells smooth falsehoods and finds fault with rough truths; which says, "Peace, peace, when there is no peace," and provokes the curse, and precipitates the wrath of God upon the people.

Said John Wesley at one time: "I have only a word to say unto you, my brethren, who are vulgarly called Methodists. I never heard or read of any considerable revival of religion which was not attended with a spirit of reproving. I believe it cannot be otherwise; for what is faith unless it work by love? Thus it was in every part of England when the present revival began, about fifty years ago; all the subjects of that revival, all the Methodists, so-called, in every place, were reprovers of outward sin. And indeed so are all that 'being justified by faith, have peace with God through Jesus Christ.' Such they are at first; and if they use that precious gift, it will never be taken away. Yea, 'God shall bless us, and all the ends of the earth shall fear him.' Works, Vol. 6, page 302.

The experience of Wesley is the experience of every man who has stirred the hearts of men and wakened nations from their lethargy. The cry of John the Baptist in the wilderness was "Repent;" and repentance implies that there is something to be repented of; and when men heard his preaching "they were baptized in Jordan, confessing their sins." "The Word of God is quick and powerful." It pierces and cleaves the hearts of men. Blessed are they who preach it faithfully, but woe unto them who shun to declare all the counsel of God."—*H. L. TELEGRAPHING FOR PRAYER.—A city missionary stated at a recent meeting in New York that having occasion to visit a Christian merchant short time ago, he found him very sad. A message had come from a secluded spot among the mountains, where an invalid daughter was seeking health, to say that that daughter was dying. The missionary reminded the merchant that God was omnipotent, and the healer of our diseases, and suggested that he telegraph to the daily noon meeting in Fulton street, New York, asking the friends there to pray with him that God would stay the disease and heal the daughter. A telegram was sent, prayer was offered, and the prayer of faith saved the sick.—Ex.

DID NOT KNOW IT WAS THERE.

A well-to-do deacon in Connecticut was one morning accosted by his pastor, who said, "Poor Widow Green's wood is out. Can you not take her a cord?"

"Well," answered the deacon, "I have the wood, and I have the team; but who is to pay me for it?"

The pastor, somewhat vexed, replied, "I will pay you for it, on the condition that you read the first three verses of the forty-first Psalm before you go to bed to-night."

The deacon consented, delivered the wood, and at night opened the Word of God and read the passage: "Blessed is he that considereth the poor; the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble. The Lord will preserve him and keep him alive, and he shall be blessed upon the earth; and thou wilt not deliver him unto the will of his enemies. The Lord will strengthen him upon the bed of languishing; thou wilt make his bed in his sickness."

A few days afterward the pastor met him again. "How much do I owe you, deacon, for that cord of wood?"

"Oh!" said the now enlighlened man, "do not speak of payment; I did not know those promises were in the Bible. I would not take money for supplying the old widow's wants."—Selected.

A LIGHT IN THE DARKNESS.

In Dr. Moffat's account of one of his early African journeys on the banks of the Congo river, he says:

"We had traveled far, and were hungry, thirsty, and fatigued. The people at the village roughly directed us to halt at a distance. We asked for water, but they would not supply it. Then, as twilight drew on, a woman approached. She bore on her head a bundle of wood, and had a vessel of milk in her hand. The latter she handed to us without opening her lips, laid down the wood, and returned to the village. A second time she approached with a cooking vessel on her head, a leg of mutton in one hand and water in the other. She sat down without a word, prepared the fire, and put on the meat.

"We asked her again and again who she was. She remained silent for a time, until a solitary tear stole down her black cheek as she replied: 'I love him whose servants ye are, and surely it is my duty to give you a cup of cold water in his name. My heart is full, therefore I cannot speak the joy I feel to see you here.'

"We then asked her how she managed to keep up the life of God in her soul, when she drew from her bosom an old Dutch New Testament, saying, 'This is the fountain whence I drink; this is the oil which makes my lamp burn.'"

Taught in former years to read the Word of God in a mission school, she was a branch of the true Vine, bearing fruit amid the thorns and thistles of the wilderness; a light in the world, like a city set upon a hill, which cannot be hid.

TO THOSE WHO DO NOT BELIEVE IN FOREIGN MISSIONS.

You say you do not believe in foreign missions. Then there are certain other things which you cannot believe.

1. You cannot believe that God so loved the world that he sent his Son to save it, or that it is his wish that none should perish, but that all should come to repentance. You deny God's universal love.

2. You cannot believe that the Gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. You deny its efficiency.

3. You cannot believe that he was the Son of God, or has any claim upon your obedience, who said: "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel unto every creature." You deny his authority.

Unless you find in the Gospel something which makes it worthy of being preached to all men, you have not found in it that which makes it of any worth to you; you have missed its meaning; you do not know its power. The root of unbelief in foreign missions is want of faith in the Gospel. —Missionary Herald.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

TIME ENOUGH.

Two little squirrels, out in the sun,
One gathered nuts, the other had none.
"Time enough yet," his constant refrain,
"Summer is still only just on the wane."

Listen, my child, while I tell you his fate;
He roused him at last, but he roused him too late,
Down fell the snow from the pitiless cloud,
And gave a little squirrel a spotless white shroud.

Two little boys in a school-room were placed:
One always perfect, the other disgraced.
"Time enough yet for my learning," he said,
"I will climb, by and by, from the foot to the head."

Listen, my darling: Their locks have turned gray,
One as a governor sitting to-day;
The other, a pauper, looks out at the door
Of the alms-house, and idles his days as of yore.

Two kinds of people we meet every day:
One is at work the other at play,
Living uncared for, dying unknown—
The business hive hath ever a drone.

Tell me, my child, if the squirrels have taught
The lesson I long to impart to your thought,
Answer me this and my story is done,
Which of the two would you be little one?

CAN A CHILD HAVE FAITH?

Yes, a child can have faith. Not one of our readers is so young as not to be able to believe in the Lord Jesus Christ and be saved.

Every one knows how to believe in a father or mother, in an older brother or a sister. Children naturally believe. We say to all the boys and girls that God their heavenly Father asks them to believe him in the same way as they believe their parents. When they promise anything, no matter what, their children expect them to keep their promise. So when God promises anything, the smallest child may expect him to keep his promise. And certainly he will do it. God never disappoints those who put their trust in him. The earlier children can be taught to remember their Creator, the better for them.

One day, in talking with a college student, an excellent young man, the question, "when did you become a Christian?" was asked. He replied, "Ever since I can remember I have loved God and loved the Lord Jesus Christ."

The incident shows that children from their earliest years may be Christians. They can have all the faith that is required of them. As they live in this world, and by degrees learn how to live and act, so by degrees they learn more and more about religious matters. At first their faith may be small, but, like the mustard seed, it will grow until it fills all their life.

This is perfectly true. But more may be said as to the reasons why Christians believe that a child can have faith. "He that believeth not shall be damned," saith the Lord. This would be the doom of a child, if it had no faith. Jesus says, "Of such is the kingdom of God." In his kingdom no unbelievers are accepted; therefore these children who are accepted must be little believers. They have the faith they need. Again, the Saviour speaks of children in Matt. 18:6, as of little believers. All these things show very plainly how God wants children treated in the economy of his grace. He wants them regarded as little believers.—Ex.

"FOR ME."

Little Carrie was a heathen child, about ten years old, with bright black eyes, dark skin, curly brown hair, and slight, neat form.

A little while after she began to go to school the teacher noticed one day that she looked less happy than usual.

"My dear," she said, "why do you look so sad?"

"Because I am thinking."

"What are you thinking about?"

"O, teacher! I do not know whether Jesus loves me or not."

"Carrie, did Jesus ever invite little children to come to him?"

The little girl repeated the verse, "Suffer little children to come unto me," which she learned at school.

"Well, what is that for?"

In an instant Carrie clapped her hands with joy and said:

"It is not for you, teacher, is it? for you are not a child. No; it is for me! for me!"

From that hour Carrie knew that Jesus loved her; and she loved him back again with all her heart.

"Now, if the heathen children learn that Jesus loves them, and believe his kind words as soon as they hear them, ought not we, who hear so much about the dear Saviour, to believe and love him too?" Every one of us ought to say, "It is for me! for me!" and throw ourselves in the arms of the loving Saviour.—Morning Light.

THE BOAT THE GNATS BUILD.

Did you ever hear about the wonderful boats the gnats build? They lay their eggs in the water, and the eggs float until it is time for them to hatch. You can see these little egg rafts on almost any pool in summer.

The eggs are so heavy that one alone would sink. The cunning mother fastens them all together until they form a hollow boat. It will not upset, even if it is filled with water. The upper end of these eggs are pointed, and looks very much like a powder flask.

One egg is glued to another, pointed end up, until the boat is finished. And how many eggs do you think it takes? From two hundred and fifty to three hundred. When the young are hatched they always come from the under side, leaving the empty boat afloat.

These eggs are very, very small. First they are white, then green, then a dark gray. They swim just like little fishes, and hatch in two days. Then they change again into a kind of sheath. In another week this sheath bursts open and lets out a winged mosquito. It is all ready for work. There are so many of them born in a summer, that, were it not for the birds and larger insects, we should be "eaten up alive."—Our Little Ones.

THOMAS FULLER THE NEGRO MATHEMATICIAN.

Thomas Fuller, familiarly known as the "Virginia Calculator," was born in Africa. At the age of fourteen he was stolen, and sold into slavery in Virginia, where he found himself the property of a planter residing about four miles from Alexandria. He did not understand the art of reading or writing, but by a marvellous faculty was able to perform the most difficult calculations. Dr. Benjamin Rush of Philadelphia, in a letter addressed to a gentleman in Manchester, England, says that hearing of the phenomenal mathematical powers of "Negro Tom," he, in company with other gentlemen passing through Virginia, sent for him. One of the gentlemen asked him how many seconds a man of seventy years, some odd months, weeks, and days, had lived. He gave the exact answer in a minute and a half. The gentleman took a pen, and after some figuring, told Tom he must be mistaken, as the number was too great. "Top, Massa!" exclaimed Tom, "you hab left out de leap-years!" And sure enough, on including the leap-years in the calculation, the number given by Tom was correct.

"He was visited by William Hartshorn and Samuel Coates," says Mr. Needles, of Philadelphia, "and gave correct answers to all their questions: such as, How many seconds are there in an hour and a half? In two minutes he answered 47,304,000. How many seconds in seventy years, seventeen days, twelve hours? Answer (in one minutes and a half) 2,110,500,800."

That he was a prodigy, no one will question. The following appeared in several newspapers at his death in 1790:

"This was a prodigy. Though he could neither read nor write, he had perfectly acquired the use of enumeration. He could give the number of months, days weeks, hours; minutes and seconds for any period of time that a person chose to mention, allowing in his calculations for all the leap-years that happened in the time. He would give the number of poles, yards, feet, inches, and barley-corns in a given distance—say, the diameter of the earth's orbit—and in every calculation he would produce the true answer in less time than ninety-nine out of a hundred men would take with their pens.

And what was more extraordinary, though interrupted in the progress of his calculations, and engaged in discourse upon any other subject, his operations were not thereby in the least deranged; he would go on where he left off, and could give any or all of the stages through which the calculation had passed.

"Thus died Negro Tom, this untaught arithmetician, this untutored scholar. Had his opportunities of improvement been equal to those of thousands of his fellow men, neither the Royal Society of London, the the Academy of Science at Paris, nor even a Newton himself need have been ashamed to acknowledge him a brother in science.—Williams' History of the Negro Race."

TEMPERANCE.

European drinking habits sustain 40,000 breweries and consume annually 2,250,000,000 gallons of malt liquors.

The buildings formerly used in Kansas for breweries are being turned into factories, pork-packing establishments, and the like.

The General Life Insurance office of Canada has instructed its agents as follows: "In consequence of the excessive mortality experienced in the case of innkeepers whose lives have been assured with the Company. it is hereby notified that from this date directors will not undertake these risks on any terms."

Prohibition is both practical and legal, and we doubt not, will sometime be agitated in such a manner as to give rise to great ardor and enthusiasm.

The arrests throughout Ireland in 1882 of "drunk and disorderly" persons numbered 87,497—about one-third the number reported by the New York police authorities.

Francis Murphy's Blue Ribbon Mission at Manchester has been a grand success, about 7,000 new pledge signers having been registered, and nearly 8,000 "thoroughgoing" badges have been donned, pledging the bearers against the use of tobacco as well as liquors.

Sir Wilfrid Lawson's General Local Option bill was discussed in the Commons on the 24th, and accepted by the Government, by a majority of 87. The bill will undoubtedly pass both houses and in hundreds of communities practical prohibition will be at once inaugurated.

London Times: Drinking baffles us, confounds us, shames us and mocks us at every point. It outwits alike the teacher, the man of business, the patriot and the legislator. Every other institution may flounder in hopeless difficulties, but the public house holds on its triumphal course.

Even Bismarck has turned a fanatic. He has appealed to the Reichstag for a law prohibiting the desecration of the Sabbath. He claims that the German Empire is threatened with disintegration by the spirit of lawlessness which has grown up under the influences of drink and Sabbath-breaking. "Remove from the people the belief in God," he declares, "and the restraints of his laws, and you make the country unsafe. Lawlessness and worthlessness grow rampant under such regime."

Those who pretend to think that the opposition to the liquor traffic is confined to weak-minded sentimentalists, or to bigoted fanatics, willfully blind themselves to the wide-spread and mischievous evils which this gigantic and overpowering monopoly inflicts upon the whole body politic. Unlike any other business, it benefits only those engaged in it. It piles up fortunes for them by despoiling their patrons. What revenue it adds to the treasury of the State is immensely counterbalanced by the enormous drains caused by the poverty and crime it creates. It wastes and robs and ruins its victims, and yet, strange to say, it keeps its place and power as if it were the greatest blessing instead of the deadliest bane of society. Aside from the moral aspects of the question, it is most hopeful that business men are coming to look at its material and financial relations. At a recent temperance convention in Boston, Judge Aldrich called attention to the fact which the census discloses, that the annual consumption of alcohol and fermented liquors amounts to six hundred millions of dollars. When the full force of this single item gains possession of the minds of statesmen and political economists, it is to be hoped that they will see the need of reforming this evil, which is sapping the industry, wasting the resources, and ruining the prospects of the producers of our national wealth.—Christian at Work.

Dr. Cyrus Hamlin, President of Middlebury College, tersely says in his recent baccalaureate: "No one will deny that intoxicants are the chief cause of poverty and crime. Now, government is earnest to punish theft, but protects the chief cause of theft, Government punishes the murderer, but never hangs the rumseller who made him a murderer. Government punishes forgery, and makes a pet of the cause of forgery. Government used to punish perjury, but rumselling has made perjury so common and popular that it has become an accomplishment and is acted upon as though it were a Christian grace and duty. But vain is the effort to set aside the subject. No government can do it. Despotic Russia and Republican America must both meet it. For the evil is too enormous and attrocious to be hid, too destructive and cyclonic to be regulated, too insolent to be endured, too cruel not to excite indignation. It is true the capital and influence invested in its defence are enormous and potent; but God and humanity are invested against it; childhood and womanhood out of the depths lift up holy hands against it, and the 'irrepressible conflict' must go on until our statesmen shall dare to assail, in our halls of legislation at Washington, any evil or monstrous wrong that is destructive to national welfare."—Middlebury Register.

A DIALOGUE.

Mother and little son visiting in the city.

Boy:—"Mother, who are those men with blue clothes on and big brass buttons? They stay around the saloons, and look fat and lazy."

Mother:—"They are policemen my son."

Boy:—"What do policemen do?"

Mother:—"They take care of the men whom the saloon-keepers have made drunk; or they protect the saloon-keepers from trouble and annoyance."

Boy:—"It must cost the saloon-keepers a heap of money to hire such nice looking men."

Mother:—"Oh, the saloon-keepers don't hire them. The goverument pays their salaries."

Boy:—"Why the government does not pay father's hired man."

Mother:—"No. my boy; but the goverument is kinder to saloon-keepers than to deserving workingmen. Travelers and citizens are subjected to any amount of annoyance from drunken men; but this is no concern of the government. But as soon as the saloon-keeper is disturbed, the officers take the poor inebriate away. Yes, my son, the government is very watchful over the men whom it licenses to ruin other men, women and children."—Ex.

SOMETHING TO CRY OVER.

Dr. John Hall, in an article entitled, "A Thing to Cry Over," touches in a pathetic manner the common habit of laughing at drunken men. Dr. Hall stood on a boat in New York harbor. Not far off was a well-dressed but tipsy young man. Beside the doctor was a plainly-dressed man. When Dr. Hall saw the people laughing at the drunkard, he saw in his neighbor's eyes such a sad, pitying look that he said to him, "They should hardly laugh at him." Said the man, "It is a thing to cry over." Then he told Dr. Hall of his own wife, who took to drink in Scotland, and who promised to reform if he would come to this country, but did not, and died of drunkenness; and when the doctor hoped that he had comfort in the children, he said, 'One, the second, is; she is a good child. The oldest is not steady, and I can do nothing with her; and the youngest, a boy, can't be kept from drink. I've sold my place, and am going to a town in Ohio where, I am told, no liquor can be had, to try and save him." Dr. Hall closes as follows: "Who would not wish for abstinence societies, tracts, books, ministers, sermons, young people's pledges, humane laws? One almost cries out for anything that will stop this slow, cruel murder of home-love, of men, of women, of little children, of hope, of peace, of immortal souls."—Christian at Work.

THE CHURCHES.

—Dr. David A. Wallace of Wooster, O., former President of Monmouth College, has been offered a professorship in Xenia Theological Seminary, and also the presidency of Westminster College, Pennsylvania. He has signified his desire to accept the former position if the appointment shall be ratified by the Synods with reasonable unanimity.

—A Sunday-school of forty members has been organized at Hancock, Colorado. It is 11,000 feet above tide water, and is believed to be the highest Sunday-school in America.

—Mr. Moody preached to a crowded house on a late Sabbath evening in Music Hall, Boston. The meeting was the first of a series which are to be held on every evening for the next two months. Mr. Moody announces his belief that the warm months are the best time of the year for special revival services, his experience in Chicago justifying this opinion. Although so many people are out of town there always are plenty who remain, and the fact that many pastors are away on vacations and that many of the usual services of worship are intermitted is a strong reason why some substitute should be supplied.

—The organ of the reformers in the Tunker church, the Progressive Christian, has changed its title for the better to the less peculiar Brethren's Evangelist. It will still be issued from Ashland, O., and will represent that portion of the denomination which lately in Dayton reorganized with the name "Brethren" which will distinguish them from the larger conservative party who hold to the name German Baptists.

—Word comes from Missouri that a paper is about to be started there in the interest of the cause Christ among the Germans in America. It will be called the Bible Herald.

—The ten thousand converts of the Rhenish Mission of the Cape Colony, contributed in 1881 36,000 marks for church, and 5,000 marks for school purposes. A mark may be counted as about a quarter of a dollar; so the entire contributions of these people amounted to about $8,000. One college of 274 souls gave 5,280 marks, or $1,300.

—It is rumored that Professor Egbert Smyth, of Andover Theological Seminary, will accept the Presidency of Bowdoin College. Joseph Cook and the others who are making a fight on Professor Smyth, at Andover, would be pleased to see this change, as it would give them hopes of success in fighting the new school theology.

—A Sunday-school has been organized at the skating-rink on Michigan avenue, corner of Congress street, for the benefit of the newsboys. It meets at 2:30 o'clock every Sunday afternoon, and there is a need for more teachers, which the churches should supply. Last Sunday there were present 227 boys, and nineteen classes had no teachers.

—At a colored camp-meeting near Columbus, O., one of the evening exercises has been the "breaking of Gidcon's lamps in illustration of the Bible story of Gideon and his band, who, when warred upon by the Philistines, came upon them at night from different directions and broke their lamps with a great noise, causing the flight of their enemies. The procession of negro Gideonites formed at headquarters and marched through the audience, coming upon the enemy at three different points, when the breaking of the lamps took place.

—A citizen of Gardner, Me., who died recently, it is said, left a fund of $2,000 to a Methodist church of the village provided that society would give up its church sociables. The fact is significant, so far as it calls attention to some of the harmful customs which have barnacled themselves on the average social gatherings of the church in so many places. When these otherwise helpful assemblies are made an occasion for silly talk on the part of the young people and sillier gossip on the part of their parents, when foolish games are played and private theatricals and other out-of-place performances are made a part of them, it is high time they were dispensed with as nuisances or worse.

—According to the London Christian, the Bishop of Gibraltar has refused to sanction the erection of an English church at Monaco, the notorious gaming town, on the ground that its effect would be to give an appearance of respectability to the place which would tend to draw English families to this nest of temptation and vice, and so by exposing them to its dangers, rather hinder godliness than promote it.

—"What are these among so many?" is a question suggested by the statement of a missionary of the American Sunday-school Union in Missouri, that within a year he has "gathered 2,700 into Sunday-schools, while in that State there are about half a million of children without adequate religious instruction, and in Arkansas the darkness is still greater."

—In a town on the Black Sea, Samsoun, an acting bishop of the Greek church, recently announced a series of sermons, with a view of keeping his people from attending the meetings of the missionaries. One of the missionaries was curious enough to attend, in order to ascertain the kind of sermons he would preach. To his astonishment, he avers, there was nothing to which the most fastidious Protestant could not heartily subscribe. Evangelical doctrine was propounded, he said, supported by Bible reading in a modern language, and followed by a fervent prayer.

—Queen Victoria, as Empress of India, rules over more Mohammedan subjects than does the Sultan of Turkey, and the Mohammedans in India are only one to four of the Hindus. For the transformation of this vast body of people there are numerous and powerful agencies at work. From a report just published it appears that the London Tract Society alone expends over $20,000 on India. In thirty-three of the native languages it has published as many as 100,000,000 copies of 5,000 different works, and to judge from the report, it has not done so in vain. In 1851 there were about 100,000 native Christians in India. In 1861 there were 200,000. In 1871 there were 300,000. In 1881 the number had reached 530,000.

—It is certain that Congregationalism is not keeping pace with other denominations in growth, nor with the growth of the country. Rev. Mr. Thwing of Cambridge, in a notable article in the Independent, calls the attention of his brethren to the fact that in the last decade the country has gained 31 per cent in population, the Baptists 63 per cent in members, the Episcopalians 62 per cent, the Methodists 43, the Presbyterians 31, and the Congregationalists only 23 per cent. The churches in New England are in a curiously pastorless state, the minutes of the Vermont Convention, just published, show only 49 pastors to 199 churches, less than one-fourth. It is said that this state of things is due to the ministers, who prefer to serve as stated supplies rather than pastors, as the former relation requires no preliminary councils, and does not compel them to be under the discipline of the churches they serve.—Examiner.

—In the onward march of the Gospel we find most remarkable changes continually taking place, and the intelligent creature need only to look about him to see evidences on every hand of the sure coming of the time when every obstacle to national Christianity shall be overcome, when every enemy of the Lord shall be forced to exclaim, "Galilean, thou has conquered!" And one of the most satisfactory evidences comes from the field of the Madura Mission, where native converts have recently built a magnificent church for Christian worship out of the materials brought from the ruins of a heathen temple.

—A Brahmin wrote to a missionary: "We are finding you out. You are not as good as your Book. If your people were only as good as your Book, you would conquer India for Christ in five years."

—Five of the twenty-three Synods of the Presbyterian church paid eighty-five per cent., or nearly $400,000 of the $465,000 given to our foreign missions last year by the churches.

—The General Assembly of the Calvinistic Methodists of Wales has acknowledged itself as a Presbyterian body by appointing a deputation to the General Council of the Presbyterians, to meet next year in Belfast.

—It is reported that Captain Ebenezer Morgan, of Groton, Ct., who paid $25,000 towards securing a Baptist translation of the Bible, has now purchased the translator's library, which was collected at a cost of $240,000 for $15,000, and will present it to Madison University.

—The census of missions to be taken next year will, it is said, show an increase of 200,000 native Christians in India, Ceylon and Burmah for the last ten years—500,000 in all.

—Through the efforts of Mrs. Martha Riggs Morris, about $15,000 has been raised toward erecting a home for girls of the Dakota tribe of Indians, at Sisseton Agency, Dakota. The object of the home is to teach them the principles of Christianity, the ordinary branches of study and practical housekeeping. The sum raised is almost one-half the amount needed for the enterprise.

A GRAND WORK QUIETLY DONE.

MORGAN PARK THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY,
July 16, 1883.

As to the work against secret societies among the Scandinavian Baptists, I am happy to say that we have needed but very little of such work. Some years ago one of our members became a Freemason. He was excluded, but soon left the lodge, and is now a good member of our church again. Then there seemed to be some tendency in that direction in the far West, and I was requested to write an article on secret societies, which I did, taking the ground that since Freemasonry contains a Christless religion, participation in it by a Christian must be an abomination before God, and by no means to be tolerated in our churches, and in general that to bind oneself by oath to keep yet unknown secrets, and that of organizations of mostly ungodly persons, is so unlike Christ and the spirit of Christianity that certainly no true Christian should even be tempted to do it. We have not since heard of any difficulties of this kind in our churches, except that some churches will allow members to join labor-associations which have no other secret than a recognition mark; some, yea the most, will not even allow that.

But we cannot but look to the future with apprehension, seeing that our American sister-churches so readily admit even Freemasonry into their membership, ay, into the pulpit itself. May the Lord have mercy upon us, and help us to keep ourselves unspotted from the world.

We have a very precious work of grace going on among the Scandinavian people, especially among the Swedes. In our training school for missionaries we have made the Bible itself our principal text-book, expounding it during the course (four years) from beginning to end, learning its truths, drinking in of its spirit, and this God has abundantly blest. Our students, now among the leading ministers of the Gospel in almost every part of the country, have gone out generally well acquainted with the Word of God, well established in their belief built upon that Word, and with a good measure of the spirit of that Word; and through their labors God has graciously led many hundreds of souls to Christ and in every way furthered his cause among us. There are also other older ministers of the Gospel doing a good service, so we have great reason, as far as this work is concerned and the state of our churches, to rejoice and take courage.

Yours truly in Christ,

J. A. EDGREN.

THE
CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE
A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

It is now owned and published by the

The well known and enterprising firm of A. H. Andrews & Co., whose advertisement appears in this issue, are doing an immense business in their line. Mr. Andrews says they filled orders for over one thousand "Parlor Folding Beds" during the past month. He gives personal attention to his business, and his patrons may expect prompt and honest attention to all orders.

The patrons and friends of the National Christian Association are debtors to S. A. Kean, president of the banking firm of Preston, Kean & Co., in this city, for wise counsels and many favors in handling the funds they have contributed. This is considered a sound and safe institution, and receives as it deserves liberal patronage from the business men of Chicago and surrounding country. It has been but recently tested by the rascality of one of its trusted employees, who absconded with $55,000 of the bank's funds, but has come forth from the ordeal as "gold tried in the fire." After a vigorous and long pursuit the thief was captured in Peru, and is lodged in our county jail awaiting trial for his crime. The meanest feature of this sad case is that after having plundered his benefactors he sought by the aid of accomplices to ruin their business. In this he failed, and only strengthened the public confidence in the soundness of the establishment, which goes quietly on with its business while he is locked in a felon's cell. This case should be a warning to every young man never to betray a trust committed to him, for he may be sure his sin will overtake him. And even if he should escape detection, a dollar dishonestly obtained is the heaviest thing he can carry in his pocket or his business. It pays to be honest.

IN BRIEF.

A Japanese student wrote to his friends at Tokio after a few months in this country: "There are two boating associations, called Yale and Harvard. When it rains the members read books."

—"Time has its revenges." The wealthy owner of Uniontown, a suburb of Washington, D. C., which was laid out a quarter of a century ago, issued strict orders that no negro should ever be allowed to possess a lot. Now the old home of that owner, in the very center of this exclusively white town, is owned by Frederick Douglass, our distinguished fellow-citizen of African descent.

—A young city fellow, dressed in a faultless suit and a pair of shoes that tapered into a point in a most modern style, was visiting in a rural district. A bright little boy looked him all over until his eyes rested on those shoes. He looked at his own chubby feet, at then at his visitor's, and then, looking up, said: "Mister, is all your toes cutted off but one?"

—A Texas paper tells this cheerful tale of the experimental school of medicine: "A woman came to a prominent physician and asked for a remedy for her husband's rheumatism. The doctor gave her a prescription and said: 'Get that prepared at the drug store and rub it well over your husband's back. If it does any good, come and let me know. I've got a touch of rheumatism myself.'"

Fair faces marred with pimples or freckles, should use Dr. Benson's Skin Cure. Use and be happy.

Vertigo, Hysterics, Convulsions—all nervous disorders in fact—are cured by Samaritan Nervine.

"This certifies," writes D. D. Christman, of Oswego, Ind., "that Samaritan Nervine cured me of Epileptic fits." At Druggists, $1.50.

FARM NOTES.

PURE WATER FOR HOGS.

Mr. J. M. Stahl, writes as follows on the above subject in the American Agriculturist for August:

Swine are subject to the same laws that govern the health of other animals. Vegetable and animal matters, in a decaying state, when introduced into the system, are detrimental to health. Such matters are readily introduced with water, being taken directly into the stomach, soon pass to the intestines, etc., and become a source of disease. Experience and observation have convinced us that a large per cent of swine disease is produced by the disease germs being carried into the stomach in foul water. It is now believed that this, and many other diseases, are due to minute organisms, so low in the scale of organic life that it is difficult to say whether they are vegetable or animal; they are known by the general name of "disease germs." The vitality of these germs is not great, except when preserved, as it is in water containing organic substances. In the water of pools, ditches, and ponds, their vitality is preserved for some time. If hogs are forced to drink such water, they take into their bodies the seeds of disease.

In August, hogs suffer the most from unwholesome water. During this month they require much water, and it is more essential that it be pure than during any other time of the year. The sun is hot, the air dry, the earth parched; the hog has a compact body, formed largely of fat, small lungs imbedded in masses of flesh and fat, and with its nostrils near the ground. It inhales dust, which in part consists of decaying vegetables. Everything conspires to produce a feverish state of the body, and a great thirst, to be allayed only by large quantities of cold water. But water from creeks, ponds, and the like, are at this season the most heated. The greatest fatality among swine is in September and October. As the period from the inception of the disease to its fatal termination is from thirty to forty days, it would appear that the disease germs are most often taken into the body of the animal in August.

THE GRAPE VINE IN AUGUST.

While grape vines have more enemies than almost any other fruit-bearing plant, they are, with the exception of the little understood "rot," easily managed if taken in time. Mildew is usually prevalent this month. If neglected, but little fruit can be hoped for. Mildew is easily kept in subjection, if sulphur be applied in time, as directed last month. If a rain falls soon after sulphur has been used, the application should be repeated. If the vines are kept well dusted with sulphur, the trouble will make but little headway. The insects that infest the vine at this season are mainly large and solitary caterpillars and beetles, destructive enough, but so scattered that hand-picking is the only remedy that can be applied. Where droppings are seen on the ground beneath the vines, search for the caterpillar that makes them. On old vines there will often appear vigorous shoots from the base, or at the root, and anywhere upon the old stem. These, as a general thing, are not needed, and should be removed as soon as noticed. If the laterals continue to push out, the new growth should be pinched back, leaving the lower leaf. Where vines, trained to a trellis, have been shortened, the uppermost bud will often start into growth. This should be treated like a lateral, pinching it back to the lower leaf, and repeating the operation as often as a new shoot starts. Those who grow grapes to compete for prizes at the various exhibitions, sometimes thin the berries in the clusters, that the remaining fruit may attain a larger size.—American Agriculturist.

A DRINK FOR THE HARVEST FIELD.—When tired and thirsty do not resort to beer or spirits, as these if they alleviate at all will be sure to react with double force. The following simple formula will fill all requirements with no disagreeable after results. Do not let its simplicity deter from giving it a trial. It is thin oatmeal and water with a little sugar mixed in these proportions: Take one-fourth of a pound of oatmeal and two or three quarts of water, boil it well, then add one or two ounces of brown sugar. Shake up the oatmeal well through the liquid. In summer drink this cold, in winter hot. Many will find it more agreeable when a piece of lemon peal is boiled with it It will give more strength and endurance than any drink yet compounded, and quench the thirst equally as well. Give it a trial.

HOW TO RAISE STRAWBERRIES.

One very important principle is often overlooked by the cultivator. It is that the production of the seed or fruit is a very exhausting process When a man buys a tree from a nursery, and it bears a half a dozen samples of fruit the first year, it stops its growth just about one year. Hence, until a tree gets a good growth, it should not be allowed to bear. Trees that are growing rapidly do not bear, and if a tree is bearing at all, it is to the detriment of the growth.

A strawberry plant usually bears a crop of fruit, and also produces new vines. Now, if the blossoms of those plants from which we want to raise new plants are cut off in season, the whole strength goes into the new plants, and one thousand runners grown from the plants that are not allowed to fruit, are worth more than five thousand grown from plants that bore fruit at the same time. Old plants are worth nothing—new plants from an old bed are worth nothing. The only plants worth using are young plants grown from such as are not allowed to fruit. The true way to raise strawberries, is to get young plants of this description, and not allow them to fruit the first year. They will throw out plenty of strong, vigorous runners, and the next season, before bearing, take a part of these to make a new bed. A new bed should be made every year. When we plant in the spring, we should get no fruit the same year. The next year we get the largest crop we ever get. The vines can stand and bear a partial crop the next season, or be plowed under as soon as the crop is gathered.

I like best to raise one full crop, and only one. It is less labor to make a new bed, than to clean up an old one. It is very little labor to plant an acre of strawberries, if properly done, and no other crop pays so well. The only difficulty is to get the right kind of plants, but every man can raise the plants himself, in this way. Strawberries will do well on any land that will raise good corn.—Prairie Farmer.

THINNING FRUIT CROPS.—The desire to have an abundance of fruit often tempts one to leave upon the tree much more than is beneficial. When a peach tree sets its fruit thickly, the first thinning should be proceeded with as soon as the fruit is fairly set. Do not delay this work till the fruit is stoned, on the plea that the tree is sure to cast a portion of its fruit of its own accord at the critical period, forgetting that exhaustion is the chief cause of a tree dropping its fruit, and that the heavier it is cropped previous to the stoning period the more likely is it to suffer. It is rarely that a peach tree casts any quantity of its fruit when thinly set. A healthy, good-conditioned tree usually sets an enormous quantity of fruit, frequently fifty times more than it can bring to maturity. Frequently pear trees are allowed to bear too much fruit: and where this is the case, though all may remain on and ripen, there will be an injury to the tree, which will be shown the next year. The tree may blossom the next season, it often does, but the fruit will not set, and there will be no crop. If a young tree seems too full of fruit some should be taken off now.

TREES FRUITING TOO YOUNG.—A neighbor of ours had a beautiful sight in his garden, he said, which he desired us to see; we found he had a dwarf pear tree about three or four feet high, with, perhaps, two dozen large pears on it. It was a young tree, newly planted. To the surprise of our friend, we predicted it was the last crop it would bear, and sure enough it scarcely lived long enough to ripen its fruit. It was completely exhausted.—Tribune and Farmer.

Smith's Tonic Syrup

FEVER and AGUE

Or CHILLS and FEVER.

AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient.

The genuine SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP must have DR. JOHN BULL'S private stamp on each bottle. DR. JOHN BULL only has the right to manufacture and sell the original JOHN J. SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP, of Louisville, Ky. Examine well the label on each bottle. If my private stamp is not on each bottle do not purchase, or you will be deceived.

NIGHTS IN A BAR-ROOM T S Arthur's great temperance book, complete and illustrated. By mail, 5c each; 50c per doz. By express, $3.50 per 100.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC THE GREAT SOURCE OF CRIME.

Leaves from the diary of an old lawyer.—By Hon. A. B Richmond, anthor of "Court and Prison," etc. A book of intense interest, rivaling the famous "Diary of a Physician," and, in its truthful, terrible pictures of the power and crime of intemperance, excelling the well-known "Ten Nights in a Bar-room." The temperance issue of the present time is, Shall prohibition be partial or entire? Shall the branches of the death-bearing tree be pruned and trimmed, or shall the tree itself be cut down and its stump be torn up by the roots? The answer of "Leaves from the Diary" is, "Cut down the tree, tear up the roots, leave not a shoot or shred behind." It is certainly a very strong and eloquent volume Complete edition on fine, heavy paper, with colored lithograph of Sewall's stomach plates By mail, 30c each, $3 per doz. By express, $20 per 100. Abridged edition, by mail, 15c; $1.25 per doz. By express, $9 per 100.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC AND THE SOBER CITIZEN.

An able and telling work, by Rev. J H. Sherman, which brings out the effects of the liquor traffic in a new light. The following are some of the commendations of the first edition.

"The author drives the nails of conviction through and clinches them."—N. Y. Christian Advocate.

"Speakers and workers in the temperance field will find valuable aid in this pamphlet. It is crowded with convincing facts."—Zion's Herald

"One of the ablest reviews of the drink curse ever issued from the press."—The Morning and Day of Reform.

"The arguments are put in telling form."—Judge Pittman.

New revised and enlarged edition. By mail, 10c each, $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100.

DRINKS FROM DRUGS.

A startling exposure of the liquor traffic, by Eli Johnson. A book that cannot fail to arouse the American people to the gigantic swindle now being perpetrated. The writer was offered $10,000 by a leading brewer to keep still. Liquor not only doctored, but made entirely from drugs. Extracts from a whole library of secret books, giving receipts for making and doctoring; advertisements of essences, fac-similes of labels, engravings, etc. etc. Claret, port, sherry, champagne, whisky, brandy, gin, rum, etc., all out of one barrel, and made at less than 25 cents a quart. Wine that never saw grape juice; cider that never saw apples; beer factories in place of breweries, fine cream ale without barley or brewing; whisky from arsenic; millions of gallons of liquor that pays no revenue tax. The farmer's corn and barley "all in your eye." A wholesale liquor store in a ten-foot square cellar; more French wine sold in New York City than is produced in the whole of France. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By Express, $6 per 100.

W. C. T. U. ORGANIZATION AND WORK.

A book of general information on how to organize and run successfully a Woman's Christian Temperance Union. This book should be widely distributed among W. C. T. U. presidents, pastor's wives and other representative women. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100.

HOME PROTECTION.

A lawyer's view of it. By J. C. Wells, attorney-at-law. The question of female suffrage for the protection of home ably discussed from a lawyer's standpoint. A book for the times. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100.

BAND OF HOPE RECITERS.

172 pages. 164 choice recitations of poetry and prose, containing some of the choicest bits of temperance material for the platform ever uttered, accompanied by an article on elocution. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100

GENERAL TEMPERANCE SONG BOOK.

"Temperance Songs," a Book for Adult Societies.—Eighty-three choice pieces, both words and music (old and new tune combination) choice selections from standard temperance collections; many choice new pieces. Book carefully edited by David C. Cook. Will prove just what is wanted by every temperance society Price in strong cardboard covers, by mail, 10c each; $1 per dozen; by express, $5 per 100.

TEMPERANCE ANTHEM BOOK.

Temperance Anthems.—A new idea; nothing else of the kind in existence. Will insure good music by the choir at temperance meetings Forty-eight pages of choice anthems by ablest writers By mail, 15c each; $1.50 per doz. By express, $10 per 100.

BAND OF HOPE SONG BOOK.

Band of Hope Songs.—Fifty-seven choice pieces for juvenile temperance gatherings, Bands of Hope, etc. Old, familiar tunes, also choice new words and music. Words far in advance of anything else issued. By mail, 8c each; 75c per doz. By express, $4 per 100.

DANIEL'S BAND.

A temperance concert exercise, with parts suitable for all ages; entirely new. Songs, recitations, dialogues, etc., of a thoroughly aggressive character; sure to carry weight with the rendering of it. By mail, 5c each; 50c per dozen. By express, $2 per 100.

THE COLD WATER ARMY.

For a primary temperance concert exercise. An entirely new exercise, containing songs and recitations, dialogues, etc., suitable for primary scholars. A pleasing and telling concert on temperance. By mail, 5c each; 50c per dozen. By express, $2 per 100.

THE PERSIAN SEAL BINDING

Is very handsome and durable. It is this style of binding which is so much admired by Bible readers. Please notice particularly that these Bibles are kid lined and silk sewed. Many Bibles in this style outwardly are lined with black paper and sewed with thread in place of silk.

LEVANT MOROCCO BINDING.

The Persian Seal bindings are the best kept by most Bible dealers, and usually pass for the best teachers' Bibles made; and, to all appearance, they are so. There is, however, a better wearing binding, of which the Persian Seal is a good imitation; this is known as "Levant Morocco." In all respects the Levant morocco Bible corresponds with the Persian Seal description, except as to leather used for cover which, though looking like the Persian Seal, is stronger, and will last a lifetime.

Prices on genuine Levant Morocco bindings:

For $4.50—Small size. Postage, 10c.
For $5.50—Medium size. Postage, 12c.
For $8.00—Large size. Postage, 20cts.

Handsome Gift Bibles at Low Prices.

For 45c. Embossed morocco cover, gilt edges, gilt title on back. Very neat and durable. This is the handsomest 45c. gift Bible we have ever seen. Postage, 5c.

For 60c. Morocco cover, brass bound and plated, with handsome gilt clasp and gilt edges; two patterns; square and round corners. Exquisite lettering on side; printed in large clear type. Bibles no better are sold as high as $1 and $2. Postage, 6c.

For 70c. Similar size and style of binding to our 60-cent Bible; square corners. brass bound, with clasp and handsome tasseled book-mark: also medallion inserted on side in gold and red.

This was a new importation with the fall of 1882, and a very pretty design. It should be seen to be appreciated. (See cut.) Postage, 6c.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

—A telegram from Bismarck, Dak., announces that Chief Justice Waite, who is traveling in the Yellowstone Park with Senator Edmunds and others, was thrown from a pony the other day and suffered serious injury, including the fracture of a rib. He is now on his way East on a special car.

—A very disastrous fire occurred in Brooklyn Thursday. It originated among a quantity of jute lying on Harbeck's dock, and the flames soon spread to three vessels lying at the wharf and loaded with cargoes of jute and saltpetre, all of which are a total loss. The loss of property is variously estimated at from $200,000 to $1,000,000. Several sailors are believed to have been drowned. There were many narrow escapes from death, twenty-five firemen being buried under the debris of a fallen roof, but all were taken out alive.

—Near Knoxville, Tenn., Wednesday morning, an express train, going at full speed, was thrown from the track by a misplaced switch. The locomotive jumped the track and ran into a building just erected by the East Tennessee Valley Zinc Company, tearing away one side of the structure. No lives were lost.

—A curious case of self-starvation occurred at Lafayette, Ind. Seven weeks ago an insane woman named Brown, at the poor farm, refused every particle of food, having not tasted a morsel of any description except a small quantity of milk in forty-six days. At length nature succumbed, and her death ensued on the 18th.

—A report comes from Champaign county, Ill., of a hailstorm last Monday, in which hailstones fell measuring twelve inches in circumference. The damage was quite extensive, the roofs of many houses being smashed in, and one-third of the corn crop destroyed.

—A very severe hailstorm passed over Clay county, D. T., Wednesday, destroying all the crops in its path. The damage is estimated at $200,000.

—There is a general election in Utah on the 6th of August. General attention will be directed toward the workings of the Edmunds law, which prohibits the voting of polygamists.

—The exports of breadstuffs during the year just ended were greater by nearly $26,000,000 than during the fiscal year of 1882, and there is still a large surplus in our elevators.

—Walter Brown, of Kansas City, representing heavy capitalists, made the largest entry of public lands to-day ever made in this State, 43,000 acres at $1 per acre, in the counties of Clark and Comanche known as the Cherokee strip. The land is well watered, and will carry cattle the year through without feed.

—Jarvis Fisher, of Reading, Pa., died in the State Asylum at Harrisburg, where he was confined, and died suddenly of apoplexy. Young Fisher was at one time studying for the ministry, and became insane in the effort to commit to memory every verse in the Bible.

—Wong Chin Foo, the editor of the Chinese paper at New York, challenged Denis Kearney to a joint debate on the Chinese question. Kearney declined, and now Mr. Foo has challenged him to fight a duel.

—A large tank at the California powder mill, near Cleveland, O., exploded July 17. One man's hand was badly burned by the flying fire. Nobody else injured, as no one happened to be near at the time. Windows were shattered for miles around.

—Two hundred and sixty-eight deaths from cholera were reported in Egypt Thursday last. The European powers are increasing their quarantine regulations.

—The British journals seem united in the belief that Mr. Waddington, the new French Embassador to England, will pave the way for an easy settlement of the differences in regard to Madagascar. Mr. Waddington is a skillful diplomatist, English in his methods, and he will do his best. But the French cabinet may not endorse his arrangement.

—Police protection in Dublin is said to be on the wane, though the vice-regal carriage still goes surrounded by a mounted escort. The Crown prosecutors keep up the old form, but the judges now travel with only one protector when they have any, and civil peace seems to be more thoroughly secured than ever.

—A strong feeling prevails at Berlin against the Vatican, and a rupture of the relations between Prussia and the Pope is not impossible.

—The London Chamber of Commerce has unanimously decided that the agreement between the British Government and De Lesseps for the construction of another Suez Canal, is inadequate and unsatisfactory. Meetings of ship owners at Sunderland and West Hartlepool voted that the agreement is detrimental to British commercial interests. Numerous other similar bodies throughout the country passed resolutions of the same character independently of politics

—A heavy storm deluged sections of the Canadian province of Ontario July 12. At London the river is unprecedentedly high, several bridges and houses have been carried away, and many persons are reported drowned, while live stock have perished in large numbers. Crops and fences have been ruined, and miles of railroad have been washed out. The outlook for the sufferers at London, most of whom are mechanics and laborers, is terrible. They have lost their all. About 2,000 persons were rendered homeless.

—A large fire occurred at Liptoszentmiklo, Hungary, July 15. A number of persons lost their lives. Eight corpses have been extricated from the ruins. Twenty persons, including the Prefect of Police, are missing. Many people are made homeless by the fire.

—Sir Hugh Childers, Chancellor of the Exchequer, stated that the agreement arrived at between the Government and M. De Lesseps providing for the construction of another Suez Canal had been signed, and that the new canal would be completed at the end of the year 1888. England, he said, would lend the Canal Company £8,000,000, at 3½ per cent interest, the loan to be redeemable in fifty years.

—The Department of Justice at Washington has been informed that Judge Hough was recently assassinated at Jefferson, Texas, for being a principal witness in the election fraud cases; and threats are openly made by the accused in that vicinity that they will go armed to trial, and, if convicted, will kill everybody in court. The informant desires that his name be kept secret, as he would be surely murdered if it were made public

BUSINESS.

OLD FACTS IN A NEW FORM.

Do you want the Christian Cynosure for one year? There are three ways to get it:

1. Send the subscription price (single copy) $2.00.

2. Send $8.75 for a club of five, at $1.75 each, and get a copy one year for your services.

3. Send $15.00 for a club of ten at $1.50 each and get a copy extra for yourself.

Names may be sent at different times and papers addressed to different post-offices; but when you send the last name and order your extra copy, please give at the same time the entire list of names in your club, with the address of each, so as to avoid confusion or mistakes.

DELINQUENT SUBSCRIBERS.

Are you in arrears on your subscription to the Christian Cynosure? Did you receive notice with a request to renew? We have endeavored to give each delinquent a fair warning, and then wait patiently for returns. In some instances we have been disappointed, even after a second trial, but we are not discouraged. We intend to exercise the largest forbearance consistent with the financial safety of your paper, and where you show sufficient interest to write and state your case we will consider it with the largest practicable liberality. In cases where we receive no reply, there is nothing left for us to do but to remove the name from the list and charge up the amount due on arrears. We hope to have very little of this to do. The way to avoid discontinuances, or possibly vexatious mistakes, is to renew promptly or send us a notice. Please consider this a fair warning, and if your name is dropped after a reasonable time, do not be offended

A change will be noticed in the advertisements on the 15th page of the Cynosure. All the anti-secrecy literature published by E. A. Accidentally Cured of Consumption.

When death was hourly expected, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting with the many herbs of Calcutta, he accidentally made a preparation which cured his only child of consumption. His child is now in this country, and enjoying the best of health. The doctor now gives this recipe free, only asking two 3-cent stamps to pay expenses. THE PUREST IS THE BEST.

In the selection of SUNDAY-SCHOOL PAPERS, the most important point to be considered is the moral tone of the subject matter. If this is of a questionable character, the papers should be shunned, no matter how large, how attractive, or how low the price. Such papers are

COSTLY AT ANY PRICE.

The country is being flooded with S. S. literature that is largely composed of what may be properly termed "RELIGIOUS FICTION," the tendency of which is to create a distaste for sound reading and foster an appetite for fiction of a more deleterious character.

The engravings of these papers are equally objectionable. In many cases a lady or girl dressed in the height of fashion is made the HEROINE OF A STORY, thus putting the highest sanction to extravagance and pride. With such instructors in our Sunday-schools we cannot expect the children to grow up with a love for sound literature and with correct ideas of Christian propriety. With a view of supplying S. S. papers, of a pure and elevating character, the publishers are issuing

FOUR MONTHLY PAPERS.

They are FREE FROM FICTION, and the cuts are chosen with great care. While they are thus carefully edited, they are not lacking in attractiveness. They are well printed on beautiful tinted paper. The children are delighted with them. The very low price at which this line of S. S. papers is issued, places them within the reach of even schools of limited means

A singular case of the insubordination to priestly rule which foreign Catholics frequently manifest in this country has lately developed in this city. In the northwest part of Chicago has for some years been standing a small frame Catholic church attended by Poles. The place was dreaded by the neighbors for frequent brawls and the superstitions of the people. Another church was afterward started in the same neighborhood by a fraternity of Catholics, as if to supplement the work of the first. But between the two matters were worse, for the Poles did not know which was their spiritual master. The priest of the former was finally deposed by the archbishop. He rebelled, however, and continued his ministrations until his death. The congregation then petitioned for a new priest, but Archbishop Feehan refuses their prayer. They have therefore sent direct to Rome by letter to the Pope asking that their request may be granted.

The closing days of last week were terrible in disasters. During Friday night a long train of Wagner sleeping cars on the Ontario Lake Shore railway plunged into a freight car that had been blown upon the main track from the switch at Carlton in Orleans county, N.Y. In the fearful crash twenty-two persons were killed, and thirty-five wounded, several of them fatally. Among the dead, Chicago mourns for one of her oldest, most distinguished and public spirited citizens—Hon. Thomas Hoyne, a man whose face and form were, next to John Wentworth, probably best known upon our streets. During the same night Francesco Barco, Spanish Envoy and Minister Plenipotentiary to our government, committed suicide at his hotel in New York. No reasons for this crime were left by him, but it is believed that financial embrrassment, increased to large amounts by stock gambling in New York, led to the rash act. Saturday evening the Island of Ischia, a few miles off shore from Naples, Italy, and a favorite summer resort, was shaken by earthquake and amid the wreck of hotels, theaters and churches it is estimated that 3,000 people perrished. The town of Casamicciola is celebrated for its thermal springs and baths and was filled with wealthy families from Rome and Naples, among whom the fatalities are most severe and will be felt by all Italy. These disasters added to that which overtook the Baltimore excursion party a few days before, make last week one long to be remembered with dread.

The Egyptian plague, which a few savans insist is not cholera, does not cease its fatality for lack of a name. From the mouth of the Nile it has spread to Cairo where the deaths last week numbered some 500 daily. The country is panic-stricken and sanitary measures are almost abandoned. The disease is very sudden in its effects, people often falling dead in the streets. Agriculture is largely ceased and commercial business entirely, since all nations are increasing the quarentine agaiust vessels and goods from the infected country. The non-interference of the English government to offer official assistance to the Khedive is commented upon as a needless display of the foreign Liberal policy. But since the British troops have begun to furnish victims to the plague, their government has apparently determined to meet this emergency as it did the revolt of Arabi Bey and not linger over red tape rules. A large number of physiciaus have been sent from England, and if they can have any authority to control men and means they may confine the disease to narrow limits. A paper has just been read before the Academy of Sciences in Paris in which the position is taken that the cholera will die out in six weeks, since the disease will decrease as suddenly as it has spread. This theory we would be happy to endorse, but unfortunately we remember that such epidemics linger long amid the narrow and filthy streets of Oriental cities.

The enforcement of the new law in Missouri agaiust the sale of intoxicating drinks, and other unnecessary secular business on the Sabbath, is receiving particular attention from the State government. Its enforcement in Kansas City was begun a few weeks ago with more than usual suceess, and the reports from St. Louis last Sabbath show that it is not impossible to keep the day free from business and its jarring hum. The law is aimed at the saloons, but ineludes also many branehes of ordinary traffic. The efforts to secure a quiet Sabbath have heretofore been left with the loeal authorities in each city. The executive power of these functionaries has been always too weak to withstand the defiant saloonist or the greedy tradesman, aud after two or three efforts, which result iu nothing but proving the moral cowardice of a police force, the matter drops. In Missouri, however, the goveruor accepts the task left him by the legislature and manifests a praisworthy desire to enforce the law. His opinion upon the question is quite unusual language for men of official position and is worth remembering:

"The saloon-keeper "he says," should recognize the fact that in the public estimation they arc not engaged in as honorable and elevating a trade as those in the commereial, mechanical, ministerial, or professional business, and it is a matter of presumption for them to assert it. In doing so they work an injury to their own business. Their threats to rigidly enforce the Sunday law agaiust all other classes, all other trades, is foolish, aud is warming into life a feeling of disgust at their selfishness. I think I can safely say where one dollar demands freedom from the restraint of this law, ten ask its rigid euforcement. The question of the sanctity of this day in the minds of an inviucible majority of our people is no longer a debatable one. Those who oppose it should consider well their position. No man, or body of men, can overthrow that day in the country."

The proposed National Couventiou of colored men to be held in Louisville meets with some coolness among those who are supposed to be most engaged in it. The Colored Press Association of Arkansas lately voted it inexpedient at present, and another influential gathering in Texas held to the same opinion. The plan was proposed first in Washington for the benefit of the colored men throughout the South, but the latter seem likely to repudiate it. They have perhaps learned that their interests are best promoted by refraining from a movement that might make a wider separation between the races and divide more widely the varied interests which should unite both into one people. The scheme evidently sprang from the brain of some white Republican politician, and whatever its ostensible object, was intended probably as a mere party measure.

The "Grand Army" reunion at Denver broke up last Wednesday. The papers have been laboring to prove that this lodge is not political. Their labor goes for their pains. The order has grown to a membership of 160,000 (claimed), and is buttressed by a "Soldier's Veteran Association", a "Ladies'" Loyal League" and a "Women's Relief Corps." These bring in not only old soldiers and members of their families, but other females who arc willing for friendship's sake to enter a secret lodge against the dictates of womanly prudence and modesty. The idea of soldiery companionship which is claimed to be the only object of this order will soon die out, in reality if not in name. No political schemer who has been shrewd or cunning enough to profit by the votes and influenee of the Grand Army supposes that when the old soldiers are gone the order will die also. These supplimentary orders show that it is preparing to outlive the oldest veteran. A wise and experienced observer at Denver writes of the parade there: "It is a boom for Logan, who is here in all his glory." In another letter he says, "Gen. Logan is the moving spirit in these meetings of the Grand Army people, and he is their choice for the Presidency." No one who knows Logan's ambition and his readiness to use the Masonic order to elimb into power, will be surprised at his presence in Denver, nor doubt for what purpose he was there.

SOLOMON'S TEMPLE AND MODERN CHURCH BUILDINGS.

BY GEO. H. WILLIAMS.

The attempt is often made, to justify the building of costly churches, by citing the costliness of the temple built by Solomon for the worship of God under the first covenant and accordiug to the Mosaic ritual. The temple was a typical building, and the worship aceording to the Mosaic ritual was also typical. The temple was typical of Christ's body in which God dwelt, and manifested himself veiled by human flesh. Henee the Apostle's languagc, "A new and living way which he hath consecrated for us through the veil," that is to say, his flesh. (Heb. 10: 20.) When Christ died on the cross, at the hour of the evening saerifiee in the temple, "Behold, the vail of the temple was rent in twain, from the top to the bottom." (Mat. 27: 51.) Solomon's temple was also, in the preparation of its material, a type of the glorious church of Christ. When it was building it "was built of stone made ready before it was brought thither, so that there was neither hammer nor axe nor any tool of iron heard in the house while it was building." (1 Kings 6: 7.) So the glorified church of Christ is built of living stones—converted souls—made ready before they are taken to heaven to be built into the glorified church which is "built upon the foundatiou of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone." (See Eph. 2: 19–21 and 1 Pet. 2: 4–8.)

Those who prepared the stones of Solomon's temple probably had comfortable shelter generally while they were preparing the stones; but perhaps some of them wrought without shelter as some faithful servants of God do in these days, while preparing the liviug stones—converted souls—nurtured in Christian life.

Our houses of worship aud Christian work should answer to the shelter of Solomon's men who prepared the temple, and not to the costly temple itself. These have uo allurements or adornments. These were left for the temple. So we should leave the adornments for the spiritual building—its "beauty of holiness," the graces wrought by the Spirit in the living stones. Have comfortable, but not costly (by adornments) places of assembly. Have separate places for Sunday-school classes, where the teacher can talk and pray with his scholars, and allow any to express their religious feelings freely. (The writer knew a very fruitful class so separated.) The class rooms might be built along the sides of the larger central room, and at proper times have all come into the large central room. Have good places and allow plenty of time for earnest personal work, inquiry, prayer and expression of religious feelings. Such was the case of the class referred to above, so fruitful in conversions. Let expenditures instead of being on adornment of the place of meeting, be in seeking out all who are accessible, caring for their temporal welfare out of love to their souls, and leading them to these assemblies. Would not this way please God well? Would not Satan greatly prefer to have the means, time and energies of God's children spent on costly houses of worship, and showy worship, places where a costly church building and costly adornments invite to costly dress adornment of the assembly to match the adornments of the house, and so get the means of the assembly away from the real work of the Christian church.

MASKED BURGLARS.

What is the difference between masked burglars and those men who under the disguises of Freemasonry are breaking into our American institutions to rob them of their most precious jewels? There is no essential difference that we can see. The burglar may be a pretended "good man" who wears a mask in order to escape possible detection; and what are the disguisements of Freemasonry for but to do the same thing? Does a man usually resort to secrecy and disguisement for doing good?

Men who are caught with burglar's tools, or forger's tools, or counterfeiter's tools, are considered as suspicious characters, who must render an account of themselves to the law; and why should not those men who are caught with the implements of Freemasonry be required to do the same thing? The lofty pretenses of Freemasonry are mere disguisements for concealing villainous acts. We often see notices stuck up in public places warning the unsuspecting crowd against pick-pockets; and a similar warning ought to be given at every religious, political, or educational meeting, in order to put our honest, unsuspecting American people on the guard against the presence of Masonic high priests.

One of the most lamentable sights that we have ever seen is that of an American citizen with the mark of deception and fraud upon his shirt bosom, coat collar, or watch-guard, which he flaunts in your face as an evidence of honesty. The square and compass thus shown is an evidence that the wearer is either the honest dupe of a set of knaves, or that he is defiantly willing to collude with any body in taking a sly, underhanded advantage of his fellow men. In either case it is not pleasant to know that you have such characters for your fellow citizens; for they are helping to destroy those institutions which every true American ought to sustain. They value this foreign, exclusive institution Freemasonry, which helps them to undue advantages over their fellow citizens more than they do our original American institutions which are designed for the benefit of all.

We write this article at Saratoga Springs, a great national resort from which circulate influences, good or bad, over the whole country. Minister's meetings are held here every day; but we doubt if ever a word is said on the subject of Freemasonry, although that institution is supplanting with its spurious morality the Christian church in every populated nook and corner of the country. For ministers of the Gospel to be consulting the interests of religion and yet never mention Freemasonry, is a sight to make the devil himself laugh. Never could stultification show itself in a more stolid aspect. We often hear of a man being suspected of wrong-doing because he belongs to some church; but concerning the Freemason we seldom hear him spoken of except as a very "good man." The papers often tell us that some deacon of a church has defrauded his neighbor or the public; but these papers seldom go farther and tell us what is probably the fact, that the said deacon is a Freemason. Any man who tries to be a deacon and a Freemason too, must be the very foot-ball of the devil, thinking himself "good" whatever he may do. His immortal interests lie safely folded up, he seems to think, in a sheepskin apron.

We would suggest that Saratoga might give out a healthy moral influence as well as hygienic spring-waters if some of our enterprising colporteurs would set up an Anti-masonic news-stand here. It would prove far more effective than "minister's meetings" as now conducted.

It seems to me that the only way in which Christian society can be freed from this odious parasite is by the vote; and the only way to render the vote available, is to bring the question to a political issue. To this end the people must be instructed as to what the issue is; and toward this end we must labor. Every center of public resort we must make a center of Anti-masonic information. What we want is agents fearless enough to undertake the work. The time is near at hand, I think, when agents will meet with encouragement in the demand for our literature.

American.

MATRIMONY.

BY ALEXANDER THOMSON.

While Europe's heart is stirred by "dyuamiters,"
Till kings and potentates look grim and blank,
And cowering hide behind their lines of fighters,
Painfully humble in exalted rank;
While England sends her Fenians to the gibbet,
And they reply with dynamite and steel,
And China from her hoary wall, to Thibet
Is moved by merry Frenchman's Tonquin reel;
While Turk and Cossack glow with holy ardor,
To launch again on battle's dreadful heath
And Bismarck prays and labors to keep farther,
The Yankee sausage from the German teeth;
While in our own Columbia, ever glorious,
Ben's stirring things 'round Massachusetts Bay,
And in the West the cycloues quite victorious,
Carry heads, hats and husbands far away;
While gentle peace broods o'er our native border,
And there is love between both Yank and Johnnie
We'll leave these questions of a higher order
And for a time discourse on matrimony.

Of all the things that God has yet created
Surpassing lovely on this nether plane,
Of all allures with which the devil has baited
His angling hooks, to fish for souls of men;
There's none like woman—fairer than the morning,
When bright Aurora comes with roses crowned,
The dewy flowers her golden hair adorning,
Her misty drapery floating to the ground.
The lustrous eyes so full of light and feeling,
The touch so exquisite, the cherry lip,
Across her cheek the deep carnation stealing
And dainty all, from toe to finger tip.

Yet woe be to the hapless wight who wooes her
And thinks he has an angel from the skies,
Who through love's telescope forever views her
And glories like a conqueror in his prize!
He'll find that when the wood-box shows depletion,
And unannounced his cronies come to dine,
That singularly gifted with expression,
She's always last upon the battle line.

Of all the strong things by the Strong One formed,
To live on earth and do his sovereign will,
Even though his Eden paradise was stormed
By that strong angel of perpetual ill,
There's none like man, he breaks the hoary mountains
And rides triumphant on the restless sea,
He lays his chains upon the gushing fountains
And makes them drive his wondrous enginery.

Yet woe be to the kind confiding woman
Who takes him for her lord and thinks to find
A godlike strength of virtue, ever coming
In vast proportions from his lofty mind;
She'll find that in a fit of indigestion,
He'll wilt like snow flowers, when the days are fine,
And twice a year, when cleaning is the question,
He'll bristle like a thorny porcupine.

Yet though perfection comes not to the human,
And hope for that, must ever look above,
Oh! halting man, and frail and feeble woman,
What hast thou here, like loyal wedded love?

The family circle, and the family altar,
The kind expression of the smiling eyes,
The cheering words when hope begins to falter,
The ever widening, deepening human ties,
The common object sought by common labor,
The welded life, a grand harmonious whole,
That parts not but by death's dividing sabre—
The twin expression of a common soul;
The mind exalted by enobling thought,
In malice childlike, but in truth austere;
The candid judgment that was never bought,
Nor warped by prejudice or bowed by fear.

Forever stand our Christian homes, and guarded
By all that wisdom, all that valor knows,
And by eternal infamy rewarded
Be those who break their honor or repose.

Bartlett, Ill.

General Butler's Democratic followers, in their minority report on Tewksbury, recommend the passage of a law to prevent more than two relatives holding office at the same time in the same institution. Perhaps they were not aware that the General had his brother and his brother-in-law with him in New Orleans, which made three, who were able to help each other to accumulate immense fortunes out of the public service.

UNCONSCIOUS INFLUENCE.

BY REV. ISAAC HYATT.

We are ever touching cords of influences that will never die. And the savor of our influence depends more upon what we are, than what we do. It is wise to aim at a mark, and hit it if we can. But light shines everywhere and is for all. So the influence we carry in our eye, hold in the expression of our face, drop in the words of our mouth or exert by the motion of our hand shines all about us and effects all within our circle as a savor of life unto life or of death unto death.

Few men labored more successfully than Dr. Lyman Beecher to effect definite results; but the extent of his unconscious influence can never be told, as the following incident in his life illustrates:

While pastor of the "Salem" church at Boston, he went one Monday morning to Faneuil Hall Market to buy provisions for dinner. Taking up a fine looking fish he asked the dealer if it was fresh.

"Certainly," he replied, "I caught it myself yesterday."

"Then I don't want it," said Mr. Beecher, and turned away.

Standing near by was the youthful chorister of the Universalist church, an entire stranger to the distinguished preacher. But as he listened to his words and saw his act he was struck with the strength and honesty of his convictions and the consistency of his practice. Drawn by the magnet of his noble example he became an attendant upon Dr. Beecher's preaching, was converted, joined the church and served it as one of its faithful and honored deacons for more than twenty-five years. He also became a prominent business man in Boston and was well known as an active and wise director in various charitable institutions.

"Let us not be weary in well doing, for in due season we shall reap if we faint not." But let us be sure that the "well doing" commences and continues in our hearts; "for out of the heart are the issues of life."

SMALL COLLEGES OR LARGE.

It is a common remark, seldom challenged, that the establishment of small and weak colleges all over the country has been a great mistake; that we should have two or three centers of learning, like Oxford and Cambridge in England, and let all American youth who want more than a common-school education gather there. This thoughtless declaration entirely overlooks the central purpose of our educational institutions. That purpose is, not to impart a high scholarly finish to the accomplishments of a privileged class, or furnish cloisters where a few life-long students may search out the very rootlets of written knowledge; but to diffuse the greatest possible amount of learning and intelligence through the entire mass of American citizenship. It is of comparatively little importance whether our country shall ever produce a scholar capable of deciphering the inscriptions at Palenque and Copan, or an astronomer who can discover useless comets on demand, or a mathematician who can invent an algebraic engine between which and the multiplication table quaternions shall be but a mean proportional. But it is of the highest importance that our three million square miles should be sprinkled all over with men and women who have a decent knowledge of the classics, with journalists who have read some history and can write good English, with parishioners who can detect logical fallacies even when offered to them from the pulpit, with youth who know the difference between genuine and spurious literature, with people in all sorts of worldly conditions who are alike in being pretty nearly abreast of current opinion and discussion, and able to receive new revelations without waiting for them to be filtered down through critics and authorities.

The United States have now, on an average, a college for every piece of territory a hundred miles square; and though many of these institutions are pitiably weak, they are none too numerous. A glance at their catalogues reveals the fact that the greater part of the students in each are drawn from its own vicinity. Many of these boys would never have attempted to acquire a college education at all, had there not been a college within a day's ride of their homes. Plant one in a far Western State, and in a little while it will have a hundred students, not more than one or two of whom would ever have found their way to Cambridge or New Haven. That the hundred should be tolerably well educated is of infinitely more advantage to the republic than that the one or two should have the facilities necessary for the highest scholarship. Incidentally, too, these small institutions are of service in breaking down sectarian prejudice. Nearly every one of our colleges is under the control of some religious denomination. If it drew its students only or mainly from that denomination throughout the country, both it and they mignt become bigotedly sectarian to any extent; but, when it draws them from families of all denominations within a radius of a hundred miles, it is powerfully driven toward liberalism in all its teachings, and the boys themselves acquire a breadth of mind which they would never get if they were assorted according to the catechisms. The authorities of most of the colleges are conscious of this. Experience shows that if a letter be addressed to them, asking, among other things, what is their religious bias, three out of four will answer half-apologetically that, though the institution nominally belongs to such a denomination, it is practically non-sectarian, and several denominations are represented in its faculty. The process of educating together youth who come from families holding different religious doctrines, begun in our district schools, cannot be carried too far. In some future day it may prove the salvation of the commonwealth.

One of the best features of college attendance today is the fact that so many students devote the four years to the mere purpose of general cultivation, broadening and strengthening their minds and characters for whatever calling they may ultimately choose. It used to be assumed that, if a boy was sent to college, he must be destined for a learned profession; and out of many families, one son was selected for this career, while the others were left to plod along on the farm, with only so much education as had been obtained in the little school-house at the cross-roads. This state of things has gradually passed away, and every college class now contains a large number of young men who have no designs whatever on the learned professions, but receive their diplomas and go directly into mercantile, mechanical or agricultural pursuits. The multiplicity of small colleges all over the country is largely to be credited with this state of affairs, which cannot but have the happiest effect upon the character of the community. As the intelligence and scholarship of clients, parishioners, patients and readers are increased, the lawyers, clergymen, physicians and writers are necessarily driven to a higher standard of honesty and ability.—Rossiter Johnson in the North American Review.

THAT LOTTERY.

The Freemasons have recently created a tremendous and widespread sensation in this country by their great London Lottery, the history of which is now no doubt familiar to the most of our readers. It is now over, historically, but not in moral result. When our Roman Catholic fellow-countrymen get up a gigantic swindle of this kind to float some great financial burden we instinctively pity them, believing them to be the victims of a tyrannical and superstitious priesthood, and scarcely responsible for their conduct. But would the Free and Accepted Masons of Canada who number in their ranks many of our leading men, including also many Christian ministers, like to be regarded as the victims of ignorance or superstition in regard to this matter? Can they plead in extenuation of their conduct that they did not know it was wrong? Can they plead that they did not know it was a violation of the laws of the land? And do they wish their institution to be regarded as an outlaw? Is this the way to recommend Freemasonry to the acceptance of the wise and the good? Is this the way they let their light shine? If so, we confess that the impression we receive is that the light which is in them is more like darkness. And what will those Christian men and Christian ministers who have entangled themselves in the meshes of this gigantic brotherhood say in defence of their brethren? The circulation of this paper is not large, though growing, but we cheerfully tender them the use of these columns for all they are worth to explain away their own guilt at least, if they don't wish to defend others. And we claim that the public is fully justified in requiring some defence.

These men profess to be spiritual guides, directing souls in the way to heaven, and if they cannot explain their connection with this business they must not complain if the Iconoclast ranks them with the "blind guides." We emphatically do this. We charge that their hands are polluted with this transaction unless they denounce it as it deserves and enter their solemn public protest against it. Do their Masonic oaths or obligations forbid this? Then their Masonic oaths or obligations are of the devil. How dare a Christian man allow the devil to put a gag in his mouth to silence his voice from the denunciation of sin anywhere in God's dominion?

Jesus Christ was "manifested that he might destroy the works of the devil," which is sin; and the man who puts on Christ does so for the same purpose. How then can Christian men forswear their allegiance to God by linking their character and interests with an institution that openly practices gambling, unless they solemnly and openly declare their abhorrence of and opposition to such practices? —The Iconoclast, Waterford, Ont.

If the people were wise, Freemasonry is a trick that priests and politicians could not play at.

THE SERMON.

WAITING UPON GOD.

BY REV. MARCUS RAINSFORD.

To wait upon God is the duty, the privilege, the prerogative of every man who knows God, who believes in God, who trusts God, who expects from God. The more a man knows God, and of God, and the more he enjoys God and believes God, the more truly will he wait upon God. You remember the description that the Spirit of God gives of the children of the Lord: "They that wait upon the Lord," and the promise to them is, "They shall renew their strength." Now, we who have believed on the name of the Lord Jesus Christ in this Gospel day—this day of the new dispensation—await upon God in a position and under circumstances which our fathers in days of old only anticipated. To them it was revealed, we are told, and they searched diligently into the matter, "that not unto themselves, but unto us, they did minister the things that are now reported by them that preach the Gospel unto you with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven, which things the angels desire to look into. What they waited for we wait in the enjoyment and possession. My brethren, when we wait upon God we wait upon him as his children. We wait upon him as those that are members of the mystical body or his own first born at his right hand. We wait upon him as "partakers of Christ," as heirs with God and joint-heirs with Christ, and upon the understanding between ourselves and our Father that it is in this character we wait upon him. We wait upon him if we do so intelligently as temples of the Holy Ghost, sanctified, consecrated, and made meet for our Father's communion. If we wait intelligently upon God we wait upon him as those that his love has made through the blood of his Son to be unto him kings and priests.

Now just consider. We wait on God. I can only throw out the thoughts. May God the Holy Ghost give you the application. We wait on God—not unbidden—not unwelcomed. We wait on God. We wait on Jesus Christ as members of Jesus Christ, as identified with Jesus Christ. We wait on God "through the Spirit." See, the whole Trinity are engaged when a poor soul is waiting upon God. "We wait for—oh! we wait for his Son from heaven." "We wait for the adoption, to wit the redemption of our body." "We wait for the hope of righteousness by faith." "We wait for the manifestations of the sons of God." We wait for the inheritance."

Now, waiting upon God implies consciousness of entire dependence upon God. The same grace which has given us all things in our Lord Jesus Christ has taught us, and is teaching us more and more day by day, that it is the grace that is in him, and not the grace that is in us, that we have to live upon. We come, weakness itself, and we wait upon strength itself. We come, ignorance itself, and we wait upon Omniscience. We come, helplessness itself, and we wait upon him who hath all help for us. We come, emptiness itself. You cannot wait upon God in the true spirit of waiting but as you are emptied before God. And, brethren, this waiting is not in want of confidence, but it is opposed to all anxiety—undue anxiety. It is opposed to all distrust. It is opposed to all undue making haste. It is opposed to all unrest, for they that wait know whom they have believed or ought to know—and are persuaded that he is able to keep that which they have committed unto him. Brethren, waiting times are testing times. You do not know what your faith is till it is tried. You do not know what your hope is till it is tested. You do not know what love you have till you are tempted. When a man is engaged in waiting upon the Lord his God all the other graces and gifts of the Holy Ghost are in active operation in that man's soul. He is waiting. Faith is waiting, is waiting upon God. Hope is expecting, waiting upon God. Love is enduring, waiting upon God. Patience, submission, obedience, have their perfect work. Waiting upon God is just as an old writer says, "the lengthening out of a man's faith, and hope, and love, and patience, and confidence in God," and that during times and circumstances most perplexing, most difficult, and it may be most dark.

Now, waiting upon God is not a matter of fits and starts with the child of God, or ought not to be. Waiting upon God means a life of desire towards God. No wonder that it is said, "Blessed is the man that waiteth for him." Think of what it is to live a life of desire towards God—a life of delight in God—a life of dependence on God—a life of devotion to God. Hear the man after God's own heart in the 25th Psalm, at the 2d verse: "O my God, I trust in thee. Show me thy ways." He wants God's ways; no other way. "Teach me thy paths." Mark, he is in perplexity. He is blind: "Show me thy way." He is ignorant: "Teach me thy paths. Lead me in thy truth." And again, "Teach me; for thou art the God of my salvation, and upon thee do I wait all the day." All the day. It may be a long day. "Mine eyes fail," he says in another place, "while I wait for my God." It may be a dark day. "In the way of thy judgments have we waited for thee, O Lord." It may be a stormy day. But is there under the heavens a sight that angels love more to look down upon than a poor tempest-tossed soul in the long, dark, and stormy night, with the four anchors of faith, and hope, and love, and prayer, cast up into the heavens while he waits for the day? Fiery trials are nothing if you gain this—a waiting spirit. Sickness with patience is better than health. Loss with patient waiting is better than gain.

> Ill that he blesses is our good
> And unblest good is ill;
> All, all is right that seems most wrong
> When it is His sweet will.

On thee do I wait all the day." Oh, just think with what irresistible eloquence to the heart of God his waiting, troubled, tried, tempted, tempest-tossed child pleads! There is not a tear that does not speak for him. There is not a need that is not eloquent for him. There is not a perplexity that does not plead for him in the heart of his Father. See the beggar waiting at the rich man's door. He waits long till the great man comes forth. His nakedness pleads for him. The furrow of his aged cheeks pleads for him. His scattered grey locks plead for him. The winds of heaven plead for him. The rags that scarce cover his nakedness plead for him. His want pleads for him; and if the image of God is in the heart of that man, it shall not plead in vain. But if the waiting one is a child, and if it is a father that comes forth to see his need, can you doubt what the result shall be? Again, hear the Psalmist. See the 62d Psalm: "Truly my soul waiteth upon God." See the 5th verse: "My soul, wait thou only upon God." Ah, brethren, this is all indoor work, do you see?—"my soul." He is talking to himself within—consulting with his own soul. "My. soul, wait thou only upon God:" and the man that can say that has poured out his soul before the Lord, and he is waiting upon him. As some one says, the soul is poured out like water—poured out, not like milk, that leaves some color behind—not as wine, that leaves some scent behind—not as honey that leaves some taste behind—but as water, that leaves nothing behind. "My soul, wait thou only upon God." Oh, brethren, may he give us grace thus to occupy the attitude of waiting children!

The man who waits upon God does not wait truly unless he waits only upon God, at all times, and for all things; and if he mixes up any other confidence—anything he has attained to—anything he hopes to attain to, with his confidence—he is not waiting truly upon God. "Wait thou only—only upon God; for from him cometh mine expectation." The man that has his expectation in God will not be disappointed. Every attribute of God is pledged to relieve him, and every blessing of God is waiting in due time to comfort and sustain him. Our Father best knows his own time.

Now I would just say a word before I close upon waiting upon God for service, and waiting upon God in service. Some persons are not ready when God wants their service, and he has to pass them by because they are not waiting. Oh, to be found like those of whom the Psalmist speaks! Indeed, of himself it is he speaks: "As the eyes of servants wait upon the hands of their masters, as the eyes of a maiden upon the hand of her mistress, so our eyes wait upon the Lord." The Lord oftentimes can not use us because we are not ready for his service. Then there is another extreme—people rushing into the Lord's service before their time, before they are qualified, before he calls them. I love to think with comfort, and with instruction to my own soul, of the Master in his own blessed example. Think of him for thirty years standing still, as we would say, waiting, waiting upon God, the world lying in wickedness all round him; but he had not got his orders—need and distress everywhere about him, but he had not got his orders—waiting, waiting, waiting. Oh, how he glorified God in that waiting! And how he teaches us by that waiting to wait upon God! And when he got his commission, then he went forth and worked and wrought. Ah, so it was with the Old Testament saint, Moses. He was very rash at first, he was for pushing himself into the service before he was called, and he thought that all Israel should have known that it was by his hand that God was about to deliver them. He must needs be sent to the desert for forty years; and then, when God did send him, he can hardly persuade him to go. "Who am I, that I should go to Pharaoh?" Ah, the lesson of our nothingness is necessary before the Lord can use the servant And so it was with the great apostle of the Gentiles. When the Lord appeared to him, instead of rushing on, what does he do? He goes away, led by the Spirit of God, for three years into Arabia. And you remember when the great Master ascended up on high, his work done, he says to his disciples, "Tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high." What a strange thing! "Tarry ye." Were not their hearts flushed with joy? Why need they tarry? Was there not a great work to be done? Why need they tarry? Were there not souls to be saved and told of the risen and ascended Saviour? Why must they tarry? "Till ye be endued with power from on high." A Christian man is compared to a tree that bringeth forth fruit in due season. Now, there is a reason for everything. When you have done wrong, that is the season for repentance, Christian; when you are in difficulty, that is the season for trust; but when you are in perplexity—when you know not whether to turn here or whether there—that is the time for waiting—waiting upon God.

You remember the climax about waiting in the 40th chapter of Isaiah. I think if you or I had written those verses to which I allude we would have changed the order. You remember them: "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength. They shall mount with wings, as eagles." Oh, how splendid! We would have put that as the climax, would we not? That is the first round of the ladder. That is the lowest consequence of waiting upon God. "They shall mount!" Oh, there are many that mount, and rush, and fly, that soon come down again! "They shall run, and not be weary." That is an advance. Many a man flies, but does not run. And again, "They shall walk, and not faint"—an advance, brethren. It is far more difficult practically to walk and not faint in the Christian life than to walk with wings as eagles. The eagles wings come down again at times; but we have to wait for Pentecostal times, and we have to wait for Pentecostal grace, before the great climax of waiting upon God comes. And that you have in the 6th chapter of the Epistle of Ephesians: "Having done all, stand." This is the climax of waiting upon God—stand. While the arrows fly thickly upon you, stand. While all seems bustle around you, stand. Occupy till the Lord comes, in silent, simple, trusting dependence, waiting upon the Lord, surrounded with his blessings.

We read—and I do pray you to remember it—in the 1st chapter of the Epistle to the Corinthians the position in which the believer waits. This refers to every believer. I pray you mark this, for I do in my own soul see the importance of it. This is not addressed to some rare Christian. This is not addressed to some that have got on very far and very high in Christian experience. The Epistle is written to the believers at Corinth—to all of them, and he says, in the 4th verse, "I thank my God always on your behalf, for the grace of God which is given you by Jesus Christ; that in every thing ye are enriched by him, in all utterance, and in all knowledge; even at the testimony of Christ was confirmed in you; so that ye come behind in no gift, waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." What we want in waiting upon God is just this—to take the great gifts he has bestowed upon us. We wait upon him surrounded with them. There is the fruit that is not in season. You find some Christians, or professing Christians, waiting for peace. They are waiting for faith. They are waiting for righteousness. They are waiting for sanctification. They are waiting for power. Why, brethren, believers wait as possessing these things when they are waiting upon God. Why should he give you more power than he has given you if you do not use the power you have got? Oh, use the gifts you have received; come to him with the pardon he has bestowed; come to him with the conscious enjoyment of adoption into his family. Plead with him as one he has bought with the blood of his dear Son, consecrated to himself in the gift of his Spirit, and commanded to come to him with all your wants and all your weaknesses and infirmities, promising to do for you exceeding abundantly above all that you can ask or think. He is too strong to be resisted, brethren. Wait upon God; he is too just to be questioned. Wait upon God; he is too good to be suspected. Wait upon God. God, for Christ's sake, teach me to wait upon God. Amen.—The Watchman.

It was an exquisitely beautiful saying of Saxe Holm, and one that fits exactly into the present season: "The years write their records on human hearts, as they do on trees, in hidden, inner circles of growth which no eye can see."

IN VERMONT AGAIN.

Brandon, Vt., July, 24, 1883.

"You may count on four-fifths of the ministers as being with you in sentiment." This is the remark of a Baptist pastor, who has informed himself concerning this movement and has privately conversed with his ministerial brethren. This pastor paid the admission fee to hear the addresses at the great Boston Convention, in 1880, but the mob prevented his hearing, and, said he, "I was mad clear through and talked pretty freely and suffered on account of it."

A curious fact was told me by one pastor. A wealthy Mason of his church told him he was opposed to Masonry as much as Anti-masons were and was trying to exert an influence against the lodge, while his Masonic obligation was such that, with Anti-masons, he pretended to be on the other side, not wishing yet to have his lodge know his true sentiments. This is not manly, but it shows that there are Masons who will welcome deliverance when it can be made without too much self-sacrifice.

In Windham county I have just visited brethren Wood, Potter, Gates, DeWolfe and others. Brother Gates made a good offer for the support of the movement in his town, and if the others do proportionally as well there can be a good work done there. On the strength of brother Gates' offer, work in his town will be commenced (D. V.) next week and continued as long as the funds hold out. Several places are probably ready for lectures now.

My journey thus far has resulted in increasing our resources and opening the way for work. By invitation of the pastor I preached Sunday in the Hinesbury Baptist church.

There were some pledges of help for the Vermont convention made which have not yet been redeemed and are needed to square the account. Those who have not sent forward contributions will confer a favor by doing so now. E. D. Bailey.

—In a card written since the above letter, Bro. Bailey says that his purpose was to return to Worcester before the Sabbath. Mr. Bailey, who was still at Dorset, was so much improved in health that she was hoping to return with him.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

THE COLOR LINE IN SCHOOLS AND CHURCHES.

Dear Cynosure:—I notice that the Colored Convention in Galveston, Texas, declared in favor of mixed schools. Just now that subject is being considerably discussed in this District and there are intelligent people of both races, who can see no reason why clean and well mannered children may not meet in the same school and be taught by the same teacher.

The law of God contains no recognition of caste, and makes no distinctions in rights on account of color. The 13th, 14th and 15th Amendments of the Constitution were adopted expressly to secure equality of rights. White and colored men sit together in our State legislatures and in the halls of Congress, and it seems but a small matter that they should listen to the same Gospel sermon, and their children recite to the same teacher. Separate schools for white and colored involves great additional expense, often cuts off many from the advantages of education, and tends to promote the spirit of race prejudice, which is such a blot on our character as Christians and republicans, and such a bane to society.

With the very inadequate provision for education in the South, and the vast amount of illiteracy, she cannot perpetuate this system of folly except at fearful cost.

The experiment of a school open to all persons of good character, was, perhaps, first tried at Oberlin. It met with bitter opposition both from students and citizens, but her recent grand semi-centennial celebration demonstrates the wisdom of obeying God rather than man. Within the past two years a desperate effort has been made by the negro-haters of East Tennessee to drive out the few colored students from Maryville College, and most confident predictions were made that the authorities must yield or the college would go down. The result was that about thirty students were suspended for insubordination, the rule was maintained, and the college is more prosperous than ever.

The institutions of the American Missionary Association, including Howard University in this city, are open to all of good character. In this city and in New Orleans there are some white students in the Law and Medical departments, and the relative number is likely to increase.

Berea College in Kentucky, after an arduous struggle has achieved a victory over the spirit of caste. For several years about an equal number of white and colored students have graduated, and the institution has become one of the largest and most popular in the State.

Unreasonable and unjustifiable as is the division of Christians into sects, it is still more unreasonable that those of the same sect should be divided on the color line; and that a double expense be incurred for building churches and preaching the Gospel among those who profess to be of the same faith and order. Shall the church be less tolerant than the world? God has said, "If ye have respect of persons ye commit sin and are convinced of the law as transgressors." (Jas. 2: 9.) Surely color line churches have "respect to persons."

It is said that the separation of the races is for their mutual benefit, and is the choice of both white and colored. But experience shows that the isolation of a race tends to its debasement, and its intimate association with other races tends to improvement. So long as Japan was closed against the Western nations, she remained in barbarism. During the last twenty-five years of intercourse with Europe and America, she has made unparalled advancement.

The Indian tribes living simply by themselves, have made no advancement for 200 years. Missionary labor has done much, but where the Indian youth has been brought to our Christian schools, and kept under the influences of civilization he has grown up a civilized, often a cultured Christian.

Great and cruel as was the wrong of slavery and the slave trade, yet it has been overruled for incalculable good to the seven millions of Africo-Americans. They are incomparably superior physically, morally, and intellectually, to any seven millions of Africans. This wonderful development has resulted from their intimate relations with a civilized race. There may be no gratitude due from the negro to the Anglo-American, but surely thanks are due to God that human wickedness has been overruled for good. The negro is here to stay. All thoughts of colonization either forced or voluntary may be at once dismissed. They are, in spite of all their past and present disabilities, making steady progress in all the elements of Christian civilization. The separation, if possible, would be no advantage to either race, and they can afford to be "kindly affectioned one to another in brotherly love."

When Christian people both white and colored shall put away race-prejudice, and recognize the grand brotherhood in which "There is neither Greek nor Jew, circumcision or uncircumcision, barbarian, Scythian, bond or free, but Christ is all, and in all." (Col. 3: 11), then may we expect "peace on earth and good will to men."

THE CRIME OF BLASPHEMY.

Yesterday (July 22) the amiable and respectable pastor of the First Presbyterian church of this city preached an able discourse from the text "Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain," in which he showed that the sin of blasphemy is exceedingly prevalent in this city. He said that it was not only a great sin, but a crime that was prohibited by the laws of this District, but that this law was rarely enforced, and never except among the lower classes; while members of Congress and those in high life blasphemed God with impunity. He deplored this state of things, as calculated to undermine the social fabric, and bring all law into contempt, and he earnestly plead for a better execution of the law.

Surely every good citizen should join with this learned divine in his abhorrence of this sin, and his plea for a better enforcement of the enactments of Congress.

But let me call the learned doctor's attention to the fact that oftimes immoral influences outweigh mere legislative enactments; and that while these influences exist, the enforcement of law becomes practically impossible. If the crime of blasphemy were confined to those who, in common parlance, are called profane swearers, it would be comparatively easy to suppress it; but when judges and jurors, pastors and deacons do the same thing, it is idle to talk of the enforcement of law. This learned doctor is, I believe, a Knight Templar, and in this and the subordinate degrees of Masonry, has taken a long series of oaths which could not be openly repeated without shocking the moral sensibilities of mankind, and convincing all uninitiated Christians that they are distinctly blasphemous. It does not appear that he has ever repented of this iniquity, but there is reason to think that to-day he is giving aid and comfort to the great multitude of the church members and saloon-keepers who combine to practice and perpetuate this abomination.

Let it be remembered that a Master Mason swears to conceal all the secrets of a brother Master Mason except murder and treason. He swears to this under death penalty and asks God to help him keep his oath. Now this oath is, in its terms, distinctly blasphemous, for it asks God to help us conceal crimes, provided it be not murder or treason, and to help in the execution of a wicked penalty if we fail to keep it.

But if the oath is not to be understood by its terms then it is none the less blasphemous, for it calls God to witness what is not true. In the Royal Arch degree one of the passwords is the name of Jehovah, "I Am that I Am," and in each initiation there is acted the sublime scene of Moses at the Burning Bush. In this scene a Mason personates Jehovah and says, "I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob," and the candidate takes off his shoes as though he were in the presence of God. Moreover in the Knight Templar degree, the candidate drinks wine from a human skull. This is called the fifth Libation, and in it he invokes the penalty due to "all the sins of the person whose skull this was, in addition to my own, should I ever knowingly or wilfully violate my solemn vow of a Knight Templar."

Now President Lincoln said of slavery that if it was not sinful, nothing is sinful, and so will the moral sense of mankind affirm in regard to these oaths that, if they are not blasphemous, nothing is blasphemous.

And now I respectfully suggest to this and all other Masonic ministers, that they consider the words of our Saviour to those who accused the poor woman of adultery, and that before they preach against blasphemy, they humbly repent. And in view of the terrible prevalence of this iniquity, I would say with the old prophet, "Blow the trumpet in Zion, sanctify a fast, call a solemn assembly; gather the people, sanctify the congregation, assemble the elders. Let the priests, the ministers of God, weep between the porch and the altar and let them say, Spare thy people, O Lord and give not thy heritage to reproach." (Joel 11: 15–17.) If haply by timely repentance we may arrest the judgments of an angry God.

Yours in Christ,

H. H. Hinman.

Churches that are corrupted by Freemasonry cannot furnish religion enough to run the machinery of Republican government.

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,
JONATHAN BLANCHARD,
OF ILLINOIS.

For Vice President,
JOHN A. CONANT,
OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

REV. HOMER HULL of Guthrie Center, Iowa, in a letter to Pres. J. Blanchard, endorses the measures already taken for the advancement of the American party: "We are doing the best we can in this reform work, distributing tracts, visiting on our charge, introducing the Iowa American and the Cynosure, which we prize very highly. We feel encouraged by the outlook for the American party. With Senator Pomeroy at the head of our ticket we should make some impression in 1884. We honor your judgment and spirit of self-denial in resigning in his favor, yet we should have been satisfied without the change. God bless you in your work of reform."

THE CALM JUDGMENT of Mr. Conant, our noble-spirited nominee for the second place on the American ticket, approves of the effort to extend information respecting the American principles. He writes to the General Agent:

As Pres. Blanchard has withdrawn his name from the canvass and insists upon it, (I believe unwisely however, but honestly, with no other purpose than the advancement of the cause, for which, I honor him) I have no doubt, from what information I have received, that Hon. S. C. Pomeroy of Kansas is the next best man for the position. I am glad to learn that Mr. Pomeroy is to speak at several important places, and hope he will consent and be able to speak in all the States before other parties make their nominations. I was very much pleased with his speech in Farwell Hall as reported in the Cynosure.

I am in favor of a political convention in Washington sometime during the autumnal months, also the establishing of a political organ of the American Party, but as to devising ways and means for its accomplishment I am not prepared to advise.

The employment of money in political campaigns, for purposes both legitimate and illegitimate, increases naturally with the growing wealth of the country and with the increasing importance of the prizes which are disposed of by popular election. The public has been but recently made acquainted with the fact that when the election is over and the campaign fund has been spent, the accounts of the campaign committees are regularly burned. The New York Evening Post demands a law of Congress requiring the publication of all such accounts and the Philadelphia Press demands laws by all State legislatures to the same effect. "Such legislation," it says, "would spread from State to State; it would apply to the choice of the electors who elect a Federal President, and it would cover the wider circle of State and local officers in which election expenditure plays as extensive and corrupt a part as in national affairs, if less obtrusive. Reform associations can devote themselves to no more needed work than agitation for the passage of such legislation, requiring the publication of all campaign and election expenditures." All which is very well. Every safeguard should be thrown around the men who handle public funds. The friends of genuine national reformation, while expending their strength on more fundamental measures, should welcome every restraint which can be placed on our abounding political corruption. Every such effort is part of the people's struggle toward a higher and purer political life,—a struggle which will issue in the triumph of the principles of national religion.

MORAL PURPOSE IN THE DISCOVERY OF AMERICA.

Dr. John Lord closes one of his matchless historical lectures with the following noble sentences, describing the future grandeur of our country if its laws are in their form and execution subordinated to the command of God. There is much in the extracts below that remind the reader of the Farwell Hall speech of Senator Pomeroy, which is now issued in pamphlet:

"The world has witnessed many powerful empires which have passed away, 'leaving scarcely a wreck behind.' What remains of the antediluvian world? Not even a spike of Noah's Ark, larger and stronger than any modern ship. What remains of Babylon, of Thebes, of Tyre, of Carthage—those great cities of wealth and power? What remains of Roman greatness, even, except in laws and literature, and renovated statues? Remember, there is an undeviating uniformity in the past history of nation. What is the simple story of all the ages?—industry, wealth, corruption, decay and ruin. What conservative power has been strong enough to arrest the ruin of the nations of antiquity? Have not material forces and glories been developed and exhibited, whatever the religion and morals of the fallen nations? Cannot a country grow materially to a point under the most adverse influence in a religious and moral point of view? Yet for lack of religion and morals the nations perished, and their Babel towers were buried in the dust. They perished for lack of true conservative forces—at least that is the judgment of historians. Nobody doubts the splendor of the material glories of the ancient nations. The ruins of Baalbec, of Palmyra, of Athens, prove this, to say nothing of history. The material glories of the ancient nations may be surpassed by our modern wonders, but yet all the material glories of the ancient nations passed away.

"Now, if this is to be the destiny of America—an unbounded material growth, followed by corruption and ruin, then Columbus has simply extended the realm for men to try material experiments. Make New York a second Carthage, and Bostou a second Athens, and Philadelphia a second Antioch, and Washington a second Rome, and we simply repeat the old experiment. Did not the Romans have nearly all we have, materially, except our modern scientific inventions? But has America no higher destiny than to repeat the old experiments, and improve upon them and become rich and powerful? Has she no higher and nobler mission? Can she lay hold of forces that the Old World never had, such as will prevent the uniform doom of nations? I maintain that there is no reason that can be urged, based on history and experience, why she should escape the fate of the nations of antiquity, unless new forces arise on this continent, different from what the world has known, and which have a conservative influence. If America has a great mission to declare and to fulfill, she must put forth altogether new forces, and they not material. That alone will save her, and save the world. It is mournful to contemplate even the future material glories of America, if they are not to be preserved—if these are to share the fate of ancient wonders. It is obvious that the real glory of America is to be something entirely different from that of which the ancients boasted. And this is to be the moral and spiritual, that which the ancients lacked.

"Unless something new is born here which has a peculiar power to save, wherein will America ultimately differ from other parts of Christendom? We must have schools in which the heart as well as the brain is educated, and newspapers which aspire to something higher that to fan prejudices and appeal to perverted tastes. Our hope is not in books which treat infidelity under the name of science; not in pulpits which cannot be sustained without sensational oratory; not in journals which trade on the religious sentiments of the people; nor Sabbath-school books which are an insult to the human understanding; nor colleges which fit youth merely for making money; nor schools of technology to give an impulse to material interests; nor legislatures controlled by monopolists; nor judges elected by demagogues; nor philanthropic societies to ventilate impractical theories. These will neither renovate nor conserve what is most precious in life. Unless a nation grows morally as well as materially, there is something wrong at the core of society. As I have said, no material expansion will avail if society becomes rotten at the core. America is a glorious boon to civilization, but only as she fulfills a new mission in history—not to become more potent in material forces, but in those spiritual agencies which prevent corruption and decay.

"We all know that Christianity is the only hope of the world. The question is whether America is, or is not, more favorable for its healthy development and application than the other countries of Christendom. We believe that it is. If it is not, then America is only a new field for the spread and triumph of material forces. If it is, we may look forward to such improvements in education, in political institutions, in social life, in religious organizations, in philanthropic enterprise, that the country will be sought by the poor and enslaved classes of Europe, more for its moral and intellectual advantages, than for mines or farms, and the objects of the Puritan settlers will be gained.

"What sought the then afar?
Bright jewels of the mines?
The wealth of seas? the spoils of war?
They sought for faith's pure shrine.

"Yes, call it holy ground,
Which first their brave feet trod,
They left unstained what there they found,
Freedom to worship God."

REFORM NEWS.

IOWA.

The Iowa Christian Association opposed to secret societies will meet at Albia, Aug. 28, 1883. An unusually interesting programme is prepared and it is designed to make it the best of its kind. Hon. S. C. Pomeroy of Washington city, is to deliver an address; other noted men appear on the programme. Prohibition, Sabbath observance, Christ in government, and other living questions will be presented by able speakers.

AN IOWA "DECLARATION."

The following declaratiou of purpose is beiug circulated in south-western Iowa, and a long list of subscribers is promising some earnest work when time for action comes:

"DECLARATION."

"Viewing with grave apprehension and deep concern the encroachments of the lodge and rum powers, and believing them to be evil in their nature and practical workings against society and good government, therefore,

"Resolved, That we, the undersigned citizens of Page county, Iowa, do hereby pledge ourselves not to support by either vote or influence any candidate for any civil office knowing such an one to be a member of any secret society, clique or clan, or who is not a temperance man and positively committed as favoring prohibition. We further recommend the organization of American clubs in this county."

The work put into the hands of Bro. M. N. Butler, in south-western Iowa does not slacken for heated term or harvest hurry. The Iowa American gives this hopeful account of the onward march of the truth:

In Page county the parties are wheeling into line and the American cause moves rapidly forward.

The lodges realize that unless something is quickly done to retard investigation their early demise is certain.

The lodge element would intimidate Mr. M. N. Butler. Recently he was locked out of a school-house by a Freemason. The night of July the 12th he was again debarred the right of entrance to a church west of Clarinda, although promised its use. In one place it is whispered by "Hiramites" that "he might go under the sod;" in an other he is threatened with a "wooden overcoat;" and at a third it is suggested that "he will be obliged to leave this section." But we say, If this is not God's free country the sooner the people find it out the better.

The list of names to the "Declaration," is led by prominent ministers of six different denominations in Page county—i. e., United Presbyterian, Wesleyan Methodist, Congregationalist, United Brethren in Christ, Brethren in Christ, and Free Methodist. It is also believed that the Reformed Presbyterian and Lutheran churches will, ere long be well represented.

While a lecturer was lately putting up bills, a burly bully, just fined for pummeling three men, said: "Young man, you better get out of this town and d——n quick; the sooner the better!" The prompt answer was, "Young man, I've seen whole towns just like you. I'll get out of this town whenever I get ready." About five minutes thereafter a stalwart young fellow came up, read a bill, and volunteered. "That's right; give 'em h—ll!" One Mason said: "Young man, you were born too late to ever destroy Masonry." Another grey-haired sinner when invited out, angrily bawled: "I don't want to hear a perjurer talk."

Whitelaw Reed, speaking of re-orgauizing the Republican fragments, says: "The way to do this, in my judgment, is to give Republicans the right of self-government."

The ridiculous absurdity of the above is simply stunning. The idea of actually giving Republicans the right "self-government" would antagonize the lodge power and do away with Freemasonry.

Napoleon said: "I fear no evil that I can see." Would the son of Corsica have dared to join battle with Masonry?

PERIL.—The M. E. Missionary Society is in danger! William Taylor's vast and wonderful God-ordained system of self-supporting missions "threatens to deplete the funds of the society." This is the hypothesis upon which church despots oppose Taylor's triumphant and world-wide progress! Their "craft" is in danger. One man called from the plow, like Elisha, the son of Shaphat, so rapidly and so far outstrips them in effective and permanent work, that their heavy, lumbering machinery and costly, but stringent red tape, are left in the lurch! This is the puerile plea for proscribing Taylor. This explains all the Jesuitical attempts to lasso this irrepressible world's missionary. As well might a Board of Supervisors raise an out-cry against a man who should abolish our heavy poor taxes, by converting all paupers into self-supporting, wealth-producing citizens! We do not disparage the work the missionary society may have done, but we do insist that the self-supporting principle, so signally owned of God in William Taylor's world evangelism, is the only true, common sense and scriptural missionary method.—The Vanguard.

There are some inns which are never empty; but as fast as one guest goes out, another comes in. Such is the heart of an unregenerate man.

HOW HAVE THE MIGHTY FALLEN.

The great, deep, broad, all-prevading Freemansonry, dating back its "ancient and honorable" institutions to the very first dawn of light upon the chaos of this unshaped globe, which brings civilized men and savages, rumsellers and tetolallers, deacons and gamblers, ministers and bawds, politicians and thimble-riggers under one great religion much better than Christianity, and which has laid the corner-stones of capitols and cathedrals, court-houses and obelisks, post-offices and school-houses etc., etc—this great, magnificent body of men has utterly failed to put in an appearance on the greatest occasion of modern times, viz., the opening of the New-York and Brooklyn bridge to the public. Not a single sheep-skin apron, mallet, or pair of compasses made its appearance on the grand occasion. Ministers of religion and of state were present; the militia, the navy and army officiated; high and worthy names in all the higher departments of human affairs illustrated the ceremonies, but not one trace of Freemasonry of any kind can we discover in the ceremonies, except perhaps that a few policemen whose duty it was to prevent people from going over the bridge without paying toll allowed some of their friends to slip through scot free. These men were probably Freemasons engaged as usual in working the lodge, as they do on all similar occasions. It is one of the privileges of their "order." Where is the use of being a Freemason, subjected to all the disgrace of initiation, unless one can receive some advantage in return over and above that of mere ordinary American citizens?

But it is evident to us that the mighty are falling (if it was possible to go lower) and for that let us rejoice.

So mote it be!

AN EXPERIENCE IN EAST TENNESSE.

An incident in the experience of the writer well illustrates the persecuting spirit of this institution. Some years ago, when resident in East Tennessee, and, at that time, a member of the "Religious Society of Frieuds" a certain person, also a member there and an active Mason took measures so to influence the other members of the society, that we (wife and self) might be cast out not only from our right of membership in the meeting, but also throughout the whole society in the United States. The principle cause of offence was that we had openly declared ourselves opposed to the secrecy and the practices of the Masonic order, to belong to which is contrary to the discipline of the Friends. Anxious as we were for the proper observance of all the rules of the society, we could not but warn young men who had been solicited to enter Masonry, to have nothing to do with it in any form or degree. Hence the storm of persecution, which became fiercer and hotter.

Contrary to the discipline of the society in which we were born and were brought up for more than half a century and contrary to every sentiment of honor, morality and religion, we were thrust out from membership, with no redress except through law. Rather than subject ourselves to its uncertainty, we attended the meetings of another religious denomination. We sought to show our persecutors that we forgave them; but at the same time, would not abandon the pure scriptural priuciples and practices in which we had been educated.

Not satisfied however, with severing us from our loved religious communion, this Masonic spirit continued to manifest itself more violently. An anonymous communication was shortly afterward received advising us to leave the place for our own good, accompanied by a threat, that, unless we did so, we might some night be taken out of bed and tarred and feathered, or, possibly hung up to the nearest tree.

We paid no attention to this threat, but endeavored to live down this malicious spirit, not allowing it to interfere with the mission work to which we had been called in that country.

Years passed—our work was ended and we returned to our Eastern home. Such, however, was the effect of these undisciplinary proceedings by a minority of the meeting, that never from the time of our disownment, was good order, and Christian brotherhood maintained. The very name of "Friend" or "Quaker" began to stink among other societies. In time, however, new members were added to the meeting, through whose influence, discipline was re-established and those who had ejected us who would have done them good have lost their standing in the church and are trusted no longer.

Endorsed by our Christian friends in Philadelphia and having means at our own disposal, our time and energies would have been devoted to benevolent and religious work in East Tennessee; and our declining days been spent among those who needed our help and sympathy.

We do not know of another instance in which the bitter spirit of the secret order among the Friends was more signally shown than in our own case and hope that it may prove a warning to all, far or near not to "touch the accursed thing." J. C.

OREGON TRIBULATIONS.

Silver Creek Falls, Oregon, July 2, 1883.

We are having a serious drouth here. Oats are heading out five to eight inches high, two to three and five grains in one head. Almost every thing is drying up; grain sowed last fall and winter was nearly all frozen out and a great deal will not be worth cutting; but very little will be much over half crop. It looks as if we would have very serious times here. Oregon looks better on paper than it does with the naked eye; this country is as much dried up as ever I have seen Kansas, and I lived there nine years. Many are coming here to be bitterly disappointed, and many would like to go back if they were able.

I like the Cynosure very much; will try and get some more subscribers. In Cynosure of June 21 you spoke of Dr. Livingstone's death in Africa, and carried by his faithful servants so far that he might be buried in his native England. Was England his native land? You also spoke of Cromwell among good men, and hold him as a patriot. I do abhor such blood-thirsty tyrants as he was. He is only worthy to be named with murderers. If reformers do have to embrace such tyrants, then I am no reformer, and I have been that this last forty years, and a subscriber to the Christian Cynosure almost ever since I first saw it about eight years ago. May God direct you aright. John Hepburn.

[David Livingstone was born in Blantyre, Scotland. Bro. Hepburn cannot surely be a Catholic. Outside that church few speak so severely of Cromwell, and with so much assurance. We advise him to read Macauley's and Knight's histories of England, and D'Aubigne's and Carlyle's biographies of Cromwell for better information respecting that great man.—Ed.]

POINTS FROM LETTERS.

OLD WORLD LODGERY.

Why is mankind in general so slow to learn from the experience of others? We read of the conspiracy of the Nililists, the evils of Socialism, the outrages and violence of the Land-league and other secret societies in the Old World; all arrayed against government and order, with dagger and dynamite they slay and destroy; crowned heads and high officials the chief objects of their fiendish malice. Even Russian severity, and Gladstone's milder measures and stupendeous influence have as yet failed to subdue these; while Bismarck, knowing something of the power of the beast of Rome by actual contact, has yet said, that, "Masonry out-Jesuits the Jesuits." If such is secretism in the Old World, what of good can this many-headed dragon bring to our country? I hope that last effort of Mr. Weed may equal the last effort of Sampson, in the destruction of his, and Israel's enemies.

Thos. C. Haines.

BEAUTIFUL APOSTROPHE TO THE BIBLE.

When the editor of the Cynosure had the discussion upon slavery with its champion, Rev. N. L. Rice, in Cincinnati, thirty-eight years ago, his righteous indignatiou was aroused at Mr. R.'s attempt to make the Bible sanction the great iniquity of the land, and he thus burst forth, addressing the Bible which lay on the stand:

"O, thou Blessed charter of human hope! Thou sweet pole star to the Voyage of Life! Thou bright beam of the ineffable effulgence of God! Would they dive into thy glorious brightness to draw from its charter of human liberty their title deed of slavery? Gracious and compassionate God! they vaunt that they will thrust their hand into this blessed book (holding up the Bible) to fetch hence fetters for our feet and manacles for our minds! . . . But shall they prosper who do such things, never! never! ! That impious hand which is thrust into God's Word to bring out chaius and fetters for our race shall yet be as the hand of Jereboam at the altar of Bethel when he stretched it forth against the prophet of God. And the day cometh, etc." Aye, the day has come and has past, as we all know. T. H.

"THERE ARE MANY GOOD MEN MASONS."

Yes, but will that excuse their Masonry? If Masonry is only another name for Deism, which denies the glory of Godhead to the only begotten Son and to the Holy Ghost, will the fact that the Rev. Dr. Soho has given his patronage to the lodge make it scriptural? Certainly not: for he who does not wordhip the Jehovah of the Holy Bible as the Almighty God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, does not worship the only living and true God. He is therefore without God; and until he confesses his sin and gives evidence of true repentance, he is "without hope in this world."

Who will not admit that Solomon was the wisest and most successful king that ever reigned during the Jewish Theocracy? Was he not divincly inspired? Are not his writings in the Holy Scriptures to be highly prized as models of instruction. But will that either justify or even palliate his sins of pride, lust, ambition, cruelly maiming the bodies of men, of incarcerating the same mutilated eunuchs with his seven hundred princess-wives, and three hundred concubines, within the walls of his harem, which was but a hell on earth and a sink of idolatry and pollution? Was not his life proscribed by the law of God—and that of every one of his heathen princesses who practised idolatry in their secret harem with him, who yet went up to the temple to worship the God of Israel. Nothing but his public confession of such wickness is "vanity of vanities" and his warning to others, against such sin saved him from eternal death. Where are the good Masonic Solomons who will come out manfully like Bro. VanDeventer of Delavan, Ill., in the 7th of June (No. 37) Christian Cynosure confessing his sin in all its enormity and vowing in the strength of God to forsake the same. James Donaldson.

HELP PHILADELPHIA.

Will not the N. C. A. do something for wretched Philadelphia this coming fall or winter. I must tell you how the Lord has used me in keeping three young men from joining the lodge; by loaning them my books to read they became disgusted. Bro. Hinman wrote me some weeks since that he had ordered tracts sent from Chicago for me. My days here cannot be many, and I am willing to work on if you will send me the tracts. I have but little of this world's goods, but plenty of time to work.

Charlotte Bock.

FROM GLIDDEN, IOWA.

I have been working for the cause for many years, yet having little means. But I am not discouraged; if the Lord wills I will do more than ever. I am alone as a worker, but there are many about who are in sympathy with us, though afraid to say so, lest they hurt somebody' feelings. If we could get some one to come and organ ize for the American party I believe we could get hunhreds of votes. A. J. Loudenback.

Bible Lessons.

LESSON VII.—August 12. The last Days of Joshua.—Joshua 24:14-29.

Golden Text.—Choose you this day whom ye will serve.—Joshua 24:15.

"Joshua."—Nearly 110 years old; living at Timnath-serah, not far from Shechem. Here he lived in retirement, after the end of the conquest, for 18 years.

"Intervening events."—1 After designating the cities of refuge, 48 cities were set apart for the Levites, who had no other inheritance (chap. 21).

2. Then the men of the two and a half tribes, who had helped their brethern conquer Canaan, returned to their own inheritance east of the Jordan (chap. 22).

3. The people are greatly excited about a supposed danger of schism and departure from God. The excitement is wisely and quickly settled (chap. 22).

4. Nearly 18 years pass in peace (chap. 23:1).

5. Then Joshua, being soon to die, makes a solemn address of encouragement and warning to the leaders of the people (chap. 23).

6. Finally he has a solemn gathering of representatives of all the people, to impress them with his dying words, of which to-day's lesson is a part.

"Fear the Lord." Fear of God means paying him reverential awe; it does not designate terror. Not even the beginning of true knowledge can be made without the reverence in question. The first Arabic proverb in the collection of one hundred proverbs by Erpenius, runs thus: "The beginning of wisdom is the fear of God."—Stuart.

"Put away the gods which your fathers served." We thus learn that idolatry lurked among the Israelites, and that it was that form of idolatry which had been known in the family of Terah of old (ver. 2). It must have existed among the Israelites in every generation,—a traditional evil, for there had been no recent opportunity to learn it anew. It had been so far repressed, usually, by the sentiment of the better class, that it kept itself in secret; but it had not been wholly destroyed. We find many traces of it where we should little expect them (Gen. 31:19, 30–35; 35:1–4; Deut. 32:16; comp. Lev. 17:7 with Ezek. 20:7 ff.; 23:3, 8, and Amos 5:26).—Johnson.

"As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord." A resolution truly worthy of so great a prince and so good a man, in which we have a double pattern for us: first, of the brave resolution of a good man; namely, that if there were occasion, and things were brought to that extremity, he would stand alone in the profession and practice of true religion. Secondly, of the pious care of a good father and master of a family, to train up those under his charge in the true religion and worship of God.—Abp. Tillotson. When we cannot bring as many as we would to the service of God, we must bring as many as we can, and extend our endeavors to the utmost sphere of our activity; if we cannot reform the land, let us put away iniquity far from our own tabernacle.—Henry.

"And my house." The grand inference to be drawn from this mode of address is, that the service of God is a matter of voluntary choice, and that it is his will that we should all seriously and solemnly make this choice. He would have us weigh the matter well, compare the respective claims of his service and the service of sin and the world. As the evidences in favor of religion are so clear and indisputable, and its infinite advantages so obvious, the man who declines making the choice here enjoined must be considered as deliberately preferring Satan to Christ, death to life, hell to heaven. He who acknowledges the paramount claims of God and his Gospel, and yet does not act accordingly, does not sincerely and solemny choose his service as that better part which cannot be taken from him, must stand self-comdemned both here and hereafter.—Bush.

"Ye cannot serve the Lord." God does not want any soul to accept his service without knowing fully what it it. Joshua, therefore, warned the people that Jehovah was exceedingly strict. The speaker did this not only in fairness to the people, but also in order to render their decision more sober, and take from it any character of mere momentary impulse which it may have had. Decisions which are to effect the eternal destiny of the soul should be made at once, but soberly, and with the fullest knowledge.—Johnson.

"He will turn." Not in himself or in his dispositions towards his creatures, for we are elsewhere told that with him there is no variableness, nor the least shadow of turning. But the character of his dispensations, the course of his providence towards them, should be entirely changed, in view of the change in their conduct towards him.—Bush.

"Put away strange gods." The words import that there really were amongst the people, even in Joshua's days, those who were idolaters in secret, as there were in the days of Jacob before him and of Samuel after him.—Cook.

"Joshua made a covenant," i. e., he solemnly ratified and renewed the covenant of Sinai (Ex. 19: 20) as Moses had done before him in the plains of Moab (cf. Deut. 29: 1).—Cook. At Sinai the covenant was solemnly ratified with (1) burnt-offerings and peace-offerings at the foot of the mount; (2) the reading of every word of the law in the ears of the people; (3) the sprinkling of one-half of the blood of the victims on the altars and the roll containing the covenant conditions, and the other half on the people (Ex. 24:3–8; Heb. 9:19, 20). This covenant Moses had renewed in "the field" of Moab (Deut. 29:1). Joshua, who had been present at the ratification of both the previous covenants, renews it now, and doubtless with august ceremonial.—Cambridge Bible.

BAND OF HOPE BIBLE LESSON.

THY SOUL AND BODY SHOULD BE PURE.

19. What? know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own?
20. For ye are bought with a price; therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's. 1 Cor. 6: 19, 20.
16. Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?
17. If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are.
18. Let no man deceive himself. If any man among you seemeth to be wise in this world let him become a fool that he may be wise.
19. For the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God. For it is written, He taketh the wise in their own craftiness.
20. And again, The Lord knoweth the thoughts of the wise, that they are vain.
21. Therefore let no man glory in men, for all things are yours;
22. Whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present or things to come; all are yours;
23. And ye are Christ's; and Christ is God's. 1 Cor. 3: 16–23.

GOLDEN TEXT.—And ye are Christ's; and Christ is God's.

CENTRAL TRUTH.—We are to glorify God in body and in soul.

1. Our bodies are called temples, because God made them for his Spirit to dwell in.
2. We can glorify God in our bodies by not injuring or defiling them by any bad habit.
3. A great many boys as well as grown men defile their bodies with using tobacco.
4. Tobacco, when a person first begins to use it, makes him deadly sick.
5. If he keeps on using it, it deranges the action of the nerves after awhile. You will sometimes see the hand of a confirmed smoker shake. It is for the same reason that the hand of a confirmed drunkard shakes. He has lost the control of his nerves. Real cases of delirium tremens have been known to result from the use of tobacco.
6. Nervous prostration, paralysis, heart disease, and other serious and fatal complaints result from its use. It sometimes causes cancer. The late Senator Hill of Georgia died of cancer on the tongue caused by the pressure of his cigar.
7. If no such terrible results happen the smoker has an offensive breath. Not only his clothing but his whole body becomes saturated with the smell of the vile weed. He is thus a nuisance in decent society. But this is not all. It is impossible to be a confirmed smoker and not be injured in health by the habit, though the person may not know it.
8. Men are deceived by tobacco just as they are by opium or liquor. They imagine it does them no harm. They feel soothed and easy under its influence, when the fact is the nerves are only stupefied.
9. Men very often learn to smoke because it is the fashion, and boys of ten or twelve will acquire the habit from a mistaken notion that it is manly.
10. Sir Walter Raleigh first made the use of tobacco fashionable in England. He also introduced the potato, so important an article of food on every table. He made numerous voyages of discovery, and was one of the foremost men of his time. It is likely that he did not fully realize the vile and poisonous nature of the weed he was introducing or the evils its use would inflict on the human race.
11. God has a right to our best services of mind and body. When we knowingly do anything to injure them we defraud him. When we defile them with tobacco or any other vice we insult him, and incur his just indignation.

PRACTICAL TRUTHS.

Our bodies should be temples for God's Holy Spirit.
He cannot dwell in bodies defiled by evil habits.
Tobacco is a deceiver like alcohol.
Sometimes it deceives even wise men.
Our bodies were bought at an infinite price—we must keep them pure for God.

LESSON TALK.

Sir Walter Raleigh, who was a favorite courtier of Queen Elizabeth, was sometimes allowed to smoke even in his sovereign's presence. The Queen probably regarded the weed as one of the curiosities of the New World, and had no thought that the habit of smoking would become so general in her successor's reign as to cause poor James I., in his annoyance and disgust, to write a book against it.

On one occasion Sir Walter laid a wager with the Queen that he could tell her the exact weight of the smoke. This he did by weighing, first tobacco, then the ashes left in his pipe, and subtracting the amount of one from the other.

It would be a good plan if all who smoke cigars and cigarettes at the present day would not only weigh the smoke with which they poison the air for others, but would seriously reckon up the sum which this smoke costs them per annum. One who smokes five good cigars a day at ten cents a piece must expend three hundred or more dollars a year. But there are many who smoke eight or ten a day. Eighty millions are expended every year in this country alone on tobacco. Now if this all ended in literal smoke it would be a terrible waste of money that should have been better spent. But loss of health, moral purity, and often a decided appetite for strong drink is left behind, with a heritage of enfeebled brains, suffering and early death transmitted to the next generation. There may have been some excuse for those who used the weed before science had fully demonstrated its poisonous nature. There can be none for those who enter into temptation with their eyes open.

LESSON HYMN.

What can I give my Saviour
Who gave so much for me?

MOVING APPEAL FROM THE CHICAGO BIBLE-WORK ROOMS.

DEAR CHRISTIAN FRIENDS:—More than ever before, have I this year tried to obey our Lord's command in Matt. 9:37, 38, "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few; pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth laborers into his harvest."

(The harvest indeed, is great, but the workmen few; beg ye therefore of the Master of the harvest, to-the-end he may urge forth workmen into his harvest.– Rotherham).

This language is urgent. It is a plain command given to us by our Lord, with reference to his work; and it is one which every man, woman and child, in the entire church can obey. Any Christian, shut within the four walls of a sick room can, by it, work for Christ; every maimed Christian, not himself able to go either to the heathen abroad or to the heathen at home, may, by it, send or help to send a representative; every man too poor to give much money for missionary work, may, by it, give living help to Christ's cause. Every Christian ought to work for Christ by obeying this promise. I wish to ask, Christian friends, how many of you will, obediently, earnestly, EARNESTLY take up this prayer as a part of your faithful service for Christ, while earthly service lasts? will you?

It is computed that Christians may, by faithful, earnest service, carry the gospel to the entire heathen world in the next twenty years. Let us hasten the work; let us do all that we can to accomplish this end; let the aged obediently pray; let the middle-aged obediently pray; let the young obediently pray; and let us all obediently ask—"Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?"

Young Christian, are you ready to say, "Here am I, Lord, send me?" Send you where? Are you already earnestly working for Christ? Are you doing heartily as unto the Lord, all that you can do for him? Are you doing "with your might what your hand finds to do, in Sunday-schools and missions, in mother's meetings and sewing schools, in sewing classes, in hospitals, by visiting the sick and the poor, by a simple, loving Christian ministry and service, are you obediently doing now all that you can do for Christ?" "The harvest truly is plenteous; Behold, I say unto you, lift up your eyes,—look on the fields, for they are white already to harvest." Do not wait to be sent to foreign fields; hasten to obey our Lord's command to "preach the Gospel to every creature." Obediently take the first step, and the next will come easier. Enter the first open door, and others will open, and fields will widen, and your work will grow, and you will gather imperishable worth out of this perishing world, to lay at the feet of Jesus Christ, when he calls you to his presence.

If any young woman desires to give a year to Christian work, as preparatory to a consecrated Christian life, in home or foreign lands, I shall be glad to hear from her. And may our Lord urge us into his harvest. In the hopes of the Gospel. MISS E. DRYER.

A brilliant "Thirty-third" of Rochester, N. Y., was not long since despoiled of his Masonic jewels at a hotel in New York city by a burglar. He lost his watch, his cross, his diamond shirt-studs, etc., etc. The burglar had taken a higher degree than he had.

THE

CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE

A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

It is now owned and published by the

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, AUGUST 2, 1883.

LIFE AND TIMES OF FREDERICK DOUGLASS.

This is a book of more than 600 pages, issued by a company in Hartford, Conn., 1882. We have read it through page by page, to the appendix, with tireless admiration.

Of course the book cannot be characterized in a brief editorial. But it gives us the satisfaction that it was and is wise in some way to seek the alliance of Mr. Douglass with the American Party. The only hesitation we have in encouraging the readers of the Cynosure to purchase the book is the partial and we hope temporary mental apostacy of Mr. Douglass from the religion of Christ, as given in the Bible: though his clear discernment of men; his proud humility in adhering to the colored half of his blood, because that is the half that is down in life's fight; and though his colored friends (?) envy and desert him;—but, above all, his tender, though vague reverence for the Almighty, are traits which distinguish, and would distinguish him among the distinguished men of the earth.

The one radical, terrible error of Mr. Douglass and his book is, his steady, unconscious, ignoring of Christ. He treats Christ as if he had the small-pox or was a colored man and a color line separated the two. Indeed, one would think to get through his 600 pages without once meeting the name of Christ; and it does not appear till on page 557, almost at the end, there is a single allusion to "Jesus," such as Ingersoll or Theodore Parker would have made. This is the more astonishing in that the life of Douglass, like that of Christ, has been devoted to the welfare of thankless and down-trodden men. One would think the Saviour would be such a man's favorite. But, more wonderful than all, Douglass reads and reveres the Bible; and employs Christ's parables as speeches to Sabbath-school children!

Now that Bible declares that Christ "shall judge among the nations;" that he, in short, rules and controls national destinies (Isa. 2: 4, etc.); and yet Mr. Douglass in his 600 pages, on the two leading nations, England and America, treats Christ as coolly as Mr. Hilles of New Hampshire treated Douglass when he went there to lecture; that is, gets into his abolition phaeton, and drives on without him!—and that too, when the horror of selling Christ, who dwells in Christians, white or black, (Christ's least brethren) was what overthrew slavery at last!

Mr. Douglass explains this treatment of the "Son of God" as well as the "Son of man," when, on page 583, he says: "Schooled as I have been among the Abolitionists of New England, I recognize that the universe is governed by laws which are unchangeable and eternal; that what men sow they will reap, and that there is no way to dodge or circumvent the consequences of any act or deed."

In the mouth of a Christian, the above is sound scripture and sound sense. "With him is no variableness or shadow of turning" (James 1: 17); and Christ is "the SAME, yesterday, to-day, and forever" (Heb. 13: 8); and, that God in Christ, answering prayer, should do "what law could not do" (Rom. 8: 3); that is change and alter the fixed course of law which makes sin its own chastizer, is no more absurd or wonderful than that Mr. Douglass at the prayer of his grand-child, should by a pump, change the fixed law of gravitation, make water run up hill and give the child a drink.

But the most amazing of all is, that Mr. Douglass, if we understand his case, is a regenerated person, "renewed by the Holy Ghost (see page 11). He tells us he "was a poor, broken-hearted mourner traveling through doubts and fears;" and that he found relief. He says now "I loved all mankind, slave-holders not excepted; though I abhorred slavery more than ever." "I saw the world in a new light", etc.

This certainly is conversion, "born of God;" and if so the explanation of Douglass' life of toil for "the evil and unthankful," is that Christ has been with him, as with those two disciples on the road to Emmaus, whose hearts burned within them as they walked by the way though they "knew not that it was Jesus" (Luke 24: 16). Lucretia Mott, Lydia Maria Child and others of his teachers may have been for aught I know in the same boat with these Emmaus disciples; but one old ignorant colored man Lawson were worth a thousand such, with Sumner and Garrison thrown in. And if this theory of Mr. Douglass' eternal status be the correct one, it is more than possible that the world has not heard the last of him; but like the old musical composers, he may end his life-anthem in the note on which it began, viz., in Christ. Satan is never so much a devil as when he acts in the role of orthodoxy. It is then he would "deceive if it were possible the very elect." And proslavery orthodoxy was orthodoxy with Satan in its saddle. No wonder Douglass shrunk from it.

Isaac Hill ruled New Hampshire for slavery by the Democracy. Hon. Moses Norris, to gain office by pleasing Hill, Pierce & Co., collared and dragged Rev. Geo. Storrs from his knees, at prayer, in an abolition school-house meeting. Of course he was abhorred, or his act was, by Abolitionists. Negro-phobia was at its height; Douglass went to lecture in Norris's town; who, seeing him alone in the graveyard, shunned by the white people, executed a flank movement on the Abolitionists, and saying, "I am not an Abolitionist," took Douglass to his house; and gained at once saintship with Garrison and office with Isaac Hill Democracy.

"CAUTION."

Under this head, the Telescope deals out unstinted condemnation to Prof. W. O. Tobey of The United Brethren in Christ. Though some of the Telescope's charges against Bro. Tobey are specific, we regret to notice that some of them are mere pointless railing; hinting without saying that Prof. Tobey had "sought employment in a sister denomination" (E. S. Chapman sought employment in the Presbyterian church and the Telescope followed him with benisons); and vaguely charges him with "malice and ugly temper", etc., which is certainly "railing accusation."

We last winter conversed freely with Prof. Tobey and the Chambersburg brethren. They were asked specifically whether they were willing and desirous to live and walk with the Brethren church, if adhering Masons were put out of it? And every one answered in the affirmative. If any of them, despairing of this result, are anxious to divide the church, we have no information of it.

But whatever Prof. Tobey and the King Street Brethren desire, it is utterly impossible for them to rend their church if the Freemasons are turned out of it. If the Telescope will prove its sincerity and redeem its pledges by an open, manly and Christian advocacy of the expulsion of Freemasonry and Freemasons, all troubles with the King Street brethren would be ended. The yearly Friends' Meeting of Maryland, appointed a day after which all slaveholders among them should be read out. They lost but a single member in the whole State.

But "fine words butter no parsnips." The dark deceptive cunning of the lodges have once "possumed" and deceived the churches of the United States. "The first time a man deceives me the fault is his: the second time the fault is mine." Does the Telescope suppose "the accursed thing" is to be got rid of by any measures less searching and thorough than the methods which removed Achan?

"THE WATCHED SNAKE LIES STILL."

Josiah Quincy, class of Harvard, 1821, and the fifth prominent Quincy of the early New England aristocracy, died, an octogenarian, a few months after writing the introduction to his book of reminiscences, published this year, 1883. His book is entitled "Figures of the Past." It is a kaliedoscope giving pictures of men and events. John Adams, J. Q. Adams, Webster, Everett, Judge Story, all Anti-masons, are the chief pictures in his panorama.

Mr. Quincy went to Washington in 1826, the year Morgan was murdered. His hero statesman, J. Q. Adams, was President. In Mr. Quincy's own words, "A combination of brilliant, if unscrupulous, political leaders had opened its batteries upon the administration, and was thundering forth the grossest charges." Adams' administration fell at the end of four years, and Jackson came into power in 1828–9; the then only instance, but one, of a President being denied a second term.

Mr. Quincy was young, ambitious, observant, and on intimate terms with the Northern, and well knew the Southern leaders in Congress; and he attempts to give the causes of the overthrow of his friend's administration, and this is the sum of what he says:

A Panama mission was proposed to meet delegates from the new South American Republics formed under Bolivar. John Randolph opposed that mission on the ground that, "The South would never consult with nations who had put the black man on an equality with the white." "From this opposition," continues Mr. Quincy, "arose the party which placed Jackson in the Presidential chair."

Now let us see what facts this Mr. Quincy suppresses or ignores. He had witnessed the rise and fall of Anti-masonry. He had read his own father's answer to a Boston committee denying the claimed antiquity of the lodge. His father was then President of Harvard, and he himself an undergraduate. He had read Webster's oracular utterance that the "lodge is wrong in the principle of its formation and its oaths ought to be suppressed by law." He had seen his favorite J. Q. Adams' letters to Edward Livingston, high priest of the lodge and Jackson's Secretary of State. He had seen 228,000 Anti-masonic votes cast for Wirt and Ellmaker, equivalent to four times that number now! He had seen that lodge erect its poison crest, hiss at, and successfully defy the judiciary of New York, with John C. Spencer for its attorney! He had seen 1500 lodges go down in the North and rise in the South with General Jackson, a Royal Arch Mason at their head, and Livingston and J. R. Poinsett his right hand and left hand supporters. He had seen the pure administration of Adams fall; and the lodge-and-slavery power sieze the reins of government and hold them with a firm grasp for thirty-four years, until in answer to prayer, and "by act of God" the Anti-masons, Seward, Stevens, Chase, Stanton, Lincoln and Charles Francis Adams, were sent to rally the country, overturn that power and drive the smoke-breathing locusts back to the North from which they had fled!

All this history Mr. Quincy, or his publishers for him, ignores—positively passes over in silence! That is to say: there is a system whose temple-walls overshadow alike the tall churches of the cities and the little mechanic shops of the villages; a power which fascinates women by its plumes, awes statesmen by its numbers, silences argument by its braying, and carries elections by its "still hunt!" And this Mr. Quincy, a representative of Puritanism in decay, gives us the political forces in play during his long life with this secret power left out! There is but one explanation of this suppression. The lodge serpent is watched and it lies still! Does any rational man suppose that this ubiquitous and terrible force among us, does nothing? is paralyzed? dead?

SKIES BRIGHTENING.

The Religious Telescope has come to our table weekly for many years, and never fails to be taken up and placed to our eye, that, through it, we may scan a portion of the moral heavens. The last number, July 25, editorially discourseth thus, "of the lodge, which the Telescope tries openly and ceaselessly, in the spirit of the Master we trust, to condemn, and from all affiliation with which we would save even the weakest of our people." And, in the same article, the editor adds of the anti-secrecy law:

"Furthermore, we believe that there is a growing sentiment in our churches generally against secret organizations and the evil effects of these organizations upon religion and society, It is not disloyal for us to say that we know in many places where formerly vigorous opposition was wielded against our law now many are laboring to lead the people up to a conformity to the requirements of the law. In this lies the future hope and safety of the church and the perpetuity of its principles and laws."

It is known to our readers that, several years since, a paper called The United Brethren Tribune was started at Harrisburg by open nullifiers of the anti-secrecy law. See now how the Telescope editor hits that dead Tribune: "The United Brethren Tribune served as a medium for the bitterness of the human heart"; and likens that paper to another sheet which he charges with "fanatical ravings," "volleys of wrath," "slander," "vilification" and the like.

This is the first hint or note of censure, rebuke, or condemnation we have noticed in the Telescope under its present management, for the nullifying organ or even its successor, The Observer, which walked in the same spirit. Surely the skies brighten.

"REMEMBER MY BONDS."

Paul's admonition is good for many cases. Letters from Greece and Florida remind us of the trials which must yet be endured by the children of God before the Lord comes. Bro. Zaraphonithes had by diligence and faith in God made his school in Smyrna a success. Ninety-six pupils attended during the week and thirty were in the Sabbath-school. Late in June agents of the American Board desired him to vacate the building, since it was under their control. What reason could be found for breaking up so successful an adjunct to Gospel work we cannot imagine, unless it was a politic measure to put a board employee in charge now that Bro. Zaraphonthes had made the enterprise profitable. A letter from him, dated July 2, says that having to leave Symrna, they were returning to Andros, but being too late for the weekly steamer from Syra, they attempted to go in a small boat from the latter port. A storm drove them ashore where they had been encamped for six days at the time of writing. These disheartening circumstances let us all pray may be overruled for the accomplishment of some good work for the kingdom of Christ through our brother's agency.

From Bro. Galloway also comes word of trial. The threats of violence against him have constrained him to give up one of his preaching appointments. There seems to be some kind of a conspiracy to get him involved in a quarrel or in the law, and the effort may for a time surround this brother's path with difficulties, and even dangers. Without helpers among men, he asks for grace to rely on the arm of his God, who is well able to deliver either from the jaws of lions or the rage of evil men.

—Bro. Hinman reports that he has participated in several street meetings in Washington lately which were orderly and evidently profitable. Tracts and copies of the Cynosure were distributed through the crowd and thankfully received. The meetings at the N. C. A. building are being maintained through the hot season and are profitable to all.

—Prof. W. H. Fischer of Wheaton College and J. J. Dunkleberg, member of the last graduating class, have purchased the Illinoian, the local paper at Wheaton, and will devote their energies to making it a useful agency in the community. Both, while students, had a successful but brief experience in journalism in connection with the College Record. The Cynosure extends to them a cordial hand.

—Our thanks to some unknown friend for a copy of the last report of proceedings of the Illinois State Board of Health. The quarterly meeting of the Board was held in Springfield June 29th, Dr. Newton Bateman, President of Knox College, being in the chair. The first business was the quarterly report of the secretary, Dr. John H. Rauch, in which appears the case of a quack "specialist" named Flowers. The evidence on file in the office of the secretary shows that Flowers began a career of infamy some twenty-five years ago as an abortionist, killing a young woman in Lee county. He was arrested, but escaped from jail through the connivance of a deputy sheriff, who aided him as a brother Mason. The reading of this part of the report must have been very agreeable to President Bateman, who is well known as a Freemason.

—The New York Witness does not speak with its usual good judgment when in writing up the telegraphers' strike. It claims that a secret lodge combination was needed to combat the powerful Western Union company. It is self-contradictory also, for in the same article the editor says that Jay Gould would have made some terms with the strikers, had he known the grounds and extent of their complaint. To say that it is necessary for any body of men in this country to combine for the preservation of their rights in secret, sworn brotherhood, is to repudiate the whole theory of our American system.

—The letters in this number from Miss E. Dryer, the manager of the Chicago Bible work, and from Bro. Wm. Hazenberg, faith missionary in Cape Town, give in different ways enthusiasm, courage and hope to every worker in the Gospel vineyard. The Bible work in Chicago has been the means of accomplishing in a quiet way an immense good among the homes of the poor, although no class of people is omitted in its labor of love. A year in the practical theology of Miss Dryer's course will be as valuable as three years study of theory in a richly endowed Seminary to many.

—Letters from Senator Pomeroy state that he has been called unexpectedly to Denver for some two weeks on business. The Grand Army of the Republic was holding its reunion at the time of his arrival, but he found a field opening for our reform which he believes should be cared for. "The people," he says, "are sick of shams and false pretenders, and the evils of the competing lodge systems are exposing themselves. All forms of lodges are here, and 'Who will show us any good?' is still the cry." He mentions attending a Chinese Sabbath-school, and being much interested in the exercises and the scholars.

—It strikes us that when organized bodies of men, like the Freemasons and Odd-fellows, profess to take sinners to the "Grand Lodge above," and to do this without Christ, the coercive plan is the only one that is loyal to Christ and his truth.—Christian Instructor.

Convince a man who loves Christ and trusts to him for salvation that the lodge is dishonoring to Christ, and he will need no coercion. Peter thought he was loyal to Christ in drawing his sword, but he was mistaken about it.—Interior.

True, Bro. Gray, but how are men to be convinced when the columns of the press, religious as much as secular, are like the Interior, closed and double-guarded against facts and arguments which would "convince" every reasonable man in the country that these secret orders should be prohibited both in the church and by the government?

FROM SOUTH AFRICA.

THE TRUTH AND THE SPIRIT AMONG THE MOHAMMEDANS.

Cape Town, June 18, 1883.

Dear Brother:—We can truly say that the Lord prospers us in our work, but our trial in regard to temporal things is often quite severe, though the Lord is keeping us out of debt, and always provides the things which are really necessary to sustain life, without making known our wants to man. Two weeks ago I desired to write a letter for the Cynosure, but we could not spare the money for stamps till now, yet we can tell more at present of the Lord's blessings toward us, than we could have done at that time.

For about half a year I have taught a class of Christians in the doctrine of sanctification, but being not satisfied with theory only, I finally grew too practical for them, when I informed them that in order to be actually sanctified they had to leave secret societies, to which at least three of them belong. Two of them were Odd-fellows, and they, as is quite customary with secretists, denied that their order in Cape Town is of the same nature with that which is represented in the books I showed them on the subject. They became angry when I told them that I dared not believe their testimony, stating also my reasons for it.

We, for some time, have had meetings in our house for the lower classes, in which I received the help of said secretist Christians, but after our discussion on the nature of secret societies, they left me, which fact has led me to the conclusion to never again accept a co-worker who belongs to any secret oath-bound society. They were talented men, and from this it might be thought I sustained great loss in my work, but this is not the case. The Lord ordered it differently. One excellent Christian man, before his conversion belonging to the society called "the Red Star," but after that event leaving it, took my part against secret societies, and he, with his two adopted sons, who are also musicians, is still helping me in the work.

While the secretists were with us we had full meetings, but did not see any conversions; but on the first night they stayed away many accepted Christ as their Saviour, and at our first weekly Bible class, after they had left us, we had a room full of new converts instead of them.

This fact has taught us a great lesson. I felt not the least fear about their leaving us, being conscious that quality is a greater thing with the Lord than quantity; a greater work being done with the few who were acceptable in the sight of the Lord than could have been done with the unpurified multitude. I really expected greater blessings than before, though I had to do the work alone, because I knew that I had the Lord on my side; and he has not disappointed us. If the churches in general get rid of their secretist members, they would largely increase in number through the addition of new converts. The Lord cannot work through a church that keeps up fellowship with the evil one.

Since our purification process the Lord is wonderfully blessing our work. Our meetings, which at first we held three times a week, but now every night, are almost entirely constituted of Mohammedans, sometimes there being no less than fifty in the house. At first they remained outside on the stoop to hear the Word, but now they take up nearly all the room inside. They are often quite noisy, but the Lord who brings them to us gradually subdues them also, and we are expecting soon genuine conversions among them. One young Mohammedan, being an officer in his church, a couple of days ago accepted Christ as his Saviour. He is respected among his people, takes them along to our meeting, and helps us to keep order. He appears to be a clever man, and I expect good things through him for his people. He complains of the fact that his fellows are so ignorant of the truth. He told us he would acknowledge us as his father and mother, being anxious of learning more about Christ and the way of salvation.

Last night a priest looked in the house, perhaps to see whether there were members of his church whom he had to warn and to reprove. Some priests, however, are very friendly to us, praising us for healing their sick, first by medicine and now by the prayer of faith; and one priest sends his daughters to my wife to learn the Dutch language, and he even orders them to attend our religious meetings. We really love them with a love shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost, and they cannot help noticing it. We occasionally tell them about our prayers and sacrifice in their behalf, by which some are moved to tears. We expect great things. Pray for us. Yours in the Lord,

W. Hazenberg.

TO READERS AND FRIENDS.

Last week I gave a general statement of the Washington fund. This week you have the statement of your Treasurer by States, (page 13) with receipts to date, July 30th. This is your cause, you are responsible for its success and the deed in escrow will make the property yours clear of all incumbrance the day it is paid for, whether I am dead or alive. It will take less money to pay for it now than it will to pay principal and interest a year hence. One thousand dollars now is the equivalent of one thousand and sixty dollars a year hence. Is it a wise policy to pay the extra sixty dollars? Brethren, I trust you will keep an eye on this business, know exactly how it stands, and remember it often and believingly in requests to Him who giveth liberally and who would have his disciples follow his example.

TO THE FRIENDS IN INDIANA.

Shall we have an Annual Meeting this fall, and if so, where and when. I wish to hear from the friends immediately if possible. I know of many good places, but do not know that a house can be had; this must be left to friends in the locality. Now, friends, please communicate soon with me. I think Oakland City would be a good place; I know a house can be had there. Reno or Coatsville are good places. Dear friends, rally.

OBEDIENCE TO UNKNOWN SUPERIORS IN THE LODGE.

"All that I have got to say, standing on the brink of the grave, is that I did not know what was going to happen twenty minutes before the murders were committed. I was bound to go to the park under pain of death." These were the words of Caffrey, one of the two men last condemned to death for the killing of Lord Cavendish and Mr. Burke, when he was asked whether he had anything to say why sentence should not be passed upon them.

A world of meaning lies in those few words, a warning which it would be well if hundreds of others would heed. They told the story of men who join secret societies for the ostensible purpose of working for Ireland by methods of which they know absolutely nothing. They are bound by a solemn oath to obey orders without question, even though it involve the foulest murder. To refuse is death, as they soon learn. To obey is to peril their lives, as in the present case, while those who sent them into the danger, who commanded them to commit a cowardly assassination, remain in safety.

Both Caffrey and Delaney pleaded guilty to being in the park under orders, but claim that they had nothing to do with the murders, Yet as they were present, and did nothing to prevent them, they are counted as abettors and must suffer the consequeuces.

No man has a right to place himself where he has no moral control of his own actions, yet this is what he does when he joins a secret society and binds himself to blindly obey all orders from headquarters without hesitation or thought of whether they are right or wrong.—Toledo Blade.

—A secular paper not long since affirmed that Freemasonry was being diffused through heathen countries by Christian missionaries who were gathering both converted and uncouverted natives into lodges and inducting them into the mysteries of the craft. The statement appears to us preposterous. Missionaries are not the the kind of men who attach any importance to the mummeries of Masonry, or have time to practice them. If there be any grounds for the statement, the National Christian Association could render no better service to the cause of Christ than by instituting an inquiry among foreign missionaries of all denominations. We believe the answer would be prompt, emphatic and satisfactory.—Christian Statesman.

—Passing the open door of a temple of the Popish superstition, one will see seven candles or gas-lighted imitations of candles, gleaming around the tinselled pile. It is most strange and surprising to recall the fact that these candles are the survival of an idolatrous worship so ancient that its origin far antedates the dawn of history—the worship of fire. The peculiarity of it is that it is an idolatry of an idolatry. The sun was the god of those with whom it originated. But the sun was not always to be seen, therefore fire was set up as his representative. This form of superstition has survived while century piled upon century, and milleniums gave place to milleniums, and yet here it remains, and hundreds of thousands of poor souls yet bow down in awe before the mystic and sacred flame. It is a remarkable instance of the perpetuity of a simple and idle superstition.—Interior.

THE HOME.

EVENING.

On velvet slopes the shadows lie,
The crimson pales along the west,
The steadfast stars arise on high,
And labor's weary hand may rest.

So gradual is the twilight's fall,
That day is past and night begun,
Ere we have heard dear Nature call
Her tired children, every one;

Yet homeward fly the little birds,
And homeward fare the laden bees,
And sweet as songs unset to words
The zephyrs murmur through the trees.

Then through the balmy silence—hark!
There sounds the children's vesper chime;
Between the dawning and the dark
There comes no holier, fairer time.

Soft thrill the voices low and sweet,
While little figures kneeling pray,
And trustfully at Jesus' feet
Lay down the burden of the day.

Then mothers tie the robes of white,
And kiss the lips and smooth the brow;
The happy children say goodnight—
And earth is watched by angels now!

THE GLADSTONE FAMILY.

Mr. John Gladstone liked that his children should exercise their judgment by stating the why and wherefore of every opinion they offered, and a college friend of William's who went on a visit to Fasque, in Kincardineshire, during the summer of 1829, furnishes amusing pictures of the family customs in that house, "where the children and their parents argued upon everything." "They would debate as to whether the trout should be boiled or broiled, whether a window should be opened, and whether it was likely to be fine or wet next day. It was always perfectly good-humored, but curious to a stranger, because of the evident eare with which all the disputants took to advance no propositions, even to the prospect of a rain, rashly. One day Thomas Gladstone knocked down a wasp with his handkerchief, and was about to erush it on the table, when his father started the question as to whether he had the right to kill the insect; and this point was discussed with as much seriousness as if a human life had been at stake. When at last it was adjudged that death was deserved because it was a trespasser in the drawing room, a common enemy, and a danger there, it was found that the insect had crawled from under the handkerchief, and was flying away with a sniggering sort of buzz, as if to mock them all."

On another occasion William Gladstone and his sister Mary disputed as to where a certain picture ought to be hung. An old Scotch servant came in with a ladder, and stood irresolute while the argument progressed; but as Miss Mary would not yield, William gallantly ceased from speech, though uneonvinced, of eourse. The servant then hung up the picture where the young lady ordered, but when he had done this he crossed the room and hammered a nail into the opposite wall. He was asked why he did this: "Aweel, Miss, that'll do to hang the picture on when ye'll have come round to Master Willie's opeenion." The family generally did come round to William's opinion, for the resources of his tongue-fencing were wonderful, and his father, who admired a clever feint as much as a straight thrust, never failed to encourage him by saying, "Hear, hear; well said, well put, Willie!" if the young debater bore himself well in an eneounter.

Another thing which Mr. John Gladstone taught his children was to accomplish to the end whatever they might begin, and no matter how insignificant the undertaking might be. Assuming that the enterprise had been commenced with a deliberate, thoughtful purpose, it would obviously be weakness to abandon it, whereas, if it had been entered upon without thought it would be useful to carry it through as a lesson against acting without reflection. The tenacity with which William Gladstone adhered to this principle, exereised, no doubt, a beneficial moral discipline upon himself, but was frequently very trying to his companions.

"At Fasque," says his friend already quoted, "we often had archery practice, and the arrows that went wide of the target would get lost in the long grass. Most of us would have liked to collect only the arrows that we could find without trouble, and then begin shooting again; but this was not William's way. He would insist that all the arrows should be found before we shot our second volleys, and would marshal us in Indian file, and make us tramp about in the grass, till every quiver had been refilled. Onee we were so long in hunting for a particular arrow that dusk came on and we had to relinquish the search. The next morning as I was dressing I saw, through my window, William ranging the fields and prodding into every tuft of grass with a stick. He had been busy in this way for two hours, and at length he found the arrow just before breakfast. I remarked that he had wasted a good deal of time. 'Yes and no,' he said. 'I was certain that the arrow could be found if I looked for it in a certain way; but it was the longest way, and I failed several times from trying shorter methods. When I set to work in the proper fashion I succeeded.' 'Well done, Willie,' concurred his always appreciative father."—Observer.

HOW NATURE SWEETENS OUR FRUITS.

Substances charaeterized by sweetness are assumed to contain an organic product called sugar. This is a very remarkable substance, and its investigation opens to view surprises and paradoxes not afforded by any other agent in nature. It is highly complex in its organization, having a high atomic constitution, and yet it is the simplest of all compounds when considered in regard to the nature of the elements of whieh it is composed. In studying the sweet principle of plants, we soon discover that they possess the eapability of elaborating more than one variety of sugar, and that there is a curious blending of several forms in the ripened fruits which eome upon our tables. We diseover also that eaeh plant has the power of manufaeturing a special variety, or a combination of varieties, and that this law of their constitution cannot be changed by man. In beet roots, in the stems and trunk of the sugar-maple tree, the syeamore, the palm, in sugar-canes, in the sorghum plant, in the stock of maize, in grasses, we have one kind of sugar, called sucrose, which is the sweetest variety; in grapes we have another distinct variety, called dextrose or glucosc; in apples and other fruits we have still another, called fructosc or levulose. In melons we have a sweet which is nearly pure suerose, or cane sugar. We learn from this examination not only that sugars differ widely, but that, for wise and doubtless beneficent reasons, the Supreme Intelligence has not permitted all fruits and plants to be sweetened alike. In that vegetable monstrosity called a beet, which is hidden from the clear sunlight and the air during the whole period of its growth, there are found juices whieh hold the most noble and valued form of sugar known to man. The crimson tissues of this root contain the snow-white sugar which graees the tables of the kings and prinees of Continental Europe, and millions of pounds find their way into eommerce, always commanding the highest priees. The humble, earthy beet can hold up its head with pride when its sweetness is contrasted with that of the petted grape, which occupies the foremost place among our delicious fruits. The grape is sweetened with glucose, an ignoble form of sugar, which the chemist can make in the laboratory, where its production does not require the employment of eostly or rare materials. Even if it lessens our respect for the tempting fruit of the vine, the truth must be told. The chemist can make the sweet juices of the grape from old cotton rags and old newspapers; and if this statement does not indicate a sufficiently low origin, we have only to state that it can be made from common sawdust as well. But human art has not yet been able to number among its triumphs the production of the sugar of the beet, the maple, or the cane. It is probable that the peculiar delicate flavor of the grape could not be secured by any adjustment of quantity of suerose or cane sugar, or by any mixtures. It requires glucose, pure and simple, to act in eonjunction with the delicate acids, that we may have this fruit in its highest perfection. The water-melon would not be the fruit it is if it had not the capability of manufaeturing cane sugar in large quantities; neither would the apple, the peach, the eherry, the strawberry, or the pear be what they are if the plants and trees upon which they grow had not the power of bringing into play a subtle chemistry, by which is produeed a mixture of distinct forms of sweets which no art of man can imitate.

But Nature does not, in the bestowal of her fruits, spontaneously or of her own free will sweeten them for us so acceptably. Not one of the fruits in their wild or native state holds any eonsiderable quantity of sugar of any kind,—not enough to make them aeceptable to the taste or to fit them to serve as foods. It is only by skilful cultivation, by hybridizing, by budding and grafting, that we have secured the sweet principles in fruits. We have, as it were educated the dumb chemists in the vegetable cell, and fitted them for the work which Nature made them competent to perform under mans's guidance. The beet, for example, under ordinary eare, will afford from four to six per eent. of sugar, but by scientific and generous culture the percentage can be nearly or quite doubled.

Cane sugar is a eombination of water with carbon,—absolutely pure water with the elements of a diamond. Starch can be transformed into glueose by the addition of one molecule of water, but the glucose eannot be transformed into sucrose. A potato is but a mass of starch, which can be changed almost entirely into sugar. When starch is changed into sugar it requires the aid of diastase, which is a stareh solvent, provided for a specific purpose. Sugar cane two weeks before it is ripe contains no sugar; after it is ripe it contains no stareh. Sugar is not an exhaustive product; the refuse from the manufaeture of beet sugar returns all inorganic matters to the soil.

But while it is possible to increase the saccharine principle, and also to modify the hydrated malic acid constituent in fruits, it is entirely beyond our power to change the fixed nature of vines or trees by any methods of cultivation or fertilization. There is nothing more wonderful in nature than the persistency with which vegetable struetures adhere to their original bent or design. We all know that two trees growing side by side, from the same soil, breathing the same air, and precisely alike in external and internal substance, will produce fruit totally dissimilar in chemical constituents and physical appearance. If a young sour-apple tree is cut off low in its trunk, and scions of another kind are inserted, it is changed only above the point where they are placed. The ehemieal reactions below continue true to the original instinct, and if fruit comes from a sprout it is charged with the acid juices of the parent tree. We have thus the bewildering fact brought before us that the sap eirculating through one portion of a tree culminates in the production of excess of acid in the fruit, while in another there is found an excess of sugar. It is not unusual to observe a newly set seion bud, blossom, and bear fruit the first year. The fruit may weigh ten times as much as the frail scion which held it up and supplied the nutriment necessary for its growth. But the little twig, transplanted to an alien limb, will set up a laboratory of its own, and from the strange juices brought to it will manufacture fruit totally dissimilar to its companion branches. —Dr. James R. Nichols.

HOME AND HEALTH.

Looking Out the Back Door.—A friend of ours wished to hire a farmer for a wealthy neighbor, and we mentioned one who was wanting an engagement. Knowing that our friend had been to see this farmer, we asked the result. His reply was, in substance: "Yes, I went there; I went around to the back door and came away, knowing that he would not suit." The front doors of many farm-houses are rarely opened. The back door is in constant use. One need not go far in any locality, to find the outlet of the kitchen sink ending in a sort of ditch, whieh is supposed to carry off the waste water, but which only allows it to soak away and saturate the ground near the back of the house. The seldom used front door is opened when a small eoffin is to be taken out. The minister speaks of "the mysterious dispensations of Providence." They are not at all mysterious. Bad sink drains at the back of the house are sure to bring typhoid fever and other sickness. Let the baek door surroundings be looked to. If nothing better can be done, earry the kitehen wastes to a eesspool a distance from the house, where they can soak away far below the surface. Prohibit all throwing out of slops at the back door. The ground soon becomes charged with matters that ferment and breed disease. Where pigs are kept, and that includes every farm, there should be a pail, to reeeive all animal and vegetable matters and daily emptied. Nothing of the kind should be thrown out at the back of the house. Where there is such a disease-breeding sink spout as we have mentioned, let provisions be at onee made to carry off the water to a cesspool, and cover up the saturated ground with dry earth. Let the back yard to the house always be kept scrupulously neat. —American Agriculturist.

Ivy Poisoning.—The "Poison Ivy," also called "Poison Oak," and in some localities known as "Mareury," is often the cause of great distress. The vine is abundant all over the country, one form being low, running along on banks and rambling over stone walls. Another form climbs the highest trees, clinging to the bark by its many rootlets. It is often confounded with the Virginia Creeper; indeed, we have known it to be planted as an ornamental vine, it having been mistaken for that. The two are readily told apart, the Virginia Creeper having its dark-green, shiny leaves five-parted, while the light-green leaves of the poison vine are three-parted. The Poison Ivy is so very abundant, that were all equally susceptible to its influencc, we should hear much more of its effeets than we do at presont. With many, the poison produces only a slight eruption on the skin and an intense itching. Others arc more scriously affected, and the face swells up to such an extent that the features are hardly visible. Nearly every locality has its popular remedies for the poison, and new ones are frequently proposed. As a general thing, most cases are relieved by keeping the bowels open by the use of salts, and washing the emptions with a strong solution of sugar of lead. The latest remedy, which is now going the rounds, is to bathe the affected parts with lime water, applied as hot as it can be borne. This is simple, the remedy is usually at hand, and is worth trying, as other alkaline washes have been found useful. No harm can result.—Sel.

Pet Ideas.—Everyone has a pet idea which frequently occurs to him, and lingers long.

My pet idea is this: Local affections in our bodies are only expressions of systematic faults. Whenever people come to look upon their pains and sores as flags of distress calling attention to some sickness pervading the system, as soon as they fully realize that the health of each part depends upon the health of the whole, then sunshine, temperance, and exercise will become the popular physicians.—Dio Lewis.

RECIPE FOR KEEPING COOL.

Said a physician, yesterday, who looked cool in spite of the thermometer:

It is supposed by most persons that if they bathe in cold water, drink iced lemonade, ginger ale, ice water, etc., sleep with a thin covering over them, eat cold dinners, and rub their faces with their pocket handkerchiefs every few moments, they will be cool, or, at least, as comfortable as the weather will permit. Now, this is all wrong. A cool drink makes one feel exceedingly comfortable for a few minutes, and then the individual will feel warmer than ever and perspire more profusely.

The best way to keep cool is as follows: Do not drink any ice water; take only one glass of soda or lemonade a day; eat a warm dinner, but do not eat quite as much as you want; take hot coffee or tea for breakfast, just as you do in winter; sleep with a very light gauze blanket over you in the night, and take a sponge-bath in tepid salt water before retiring. This makes the body cool, and keeps mosquitoes away. Do not wear a weavy hat or tight collar; wear light flannels, and low cut shoes, carry an umbrella, and above all, do not rub your face too often, because the action only heats the skin to a greater degree, and makes you perspire more freely. If this advice is strictly followed you will be cooler and healthier.—N. Y. Journal.

ONE OF HIS JEWELS.

"O mamma, the girls are all going to wear jewelry! Nelly May says her papa is going to buy her a set of garnets, and Annie Brown has her lovely torquoise ring and pin. Hatty Marston has a pearly-white cross, and all the rest have corals or jets or pearls or something. I don't believe there's another girl in school that hasn't at least a ring. Even Alice Horton has a plain gold band that used to be her mother's. She can't wear much to be sure, because her mother's just died; but I haven't as much as she. I'm afraid I shall feel ashamed to stand out on the platform, before everybody, and so plain and bare, with only a white dress on."

Margaret had just come from school, where all was in preparation for the exhibition which would soon take place. The girls had been talking over their dresses, and she had felt that it was hard to be so poor. She knew her mother was sewing, sewing from morning till night, and denying herself many things that she needed, that the hardly-earned money might help Margaret to get her schooling. She knew that it had been by severe pinching that the pretty white dress had been bought, and that her mother's eyes had often ached when she sat up long after midnight to make it up. Yet all these things only made it seem harder still, and Margaret wondered why her life was so different from that of others. In fact, she often made herself quite miserable with the thought that everybody else had more things to make them happy than she. She had sometimes said so to her mother, who had told her that she was mistaken.

"We are poor, it is true," she would say; "but the rich are not always happy. If we work harder than many, that is far better than to be idle. And after all, Margaret, God knows just what is best for us. If we love him, we may be sure that we shall not lack anything that would be good for us."

This afternoon, however, her mother did not reply, as Margaret rushed into their cosy little sitting-room. She only looked sad and grieved; and soon Margaret came and took a seat beside her, saying:

"I'm sorry I trouble you so, mamma. I know we can't afford it, and I'll try not to want it."

Her mamma rewarded her with a bright, loving smile, and then said:

"Did I ever tell you, dear why I named you Margaret? The name means a pearl. When God gave you to me, I felt that he had given me a jewel to take care of for him. So I named you Margaret, to keep me always in mind of this. And, darling, I long to have you number yourself among his jewels now"

Margaret knew what her mother meant, for only the day before her Sunday-school teacher had explained the text used as a motto for the paper which had been distributed in the class—"They shall be mine saith the Lord of Hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels." She knew that her mother wished her to be a Christian, and so be one of the jewels in the Saviour's crown.

"How shall I know if I am one of his jewels, mamma?" asked Margaret.

"You would try to honor him. The jewels in his crown will add lustre, beauty and glory to it, and so contribute to do him honor. And one way in which you could honor him would be to have a patient, uncomplaining spirit, even though we have not as many pleasant things in life as some others have."

"I do want to, mamma," answered Margaret, "and sometimes I think I do love Jesus a little."

"I hope you do, darling. But give him your whole heart and he will help you to meet all the trials which will come to you in life, both small and great."

Margaret went up to her own little room, and told the dear Saviour all about it, and that she wished to please and honor him. When the day for the exhibition came, she had asked him to help her specially; and he surely did, for Margarets face was so sweet and beaming that no one noticed whether she had any jewelry or not. But the minister, who was present, leaned over and whispered to his wife:

"I think Margaret must be one of the Saviour's jewels; there is such a peaceful light shining in her face, which used to look so fretful sometimes."—S. S. Times.

DYNAMITE.

What is dynamite? How is it manufactured? We are fully prepared to answer these questions, as we manufactured the first nitro-glycerine ever made in the United States, nearly twenty years ago, and have had some experiences with it not pleasant to recall. Dynamite is simply nitro-glycerine, mixed with an adulterant to render it safe to transport. The added ingredient is usually a fine earth of great absorbent capacity. It has been found that the best kind is the earth which good housewives use to polish their silver with, properly called infusorial earth, because it is made up of the fossil remains of minute organisms. Dynamite, then, is a mixture of innocent polishing powder and sweet bland glycerine after it has been acted upon by nitric acid. There is nothing apparently very frightful in this mixture. We can eat glycerine on our puddings and griddle cakes, and grow fat upon it; and a box of silver polish in the house is as harmless as a cake of soap.

In what has been stated a strange law of chemical combination comes into view, a law by which a vast change is produced in innocent bodies by a slight disturbance of their molecular constitution. We disturb the molecular constitution of glycerine by subjecting it to the action of nitric acid, by which nitrogen becomes a constituent of the body, and its whole chemical nature and relationships are changed.

This dull, stupid nitrogen, which exists so abundantly in the air, and which we breathe into our lungs every moment, day and night, becomes the agent which confers upon glycerine the most terrific powers possessed by any agent, save two, known to man. Does not this fact teach an impressive lesson as to the mystery of the forces of nature, and of man's capability of bringing them into action, and we may say, into subjection? If such facts do not cause a feeling of respect for chemical science, it is difficult to conceive of any that will.

In the manufacture of nitro-glycerine, we simply mix with pure glycerine a certain proportion of sulphuric and nitric acids, and stir the mixture until the reactions occur, which is in about twenty minutes. The vessels must be placed in freezing mixtures, for if at any time the temperature rises above thirty-two degrees F. decomposition occurs, and if there is no explosion the whole mass goes off in a vast cloud of nitrous acid vapors, which are troublesome and dangerous.

We never ventured to act upon more than one hundred grains of glycerine at a time, and with this small amount the danger was great and accidents were not a few.

Our method was to arrange upon a shelf, in a refrigerating mixture, twelve beaker glasses, each containing one hundred grains of glycerine, and into each of these the mixed acids were slowly allowed to enter, the thermometer being anxiously watched all the time. If the heat from the reactions rose above thirty-two degrees in any glass, away would go the contents, filling the laboratory so densely with red fumes that no object could be seen six feet distant.

It was regarded as a successful experiment if we saved four glasses out of the dozen. Whilst at present the methods of procedure are not different, the apparatus and appliances are greatly improved. It must be remembered that we were pioneers in the dangerous manufacture, and but little of the product was needed in medicine and the arts. Now, the consumption is enormous, and large manufactories are established in many sections of the country. The United States government chemists make the best nitro-glycerine at the laboratory at Newport, Rhode Island. It is used largely for filling torpedoes.

In what has been said we have endeavored to afford a popular view of the chemistry of dynamite. It does not explode at the touch of fire, as does gunpowder, but it must have brought to bear upon it, or in contact with it, another explosive agent, a fulminate. A fulminate of mercury is better than a fulminate of silver, for the rythm of its detonation is more in accord with that of dynamite. Dynamite detonates, and does not explode as does gunpowder. Its action is so much quicker than the movements of air, that it strikes against a column of air with the same force as a hammer falling upon a blacksmith's anvil.—Journal of Chemistry.

TEMPERANCE.

STORIES FROM GOUGH.

What is temperance? It is a lawful gratification of a natural appetite. That is temperance. Is the appetite for intoxicating liquor a natural one? No. No one was ever born with a natural appetite for intoxicating stimulants any more than he was born with a natural appetite for tobacco. If you want to have a taste for it you have to use it, and the use of it produces the appetite, and it is not a natural appetite. Therefore, my advice is, total abstinance from intoxicating liquor as a beverage everywhere. People say sometimes, as a man said to me once: "I hate excesses. A man that drinks to excess is a beast." I said: "Are you with us?" He replied: "No. I hate your teetotalism as much as I hate excess. While a drunkard is beastly, a teetotalist is a coward. I stand on moral principle. Moderation in all things, self-control, self-government. Use the article in moderation! Don't make a fool of yourself. You shut a man off, you make him a coward, you make him flabby. Meet it like a man! And develop your highest and noblest manhood." "Yes. All right," I said, "what is excess?" "Drinking too much." "What is drinking too much?" "Excess." "I know it is. I will ask you a broad, plain, plump question: Would six glasses of whiskey toddy in a day be excess for you?" "Well, no; not if I could stand it." [Laughter.] Oh! yes. That means if a man drinks two glasses of whiskey and stands it he is developing his highest and noblest manhood. If he drinks as much as he can hold, and stands it, that is an example of self-control. If he drinks two glasses and don't stand it, there is a fearful exhibition of the want of self-control and self-government in the excessive use of intoxicating liquor. Excess is simply a man's inability to stand it. You don't judge by the number of the man's drinks, but by the effect of the quantity on his brain. There are men in Connecticut who would drink me drunk 365 days in the year, and drink me into my grave in the next five years, if I should attempt to drink as much as they do. I fight the drink, and out of my antagonism to the drink grows my hatred to the liquor traffic. I have nothing to say against the men that are engaged in this buisness; they may be wonderfully respectable men, A great number of them say: "I must live." I say to them as Dr. Johnson said to a man who said "I must live," "I don't see any necessity for it at all." [Laughter.]

I hate it because we have no redress. There is not a mother here that has any redress. There is not a wife here that has any redress. A woman went into a grog-shop—and I give you facts that I can prove—to plead with the liquor seller not to give her husband any more liquor. He took a tumbler of dirty water and threw its contets in her face. She told her boy, and he thrashed that liquor seller so he was on his back several days. Then the liquor seller prosecuted the boy for assault and battery and got the damages. They tried to prosecute him for throwing water in the woman's face. They failed, because she was intruding on his premises. There is not a liquor seller that can't sell your husband drink, and you may plead with him if you will. You talk about moral sausion. Make it your own case. A young man once said to me: "I believe in moral suasion. I believe we have no right to attack these men." I told him a little fact that occurred and I asked him: "Suppose that was your mother that was kicked out of a rum shop when she came to plead with Mr. Leonard not to give her boy drink, and when he made her little boy nine or ten years old drunk and sent him home out of spite because she tried to prevent him selling liquor to her boy. What would you do?" he said: "I would shoot him as I would a woodchuck." I said: "I would not. I believe in the simple way. I believe in the annihilation of the traffic in intoxicating liquor; and the sooner we get rid of it the better."

I remember hearing of a nobleman who wanted to have a grand entertainment, and he wanted fish and there was none to be obtained. One of his servants said to him: "There is a man in the hall has a very fine turbot; but he asks a very curious price." "Never mind the price. Grant it." "He asks a hundred lashes on his bare back." "Well, he's a fool, if he won't let it go for less than that." They brought him in and laid on fifty lashes pretty lightly, when the man said: "Hold on! I have got a partner in this business!" "Well, bring in the other, if there are two fools." "Your porter wouldn't let me in at the gate until I promised I would give him half of what I got for the fish." [Laughter.] They brought in the porter and gave him fifty lashes, and laid them on well. If you put a man in prison for getting under the influence of liquor, how about the man at the other end; the man that sold the liquor?

The governor of one of the largest prisons in England lately exclaimed to the secretary of the Howard Association, on visiting it: "Oh, the drink, the drink, the drink! If people outside did but see and consider the misery and crime which we, in prison, witness as produced by drink, they would make greater efforts to lessen this national evil. Especially would the women do more. It is to be wondered at that the women of England do not more earnestly exert themselves to oppose the cause of so much suffering to their own sons and brothers."

LITERARY.

AUGUST MAGAZINES.

The North American Review, has a spirited discussion of the subject of "Moral Instruction in the Public Schools," by the Rev. Dr. R. Heber Newton, who offers a practical scheme for conveying ethical instruction without reference to religious tenets, and the Rev. Dr. Francis L. Patton, who maintains that the Bible must be made the basis of all moral teaching. Mr. Newton is the Episcopal clergyman who has lately attained a cheap notoriety by assailing the inspiration of the Scriptures. His facts are valuable, his logic like that of the old woman who taught her inquiring son that the earth was flat and rested on a big stone. "What does the stone rest on?" "On another." "And what holds that up?" "Why, it's stones all the way down." Of course a man who has made a name by attacking the Bible would look far and long before allowing that book as authority in the school-room. Dr. Patten wields a Hercules club, but not so dexterously as the giant himself. His reply would hit a class in theology, but will miss many ordinary readers. Henry D. Lloyd exposes the tricks and frauds of speculation in grain, which operate to make bread dear, and maintains that they should be repressed by law, as being flagrantly in opposition to public policy. "Woman in Politics." by ex-Surgeon-General Wm. A. Hammond, is a caustic discussion of certain facts of nervous organization which in his opinion render the female sex unfitted for participation in public affairs. Hon. Francis A. Walker reviews "Henry George's Social Fallacies," criticizing in particular his doctrines regarding land-tenure and rent. Other articles are "Crude Methods of Legislation," "The Unsanitary Homes of the Rich," and a discussion of "Science and Prayer," in which President G. A. Anderson of the Chicago University takes part.

The Century gives us its "midsummer" number with an article on the quail, exquisitely illustrated by James Beard. Mrs. Jackson's last contribution upon the Indians of Southern California, among whom the Jesuit missionaries began to work years before Elliot labored at Nouantum and Natick, speaks of the present condition of these tribes, and is profusely and finely illustrated. "The Oldest Club in America," "Under the Olives" and "Mr. Watts at the Grosvenor Gallery" are other illustrated articles. In "Topics of the Times" the editor discusses "Caucus Reform," "Vicarious Benevolence" and "Vagrant Parsons."

Mastery is a new illustrated weekly magazine, published at 842 Broadway, New York, and designed to interest young people in pastimes which combine utility and instruction with recreation in home handicrafts, household affairs, rural occupatious, industrial arts, amateur mechanics and experimental science. The twelfth number, if a fair one, carries out this purpose excellently. The publishers offer to young people fourteen cash prizes, amounting to one hundred and fifty dollars, for the best fourteen pen and ink sketches that may be submitted, illustrating any of the International S. S. Lessons of the current quarter, reserving only the right to purchase the successful drawings at market rates, the payment thereof to be in addition to the prizes. The object of this offer is to encourage among young people the study and practice of the useful art of free hand drawing with pen and ink.

Dio Lewis's Monthly is the latest venture of the indefatigable reformer of American dress and luxurious living. The first number, in which the Dr. is well supported by other contributors, yet has the unmistakable and characteristic style, with which the American reading public have been more or less familiar for twenty years. The large pica type used in the magazine makes an agreeable page, and the agreeable variety of topics written in an easy style afford a pleasant change after a summer siesta. Dr. Lewis has himself articles on prenatal impressions, woman's figure, pale young men, weight of brain, function of sunshine, and a hygienic department. The magazine is published by Clark Bros., Bible House, New York, at $2.50 per year.

The Wheelman as an advocate of bicycle locomotion resembles, in mechanical appearance, the beautiful machines which are becoming popular with the young men of our cities. It is belived that 12,000 of them are used in this country and many more in England where they are used largely by physicians and others who have occasion to make frequent brief journeys. In the Contributor's department the question is raised, "Shall the Bicycle be used on the Sabbath," and the good advice is given that while the wheel is yet regarded by most people as simply a means of recreation and enjoyment, a noble self-denial will be the rule, and God will be honored in its observance. Published at 608 Washington St., Boston.

In general practicalness of operation, Mormonism is away ahead of Romanism, if we can judge from the way the two sects deal with infallibility. The Roman church, in order to make its head infallible, had to gather all its bishops at great expense of time and labor, from the four quarters of the globe, and discuss the question in Latin for weeks. The Mormon church, when it wants the same thing done, just gets a special revelation from the Lord made to order at no expense whatever.—Independent.

Repeat it, again and again: A leading manufacturer in Philadelphia, who has lived fifty-two years in that city, says: "I never knew a man among all the business men whose lives are failures, who gave his heart to God in his youth."

THE CHURCHES.

—The pulpit of Lincoln Park church in Chicago was again occupied by Pres. C. A. Blanchard on Sabbath, while Bro. C. W. Hiatt of the Tonica church preached in the Chicago Avenue (Moody) church.

—Mr. Moody has seldom been so long away from his old home and friends in this city after a foreign tour as this year. It is said he now expects to visit Chicago about September 20th.

—For some time we have lost sight of the stalwart brother, Samuel Irwin of Brooklyn, who was introduced to the Syracuse National Convention in 1873 by Bro. James Mathews. His testimony for Christ against the lodge, of which he had been a member while unconverted, will be remembered. Jerry McAuley's Newspaper mentions several visits from him at the Cremorne Mission, and valuable assistance in the meetings held there for the salvation of the lost.

—Prof. G. W. Northrup, president of the Baptist Theological Seminary at Morgan Park, has been invited by the Board of Regents to the presidency of the State University of Kansas, at Topeka.

—The press reports the death of Rev. James Kilbourn of Racine, Wis., on Tuesday of last week of heart disease. Bro. Kilbourn was engaged in city missionary work at the time of his death. He was one of the valued correspondents of the Cynosure and most earnestly sympathized in our efforts for a pure church and a State free from the curse of secretism.

—Blanchard, Iowa, was visited most severely during the late storm in the south-west. Almost or quite every building in the place was injured or destroyed. Among the latter was Bro. M. A. Gault's church (Covenanter); the United Presbyterian and Methodist houses of worship were also blown down.

—There are 1,555 Protestants in the State Zacatecas, Mexico, with only two Protestant missionaries. On July 16, 1882, they dedicated to the true worship of God an old Catholic temple that had been abandoned since the Reformation. It will hold 1,000 people. The regular congregation numbers between 300 and 400.

—Roanoke College, Salem, Va., is very proud of the fact that at the recent commencement it could graduate a full-blooded young Choctaw Indian, named William Harrison McKinney. For thirteen years various young Indians of this tribe have been attending Roanoke, but this is the first to complete the course. He will now enter a Presbyterian theological seminary and enter the ministry of that church.

—Corea, with its ten millions of souls, is beginning to engage the attention of the Western world to an unusual degree, especially since our Government has entered into treaty relations with that almost unknown people. At last the door of opportunity for missionary operations has been opened, and Providence has in wonderful ways prepared instrumentalities for the work. A late letter from our missionary superintendent, giving an account of the conversion of a prominent Corean, shows how the hand of Providence is working in behalf of that people. Everything relating to Corea is of special interest to the Christian at this time, and our readers will appreciate the letter on this subject on the first page.—Evangelical Repository.

—On June 19th Mr. Spurgeon's forty-ninth birthday was celebrated at the Stock-well Orphanages. The famous preacher is reported as being "somewhat troubled with his old and ruthless enemy, the gout; but otherwise is in splendid form. He was the life and soul of the entire proceedings.

—A striking proof of the advance of Christianity in Japan is that a venerable journal, the Choya Shimbun, prints a four column article on religion, in which, after denying to Shinto the reality of a religion, and showing the decay of Buddhism in Japan, it asserts, "Buddhism will never be restored to its former condition." Arguing, further, that Christianity is destined to become universal, it says: "Christianity is advancing with increasing vigor day by day. The reason why Christianity is progressing, gaining power in spite of numerous difficulties, is because it aims at saving the whole human race and not a portion of society. Buddhism cannot contest with Christianity.

—The census of missions to be taken next year will, it is said, show an increase of 200,000 native Christians in India, Ceylon and Burmah for the last ten years —500,000 in all.

During the past twenty years 17,000,000 of Bibles, or Bible portions, in fifteen languages, have been sold or given at the Crystal Palace Bible-stand. One very fruitful branch of the work has been the distribution of Scriptures in Flemish, Dutch, and French by book-post to 1,516 towns and villages in Belgium. Of course, priestly opposition has arisen. The peasants of Zele, in Flanders, were threatened by their cure with a nocturnal Satanic visitation on account of the "bad books" in their possession, and assembled one night, well armed, to receive the foe. To while away their tedious watch, they examined the books, and, becoming greatly interested, read them through the night. Their good report spread through Zele, every copy not seized by the cure was eagerly read, and application made for a fresh supply.

OLD TESTAMENT REVISION.—Professor Phillip Schaff says that the Old Testament is still in the hands of the American revisers, who are preparing the American Appendix, that is, selecting from all their readings and renderings which the British revisers have rejeeted those which they deem worth laying before the public for final decision. The revised Old Testament will probably be published before next spring. Then the Convocation of Canterbury, which originated the movement, will subject it to official judgement. If the work in revising the Old is done in the same manner as was in the New Testament, then the fate of the former will be the same as that of the latter. The revised New Testament has received no official recognition anywhere, and the book trade reports that scarcely any more copies are sold. Of the work of the English committee we read: The Old Testament Revision Company have concluded their seventy-ninth session in the New Jerusalem Chamber at Westminster. They are making satisfactory progress with their work; the final review having extended so far as Exodus 27. In the course of the current year there is a reasonable presumption that the revision will be completed and the new revised Bible in the hands of the people. This will be the second time that the Jerusalem Chamber will have been the scene of such work. It was here that the King James version was translated. Judging from the acceptance which has been accorded to the New Testament revision, it will be many years before the new version will supplant the old.

THE GENERAL SYNOD'S DELIVERANCE.

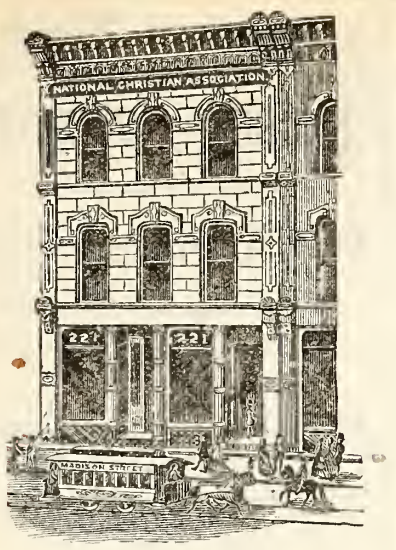
The Evangelical Repository comments very justly upon the late action of the Reformed Church General Synod at Albany:

There are some church courts which become very nervous when they are called upon to give any deliverance in regard to the nature and influence of secret oath-bound societies. They are unwilling either to commend them or condemn. So it used to be with slavery, but now that slavery is dead any of them are brave enough to approach with holy indignation the hideous carcass and give it a tremendous kick. When amid the dawning splendors of the millenial era all these Christless, oath-bound secret societies shall be driven from the sanctuary as mercilessly as the money changers once were, Christian ministers and churches will not fear them so much as some of them now do.

We are heartily glad that the Synod was sufficiently true to the better and the growing sentiment in the church against secret orders, to declare that "they have become a fruitful source of injurious agitation and division in the church," and to urge their members to "refrain from connection with such societies."

There is, perhaps, hardly any other denomination of Christians, save those like our own, which refuse to admit the members of secret orders to their fellowship, that would have borne as faithful testimony against them as the Reformed Synod did in the resolution above quoted.

In no way is the dangerous power of these orders more manifest than in their ability to close the mouths of perhaps nine-tenths of the ministers of evangelical churches against their enormous evils. While a large proportion of the ministry and editors of the religious press believe in their heart of hearts that these societies are anti-Christian and unlawful, and will not dare to commend or defend them, they will not bear witness against them.



The time seems to be approaching, and we hail its coming, when the voice of church authority will no longer be stifled by a debasing servility to a power as corrupting as it is malignant.—Evangelical Repository.

CHURCH ATTENDANCE

The North American Review of late published an article from a "Non-church Goer" to prove that religion was a failure becanse people were no longer going to church. Four replies followed, one from Dr. Ward, of the Independent, who gives these figures:

There is in the United States a population of fifty millions of people of all ages. Of these, over ten millions, more than one in five, are communicants in Evangelical Protestant churches. Mind, I say communicants. I do not say nominal members, adherents. I do not count in the baptized children. There are actually enrolled as communicants, who are chiefly adults, by trustworthy statistical reports, by count and not by guess-work, over ten million men and women. These represent five million families which are attendants at church, and the children of which, and many of the adults, are attendants but not communicants. We are within bounds if we say that they represent thirty millions of people who recognize themselves as attendants or adherents of the churches. Here we have at once a handsome majority of our people in this Protestant division of the believing church. But we must add to these, according to the best computations, over six millions of Catholics. And this immense number of communicants represents a rapidly increasing proportion of our population. In 1800, there were, according to the best available statistics, 365,000 Evangelical communicants in the country, being seven per cent. of the population of 5,308,483. In 1850, there were 3,529,988 such communicants, being fifteen per cent. of the population of 21,191,876. In 1870, there were 6,673,396 such communicants, being seventeen per cent. of the population of 38,588,371. In 1880, the communicants had risen to 10,065,963, being a little over twenty per cent. of the population of 50,152,866. The increase in population since 1800 has been ninefold; that in Evangelical communicants has been twenty-sevenfold, three times as great as in the population.

—Mr. Spurgeon, in a recent sermon, is reported to have said: "It was the glory of the Moravians that all their members were missionaries; and such ought to be the glory of every church. Every man, woman and child in the church should take part in the battle for Jesus."

OBITUARY.

REV. DENNISON ALCOTT died at his home in Spring Valley July 12, 1883, in the 82d year of his life, after an illness of about six months.

For a year or more Mr. Alcott had been growing more feeble, but was able to get about much as usual, until about the first of last January. The disease which terminated his earthly career was called by his physician the progressive palsy.

Mr. Alcott was born in Wolcott, New Haven Co., Conn., Nov. 8, 1801, and like all others of that time, he was deprived of many of the advantages so common to the youth of our day. In 1825, June 24, he was married to Miss Emily Blakeslee, at Perryville, N. Y., and soon after started business of his own, having a partner and doing quite an extensive business.

Soon after his marriage his religious views underwent a change, and in 1826, Feb. 16, he was received into the Post Street Baptist church near Clinton, in Oneida county, his earlier religious views being those of the Episcopal church. Some years later he felt himself called to the work of the gospel ministry, and his brethren discovering his gifts, gave him license to preach, and later he was called to the pastorate of the church in Florence, Oneida Co., N. Y., where he was ordained, and for four years served them faithfully and well. Then in the spring of 1840 he settled with the church in Westmoreland, serving them nine years, when by the vote of the Association he was made its colporteur—to visit and preach in destitute fields, sell and give away books, and take subscriptions for the Baptist Register, the Baptist paper of that day. He then accepted a call to the Clinton church and remained with them two years, when he returned to Westmoreland again serving them for two years. Then he removed to Wisconsin, settling in Spring Valley Corners, and soon after settled on the farm on which he died.

But though engaged in farming and the making of a home, yet he did not forget his call of God or the needs of lost men, and in school-houses, as he could, here and there did he preach that Gospel which he so dearly loved.

After some months he organized a Baptist church at the Corners, which he served regularly until the organization of the church at Brodhead, when he and many of his brothers of the Spring Valley church united there, and for a time, a year or so, he served it as pastor.

In 1863 he represented his district in the Assembly at Madison and acquitted himself well. He, however, did not aspire to political office or honors, but did faithfully all the work, and of whatever kind, that was put upon him. He was faithful to his duties whether in his family, his town, his State, or the church of Jesus Christ. He was a man of God, useful and loved in life, and honored in his death, and his memory will be held sacred.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

IN THE COILS;
—OR—
THE COMING CONFLICT.

A NEW AND RAPIDLY SELLING BOOK IN OPPOSITION TO FREE-MASONRY.

We desire to call your attention to this useful work, and ask you to help us in its circulation. We want Agents to canvass every community.

By selling this book one can do much good. It is by such literature that we must expect to awaken a popular sentiment against secret societies, and overthrow them. By selling this book one can make money. Liberal terms will be allowed, and any energetic Agent can sell many copies. Masons will buy it from mere curiosity. Anti-Masons will buy it for the facts and argumente presented. Many will buy it to send to their neighbors. Those on the fence will buy it that they may learn the truth on the subject. Those not interested in the discussion, and young people especially, will buy it for the story.

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"It is an attack on Freemasonry with a sprinkle of Slavery thrown in to make it go down well."—A. R. Presbyterian, (S. C.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of the best class of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D., in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia, Pa.)

"A charming work fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ill.)

The book is neatly and plainly printed, handsomely bound, 352 pages, thick paper. A specimen copy sent to any one contemplating accepting an agency for $1.10.

Single copy $1.50; Per Dozen. $15.00.

VACATION HINTS.

Finding your Way in the Woods.—Always follow a path in preference to taking a short cut through the woods. "A short cut is always the longest." If a path is lost, it is in general better to spend considerable time in hunting for it than to try to do without it, or run the risk of striking it farther on. When walking without a path the following axioms should be remembered: "All ridges lead to the summit. All streams lead to civilization." The best guide in the woods is one's shadow, remembering that the sun is constantly moving towards the west. One should never start out in to the woods without a compass and a watch. A card-compass, one-half black, and the other half white, to render it visible in the evening, is the best form.

If one is traveling through the woods without a path on a cloudy day, and has no compass, the best way is to fix one's eyes on a distant tree, and then walk straight toward it. Before long a more distant one in the same direction will come in sight; then, keeping the first one in line, walk towards the second, and so on. Most people have a tendency to walk toward the left—the explanation being that the right side of the body is the stronger, and so outwalks the left. If belated at night, where birch trees are plentiful, a party can gather enough of the outer bark as they pass along to keep a torch constantly burning to light them on their way.—From Guide to the Mt. Washington Range.

How to Keep From Drowning.—The human body weighs a pound in the water, and a single chair will carry two grown persons—that is, it would keep the head above water, which is all that is necessary when it is a question of life or death. One finger placed upon a stool or chair, or a small box, or piece of board, will easily keep the head above water; while the two feet and the other hand may be used as paddles to propel toward the shore. It is not at all necessary to know how to swim to be able to keep from drowning in this way. A little experience of the buoyant power of water, and faith in it, are all that is required. We have seen a small boy who could not swim a stroke, propel himself across a deep, wide pond by means of a board that would not sustain five pound weight. Children and others should have practice in the sustaining power of water. In nine cases out of ten the knowledge that what will sustain a pound weight is all that is necessary to keep the head above water, will serve better in emergency than the greatest expertness as a swimmer. A person unfamiliar with the buoyant power of water, will naturally try to climb on top of the floating object on which he tries to save himself. If it is large enough, that is all right. But it is generally not large enough, and half of a struggling group is often drowned in the desperate scramble of a life-and-death struggle to climb on top of a piece of wreck, or other floating object, not large enough to keep them all entirely above water. This often happens when pleasure boats capsize. All immediately want to get out of the water on top of the overturned or half-filled boat, and all are drowned except those whom the wrecked craft will wholly bear up. If they would simply trust the water to sustain ninety-nine hundredths of the weight of their bodies, and the disabled boat the other hundredth, they might all be saved under most circumstances. An overturned or water-filled wood boat will sustain more people in this way than it will carry. It would keep the heads above water of as many people as could get their hands on the gun-wale. These are simple facts, easily learned, and may some day save your life.—Ex.

FULL OF GRAND IDEAS.

"Masonry and Mormonism are political engines with religious driving wheels. Their conductors are kings; their engineers, priests; their motive power, popular depravity combined with popular conscience, and their practical end is the luxury and power of leaders who form men's interests for eternity that they may tax and govern them in time."

The above is a sample of the vigorous and striking thoughts, the grand ideas of which the pamphlet on the Batavia Convention is full. Get this book by all means. Price, post paid, 25 cents each.

DR. JOHN BULL'S

Smith's Tonic Syrup

FEVER and AGUE

Or CHILLS and FEVER.

AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient.

The genuine SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP must have DR. JOHN BULL'S private stamp on each bottle. DR. JOHN BULL only has the right to manufacture and sell the original JOHN J. SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP, of Louisville, Ky. Examine well the label on each bottle. If my private stamp is not on each bottle do not purchase, or you will be deceived.

NIGHTS IN A BAR-ROOM

T. S Arthur's great temperance book, complete and illustrated. By mail, 5c each; 50c per doz. By express, $3.50 per 100.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC THE GREAT SOURCE OF CRIME.

Leaves from the diary of an old lawyer.—By Hon. A. B Richmond, author of "Court and Prison," etc. A book of intense interest, rivaling the famous "Diary of a Physician," and, in its truthful, terrible pictures of the power and crime of intemperance, excelling the well-known "Ten Nights in a Barroom." The temperance issue of the present time is, Shall prohibition be partial or entire? Shall the branches of the death-bearing tree be pruned and trimmed, or shall the tree itself be cut down and its stump be torn up by the roots? The answer of "Leaves from the Diary" is, "Cut down the tree, tear up the roots, leave not a shoot or shred behind." It is certainly a very strong and eloquent volume Complete edition on fine, heavy paper, with colored lithograph of Sewall's stomach plates By mail, 30c each, $3 per doz. By express, $20 per 100. Abridged edition, by mail, 15c; $1.25 per doz. By express, $9 per 100.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC AND THE SOBER CITIZEN.

An able and telling work, by Rev. J H. Sherman which brings out the effects of the liquor traffic in a new light. The following are some of the commendations of the first edition.

"The author drives the nails of conviction through and clinches them."—N Y Christian Advocate.

"Speakers and workers in the temperance field will find valuable aid in this pamphlet. It is crowded with convincing facts "—Zion's Herald

"One of the ablest reviews of the drink curse ever issued from the press."—The Morning and Day of Reform.

"The arguments are put in telling form "—Judge Pittman.

New revised and enlarged edition. By mail, 10c each, $1 per doz By express, $6 per 100.

DRINKS FROM DRUGS.

A startling exposure of the liquor traffic, by El Johnson. A book that cannot fail to arouse the American people to the gigantic swindle now being perpetrated. The writer was offered $10,000 by a leading brewer to keep still. Liquor not only doctored, but made entirely from drugs. Extracts from a whole library of secret books, giving receipts for making and doctoring; advertisements of essences, fac-similes of labels, engravings, etc. etc. Claret, port, sherry, champagne, whisky, brandy, gin, rum, etc., all out of one barrel, and made at less than 25 cents a quart. Wine that never saw grape juice; cider that never saw apples; beer factories in place of breweries, fine cream ale without barley or brewing; whisky from arsenic; millions of gallons of liquor that pays no revenue tax. The farmer's corn and barley "all in your eye." A wholesale liquor store in a ten-foot square cellar; more French wine sold in New York City than is produced in the whole of France. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By Express, $6 per 100.

W. C. T. U. ORGANIZATION AND WORK.

A book of general information on how to organize and run successfully a Woman's Christian Temperance Union. This book should be widely distributed among W. C. T. U. presidents, pastor's wives and other representative women. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100.

HOME PROTECTION.

A lawyer's view of it. By J. C. Wells, attorney-at-law. The question of female suffrage for the protection of home ably discussed from a lawyer's standpoint. A book for the times. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100.

BAND OF HOPE RECITERS.

172 pages. 164 choice recitations of poetry and prose, containing some of the choicest bits of temperance material for the platform ever uttered, accompanied by an article on elocution. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100.

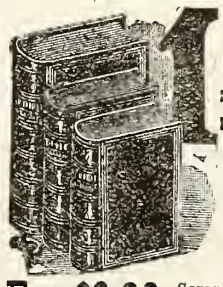
x-ford Teacher's Bible.



A Bible Concordance, Commentary etc., All in One.

The "Oxford" Teachers' Bible contains, besides the text with the celebrated Oxford references, a Cruden's Concordance with 25,000 references; Oxford Index with 2,345 words, pronouncing dictionary of proper names with meanings; Scripture atlas of twelve maps, correct to latest survey, including alphabetical list of Bible names arranged with figures and letters indicating location on maps; condensed Bible history of Old and New Testament with interval between chronology of Old Testament and chronology of the New; a complete harmony of the Gospels; etymology, geography and topography of Palestine; mountains, lakes and rivers of the Bible, with special tabular summary; birds, reptiles, insects, trees, plants, flowers, minerals, precious stones, etc.; weights, measures, time and money; obsolete and ambiguous words, and words used as symbols; Paul's voyage to Rome; Paul's missionary journey; history of Jewish sects; parables of our Lord; parables of the Old Testament; miracles of our Lord; miracles of the New Testament; prophecies concerning Christ; titles of Christ; special prayers; chart of the family of the Herods, etc., etc.

SIZES.—Our small size Bible is 4x5½ inches. Our medium size, 4½x6½. Our large size, 5x7¾.

Our small and medium sizes are most popular ones. Large size for those desiring large type Bible.

For $1.30, small size genuine Oxford Teacher; complete in every respect; same as the very best; strongly bound in morocco covers, with gilt edges; in large clear print. Book of 1,408 pages.

Postage, 9cts.

For $2.20 Same style of binding as above described, Teachers' medium size, red edges instead of gilt. Postage, 12c.

For $5.40 Same style of binding, large size, gilt edges. Postage, 20c.

For $1.60 Small size genuine Oxford Teacher, gilt edges, flexible morocco cover, circuit, or protection, leather all around. Postage, 10cts.

For $2.50 The same style of binding, medium size. Postage, 12c.

THE PERSIAN SEAL BINDING

Is very handsome and durable. It is this style of binding which is so much admired by Bible readers. Please notice particularly that these Bibles are kid lined and silk sewed. Many Bibles in this style outwardly are lined with black paper and sewed with thread in place of silk.

For $2.30 we furnish, a small size Oxford, bound in Persian seal, full flexible; can be bent back, doubled or rolled, without injury. Divinity circuit, gilt edges, kid lined, silk sewed, with book-mark and band. Postage, 10c.

For $3.30 The same style of binding, medium size. Postage, 12c.

For $5.75 The same style of binding, large size. Postage, 20c.

LEVANT MOROCCO BINDING.

The Persian Seal bindings are the best kept by most Bible dealers, and usually pass for the best teachers' Bibles made; and, to all appearance, they are so. There is, however, a better wearing binding, of which the Persian Seal is a good imitation; this is known as "Levant Morocco." In all respects the Levant morocco Bible corresponds with the Persian Seal description, except as to leather used for cover which, though looking like the Persian Seal, is stronger, and will last a lifetime.

Prices on genuine Levant Morocco bindings:

For $4.50—Small size. Postage, 10c.
For $5.50—Medium size. Postage, 12c.
For $8.00—Large size. Postage, 20cts.

Handsome Gift Bibles at Low Prices.

For 45c. Embossed morocco cover, gilt edges, gilt title on back. Very neat and durable. This is the handsomest 45c. gift Bible we have ever seen.

Postage, 5c.

For 60c. Morocco cover, brass bound and plated, with handsome gilt clasp and gilt edges; two patterns; square and round corners. Exquisite lettering on side; printed in large clear type. Bibles no better are sold as high as $1 and $2. Postage, 6c.

For 70c. Similar size and style of binding to our 60-cent Bible; square corners, brass bound, with clasp and handsome tasseled book-mark; also medallion inserted on side in gold and red.

This was a new importation with the fall of 1882, and a very pretty design. It should be seen to be appreciated. (See cut.) Postage, 6c.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

—President Arthur left Washington Monday for his western trip. He stops first at Louisville, Ky., to attend the opening of an exposition there, coming on to Chicago Thursday. From here he goes to the northwest with a select party, and will return after visiting Yellowstone valley.

—M. A. Dauphin, of the Louisiana Lottery Company, on Tuesday last entered suit in the District Court against Walter Q. Gresham, Postmaster General, for $100,000 damages. His complaint is that the order of the department refusing to allow the mails to be used for the lottery business is interfering with a legitimate enterprise.

—Senor Barca, Spanish Minister to the United States, committed suicide at the Albemarle Hotel, New York, during Friday night, with a revolver. Financial difficulties are supposed to be the cause.

—A terrible arcident occurred near Carlton, N. Y., Saturday. An excursion train collided with a freight car which had beeu blown on the track by a heavy gale. Nineteen people were killed, and over thirty seriously if not fatally injured. Quite a number of the victims were pleasure-seekers from the West. Thomas Hoyne, of Chicago, is reported among the killed.

—Saturday afternoon several cloudbursts in the region of the headwaters of the Allegheny River produced a sudden rise in the stream that proved more disastrous than any flood since 1861. Eleven acres of boards and timber were sent adrift down the Ohio, causing a loss of fully $1,000,000.

—Captain Matthew Webb, the noted English swimmer, perished in the attempt to swim the Niagara River whirlpool rapids below the Falls, Tuesday. His body was found floating in the river near Lewiston, N. Y., Saturday afternoon. There was a cut on his head evidently caused by a rock at the entrance to the whirlpool, which was in itself sufficient to have caused death.

—An appalling calamity occurred at a watering place resort on the Potapsco River, ten miles from the city of Baltimore, Md., Tuesday night, by the giving way of a pier crowded with several hundred people—excursionists from the city—nearly all of whom were precipitated into the water, and between sixty and seventy of whom were drowned, most of them being women and children.

—A thunderstorm accompanied by a heavy gale, burst over Toronto, Can., July 27th. Much damage was done. A young lady named Nunden, boating on the bay, was drowned. Several others missing.

—A Friday's dispatch from Galveston, Texas, says, "Details of the storm of Wednesday night from the outskirts of Fort Worth show that it was disastrous all throughout the Southwest. Three men were injured, perhaps fatally. Three buildings were blown from their foundations. Three unfinished structures were buown down. A number of sheds and outhouses were demolished; also, a couple of residences and one warehouse were more or less damaged. A windmill was toppled over, and a tent in use at a temporary hospital was carried away, leaving the patients at the mercy of the elements for some little time."

—The Hon. Montgomery Blair, of Maryland, who was Postmaster General under President Liucoln, died at Silver Springs, Friday. He was 70 years of age.

—The saloon-keepers of St. Louis, at a meeting Friday afternoon, adopted a resolution to disregard the Sundey law and keep their saloons open on Suuday. But one-half were closed, the police taking the names of 900 who will be prosecuted.

—Over a hundred persons in attendance at a lawn party in Joliet Wednesday night were made seriously ill by eating ice-cream, the flavoring in which is believed to have been poisonous.

—The works of the Howe Sewing Machine Company, at Bridgeport, Conn., occupying three sides of a square, were destroyed by fire on Thursday. The loss is estimated at $350,000.

—The bridge of the Detroit and Grand Haven Railroad, near Grand Rapids, succumbed on Thursday under the pressure of an immense jam of logs exsending up Grand River for miles. Nearly 100,000,000 feet of logs swept toward the lake taking out every bridge until the Lake Shore railway offered a final resistance.

—There was a terrible accident at a blast furnace at Geddes, near Syracuse, N. Y., last week Monday afternoon. Eight men entered the furnace to construct a new lining when the old lining fell upon them, killing all instantly. A hundred tons of brick and mortar fell upon them. The victims were married and had families.

—Information has been received at the Vatican that the Catholic clergy of America will follow the recent instructions of the Pope in regard to Parnell and his followers.

—A case of sickness, supposed to be cholera, has been discovered in the London docks and another in Wales. Forty members of the army hospital corps have been ordered to Egypt.

—Professor Putlitz of Berlin University killed himself after drawing the death-lot in a so-called American duel, refusing to fight a duel in the ordinary way because his antagonist was short-sighted. His death attracts serious attention to the dueling mania.

—A motion in the British Commons by a Conservative member Friday night, expressing regret that part of the cost of the Egyptian war had been charged to India, was rejected. Before the vote was taken Gladstone explained if the motion was adopted the government would resign.

—Sir Charles Dilke denies that there is Asiatic cholera in England or in Europe. In Egypt the disease continues its ravages, and is gaining a strong foothold among the British troops. Official advices from India state 1,161 deaths from cholera occurred in the Bombay Presidency during the first week in July.

BUSINESS.

TO EVERY READER.

A large box of anti-secrecy books, tracts and literature has been sent to Bro. Hinman for use in Washington. Have you any thing to give towards sustaining Bro. Hinman and the free tract work at the capital? The books are for sale, and any friend calling will be glad to purchase one or more; and, while obtaining a memento, aid a trifle in carrying on the good work at No. 215, 4½ street, N. W., Washington, D. C.

IT WILL PAY TO READ IT.

The speech of Hon. S. C. Pomeroy in Farwell Hall is in pamphlet form. It is a clear, practical discussion of the living questions of the hour, presenting in brief the claims of God to recognition in civil government, reasons for prohibition, and the abolition of the entire lodge system. It is a campaign document that should be not only read but studied by every voter in America.

From the comments that have been sent us since it appeared in the columns of the Cynosure we give the following: "It would do credit to the head and heart of any Christian statesman. How different when compared with the unmeaning twaddle of the mere politician of to-day! How empty the latter; how inspiring and full of hope the former!"

"Senator Pomeroy's speech in Chicago is the grandest thing I have read for many a day."

Let it be widely circulated early in the campaign of 1884.

Single copy 5 cents; per 100, $3.00; per 1,000, $20.00. Send to the N. C. A., 221 W. Madison St., Chicago.

THE PUREST IS THE BEST.

In the selection of SUNDAY-SCHOOL PAPERS, the most important point to be considered is the moral tone of the subject matter. If this is of a questionable character, the papers should be shunned, no matter how large, how attractive, or how low the price. Such papers are
COSTLY AT ANY PRICE.
The country is being flooded with S. S. literature that is largely composed of what may be properly termed "RELIGIOUS FICTION," the tendency of which is to create a distaste for sound reading and foster an appetite for fiction of a more deleterious character.
The engravings of these papers are equally objectionable. In many cases a lady or girl dressed in the height of fashion is made the HEROINE OF A STORY, thus putting the highest sanction to extravagance and pride. With such instructors in our Sunday-schools we cannot expect the children to grow up with a love for sound literature and with correct ideas of Christian propriety. With a view of supplying S. S. papers, of a pure and elevating character, the publishers are issuing
FOUR MONTHLY PAPERS.
They are FREE FROM FICTION, and the cuts are chosen with great care. While they are thus carefully edited, they are not lacking in attractiveness. They are well printed on beautiful tinted paper. The children are delighted with them. The very low price at which this line of S. S. papers is issued, places them within the reach of even schools of limited means

BUSINESS 13, 16

While the government, in the person of the Post Master General, is in a bitter struggle for the suppression of the lottery business, the daily press sells its columns day after day for the perpetuation of an infamous scheme of public deception and robbery. In their editorial columns are great professions of interest for the public weal, and often bold attacks on public wrongs, while on another page is often a column, printed as reading matter, advocating the lottery swindle of Louisiana. It is time the supporters of these hypocritical sheets made their managers feel some weight of indignation at their abbetting crime against the public and rebellion against the national executive.

Yellowstone National Park is opening with great demonstration this year. Rufus Hatch has secured a lease of certain privileges and will build some half dozen hotels at the most attractive spots. He has invited representatives of the Western Associated Press to visit the Park at his expense, and some 145 have accepted. General Sherman with a party of U. S. officials with a company of soldier attendants is already at the Park; and it is but a few days since Roscoe Conkling and a select party passed through Chicago for the same place. The simultaneous movement of these parties is supposed to be the head of a long procession of visitors which for many years will be a source of great profit to railways and hotels. President Arthur made a public visit at Louisville only, where he attended the opening of an exposition. On his return there will be a public reception in this city and probably at other places. There has been some criticism of the President's course in running away from his official duties for a summer jaunt and fishing excursion, on the ground that in his position his whole service is due the State. Former Presidents have made their excursions a matter of public interest. But it is also true that our present means of communication allow of as much attention to the affairs of state in the Yellowstone valley as John Quincy Adams had when visiting Boston. It is due our President also that he be remembered before God by all praying citizens, not "that we may live quiet and peaceable lives" merely, but that he may continue to respect the Lord's day as, at the request of Secretary Folger, he began to do when he set out upon this journey.

The bridge horror, which last Thursday evening desolated a happy home and called out a loud protest from every citizen at the reckless mismanagement at the open bridges of Chicago, is likely to be repeated any day through the whole season of navigation. It is a simple wonder that more lives have not been lost at these approaches, when we see the impatient crowds waiting on either side the river and remember that scores of thousands are crossing these swing bridges daily. But Mr. Cregier, Past Grand Master of Illinois Freemasons and 33 deg. Hiramite, expresses an astonishing indifference to the danger. He is at the head of the department in charge of the bridges, but will promise no satisfactory precautions for the protection of the public. Had he and his lodge brother, the mayor, given their attention to this business and to the cleanliness of our unhealthy city, instead of criminal intrigues to defraud the public treasury in favor of the rum-seller, they would deserve less opprobrium. Out of a manufacturer who occasionally sells a little lumber the authorities extort a license of $100. The same manufacturer had the other day to call the police to protect a baker whose stock was being destroyed by a crowd of roughs, drunk on the "healthful" beer sold in one of these saloon holes, which have to pay only $103 for the privilege of destroying soul and body and the peace of society.

The shooting of James Carey, the Dublin artizan, whose testimony at the trial of the Invincibles for the murder of Burke and Cavendish was more dreaded by the conspirators than any other, is a blow on the part of the secret lodge of assassination not to be despised. The British government was under a pledge to Carey, Kavanagh, and the other members of the assassin gang who, to save their lives, had given up the secrets of the lodge for the use of the courts in punishing crimes in which they participated. There is little to say in favor of Carey, though the indiscriminate Masonic howl against him is re-echoed by those who should know better; he was a guilty man, and the merit of his confession is largely due to the power of the government. But the horrible and savage hate with which he was followed to South Africa and shot in the arms of his wife ought to open the eyes of all to the fearful power of the lodge, which, to secure its revenge, makes no account of time, or place, or the lives of its members. The miserable Fenian who followed Carey and became his friend that he might more surely accomplish his fearful errand, made no reckoning on escape. The forfeit of his own life, the murder of another, were nothing, the command of the lodge everything. It is clearly seen by the English authorities that there is no peace or safety in Irish affairs so long as there exists an organization, unknown as to its membership, objects or meetings, which is brandishing its daggers at the back of every officer of the law, and every Irishman it considers unfaithful to the wild theories it hopes to enforce in the government of that wretched island.

The telegraphers' strike presented up to Monday no new features of interest. A threat from the headquarters of their secret lodge to order out the railroad telegraphers is not yet a fact, while it seems to be true that the companies have help enough to carry on their business without much inconvenience to the public, and some of the strikers, beginning to realize their folly, have returned to work. If this lodge shall actually suspend railway telegraphing, and thus cripple public business and travel, they will compel that public in self-defense to put its foot upon the neck of their little secret society, as was done a few years since in several States with the railway brotherhoods. A Canadian official touches upon another evil in which the public has a right to interfere with the affairs of the telegraphers' lodge. He says in the Montreal Herald: "In my opinion they made two fatal mistakes. In the first place they came out as a secret society and by this means killed themselves, for the companies and the public will not tolerate anything secret about telegraphing. Why, if such a thing was tolerated it would bring about a nice state of affairs. Here we would have a secret society, say, of telegraphers in New York, and the head of this could order the men at any time to cease work and they would have to do so, no matter whether they had any grievances or not. What then would prevent the same person or persons from ordering the members of the brotherhood to divulge some important secret to their head, or hand over important communications and papers if ordered to do so. Such a system is, in my opinion, outrageous, and puts an end to any likelihood of a settlement with the strikers. We do not intend in any way to recognize a secret society in connection with telegraphy, to which it would be ruinous. Why, a leading citizen in speaking to me to-day on the subject, said that no matter what trouble the public might be put to for a short time, they should help the company against recognizing in any way a secret society like this."

—Agent Townsend has returned from New York, where he has been engaged in investigating the recent election held in the Seneca Indian Nation under the laws of New York State. He said the only corruption he found was that several Indians sold their votes for ten and twenty cents apiece to the victorious faction. He will report that there is no power in the Indian Bureau to declare the election invalid. Agent Townsend remarked, with some humor, that he is now thoroughly convinced that the Seneca Indians at last are fast becoming civilized.

THE INDIANS.

BY GEN'L J. W. PHELPS.

It is as natural for the prairie white man to make war upon the Indian as it is to hunt and waste the buffalo. The few Indians who are left upon their aboriginal lands find themselves in the face of an immigrant flood which they cannot resist, and know not how to deal with. What people on the face of the earth is there who would not resist such aggressions upon their ancient rights as are suffered by the Indians? Our aggression upon their rights is systematic, while we seem to studiously avoid anything like a system designed for their defense and protection. The best intentions in the world may be converted into a means of ruin and desolation if not executed with system.

Our eye has just alighted upon a religious newspaper which quotes with approval a statement made by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. That statement reads as follows:

"I am decidedly of the opinion that a liberal encouragement by the government to all religious denominations to extend their educational and missionary operations among the Indians would be of immense benefit. In no other manner and by no other means, in my judgment, can our Indian population be so speedily and permanently reclaimed from barbarism, idolatry and savage life, as by the educational and missionary operations of the Christian people of the country. If we expect to stop sun-dances, snake-worship and other debasing forms of superstition and idolatry among Indians, we must teach them some better way."

Now we can conceive of no better way possible of utterly ruining the Indians than turning them over to be dealt with by the religious sects of the country. Contractors and Congressional rings which look to the destruction of the Indians as to a mine of wealth could well afford to pay largely for such an opinion from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. It is valuable to them.

What the Indians need is a mediatorial power between themselves and their implacable foe—the prairie white man. This mediatorial power, as we have often pointed out, is an armed military organization, consisting of young Indian braves for the rank and file, and of West Pointers for the officers. A force thus made up and stationed on the reservation frontiers would prevent the Indians from strolling and the whites from aggression. The time was when government troops were stationed between the Indians and the advancing white immigrants to protect the latter from the former; but now justice and humanity demand that troops should protect the Indians against the whites. There can be no reliable order, system, or improvement without such protection.

A cordon of troops being once established between the Indians and their foes, then the work of civilization may begin and be successfully prosecuted. Tribal allotments of land, and plots of ground or farms may be made in severalty; cattle and sheep be distributed; houses built; agricultural implements be brought in use, and schools and churches established. Intoxicating drinks can be kept out of the reservations, and in the course of twenty years all our remaining Indians would merge as an homogenuous element into our American society. And this could be accomplished for probably less than one-half the quarter of a billion of dollars which have been expended since the war of the rebellion in conducting a senseless warfare against this unfortunate people—a warfare that could have served only the purposes of contractors, Star-route frauds, and Congressional rings.

The newspapers of the country, being given over as they are to mere party contests, cannot aid the cause of humanity with respect to the Indians. Every motive with them operates towards insuring, if not actual participation with contractors and speculative rings, at least criminal silence in that direction. Our religious papers which advocate the turning over the fate of the Indians to the management of discordant religious sects, can only escape suspicion of foul hypocritical designs by an acknowledged incompetency to deal with the subject. The greatest civilizing power in Hindostan has been the military organization introduced by the English. Without the intervention of that power the missionary could have effected but little or nothing. As the Saviour found no greater faith than that which animated the Centurion; so no greater agency for Christianizing a barbarous people can be found than the military organization if properly used for that purpose. The regimental organization can be used for the purposes of peace as well as for those of war.

It is an impossibility that the higher interests of humanity can be served on the grounds of party contest. Neither the Republicans nor the Democrats, while contesting for power, can deal wisely with Indian affairs, or with any other great national interest. The country needs a new party, one that is free to meet the issues presented by a growing country. The country needs an American party, in order to restore to our institutions their original American vigor. The parties in the ascendant have sought political power at the expense of our American institutions, until the nation has become alien to its early character for truth, sincerity and moderation. By no possible means can the republic founded by our Christian fathers be conducted by the set of Freemasons who have got control of it. We must destroy the lodge or the lodge will destroy the republic. The "two parties" have sold themselves to the lodge, and have no moral power to resist its exactions. The great question of questions now before the American people is not whether Republicans or Democrats shall have the power, but whether the Masonic lodge, or the Constitution of the United States shall hold sway. This is not a question that we may conveniently put off from year to year to suit our own pleasure. It is forced upon us, as the slave-issue was forced upon us, and we must meet it now if we seek the salvation of the republic. The man who fears to vote against either of the "two parties" lest the other should win, is better fitted to bet on a horse race than to help on the cause of reform. To base one's political faith on either of those parties is as helpless as the religious faith of the dying Hindoo, who drags himself to the Ganges to seek salvation in its sacred waters.

WOMEN AND MASONRY.

BY GEORGE W. CLARK.

Masonry rejects, excludes, ostracizes, degrades and humiliates women! It suborns, alieniates and demoralizes their husbands, brothers and sons. It robs them of their independence, their manliness, their time and money, and takes them away from their families into its secret, sinister, impious, oathbound, midnight embrace, when their presence, protection and company is expected and most needed in the sacred precincts of home. Women, must naturally, therefore, instinctively and justly hate Masonry, and all its brood of secret, exclusive, oath-bound cabals, and ought and I think might easily and readily be united and organized into active and efficient opposition and greatly aid in the overthrow of these unnatural, unnecessary, anti-republican and anti-Christian "orders!"

The more especially is such a movement among the women to be urged, as they are soon to exercise the long-denied right of franchise and will therefore become important factors in this great work of reform.

One of the wives and mothers to whom I have been sending the Cynosure writes me thus, speaking of her aged mother now confined to her bed: "Mother is a great reader still, and she looks for the arrival of the mail with great eagerness. She is much interested in the anti-secrecy articles coming from you. She and I are strong Anti-masons although two of my brothers became Masons, notwithstanding all my father's preaching and remonstrance against secret societies! My husband laughs at me because I am so anxious every time he goes to a lodge (which is now seldom) and especially when I ask him, 'How do I know but some one having an ill-feeling against you may spirit you away as the Masons did Morgan?'"

"I hope," she adds, "my boys will not wish to know the pretended mysteries of the order, and shall use my influence against it. But their father is a model in their eyes in other respects and they may not be able to judge why I think so differently about Masonry. But with the open warfare now being waged against the system it seems to be destined to another overthrow. When we think of the many obstacles this reform has to contend against it is disheartening, but as in the successful overthrow of slavery, so we may hope for even greater victories as one by one these giant evils are brought to the crucial test."

Now where are the heroic women to lead off in rallying the wives, mothers and sisters of our land in this righteous crusade against secret oath-bound societies? You may "all speak at once" and make it thunder if you wish.

THE FEASTS OF SATURN.

IDOLATRIES.

Webster says that "Idolatry is of two kinds, the worship of images, statues, pictures, etc., and the worship of the heavenly bodies, the sun, moon and stars; or of demons, angels, men and animals." But God, whose infinite wisdom and authority are subject to the dictum of no lexicographer, treats in his Word any customs usages, rites, ceremonies, or symbols, which in any way appertain, or are used as accessories to idolatry, as idolatrous and profane, unclean and abominable, on account of this connection. He commanded (Deut. 7: 5; 12: 4) that the altars, images, pillars and groves used in idolatrous worship, should be utterly destroyed. Why? Because the very existence of those idolatrous implements among the people, would tempt them to adopt and practice the forbidden worship.

This view of the case is fully confirmed by the verdict of approval by which God so emphatically sustained the acts of Josiah and others, when, from time to time, they rebuked and overthrew the idolatries of Israel and Judah. (2 Kings 23: 4–6; 11–20; 10: 30 and 18: 4.) Whatever was idolatrous then, is idolatrous now. Whatever tended to promote idolatry then, must tend to do the same thing now, and therefore the divine condemnation of the implements of idolatry then, is in full force to-day, and as binding on us, as on the people to whom the prohibition was originally given.

The name of the idolatries in this great Bacchanalian monstrosity is "Legion," but they all center in its

SUN WORSHIP.

"According to the primitive language of mankind, the sun was called 'Shemesh;' that is, 'The Servant,' ....no doubt to keep the world in mind that he was but the divinely appointed minister of the bounty of the great, unseen Creator, to his creatures on the earth. Men knew this, yet....they put the servant in the place of the Master. They called the sun 'Baal,' that is, 'Lord' and worshipped him accordingly." (Hislop, p. 369.)

Again, "It was an essential principle of the Babylonian system, that the sun, or 'Baal,' was the one only God. (Macrobius, Sat. lib. 1, Cap. 23, p. 42, E.) When therefore Tammuz (i. e. Bacchus) was worshipped as God incarnate, that implied that he was an incarnation of the sun." (Hislop, p. 156.) Thus Baal became one of the many names of Tammuz (Bacchus) when, in Babylon, and even in Israel and Judah, he was worshipped as the sun, incarnate.

This dogma of the oneness of Baal and Bacchus was fully illustrated in the reason assigned in Rome for celebrating, in that city, that "drunken festival of Bacchus," the Saturnalia, on the 25th of December. That day "was held as the natalis invicit solis, the birthday of the unconquered sun." (Hislop, p. 159, 60). Thus, from the beginning, the celebration of Christmas (the Saturnalia) was the joint worship of Baal, the sun, and Bacchus.

The Roman church, in her pagan, "unbloody sacrifice of the mass," with its candles, incense, holy water, its endless catalogue of pompous rites, maintains in full measure the sun worship of this always idolatrous festival. It is not claimed, however, that Protestants, in their observance of it, ever render direct adoration, by prayer, or sacrifice, or incense, to the sun or any other object of pagan worship. Their idolatry consists in the practice or use of the incidentals of that worship, its accessories, the principal of which, are the symbols or emblems of the sun. Some of the most conspicuous, and therefore important, of these, are

THE EVERGREENS AND THE CIRCLE.

The Ivy. "Wherever the rites of Bacchus were performed, wherever his orgies were celebrated, the ivy branch was sure to appear." "No emblem was more distinctive of the worship of Bacchus than this." "It was an express symbol of Bacchus himself." "It occupied a conspicuous place in all Bacchanalian celebrations." "The votaries carried it in their hands, bound it around their heads, or had the ivy leaf indelibly stamped upon their persons." (Smith's Classical Dictionary, p. 227; Hislop, p. 78–9; Adams' Roman Antiquities, p. 242; Rollin's Ancient History on the "Feasts of Bacchus," in ancient Greece.)

Ivy garlands, or wreaths, were also used in those celebrations. Those symbols were always represented as covered with leaves, which shows that the ivy, thus used, was an evergreen; for, as we have seen, Christmas, the greatest of the Bacchanalian celebrations, was as now at the time of the winter solstice, when none but evergreens could be thus used. But the evergreen ivy is not indigenous in New England, does not grow here and so cannot be had here without great expense if at all. The Christmas emblems here, therefore, if made at all, must be of some other material. For these reasons the ground pine, being the most, if not the only available substitute for ivy, its use in that celebration is deemed strictly legitimate. It is "to the manner born," and like the ivy is a luxuriant, evergreen vine, and so answers perfectly all the uses of ivy as "a symbol of Bacchus" and of his worship. Its use, therefore, in the manner just indicated, as a Christmas emblem, identifies the Christmas of to-day, with the "drunken, Babylonian festival of Bacchus," as fully as if every symbol used, were composed of the ivy itself, and is, in the fullest sense, a perpetuation of that feature in this great Bacchanalian celebration.

The circular chaplet and garland. The import of these symbols was three-fold. In Chaldea, in Egypt, Rome and other pagan nations "the disk, and particularly the circle, were the well known symbols of the sun divinity; and, with one or the other, the heads of pictures and images of that divinity were always encompassed." (Two Babylons, p. 29, 30, 141.) As simply a circle, therefore, the chaplet or garland was and is "an emblem of the sun." But the circle had yet another, and far more important signification. "In Chaldea, a circle was zero, and zero also signifies 'the seed.'" "Therefore, according to the mystic system of Chaldea, which, to a great extent, was founded on double meanings, that which to the eyes of men in general was only zero, a circle, was to the initiated, 'zero, the seed.'" (Hislop, p. 29, 30; Bunsen's Egypt, p. 335, 337.)

Thus the circle, though primarily an emblem only of the sun, was adopted to symbolize, though falsely and blasphemously, the assumed unity of the sun and Bacchus, as that wondrous Incarnation, that Divine "Seed of David," the long and oft-promised Messiah!

But the evergreen garland, which combines within itself the full meaning of the circle, has this additional signification. The evergreen, being "an express symbol of Bacchus," its embodiment in the circle was designed as a most expressive symbol of the perpetuity, the eternal power and dominion of that great, pretended, deific incarnation!

Such is the "mystery of iniquity," which, though disguised, still lives in this circular, evergreen, "lying wonder." Its use, now as of old, under whatever pretext, by whomsoever practiced, is idolatry. It is nothing more, nor less, than a positive and most practical recognition and adoption of the same idolatry, and the same blasphemy. The same imposture, the same impostor, the same Baal!

2. THE FIR TREE.

The "Christmas tree," now so common among us, was equally common in Rome, in Egypt, and probably in Babylon. "In Egypt it was the palm tree; in Rome it was the fir. The palm tree denoting the pagan Messiah as 'Baal Tamur,' Lord of the Palm Tree." But the same idea, implied in the Palm Tree, "the symbol of victory," was also implied in the Christmas fir; for that covertly symbolized the newborn god as Baal Berith, "Lord of the Covenant" (Hislop, p. 158, '9). In a note on the same subject (p. 159) Hislop explains—"Baal Bereth," which differs only in one letter from "Baal Berith," signifies "Lord of the fir tree." Thus, it being a fundamental principle in the ancient pagan mythology that Baal and Bacchus were one, indivisible, the use of the fir tree in this festival in honor of Bacchus (Tammuz) became a conspicuous feature in the joint worship of those great divinities. It was simply the worship of Bacchus, in common, or as one, with Baal. As an evergreen, "it shadowed forth the perpetuity and everlasting nature," the eternal youth and vigor of his dominion and power.

Of course, none of these emblems are appointed, or even recognized, in the Gospel of Christ. Whatever, therefore, the pretext upon which they may be adopted, or in whatever way, as sacred symbols, they may be used, as they were pagans by birth, character and associations, so pagans they are still, and such, too, they must ever remain, emblems, not of Christ, but of Baal.

Other symbols in use in this festival might be named, but these are sufficient to show that Christmas was instituted for the worship and service of Baal. Of course, then, all the rites, ceremonies—all the usages, peculiar to the festival, were consecrated to the same end, and so, however innocent in themselves, however attractive, must bear their full share in its idolatries.

Although the Word of God uses none of the names of this festival, either ancient or modern, yet, in common with all other idolatries, it was included in those idolatrous "doings" and "ordinances" which that word so emphatically condemned and interdicted.

Let us examine. Lev. 18: 3, 4: "After the doings of the land of Egypt wherein ye dwelt, shall ye not do; and after the doings of the land of Canaan, whither I bring you, shall ye not do; neither shall ye walk in their ordinances." (Ver. 4.) "Ye shall do my judgments and keep mine ordinances, to walk therein. I am Jehovah, your God." Rollin, in his history of ancient Greece, shows that "the worship of Bacchus had been brought out of Egypt to Athens, where several feasts had been established in honor of that god." Hislop intimates that this great birthday festival was celebrated in Egypt, "about the time of the winter solstice." (p. 150, '2.) Thus it is clear that Christmas, which was then the festival of Bacchus (Baal), was one of those "ordinances of Egypt," against which the thunderbolts of Divine denunciation were hurled with such terrific energy and power.

As "the idolatry of the whole earth is one . . . first concocted in Babylon and thence conveyed to the ends of the earth" (Hislop, p. 365), and as everywhere the worship of Baal under whatever name was the corner-stone of that idolatry, it is safe to assume that "the ordinances of the land of Canaan" were, essentially, the same as those of Egypt. The observance of Christmas, therefore, as one of the feasts of Bacchus under its then pagan name, was undoubtedly one of the most conspicuous and important features in the idolatry of that land, against which God so solemnly and so faithfully warned his people, and for the practice of which he, in after ages, so severely judged and punished them.

In Deut. 12: 29–32, God commands his people to "take heed that they be not snared by following" the doings "of the land of Canaan," that they inquire not after their gods, saying, "how did these nations serve their gods? even so will I do likewise." "Thou shalt not do so unto Jehovah thy God." Whatever else this command may mean, it was and is a solemn and most emphatic interdiction of the use of anything pertaining to the heathen worship, Christmas included, in their worship of "Jehovah their God." (See Ex. 23: 24; Jer. 10: 2.) In verse 32 he adds, "What thing soever I command you, observe to do it. Thou shalt not add thereto nor diminish from it." (See chap. 4: 2.)

"What thing soever!" This command leaves us no discretion as to the neglect of Divine ordinances, and makes the practice of anything—as ordinances—which he has not appointed, an act of disobedience, even of Rebellion against Divine Law. This, together with the interdict against "the ordinances of Egypt and the land of Canaan," remains unchanged and in full force, to-day, making the observance of any pagan festival, or any part thereof whatever, the pretext for such observance, a positive, direct, blasphemous violation of Divine law. It is simply "learning the way of the heathen." Jer. 10: 2.

Where, then, is the Divine warrant, or even recognition, of this "feast of Saturn," Christmas? Where the justification of the plea that Christians do not celebrate it as a Bacchanalian or pagan observance?" We have seen that through and through and through its observance is the worship of the sun—Baal! It is idolatry. In the sight of God, "unclean" and "abominable," most solemnly, most peremptorily forbidden a place in his worship, his people commanded to not so much as "touch the unclean thing." 2 Cor. 6: 16, 17.

CONCLUSION.

Such was the origin, such the consecration and the relationship, and, despite the specious glamour of its present surroundings, such too is the true status and character of Christmas. True to it original, its chief and often almost imperceptible influence (especially among Protestants) has ever been to honor and immortalize, not Christ, but Bacchus, his great enemy and rival! Not to commemorate the angelic announcement—"To you is born this day a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord," but that great pagan, Egyptian lie, that on the birth of Horus (Bacchus, Tammuz), "a voice was heard to proclaim: The Lord of all the earth is born!" (Wilkinson's Egyptians, vol. 4, p. 189; Hislop, p. 108.) With such facts before us, can we suppose that Christ will accept such offerings? Will he consent thus to become indebted to Baal for ordinances or for symbols, with which his people may worship and honor him? or will he share his honors with Bacchus and Baal? The idea is monstrous. It is blasphemous!

SENEX.

Reading, Mass.

TWO KINDS OF MONOPOLIES.

In resisting monopolies of one kind, let us beware of warming into life monopolies of another kind; the latter, it may be, quite as selfish, and, therefore, quite as odious in their way as those which we would overcome. Nothing is more common in history than the spectacle of would-be leaders of particular classes to permit their enthusiasm, in seasons of excitement, when they have a following, to run away with their heads, so to speak, and, by rushing from one extreme to the other, succeed somehow in negativing the advantages which they might have attained by wise moderations and self-restraint.

When the memorable so-called uprising against capital culminated in the great railroad strike nine years ago it assumed the shape of a formidable attempt to "corner" the labor market, and as long as it lasted it was in all its essentials just as much of a monopoly as any of the railroad corporations against which it had practically declared hostilities. The great body of the American people, with their native good sense, while they could not be accused of any lack of sympathy with the appeals of the laboring classes for better terms from the corporations, quickly discovered that a monopoly of labor was as prejudicial to the public interests as a monopoly of transportation interests; hence, they set their faces against it and demanded that the methods of the government in dealing with it should be, as they proved to be, "short, sharp and decisive."

THE KNIGHTS OF LABOR.

So of the later strikes in the widespread iron and coal trades throughout Pennsylvania, Ohio and southern Illinois. These were conducted by various mysterious organizations calling themselves "Knights of Labor," etc., and their plan was to coerce their employers, the iron and coal corporations, by another attempt to corner the labor market. In this case it was plausibly urged that, as the coal and iron monopolies were "protected" by the Federal Treasury in the form of a high tariff on competitive foreign products, they were petted monopolists. The allegation was undoubtedly well founded, but the error of the Knights was, not leaving these monopolists to the tribunal of public opinion, which in due time will see that injustice in this, as in other forms, will be rectified, but trying to get up an opposition monopoly which, in the true spirit of petty tyranny, would allow no individual man within the range of its influence or its power to sell his labor in the best market he could get.

It is unnecessary to say that these movements failed as soon as the would-be labor "monopolists" reached the end of their purse, and the net result of it all was that, while the coal and iron "monopolies" were temporarily embarrassed (but subsequently benefited by stronger markets resulting from partial suspension of production) the followers of the other would-be "monopolists," the Knights of Labor, found themselves at the termination of the contest much poorer every way than they were when the attempted "corner" was begun.

ANTI-MONOPOLY PRETENSIONS.

And now we see these same Knights of Labor are again coming forward to take charge of the telegraphers' strike, under the taking name of "Anti-monopoly." They claim to have a membership of 800,000 in the several States; and at one of their meetings in Philadelphia, on Sunday, their orator adopted the imperial style, to which men who control, or who are seeking to control other men, in masses, are addicted. It also appears that the Telegraphers' Brotherhood is but a subordinate division of these "Knights." This is an important disclosure, and we presume there is no mistake about it, in view of the following seemingly authoritative exposition of their organization and aims which a "prominent officer" communicates to yesterday's Philadelphia Ledger:

"To the oft-repeated inquiry of 'what kind of an organization is the Brotherhood?' we would reply:

"The Brotherhood is a secret society, working under the jurisdiction of the powerful federation of organization known as the Knights of Labor. The experience of centuries thoroughly demonstrates that this is the only basis upon which an absolute successful protective organization can be established. Our branch of the order is now firmly established from the Gulf of St. Lawrence to the Golden Gate, taking in, as it does, all branches of the telegraph service. We seek by organization to make ourselves so powerful that, should it become necessary, arbitration between employers and ourselves can be successfully resorted to for protection, instead of strikes, which are always objectionable and seldom successful. It is also hoped that other benefits will follow from the perfection of thorough organization, such as higher attainments in our profession, by close guarding of its portals, and making knowledge and moral worth the basis of advancement; securing for both sexes equal pay for equal work; the suppression of fraudulent telegraph colleges, and the supplying of operators from the ranks of deserving clerks and office boys—the only students who are qualified to succeed us; to reduce the hours of labor to eight hours per day and seven hours per night; extra compensation for overtime and all Sunday work; to discourage the teaching of our profession, and such other objects as may from time to time be agreed upon. The fact that all members of the order are strictly prohibited from divulging the name or person of another member to any one not a member throws a perfect safeguard around those wishing to keep their membership secret, as, under this law, no outsider can obtain the name of any member except from the member himself."

AN UNAMERICAN MONOPOLY.

If there is a more arrogant and at the same time a more un-American "monopoly" than this, we should like to discover it. In the first place, its designation implies a title of nobility, and for these things we have no use in this country. Workingmen especially would do well to beware of them. They are monarchical and unrepublican. Our Revolutionary forefathers were jealous of all such imitations of royal technique, and hence they inserted in the Constitution a clause prohibiting Congress from conferring upon anybody any order of nobility. It is, in addition to this, a secret society; another circumstance which exposes it to suspicion. In the next place, the organization is as avowedly "protective" as the most odious of the "monopolies" against which they are contending. Like them, they seek to crush out competition by "bossing" the labor market. Among the "benefits" they expect to derive from their ordination is "the discountenance the teaching of our profession," the regulation of how many hours shall or shall not constitute a day's work—and the privilege of prescribing what sort of persons shall or shall not be employed, etc.

If the striking telegraphers expect to obtain the sympathies of the public, the sooner they disavow the control and authority of this body, the better. In attempting to restrain the Western Union "monopoly," as in their attempts heretofore to restrain the railway "monopolies," it is but endeavoring to build up a "monopoly" for itself quite as oppressive and quite as intolerable as either of these. We do not believe public sentiment will sustain them. Obstructions to free competition, either on the part of Knights of Labor, or brotherhoods, or railroad corporations, or telegraph companies, or favored manufacturing companies, no matter what the pretext may be, are encroachments upon the rights of the public and in conflict with the principles of equality upon which this government is founded. This is a free country, and is not to be "bossed" either by corporate monopolies on the one hand nor by labor monopolies on the other. Between these two the public for the moment are threatened with being crushed between the upper and nether millstones; but in the end the "monopolists" of both kinds will discover that, after all, the real boss is "We, the People."—New York Commercial Bulletin.

QUESTIONS IN MORAL PHILOSOPHY.

CASE.—In a State where Freemasonry is fostered because of its supposed political and material advantages, though it is exceedingly inimical to the purity of the Christian religion, the head of a college is called on to write the history of Fenianism, which he does without the least allusion to the fact that it is a secret organization. Not long afterwards the horrid murders committed by the organization in Phœnix Park become known.

Now the question is:—

First;—Has the head of a college in the United States the mora right to give the history of an organization and suppress the important fact that the said organization is a secret one?

Second;—Has any man a moral right to be at the head of an institution of learning in the United States without warning the youths under his charge against the wickedness of secret associations?

Third;—Does the omission to state such an important fact as that an organization is a secret one, show any nice, æsthetic sense of moral right?

Fourth;—Can a people govern themselves as a republic who see no wrong in Freemasonry? American.

INDIA'S MOST DANGEROUS DAYS.

The holidays are coming, and in India, they can hardly be called holy days. After some years of observation, we rate them as India's most dangerous days. Men who all other days of the year are noted for "truth and soberness" in these days, become noted for wanton, drunkenness and rioting. While those without restraint any day give free swing to unbridled appetite at this season. The customs of Indian society surround even good people with tremendous temptations. Many fall, and many more suffer hurt, and alas that we must say it yet, few comparatively spend these days in a way honorable to God, and profitable to themselves. We could wish to speak some kind word of warning, that would induce all our Christian friends to avoid all wine bibing, rioters revelling associations during the coming holidays. We would say to all good people shame the ungodly soul-destroying customs of this season, by opposing them with legitimate, profitable methods of spending these days. Checkmate every custom that has the devil's brand on it, by something that bears the brand of our God. It is better to go to the house of God than to the house of dancing or drinking.

We know many good people endeavor now to observe these days as they did not years ago. Yet they need to pray for their children and friends. Young ladies could as kindly stab the young gentlemen of their acquaintance as place before them the accursed wine glass. Parents better bury their children, than tutor them in tippling on holiday sips. Better be accounted unsocial and odd; or anything else, rather than walk into the open door of hell, in these devil-trap holiday social customs. Friends may spend a happy day. Christian parents may make a merry season, with and for their children, but let all be ware the deadly cup, and the unhallowed dance. Communion Christmas morning and revelling for a week following, is worse than heathenish; so called Christians nowadays seldom keep Christmas, in any way that at all declares it to be the birth-day of Christ. But if observed at all, it should be done worthily.

Will not every reader stand fast, watch, and pray for every weak brother or sister of their acquaintance in the coming holidays. Open a Christian door to as many as you can keep from the evil, even if it cost you something. —India Methodist Watchman.

COLLAPSE.

Masonry is a stupendous sham. The wonder is how such a despicable farce could find support. We are still more astonished that such a gilded fraud, and a varnished cheat, should wield such influence in the management of church affairs, regulating the rank and pay of preachers, and even crushing godly ministers with iron despotism!

Strange this foul, contemptible, and clandestine concern did not collapse before it succeeded in stamping the impress of its deadly tyranny upon the church of the day. The crisis is coming. Read the recent report of Grand Lodge: "Who shall predict the moment when this perilous crisis shall come upon us? The crumbling of the wall predicts a speedy end to the edifice, and the wise man hastens to vacate it. The gaining leak and the settling of the keel into deep water, threatens a speedy submersion of the gallant ship, and the mariners hasten to their boats and pull for life, for dear life. But we, although we may see the impending danger, cannot fly from it. As Masons, we are the edifice—we are the ship and we cannot fly. The distant signals are visible. Mark them, my intelligent brethren. To the critical eye, they are manifest in the withdrawal by dismission of tens of thousands of Masons, embracing much of the intelligence and moral worth of the order; in the carelessness with which the institution is regarded by many of its votaries; in the lengthy catalogue of suspensions and expulsion announced year by year by all of our Grand Lodges; and in the springing up of fungus societies all around us, in which, shame to say, many Masons are found, to the proportionate neglect of their proper calling. These signs point to the crisis which has been predicted. They are unerring indicia of a day and an hour when the craft will be rent to pieces as with the whirlwind of God's wrath, unless measures, speedy and effectual, are adopted to cement the walls of the institution together."

All this suggests the story of the blacksmith who attempted to make a plowshare out of a poor piece of iron. It burned up and wore away, until he had projected in succession several inferior implements, diminishing in importance. He flung it in the flames with disgust, declaring he thought the thing "would make a firstrate fi-z-z!—Vanguard.

When one has been long and far away from an earthly home, what a happy sight to see brothers and sisters all crowding to the door to bring us in. What is that but a dim image of what will be seen at the gates of glory?

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WILL THE COURTS PROTECT CRIME.

One of the most marked events in this city, is the suit of M. A. Dauphin of Louisiana, against Post Master General Gresham for $100,000 damages on account of his order forbidding the postmasters at New Orleans and New York to pay money orders to the former or deliver his registered letters. It will be remembered that Mr. Dauphin is the agent of the Louisiana State Lottery, and that during Mr. Hayes administration Post Master General Key issued an order forbidding the use of the mails for lottery purposes. This order was afterwards suspended but has since been renewed by the present Post Master General, so far as the New York and New Orleans offices are concerned. Mr. Dauphin claims that he is suffering great loss by an illegal interference with a legitimate business.

The testimony of Generals Beauregard and Early is extensively published to show that the drawings have been conducted with perfect fairness; and the Evening Star of the 25th adds this editorial to confirm their statement:

"It is easy to carp at success and accuse of dishonesty those whose moral characters for integrity, veracity and fair dealing are as unsullied as the driven snow. Now, in reply to some cavillers, actuated by motives easily seen through, Generals G. T. Beauregard of Louisiana, and Jubal A. Early of Virginia, reaffirm and publish to the whole world, over their own autographic signatures, that they in person manage and control all the monthly and semi-annual drawings of the Louisiana State Lottery, and the same are conducted with honesty, fairness and good faith toward all parties."

There is no doubt the whole matter of prosecution and publication is to capture public sympathy, by raising a false issue. Suppose we admit that this lottery is conducted with exceptional fairness. Suppose it is proved beyond all question, that there is no privileged class that are sure to draw prizes, while others draw blanks. That is not the question, but Is the lottery a legitimate business? The laws of this District and of nearly all the States declare it is not. Lotteries and all games of chance are regarded in law as demoralizing, and inconsistent with the public welfare. The fraud is in the business itself and not in the manner in which it is conducted.

Every lottery must be so conducted as to secure in any event, a large margin of profit to the company, a liberal salary to those who conduct it, and a percentage to the sellers of tickets. These, together with considerable incidental expense, are drawn from the buyers of tickets, and for it they receive absolutely nothing in return. But this money has been enticed from the hard-working, ignorant and unsuspicious poor; a large proportion from colored people, often unable to read the tickets that they purchased. As a means of this enticement, grand prizes are paraded, cupidity is appealed to, and honest labor is depressed. The first step in the career of crime is often in the purchase of lottery tickets.

If the saloon keepers should set up in justification of their business the plea that they always sold pure liquors, and never cheated in the change, we might well doubt their statements, for people who sell whisky will not hesitate to lie. But if we admitted that their statements were true they would constitute no justification. It may be reasonably doubted whether men who descend to the lottery business for a livelihood, have sufficient honesty to be trusted with other people's money, but suppose they have, the business itself should be under the ban. It is greatly to be hoped that no legal quibble will enable this nefarious business to be carried on with the aid of the United States mails.

ODD-FELLOW EXCURSIONISTS.

"This morning at 5 o'clock, a train of sixteen car loads of excursionists, representing the ten lodges of the Grand United Order of Odd-fellows of Richmond and vicinity rolled into the Baltimore and Potomac depot. The excursionists numbered about one thousand, and on the arrival of the train they were met by delegations of the lodges here with a band of music, and escorted to Union Bethel Hall, where the visiting Odd-fellows were breakfasted. They are sight-seeing to-day, and this afternoon escorted by the local lodges, they will make a parade, and leave at 8 o'clock to-night for their home."—Washington Star, July 30.

This is one of the methods of wasting the hard earnings of the colored people and preventing their accumulation of property. To the great expense of Odd-fellowship, an expense that absorbs over 60 per cent of all its income, is added the cost of these excursions, parades and entertainments.

I saw the great concourse of gaily dressed people from Richmond as they mingled with their Washington friends, and I reflected on the many evils and wrongs they have had to endure growing out of their poverty, ignorance, and former lowly condition; and while I rejoiced at many evidences of improvement, I earnestly wished they were more industrious, provident, and self-respectful; and especially that they might no longer be deceived with the idea that the silly rigmarole of Odd-fellowship, which any schoolboy may read at his leisure, and the consequent parades and excursions, is worth the hard-earned money that it costs them; and which they sorely need for better purposes.

TELEGRAPHERS' BROTHERHOOD.

"On Saturday the following was sent out from the Baltimore headquarters of the Brotherhood of Telegraphers to the railroad operators: 'I am directed by the district master workman to instruct you to refuse all commercial business on and after receipt of this notice. This refers to paid business originating at your office or offered to you by other offices.' This is intended as the initiatory step towards ordering out all the railroad operators.

When the laboring men of the country are reduced to a condition that they can be "ordered out" by an irresponsible "master workman," regardless of individual rights or interests, or the public welfare, then has the condition of the people become truly deplorable. Let it be remembered that this ordering out of the railroad operators means, if carried out, the suspension of railroad traffic, and is just about equivalent to an order to tear up the rails. Railroads cannot be operated without telegraphs.

The tyranny of secret, irresponsible trades unions; the enforced idleness and consequent want and poverty of their members; the many acts of oppression, cruelty and crime that are constantly being perpetrated on non-union workmen; and the great difficulty of convicting and punishing those whose crimes are not their individual acts, but the acts of a sworn, secret brotherhood, is showing people the danger of all organized secret associations. It will be a grand thing for every laborer to know that he is his own master workman, and that the "society" with which he has most intimate relations is his own household. It will be a blessed thing when Master Workmen, Grand Masters, and Most Puissant Sovereign Grand Commanders, shall find their vocation gone, and that the orders, constituted mainly for their benefit, have been disintegrated into their original elements.

NEW ENGLAND.

THE NEW ENGLAND BOARD of the National Christian Association has its headquarters at No. 8 Portland St., Worcester, Mass. A full supply of books and tracts constantly on hand. Orders promptly filled. Correspondence solicited.

E. D. Bailey, N. E. Sec'y

—In a large manufacturing establishment in Worcester 40 hands were discharged, not one of whom was a member of any secret society and 64 were retained, all but two of whom were members of lodges. The foreman was a Freemason.

—Franklin Pierce of Derby, Vt., died July 2d. He was a faithful friend of the Anti-masonic reform and attended the convention at Montpelier. At his own request his funeral sermon was preached from the text, "In secret have I said nothing."

—A letter from brother J. Tanner, Jr., does not give a favorable account of his health.

—Enos Mitchell of Maine, has been very sick but is better now. His daughter, Miss F. M. Mitchell has had the care both of him and an invalid mother.

—A former mayor of Cambridge, Mass., was recently initiated into one of the numerous secret societies of his city. After the ceremony was over he gave the lodge a cutting lecture on the indecency and barbarity of their ceremonies and then withdrew. In the next election for mayor he was beaten.

—Ben Butler threw a sop to the Masonic brethren in one of his recent addresses. He knows where his votes come from.

—The corner stone of the Vermont University was laid by the Masonic lodge. The Past Grand Master who spoke, says it is the first time Vermont Masons have enjoyed such an honor. Let it be the last time.

—Gen. Phelps has been spending several weeks of the summer at Saratoga.

—Mr. F. J. Dunham has moved from Worcester to Saratoga, where his home will be for the present.

—The Holiness camp-meeting which is under the control of Mr. Geo. M. Morse of Putnam, Conn., commenced its season July 24th to continue ten days. Mr. Morse is credited with bearing the chief financial burden of several such enterprises.

—The death of Geo. H. Williams at Putnam, Conn., leaves a great vacuum among reformers. His memory is precious.

—Elder J. L. Barlow is spending some time in Fulton county, N. Y., to recruit his health which is much broken. The latest news from him is not reassuring.

—The Free Baptist camp-meeting commenced Aug. 1st at Old Orchard Beach.

BENJ. F. BUTLER.

No newspaper can rightly serve the public without commenting on the acts of the present governor of Massachusetts. No one feels at all sure that Ben Butler will not be elected to a second term of the governorship, and from that step to the White House. He has too often accomplished the impossible to predict with any certainty that he may not soon set aside all improbabilities to nominate and elect himself President.

Probably a more unscrupulous politician does not exist in the country. His word cannot be relied upon in any matter affecting his personal interests. When the Committee on Charities asked counsel of the Attorney General, Butler declared in an open letter that it was unlawful for the attorney to give advice to the committee, and that it never had been done. When the committee disproved his statement he neither confessed his error nor recalled his words, but treated it as a good joke. When the Tewksbury appropriation bill was lost, and afterward found, he affirmed in a message to the legislature that he believed the bill was stolen from his office, when he must have known that he himself dropped it in his carriage. In numberless instances he has obviously disregarded truth.

His correspondence with other members of the State government has often descended to mere blackguardism, entirely beneath the dignity of his office, or even the ordinary courtesies of life. His petulance has sometimes appeared puerile, as, for instance, when he refused to have any further correspondence with Secretary Sanborn, simply because he had been worsted in argument and fact.

It is difficult to say how much credit is due him for the Tewksbury investigation. The same institution was investigated a few years ago, and the principle abuses corrected under another administration. It is claimed that the abuses which constituted the body of the evidence are not of recent date and were exceptional, not general. Certainly the Governor's charge of extravagance has been proved to be groundless.

But Butler has several elements of strength before the people which make him a conspicuous figure. He is daring without limit. He apparently has no fear of failure; he does not care for criticism; he proceeds like one who has nothing to lose but everything to gain. When his courage is rightly employed, as it was during the rebellion, he cuts a noble figure; when employed for selfish political ends he is a dangerous antagonist.

Butler's clear apprehension of political factors is seen by his connection with Freemasonry. He is not a man to waste time or money on the frivolities of the Masonic lodge unless he could obtain a returning advantage in increased political power. His shrewd eye detected the advantage of such a secret ally. When the secret empire seeks for a leader against the American party, Butler will be its most available man. In a speech in Worcester recently he took occasion to laud the Masonic lodge—a significant fact considering his known aspirations for further political honors.

The last conspicuous element of this man's power lies in the fact that he appeals to the worst classes of society for his support, and the bad elements of American society are more thoroughly organized and determined than the good elements. We seem not half awake to the mighty struggle between good and evil going on among us. The bad elements are becoming organized in secret lodges. The good elements are in churches. The secret lodges run our political machinery, and when the good people commence they cry out, "You must not meddle with politics." Butler appeals to these forces of evil for power.

As between the Democratic and Republican party there may be but little choice, but those who are contributing to the notoriety of such dangerous factors in our politics will do well to pause. Let us hasten to establish the nucleus of a new party which will call to its support the better elements of the country, that the wicked may not bear rule.

E. D. Bailey.

If all bankrupts were as lucky and plucky as Jay Cooke it would not be so bad. He has lived to pay every dollar he owed, and has a handsome competence in his old age. He is fitting up magnificently his summer home at Gibraltar, where he spends the spring and fall months fishing. The other months of the year it is in the charge of a housekeeper, and poor clergymen from all parts of the country are each made welcome for two weeks, when they give place to others. Every denomination is represented in these lists, and hundreds of poor ministers have, through the kindness of Mr. Cooke, enjoyed a most delightful vacation.—Inter Ocean.

American Politics.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,

JONATHAN BLANCHARD,
OF ILLINOIS.

For Vice President,

JOHN A. CONANT,
OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

—The People's Informer of Paris, Texas, prints the names of the candidates of the American party and the platform as they appear above, with the just and complimentary comment: "Our acquaintance with Jonathan Blanchard and John A. Conant is very limited, but their platform, if adopted and carried out, would prove, we firmly believe, the most glorious results to our country." As the editors of the Informer are colored men they probably are better acquainted with Senator Pomeroy and can support him in the campaign.

Our nation, having passed by, year after year, the only possible solution of the Indian queston, in vain endeavors to settle it some other way, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has in his latest report verified the often proved truth that "man's extremity is God's opportunity." He says: "I am decidedly of the opinion that a liberal encouragement by the government to all religious denominations to extend their educational and missionary operations among the Indians would be of immense benefit. In no other manner and by no other means, in my judgment, can our Indian population be so speedily and permanently reclaimed from barbarism, idolatry and savage life, as by the educational and missionary operations of the Christian people of the country. If we expect to stop sun-dances, snake-worship and other debasing forms of superstition and idolatry among Indians, we must teach them some better way."—Statesman.

The Chairman of the Iowa Republican State Committee has declined the proposition of General Weaver, Greenback candidate for governor, to take part in the joint debates arranged to take place between the Republican and Democratic candidates.

The Republican State Central Committee of Virginia, Thursday adopted resolutions condemning the course of the National administration in the politics of that State, and declaring James G. Blaine the choice of the Republicans of Virginia for President.

HOW THEY VOTE IN IRELAND.

A correspondent of the Pittsburg Dispatch gives this account of a scene at the polls in Ireland:

"The election day is very quiet. The vote is by secret ballot. A voter goes into a room called a booth. There he is given a ticket with the names of the three candidates printed on it. A blank place is left opposite each name, where an x is put behind the name of the one voted for. This ticket is taken behind a screne in the booth, and marked by the voter. It is officially stamped by the sheriff, who furnishes all tickets. The voter, after marking it, hands it to the judge, who deposits it in the ballot box. The voter then vacates the room. Only one voter is allowed in the booth at once. Candidates may have one to a dozen representatives in the booth, but they are sworn to secrecy as to what goes on inside until after the result of the election is declared from the official count. The boxes from all the polling booths are sealed in the presence of the representatives of the candidates, who may also put a private seal on each box. They are then taken to the county seat, where, on Monday, they are opened. As each box is opened in the presence of the candidates or friends, the tickets are counted with their faces down, so that the number in it may be compared with the return on the poll-book. Then the tickets are all thrown into one box and stirred up, so that it may not be known what district gave certain majorities, and counted.

TRADES UNIONS.

THE TELEGRAPH OPERATORS AND THEIR STRIKE.

While it is manifest that public sympathy is largely with the operators in their demands, it is equally manifest that the nature of their organization and the methods by which they seek the attainment of their objects ought not to be sanctioned. Because,

1. They are a secret brotherhood with an elaborate ritual and form of initiation, and bound by stroug oaths or pledges.

2. They deny to their members all right to sell their labor except with the consent of the whole fraternity, and they enforce this restriction with both rewards and punishments.

3. They insist on uniform pay without regard to individual capacity, putting the efficient and inefficient on the same level.

4. They appeal to, and expect the aid of other trade unions, and count on the support of the Knights of Labor and other labor organizations without regard to the interests of individual laborers, the validity of contracts, or the rights of the people.

5. In common with all other trade unions they put a pressure on every laborer to induce him to join some secret oath-bound brotherhood and to become a party to the whole secret order system.

6. In common with all secret orders, they deny to the state all right of inquiry or inspection as to the nature and methods of their business, and as to the character of their covenants as related to civil law.

7. They deny to each church the right of investigation, watchcare and control of the conduct of the members of such church member so far as that conduct comes under the secrecy of the order.

8. They unequally yoke together in a sworn brotherhood, believers and unbelievers, contrary to Eph. 6: 14.

9. The covenant to "always conceal" the internal character and business of the order is inconsistent with Christian candor and a just regard for the interests of others, and leads inevitably to hypocrisy and falsehood.

10. They are either without any religious worship, or, more commonly, they have such as all faiths can unite in; and from which is of necessity excluded everything that is distinctly Christian

11. They are the legitimate children of Freemasonry, from which they are patterned, and which is the oldest of all the trades unions.

12. They make common cause not only with all other secret trades unions, but with the great network of secret orders that constitute that Secret Empire that seeks to control all business, all religions, and all governments.

13. Membership in them is inconsistent with personal freedom and self-respect, and their practical influence has been to diminish the amount and rewards of labor, and often to produce the most terrible crimes.

DR. HALL'S CASE AGAIN.

Dear Cynosure:—We are spending a few days in Holly, Mich., the place where Eld. D. P. Rathbun lectured on Masonry and worked the first and third degrees a year ago last April. This place is about five miles from Davisburgh, the scene of the tragic events collected by Bro. Hinman in this vicinity and transmitted to the Cynosure a few months subsequent to Bro. Rathbun's labors here. Some of your readers may remember the case of Dr. N. C. Hall, who was charged with having poisoned his wife, and when the thing was fairly proved against him (by the way he was a member of the M. E. church) at his second trial (at the first trial the jury could not agree) he was sentenced to the State's Prison for life, and when subsequent to his being sent up, the Supreme Court of the State revoked the decision of the court that condemned him, and granted a new trial (all through the influence of the lodge, of course), he was released from prison on a bail of $3,000 instead of $20,000, his former bail.

I cannot at this distance of time recall how many of the sickening details connected with this terrible affair were communicated to you by Bro. Hinman, such as the purchase of another stomach and liver, to be placed in the hands of the chemists for analysis, instead of those of the victim, when an investigation was instituted; how the body of the unfortunate woman, or what remained of it, was taken from the grave (it was so full of poison that it was in a remarkable state of preservation when found).

doubled together and thrust into a salt barrel and buried near a straw stack in a farmer's field; how it was discovered by the slumping in of one of the horses while a boy was ploughing near the straw-stack, the confession of the man employed to place the body there, etc. All these things were brought out in the investigation and nobody has any doubt of the doctor's guilt, yet this man runs at large on a nominal bail as jolly and unconcerned as ever, and tells his friends he shall come out all right, and no doubt he will. He has scores of Masonic brethren leagued together to defeat the ends of justice, and what has he to fear?

Another farce of a trial has been gone through with since he was released from prison, with the same result as in the first trial, viz., the jury could not agree, nine being for conviction and three for acquittal. When we look at these appalling facts and remember that this is only one of many cases that are continually occurring where it is found impossible to bring a Freemason to justice, no matter what his crime may be, it is truly alarming, especially when we consider the indifference of many who even acknowledge these results to be due to the workings of Masonry.

E. C. A.

THE NATIONAL TEWKSBURY.

The great national Tewksbury is the Masonic lodge. But General Butler is not likely to undertake the reform of that; for his first step would have to be to abolish himself, he being a Grand Sovereign Inspector General of the whole concern. General Butler would be nothing without the lodge. The lodge has made him governor of Massachusetts; and it is by the aid of the lodge that he hopes to become President of the United States. Hence General Butler cannot possibly reform our great national Tewksbury. His powers in that direction are limited to a very narrow sphere.

In fact, Tewksbury is a pattern of cleanliness when compared with the Masonic lodge. Its reform was an easy job. There was but little to do—all cry and no wool. The moral of that reform is that General Grant's trade of tanner must not be exercised with the skins of alms-house patients in Massachusetts so long as General Butler is governor.

But the moral which the good of the country requires to be established is this, viz.: that no man who resorts to the underhanded trickery of the lodge for gaining political ascendency, is worthy of the confidence of a free people. General Butler proudly bears one of the highest titles of the Masonic lodge, and shows himself a perfect adept in Masonic tricks; and for the nation to give its approval to such a position by crowning his Masonic rank with the title of President of the United States, would only sink the dignity and value of the Republic to the level of a set of jocose revellers; not to serious-minded statesmen. No more fatal mistake could ever be made than to reward skill in Masonic trickery with Republican office.

Our great national Tewksbury can only be reformed by a thorough-going out-and-out Anti-mason; and let us vote for no other.

So mote it be.

PITH AND POINT.

WELL PLEASED.

I am much pleased with the change in the Cynosure—its paper, its type and general make up; its cheerful face, its able and spicy editorials, its interesting and spirited correspondence, its judicious selections, and its high and sound moral tone. May God bless you and the great work into which you bring such a clear-cut force.

So speak on! Speak on! Do not bate a single word!
Nor turn aside—nor care for hissing nor for scorn—
Since some faint gleamings you may see of Freedom's coming morn.

G. W. Clark.

THE CUNNING FISHERMAN.

It seems as if new orders of secretism are springing up constantly; that the devil is lengthening his cords and strengthening his stakes in this secret empire. He puts me in mind of a fisherman fishing with a trout line in a stream that abounds with all kinds of fish. He stretches his line from shore to shore; fills it with hooks; puts on his bait, a worm for one kind of fish, minnows for another, and liver for another, and so on till all hooks are baited, that he may catch all kinds. Each line and hook stands for a different order in the secret empire, that all men may be caught on the devil's trout line, part to the different hooks of Masonry, Odd-fellowship, Good Templarism. Grand Army of the Republic hook is baited with loyalty and patriotism so as to succeed in catching a great many church members and get into the sanctuary of the Lord all over the land to hold his grand carnival and bring religion into such disrepute that no sensible man could believe for a moment that there was any reality in it, in short, to crucify Christ in the house of his professed friends.

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON VIII.—August 19.—Israel Forsaking God.—Judges 2: 6-16.

Golden Text.—And they forsook the Lord God of their fathers.—Judges 2: 12.

"Served the Lord all the days of Joshua." This verse describes the whole period in which the people were submissive to the Word of God, although removed from the direct guidance of Joshua. The people was faithful when left to itself by Joshua, faithful after his death, faithful still in the days of the elders who outlived Joshua. The whole generation, which had seen the mighty deeds that attended the conquest of Canaan, stood firm.—Schaff.

"Buried him." (1) Christian tradition points to a Tibneh, on the Roman road from Jerusalem to Antipatus, 14½ north-north-west of Jerusalem, as the site of the ancient Timnath-serah. Here is a remarkable rock cemetery containing nine tombs. One of these is large, with a portico supported on rude piers of rock. There are niches for over two hundred lamps, once burning in front of the tomb entrance. There is also a village, about three miles to the east, called Kefr Ishria, or Joshua's village. (2) Another site proposed for Timnath-heres or serah is at Kefr Haris, nine miles south of Nablus (Shechem). The Samaritans state that Joshua, son of Nun and Caleb, were here buried. The tombs of Caleb and Joshun were noticed here by Rabbi Jacob, of Paris, A. D. 1258. Conder inclines to this as the burial place of Joshua, since Jew and Samaritan both point to it.—Schaff.

The Character of Joshua. His character was almost faultless. (1) He was a man of profound faith. (2) He was courageous, fearing no danger, shrinking from no duty. (3) He was disinterested. Joshua lived, not for himself, but for his people. Unlike Alexander and other conquerors of the East, he sought no glory, was ambitious of no greatness, and aimed at no sinister purposes or ends.—T. Smith. (4) He was faithful to every trust reposed in him. (5) He haad a rare combination of the highest qualities of the statesman and warrior. (6) Joshua was, in one respect at least, an eminent type of the Lord Jesus Christ. As he conducted the chosen Israel into the rest of the earthly Canaan, so is Jesus, the true Joshua, leading the Christian Israel into the rest of Christian holiness and of heaven.—Smith.

"All that generation." Had no practical or experimental knowledge of him; no deep or lively impression of his goodness; no affectionate, grateful, or devout sense of the wondrous manifestation of his power in their behalf (see on Ex. 1: 8).—Bush.

"Served." The true religton is a service of love and reverence; but all false religion is a service of superstition and terror. The impenitent often think that by refraining from being Christians they escape service; while, on the contrary, they serve Satan, who is a cruel master and whose wages are death.—Johnson. "Baalim." Baalim is the plural of Baal, a Semitic word, signifying owner, lord, or master, and in the highest sense denoting the deity. The Hebrews never used it as a designation of their deity, but always to distinguish some god of the surrounding nations. In this sense, with some adjunct appended, it indicated several local deities: Baal-zebub was the fly god of the Ekronites, corresponding to the Zeus of the Greeks; Baal peor answered to the Roman Priapus. With the article prefixed, it designates the Baal or chief deity of the Phœnicians. Strictly, Baal meant the highest male god (the sun or planet Jupiter), as Ashtoreth or Astarte did the highest goddess (the moon or Venus).—American Cyclopedia. The plural Baalim is used (1) either because of the multitude of idols and images of Baal, or better (2), it refers to the different offices of the god. This latter conjecture receives the general consent of scholars. Thus: Baal-zebub (3), Baal is the office or protector from flies, one of the worst plagues of warm climates; Baal-peor, Baal presiding over licentious rites of worship.—Johnson.

What was the Great Attraction of Idolatry that made the people fall into it so often? (1) It was a visible representation of God, while Jehovah was unseen. (2) The temptation of novelty. (3) The desire to be like the other nations who, in some respects, were more fashionable and worldly. (4) The sports and revels connected with idolatrous worship, appealing to every passion, and more especially tempting the Israelites, whose worship was purity itself. In the revels of idolaters there was no restraint, no confession of sin, no costly sacrifices except to passion, but they could serve every evil in the name and under the sanction of their gods.—Peloubet.

"And the anger of the Lord was hot." The Lord's indignation at their sins was intense, like a burning fire. He could not love righteousness, and not be indignant at sin. He could not love the people and desire to make them pure and holy, without at the same time being hotly incensed at their disobedience, at their trampling under their feet like swine the pearls of righteousness. The more intense the love, the more intense also the indignation. If the feelings against sin do not flame and burn, then the love also is a feeble thing.—Peloubet.

"Judges." The judges were usually raised up by divine appointment (Judges 3: 9, 10, 15; 4: 4, 6; 6: 11-16; 11: 29; 13: 2-25). They were probably also elected to their high positions by the free choice of those whom they ruled, their eminent qualifications for the office causing them to be sought by the people (Judges 8: 22; 11: 4-11). Their duty was not confined, like that of modern judges, to the holding of courts for the adjudication of civil and criminal causes; they combined the judicial and executive functions; they both judged and enforced the laws. The nation had no fixed capital, and the judge selected his own place of residence (Judges 4: 5; 10: 1, 2). —Johnson.

BAND OF HOPE BIBLE LESSON.

STUMBLING BLOCKS.

10. But why dost thou judge thy brother? or why dost thou set at naught thy brother? for we shall all stand at the judgment seat of Christ.
11. For it is written, As I live saith the Lord, every knee shall bow to me, and every tongue shall confess to God.
12. So then every one of us shall give account of himself to God.
13. Let us not therefore judge one another any more; but judge this rather that no man put a stumbling block, or an occasion to fall in his brother's way.
21. It is good neither to eat flesh nor to drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth or is offended, or is made weak. Rom. 15: 10-13, 21.
12. But when ye sin so against the brethren, and wound their weak conscience ye sin against Christ.
13. Wherefore if meat make my brother to offend I will eat no meat while the world standeth lest I make my brother to offend. 1 Cor. 8: 12, 13.

Golden Text.—Take up the stumbling block out of the way. Is. 57: 14.

Central Truth.—Denying ourselves for our brother's sake.

1. The first Christian converts found themselves in an atmosphere of complete heathenism. The national customs, the holidays, even private feasts were more or less connected with idol worship.

2. Some, in their fear of seeming to countenance idolatry, might abstain from things really innocent; while others would allow themselves so much liberty as to scandalize their more conscientious brethren. Each side would naturally incline to judge the other harshly.

3. When we make it harder for another person to do right we may be said to put a stumbling block in their way.

4. If we should offer a glass of liquor to a man who was trying to reform we should be guilty of this sin. But it has often been done. Sometimes a glass of home-made wine or so-called "sweet cider" has wakened the terrible thirst for strong drink supposed to be conquered forever.

5. Home-made wines being purer than those we buy, contain for that very reason a larger percentage of alcohol. Dr. Jewett once convinced a lady of this fact by showing her how quickly a glassful of her "pure currant wine" ignited when thrown on the fire.

6. Mince pies are usually mixed with cider; brandy is often put into cake, and wine into sauces. Many people will say that as the alcoholic principle is killed by the heat of cooking they will do no harm. This is a great mistake. An appetite for drink has often been fostered in this manner.

7. It is important that girls, who are one day to discharge the duties of womanhood, should realize the responsibility which rests upon them. There is no better ally of intemperance than a cook book full of alcoholic receipts.

8. Indifference may be a stumbling block. If we treat the subject of intemperance or any form of evil in a careless, thoughtless manner, we make it harder for men to reform.

9. A stumbling block is often put in the way of others by being afraid to say what we think. We should always be ready to testify against every form of sin.

10. Example is often a stumbling block. The man who indulges himself, though only now and then, in a glass of wine or a good cigar, has lost his right to rebuke the intemperate, or to try to reform them.

11. Intemperance, tobacco, secret societies are stumbling blocks in the way of human progress. They must be taken out of the way before Christ can reign over the world.

PRACTICAL TRUTHS.

The Christian will abstain all his life, even from a thing that is innocent, rather than cause a weak soul to fall.

If we want Christ's kingdom to come we must cast out the stumbling blocks that hinder it.

LESSON TALK.

Sixty years ago it was the fashion to drink. There were not many teetotallers, though nearly everybody was willing to admit that drinking too much was a bad thing. Ministers and other good people lamented that there should be so much drunkenness, and then they began to think what they could do to stop it. But they found that so long as they drank themselves, though only a glass of wine occasionally, the drunkard cared very little for anything they might say to him. He would reason, and very naturally, that what was right for a minister or a deacon was right for him. The result was that Christian people generally began to practice total abstinence. They took the stumbling block out of the way.

When Mrs. Hayes abolished the practice of having wine at state dinners, she took a great stumbling block out of the way of the temperance cause. All honor to her and other noble women who have contended for the cause of right against fashion and custom.

The influence of woman in this direction cannot be estimated, and it is a great pity that so many fail to realize the power God has placed in their hands. A lady being asked by a gentleman if the smoke of his cigar would be unpleasant to her, replied in the negative, but afterwards confessed to a female friend that "there was nothing more disagreeable to her than tobacco smoke." This lady, besides the falsehood she told, committed a double wrong. She encouraged a vile and pernicious habit, and she lowered her own standard of womanly purity by tolerating what is or ought to be disgusting to every true lady; but she took no stumbling block out of the way. Young ladies who consent to walk or ride with a man puffing his cigar in their faces, help to extinguish what little decency or manliness he may still possess. When a man ceases to respect woman he has ceased to fear God.

FARM NOTES.

SPARE THE TOADS.

There is no better abused, and probably no more useful creature in the garden and upon the farm than the toad. That apt simile, "like a toad under a harrow," tells the story of his wrongs. And now that our harrows are armed with steel teeth, and are supplemented with clod crushers and cultivators of various types for comminuting the soil, the sorrows of the toad are intensified, and he is threatened with extinction in all cultivated fields. Stay thy hand from slaughter, tiller of the soil. The toad is as useful in his place as the implements of tillege you drive over his back so thoughtlessly. "The jewel in his head" is not there, but in his capacious stomach, that always has room in it for one more bug, one more worm, that destroys the food of man. Watch his habits for a day, and observe the lightning thrusts of his tongue as he scoops in your enemies, and you will have a better appreciation of his work, and of his place in good husbandry. If your garden is without toads, you can afford to purchase them for stock. They will pay good dividends, as surely as superphosphate.—American Agriculturist for August.

SHALL WE PRUNE IN AUTUMN?

To the above question, which comes from several subscribers, we say decidedly, yes, provided the question applies to newly planted trees, those set last spring, or within a few years. The sooner such trees have their final shape given to them the better. This should have been done when they were planted, but between the hurry of spring work and the timidity of the inexperienced, who are afraid to cut, trees are quite too often set out just as they come from the nursery. Such trees must sooner or later be put into their final shape for bearing, and the sooner this is done the better. Some books on fruit culture, the French especially, give diagrams to show how the tree should be shaped. These are well enough as suggestions, but as no two trees grow precisely alike, the only guides in such matters are a general idea of the laws which regulate tree growth and common sense in their application. Working to pattern can not be followed. If one has a young orchard, the first point to be considered is the height at which he will make the heads of his trees. In localities where the summer is long and hot, it is claimed that low heads shade the trunk, and thus are a benefit. Others wish to have the heads high enough to allow of the passage of teams beneath them, if need be. While there is no objection to cultivating crops in a young orchard, and indeed it is better to do this than to neglect the soil entirely, the practice is becoming more general of seeding the bearing orchard to clover, and using it as a pasture for swine, to the mutual benefit of pigs and trees. The height of the heads being decided upon, all branches that start below this should be removed. The next point should be to secure an open and well-balanced head, with the main branches evenly disposed. Beyond this, all branches that crowd or cross one another, all "water shoots," vigorous growths, that sometimes start up in the growing season, should be cut away. The season's growth being completed, the removal of branches at this time will cause no check, and as the branches to be cut away are all small, no large wounds will be exposed. Hence we say, by all means do such pruning in autumn, while the weather is mild, and other farm work is not pressing.—American Agriculturist for August.

Feeding Cows in Summer.—The customary loss from poor and deficient feed in midsummer, when grazing is the sole dependence for the summer feed for the herd, is about two-fifths of what would have been the yield if full feeding of green food had been supplied through the entire season. When a herd has been permitted to shrink from drought, it not only gives less milk through all the remaining part of the season, but it dries up entirely very much sooner than when the flow is kept right up to its maximum measure all the time. Herds which are full fed, go dry on an average only about one month in the year, while they which suffer from a drouth six to ten weeks in the hot part of the season, with no extra feed, go dry on the average about three months. Animals pinched in the summer get poor and wanting in vigor, so that they do not stand the winter well, and yet it costs more to winter such a herd than it does a fleshy one. To subject cows to a lack of feed when they should be doing their best, brings disaster in every quarter, and inflicts losses upon the owner which keep him struggling with poverty from year to year, and by distressing and discouraging, make him dissatisfied with his business, and life an up-hill journey.—National Live Stock Journal.

The First Tomatoes in Pennsylvania.—It is stated that many years ago a Bermudian was so unfortunate as to be imprisoned for some offense in the jail at York, Pa. One day he planted some seeds he had in his possession in the jail yard. About the time the plants blossomed his sentence expired, and he left the town. The jailer's wife was interested in the plants, and watched their growth. A small, bright red fruit appeared on the vines, and all persons were cautioned against touching the fruit as it was considered poisonous. One day the Bermudian returned, and seeing the love apple matured, called for pepper, salt and vinegar, with which he seasoned some of the apples, which, to the horror of the jailer's wife, he proceeded to eat with a relish. He quieted the woman's fear by explaining the nature of the vegetable. The precious seeds of the remaining tomatoes were carefully distributed among the neighbors, and so the cool, delicious tomato so on became a common garden vegetable.—Bermuda Letter Pittsburgh Dispatch.

Farmers, Be Careful!—A horrible accident occurred near Webster, Taylor county, Va., July 23. A farmer named Wm. Carson was driving a mowing-machine in the meadow, holding in his arms a child 3 years old. The horse became frightened and in the sudden start threw the boy from his father's arm in front of the cutter bar. The father jumped to save the child and fell The mowing-machine ran over both. The boy was cut to death and the father horribly mangled and fatally injured. The machine was broken to pieces and one of the horses killed. The young wife of the farmer is lying in a faint and fears are entertained of her recovery.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)

Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.

Brethren (Dunkers) or German Baptists.)

Christian Reformed Church.

Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)

Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.

Disciples (in part.)

Friends.

Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.

Mennonites.

Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.

Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)

Moravians.

Plymouth Brethren.

Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.

Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)

United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

New Ruhamah Cong. Hamilton, Miss.
Pleasant Ridge Cong. Sandford Co. Ala.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, AUGUST 9, 1883.

MISLEADING LEADERS.

"The children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light." The political press ever mentions, by name, the leaders whose principles, measures and ideas it opposes and wishes to defeat. Logan, Conkling, Blaine, Butler, etc., are constantly held up before the people in their sayings and doings by prints which oppose as well as by those who approve them. But when presidents, professors, and prominent preachers who have joined Masonic lodges are held up before the people a multitude cry, "personality!" "persecution!" "a bad spirit!"—though the same persons do not raise the objection of "personality" when those men are named for commendation.

An orator in the great Home Missionary meeting at Saratoga, last June, is a high Mason, who joined the lodge while he was pastor of Hon. Seth M. Gates, Warsaw, N. Y. The Cynosure has reproved a college president and a theological professor for entering the lodge, and called on them to forsake the lodge, or, if they disapprove of it, to say so to the Christian public, and save young men whom their example is drawing in and enslaving to the abominations of the lodge. They do no such thing. They are, and are still counted, lodge members; and Anti-masons who are good men uphold them and condemn the Cynosure for censuring them. Yet these Masons, who are in prominent posts in the churches, are the chief pillars of the lodge-abomination. Hundreds of young men and ministers go into lodges for purposes of gain or advantage, declaring that it cannot be so vile as represented while such men are in it. And when Anti-masons ask these leaders concerning their lodge relations, they simper and say as a college president lately said, "If that subject is ever mentioned it will not be by me!" They hide their Masonry as Achan hid his "accursed thing;" but that hiding did not avert the anger of God, or save Israel from defeat. "The leaders of this people cause them to err, and they that are led of them are destroyed" (Isa. 9: 16).

EX-SENATOR POMEROY'S SPEECH.

This speech will never be so popular as it deserves to be, for it has been thoroughly thought out in every sentiment of it, and it requires profound thought to read and relish it. It is a condensed compendium of the American system, a sort of Butler's Analogy of politics; and a few earnest souls will long light their minds by it, as, before the days of matches, men used to light their candles by the help of a sun-glass. Indeed, this speech is the sun-glass of Puritan political philosophy, condensing and concentering the light of Christian politics as the lens gathers the rays of the sun into one clear burning focus, which not only enlightens but warms.

Take a few specimens:

"Neither men or nations can long sustain a character which they do not possess. There can be no successful sailing under false colors. Only righteousness exalts. The sting of a wasp may seem to produce flesh; but it is only the swelling of poison after all."

And here is another:

"God had 'made of one blood all nations of men,' and called them to come and participate in human government. The idea was an inspiration and men sprang to its support from every nation under heaven. And such a purpose to nationalize men of all classes became the very genius of the American system."

But whatever collects men in masses if it does not purify, corrupts them. Mr. Pomeroy does not leave these masses to corrupt, as fluids find their level in stagnation. He proceeds to put these effervescing human masses "under law," thus:

"God in human affairs is the first element to be incorporated in every constitution. A Godless nation is a rudderless ship, in an unknown sea, on a hopeless voyage, in a perilous night."

"There should be LEGAL PROHIBITION of all that produces intoxication, crime and misery; as counterfeiting, slander, theft, murder and the sale of poisonous meats and drinks can and should be prohibited."

"There may be a distinction of good and bad in secret societies, but as they all alike have obligations to complete oblivion of all they do or say, I turn from them all to the Great Teacher, who said, 'In secret have I said nothing.'"

"These (three) amendments....dispelled the dogma of State sovereignty....There is now a head center to this government as there ought to be, and not a thirty-eight headed monstrosity as they would have had it."

"The ballot is an educator and protector. Will you confine it to men alone; and rob the mother who bore you? Humanity is one flesh. Its many voices blend in one chorus. Bind this interest together in the ballot. The advent of woman at the elections will be only another testimony to her good influence upon man in all the relations of life. Shut her away from this sphere of influence, and you reflect upon the wisdom of her creation, and publish that there is one place—better than the God-made Eden—where it is good for man to be alone."

In the above paragraphs we have condensed, but altered no sentiment of the speaker. And we repeat that this speech is the American system condensed; in the words of the poet Bryant:

> "Where the free spirit of mankind at length > Casts its last fetters off;"

and the tenth reading of it will please and profit more than the first.

And the speech reflects the man. Every line and sentence bears the impress of inwrought earnest conviction. And, besides, these are the utterances of his life, not one of which has been contradicted in his practice. True, he was accused of bribery in Kansas. Congress and the courts of Kansas acquitted him. He is still pursued by the lodge minions, while his successor in the Senate, notoriously guilty of that crime, goes scot free and unsmirched by the press. Senator Ingalls is a Freemason! The Christian "sect" was "everywhere spoken against" until it gained one argument revered by all public men, namely, the majority. Christian politics must meet the same treatment with the Christian religion from the slaves of false worships, until the world changes masters.

SECTARIANISM IN AGUE.

The Interior notices a graduating speech, approved by the Herald and Presbyter, at Lane Seminary Commencement, which held that "The church of the future" is to have no "denominational barriers."

Rev. Luther Myrick, State of New York, started churches half a century ago, holding that sectarian divisions are sin. His followers were anti-secret, undenominational, anti-slavery Presbyterians and Congregationalists.

The editor of the Cynosure, fifty-four years ago, joined a Congregationalist church; has since communed in the body and blood of Christ with, at least, ten Christian denominations; and for thirty-seven years past has been, and now is, a member of a church which has no name or sectarian designation, but simply a "Church of Christ." We lately wrote Rev. Joseph Travis that "divisions of the body of Christ into sects is then only evil when there are rivalries, bickerings, and contentions." A good brother warns us that "a life time cannot counteract the effect of the virus" of that one sentence. We had better said, "Sects are evil because they produce 'rivalries, bickerings and contentions.'"

At the late great Home Missionary meeting at Saratoga, Secretary Clark spoke of "The plague and reproach of sectarian conflict on missionary ground;" and another spoke of the aversion felt by contributors to have their money used "to patch some sectarian flag" where no church was needed.

In a life and ministry somewhat lengthened, we have always excluded unrepentant slave-holders and Freemasons from our Christian fellowship, and have ever held that schism, which is splitting and dividing up the body of Christ, is error and sin. But enforcing discipline by Christ's rule is not schism.

BUTLER, TEWKSBURY AND MORGAN.

The Massachusetts legislature adjourned the other day after one of the longest sessions it ever held, since the investigation of the State Almshouse had dragged out to an interminable length with the governor's assistance. The report on the investigation was of course decided by a party vote, as the whole proceeding had been given a political turn by Butler. The Republicans being a majority, the decision is in favor of the almshouse management.

During the last days of the investigation, when one of the officers of the institution was being examined, Butler insisted on knowing who was paying the expenses of the defense, though, as one gentleman reminded him, he, as governor, was almost daily putting his official signature to bills which were to be paid by the State for conducting the investigation. Butler, however, insisted on knowing who paid for the defense of the investigation, and when the witness proved incorrigible, went off into a whining insinuation that there was some dreadful secret society like the Freemasons who were behind the wall supplying the means for the hard fight made against his authority, as Bunyan's Pilgrim saw the man pouring oil on the flame which another dashed with water. For a moment, in the heat of his indignation, he forgot his thirty-three degrees of lodgery, the mighty titles which should have elevated him above mortal bickering, and the moral instruction that should have helped him to subdue his passions and improve himself in conducting almshouse investigations. Perhaps he had a vivid flash of memory that he had been an "Inspector Inquisitor Commander" and "Sublime Prince of the Royal Secret," and as such the innermost recesses of the hearts of his adversaries should be opened to his powerful gaze. Following this came up the awful shade of Morgan, and he burst out recklessly thus:

—"I insist upon the question. I think it will throw light upon this matter—to my mind and the minds of the committee. Here are witnesses brought here from great distances; here are very large expenses incurred; and I think that if there is any public body behind paying the expenses, why then we know there is a large interest somewhere to affect—I am trying to use soft words about it—to affect the testimony of witnesses; that there is somebody, if he does not pay, and it would be very wonderful if he did under the circumstances. Then I want to show the difficulty under which the investigation labors so far as the presentation of it is concerned, and whether the Commonwealth in this investigation is put to the expense of this prolonged investigation by Capt. Marsh or by some body of men; the investigation is a very important part of the management of the Tewksbury Almshouse, and has its effect upon it; now if there is any body of men, organized body of men, behind this defence, then I can understand the influences, the terrorism, which is brought to bear upon the witnesses in behalf of the prosecution. If there is no such body of men, then I can understand very well that they are freer to act, to answer questions. I remember many years ago that a question before a court came up, and there was supposed to be behind the defence a body of men very largely interested in the defence, and the question was put to the witnesses, in order to show their bias, whether there was such a body of men. I refer to an investigation, Mr. Chairman, which you and I are old enough to remember, the Morgan investigation, and to the Masonic order. Certain persons were being tried for the supposed abduction of Morgan. The question was pressed whether the Masonic fraternity had subscribed money for the defence, or whether the defence was being conducted as usual, and what was the effect on the minds of individuals. I want to know the same thing here."

The unburied Morgan! A veritable Banquo obtruding his ghostly shape even upon the consciousness of obdurate Ben Butler! But that usually astute gentleman shows, like Macbeth, that he is not beyond emotion. He intimates that the lodge is under condemnation for insisting that its members keep their oaths in the Morgan trials. "What was their effect on the minds of individuals?" he asks. The answer is well enough understood. The effect was the same upon all the individuals who composed the interested public outside the lodge. It roused an indignant condemnation that swept over the whole North and before which the lodge went down, as men hoped, forever. In like manner, argues the Inquisitor Commander governor, you alms-house officials are justly to be condemned if you are supported by a secret clique, Masonic or other, in your self-defense, and refuse me knowledge of the matter. "I want to know the same thing" that Spencer, Weed, Bates Cook, and Victory Birdseye tried to find out. Freemasons, individually and as a body, resisted them as you do me. That kind of business I want no more of. The Boston papers call this "sniveling." That's wrong. Butler asserted a great principle in favor of the people, but unfortunately for the Freemasons, he takes them for the most illustrious example of its violation.

MASONIC VENGEANCE.

It is the policy of the Masonic lodge to silence the law by intimidation. It is for this purpose that it administers barbarous oaths, which are so well calculated to impress the minds of the ignorant men who are likely to be its agents. The lodge would have to succumb to the law if criminals who turn State's evidence against the lodge should be allowed to go unpunished. Hence, the informer Carey who exposed the assassins of Lord Cavendish and Mr. Burke was a doomed man.

It appears that when Carey embarked on board the "Kinfaun's Castle" for Port Elizabeth, he was under the assumed name of Mr. Power, and had his wife and seven children with him; but notwithstanding he was scented out, and a bloodhound of the lodge, O'Donnell, an Irish-American, secured a passage for himself and wife on board the same steamer.

Carey died without speaking a word. O'Donnell, who shot him, had doubtless learned the assassin's trade in the Ancient and Honorable Order of Freemasons in the United States. He was a Fenian.

On the evening of July 31st, 1883, it was telegraphically reported from Dublin that the city was alive with bonfires and processions in a general jubilation over the assassination.

O'Donnell is in arrest, and will doubtless be hung; so that intimidation from the law will keep steady pace with that exercised by the Masonic lodge. The only question is, Which shall have the ascendency, the law or the lodge?

In this contest an American paper has the baseness to say that not much sympathy is felt for Carey. Its editor is doubtless a Mason, and has no sympathy himself for men who expose the secrets of the lodge, "murder and treason not excepted."

The Freemasons of the Knight Templar degree are on their way this week for California. Train loads of them were on their way last Sabbath. Many more will be desecrating next Sabbath in their journeying, marching and pleasure-seeking in open defiance of that God who they profess blasphemously to honor. The example of President Arthur and his Secretary of the Treasury is in most honorable contrast to this lodge wickedness. Their journey, begun with an honorable respect for the Christian Sabbath, is continued in the same spirit, since the company encamped on leaving the train last Sabbath morning. They owe it to the nation whom they represent to continue this honorable course.

—Providence has ordered kindly a season of long days and short nights so that the business of life might be carried on rapidly and with the greatest energy. The Business of the Cynosure and the N. C. A. being among the important affairs of the time, attention is invited to the remarks of the General Agent on the 13th and 16th pages.

—The Johnson county, Kansas, Christian Association will meet in Olathe on Tuesday evening, August 14th. Dr. R. B. Taylor of Spring Hill, Kansas, formerly of Summerville, Ohio, and well known among the reformers of that State as lecturer and seeeded Mason, is expected to speak on the occasion.

—General Phelps gives an original solution of the Indian question, one which would be likely to be suggested only to a mind familiar with military affairs. It is true that this question has provoked more diversity of opinion than almost any other connected with our government, and will for years to come; and all will read with attentive interest his ideas upon the subject, noting with satisfaction that the result is what all desire, though the way to it a majority would probably avoid.

—Brethren M. A. Gault and H. P. McClurkin, agents of the National Reform Association, are arranging for conventions to promote the religious reform in our constitution at Wahoo, Nebraska, Clarinda, Iowa, and other points during the present month. Bro. Gault also expects to address the Iowa State convention at Albia on the 28th.

—The Banner of Truth, Baker, Mo., and the Olathe, Kans., Free Press, though little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of them cometh that Truth that shall yet rule the people of this and all lands. Rarely in any quarter do we find the case against the lodge argued more clearly. They deserve a circulation of tens of thousands.

—The Rescue, a new reform paper published in Goshen, Ind., and edited by Elder Joel H. Austin, has just reached our table. It is a neat four-page sheet, the inside pages being "ready printed," the outside only original matter, which shows vigorous and earnest thinking. The beginning of a new reform paper shows that the principles advocated are gaining many adherents among the people. Let there be one in every county seat.

—Bro. H. Curtis of Olathe, Kansas, writes from a sick bed, of the Kansas State convention, his love for the reform and zeal in its prosecution triumphing over his severe physical disability. It is hoped that the State Capitol building at Topeka can be secured for the meeting, and a general rally will be made to secure the ablest speakers and the largest representation possible. The latest consultation fixes the convention upon the 24th of September, following the Wesleyan conference. Bro. Starry has been requested to attend and the N. C. A. Secretary is asked to come early and assist in the preliminary arrangements.

—The funeral of Thomas Hoyne, the eminent citizen of Chicago, killed in the late railway disaster in Orleans county, New York, was conducted in a Romanist church, where he attended, though the other members of the family belong to evangelical churches. The body was laid away, however, in the unconsecrated ground of Rosehill cemetery, and he was at one time in his life a member of the Masonic lodge, which we do not know that he ever renounced, though the lodge could make no honorable claim upon him as a member. The funeral address by the officiating priest echoed the principles of his church bearing upon such a case and his praise of the dead was, from the press report, as faint as his warning to the living urgent.

—A note from Bro. C. W. Sherman of the Vanguard, St. Louis, says that a tent meeting at Tower Hill, Ill., which he was attending lately, was mobbed by Masons and others, the tent cut down and a rush made for the preachers with fierce threats of personal violence.

—A letter from Mrs. A. D. Zaraphonithes, now in Andros, Greece, was received just as we go to press, in which a statement is made respecting their leaving Smyrna, which reflects severely upon the management of the American Board in that city. The friends of these missionaries will read the letter next week and pray that their trial may be overruled for the advancing of Christ's kingdom through their efforts, and that the acts of the Board, so far as injustice has been done, may be reconsidered.

—On Thursday evening last one of the saddest fatalities in the history of Chicago came upon the family of Mr. James Van Bezey of 369 West Polk street, a respected and well-to-do contractor and builder. Between 6 and 7 P. M., Mr. Van Bezey with three children, two daughters aged 16 and 13 years and a son aged 10, took a hack to go to one of the railway stations to meet an aunt. Reaching the river the driver stopped on the viaduct over the railway to wait for the closing of an open bridge. Suddenly the team, scared by the whistle of an engine beneath them, sprang toward the river, and the reins breaking the driver leaped for life but fell over the chasm just as the team and carriage plunged down twenty feet into the stream. Mr. Van Bezey, more fortunate, kicked open one door and attempted to drag out one of the children with himself. He lost hold of the child but was thrown out himself. The three children, imprisoned in the close carriage, sank with it, their screams faintly heard in the awful plunge. Help was secured as soon as possible and the carriage dragged to the surface and on board a tug. The body of the oldest daughter only was found in it. The other bodies were recovered next day after long dragging the river. The funeral on Saturday afternoon was attended by a large number of sympathizing friends and acquaintances in the Holland church. Mr. Van Bezey's family were well known and highly esteemed by many, prayer meetings being frequently held at his house. The three children were attendants upon the Band of Hope connected with the Chicago Christian Association, for which primarily the interesting Bible lesson, which appear in the Cynosure are prepared. The two younger were respectively secretary and librarian of the Band. All were among the happy party which lately visited Wheaton for a day of joy and rest in the country. So soon and suddenly have their bright lives been cut off from earthly friends, we hope to bloom more brightly in the skies.

IOWA STATE MEETING.

The Anti-Secret Christian Association of the State of Iowa, will meet in eighth annual convention at Albia, Monroe county, Aug. 28-30, 1883. The following programme is prepared:

Tuesday evening, Aug. 28, Address by Hon. S. C. Pomeroy, of Kansas.

Wednesday, 9 A. M. Devotions; 9:30 Business; 10:30 Report of State Agent. 2 P. M. Discussion, Sabbath Question, opened by Rev. T. P. Robb; 3:15 Discussion, Prohibition, opened by Pres. C. A. Blanchard; 8 P. M. Secrecy and the Church, by Pres. J. T. McMichael, to be followed by Sec'y J. P. Stoddard.

Thursday 9 A. M. Devotions; 9:30 Business; 10:30 Political Meeting; 2 P. M. Divine Recognition in Government, Revs. M. A. Gault, Wm. Johnston, and R. C. Wylie; 8 P. M. Degree Working, by Rev. D. P. Rathbun, S. E. Starry, and others.

We would be glad to welcome every friend of reform to this meeting. Let this be made a grand rally. The programme is undoubtedly the best we have yet presented, and we trust, under God, it will be the richest convention yet held under our auspices. Come all.

THE PRESIDENT'S TRIP.

President Arthur left Fortress Monroe on Sabbath, July 22d, in the United States vessel, the Dispatch, of whose movements he had full control, and reached Cape May on the following day. Thus another inexcusable public violation of the Sabbath gives evidence that the head of the nation does not acknowledge the obligation of the day of rest. As his attitude toward social drinking usages is well-known, it will surprise no one to learn that at an open air concert at Cape May the President and some companions were publicly served with wines and liquors in the presence of more than a thousand people.

Since the foregoing item was in type the papers of Monday morning have brought the gratifying intelligence that the President's departure for the West, which had been arranged to take place at ten o'clock on the evening of Sabbath, July 29th, was postponed until four o'clock on Monday morning. This change was brought about through the influence of Secretary Folger, who stated to the President that he had conscientious scruples against traveling on the Sabbath, that he had never done so when he could possibly avoid it, and that if it were not objectionable to the President he would start on Monday, omit the visit to Greenbrier White Sulphur Springs, and join him in Louisville. The President thereupon sent word to the gentlemen composing his party that he had determined not to begin an important journey on the Sabbath. He suggested to them, if they would be inconvenienced by waiting until four o'clock in the morning, that they go down to the station in the evening and spend the night in the sleeper. This suggestion was adopted. All honor to Secretary Folger for his faithful and timely action, and to the President for his courteous and considerate acquiescence in the Secretary's views. The result shows what good may result from the firm but modest position of a single man who is actuated by conscientious convictions. Secretary Folger not only secured the postponement of the excursion until the Sabbath was past, but his quiet refusal to travel on that day is a protest against needless Sabbath desecration, and a testimony to the authority and sacredness of the day which will be of incalculable moral benefit to the nation.—Christian Statesman.

STATE CONVENTIONS.

The season for holding State conventions is near and special preparations should be commenced with reference to their success. Iowa leads off at Albia, Aug. 28th, with a well-digested programme including Government Reform, the Sabbath, Prohibition along with Anti-secrecy. An able corps of speakers have been secured, including, with home talent, two or three men from abroad, and now it remains for the people of Iowa to rally and show themselves truly loyal in supporting these fundamental issues, which the lodge, the rum power, and the infidelity of the country combined is forcing every loyal man and woman to consider. There is no longer neutral ground on any one of these issues. You must be either for or against this trinity in unity, the Lodge, Rum and Infidelity.

Kansas follows next in order of time, Sept. 24th, at Topeka. The friends are vigorously at work and will not suffer their successful record to be shadowed by a failure or even a partial success. This young, enterprising State has learned that elections are manipulated in the "Secret Chambers," and that if the real temperance people would succeed in throttling rum, they must begin with the lodges where schemes are hatched for their defeat at the polls, and where miscreants and traitors find shelter among congenial spirits. We hope to meet all the old corps and a host of enterprising, fearless recruits at Topeka, Sept. 24th, next.

The "Empire State" comes next in order and is planning a genuine, old-fashioned, Anti-masonic love feast, continuing three days or more. Meetings on the field of "bloody memories," and almost under the shadow of that towering granite shaft, surmounted by a life size statue of Capt. Wm. Morgan, and in the midst of a goodly number of friends, nothing short of a grand success can be anticipated. Our indefatigable co-worker, F. W. Capwell, with Bros. Hyatt and Wardner as "right and left hand supporters," has his head and heart set on a grand time, and he ought to have it. He has richly merited it by his past services. The only thing likely to defeat his purpose, and so damage the cause, is indifference or want of co-operation on the part of those who desire this movement to succeed, but do little more to help it on than to simply keep out of the lodges and keep their mouths shut. There are enough ministers, church members and women in New York State of this conservative, silent class who really hate the lodge, to drive the whole accursed system out of the church, if they were one half as active and persistent as Bro. Capwell and his good wife. Now I protest in the name of common civility and religion against this treatment of a brother who is advocating your principles, and who has never flinched or shown the white flag when money or a man was needed in any of the hard questions with which you have had to grapple in the old Genesee Baptist Association.

Some of you veteran Baptist ministers were the bosom friends of David Bernard and John G. Stearns, and when the "hidden hand" that grasped the dagger was uncovered, you saw it crimsoned with the blood of the slain. You are near the judgment, and the "great white throne," and the innumerable company of the "first born in heaven." But you have a little strength graciously given you; can you anticipate meeting your Judge in full assurance, and clasping the spirit hand of the sainted Bernard or Stearns, without your cheek blanching with shame if you slink away in silence and allow the bride of Christ to be polluted in the embrace of that "man of sin," against which they strove and prayed and preached and fought at the peril of their lives, so long as they had a hand to work or a tongue to speak? When Bernard died and went to heaven did he leave only cowards behind him in the old Genesee Association and in western New York? If not, where are the brave men in this fight, who like him would die before he would kiss the "image of the Beast," or sit silent while the lodge vampires sucked the blood out of the church and the state? If such men and women, and ministers yet live in old Genesee Association or any where else in New York State we want to shake their hands, catch a gleam of sunshine from their faces, and feel a thrill of inspiration from their presence at your State meeting this fall. May God in mercy forgive the past in whatsoever you have come short, and give the open hand, the willing mind and the Holy anointing to come "up to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty."

There are republicans in France; there are republicans in South America, and there are also republicans in Hayti; but it is the American party which is wanted to run the Republic of the United States.

BETTER THINGS.

Better to smell the violet cool than sip the glowing wine;
Better to watch a hidden brook than watch the diamond shine.

Better the love of a gentle heart than beauty's favors proud;
Better the rose's living seed than roses in a crowd.

Better to love in loneliness than to bask in love all day;
Better a fountain in the heart than the fountain by the way.

Better to be fed by mother's hand than eat alone at will;
Better to trust in God than say, "My goods my store-house fill."

Better to be a little wise than in knowledge to abound;
Better to teach a child than to till to fill with perfection's round.

Better to sit at a master's feet than thrill a listening senate;
Better to suspect that thou art proud than be sure that thou art great.

Better to walk in the real unseen than watch the hour's event;
Better the "Well done!" at last than the air with shouting rent.

Better to have a quiet grief than a hurrying delight;
Better the twilight of the dawn than the noonday burning bright.

Better a death when work is done than earth's most favored birth;
Better a child in God's great house than the king of all the earth.

TWO COBRAS.

Rev. J. Chamberlain, missionary at Madanapalle, India, answers in the Intelligencer the question, "Are you ever bothered with those venomous serpents and insects and scorpions, from the bite and sting of which so many thousands of natives there in India die every year?" by telling some of his own experiences:

Well, yes, we are a little bothered by them sometimes. Yesterday, for instance, as we came home from the early morning service at church—it was Sunday—we came in at the front door and were hardly seated when our school-teacher, who followed us, saw as he approached the house a huge cobra in full chase after a frog, who was jumping frantically past the door-steps to get away from him. Up into the varandah jumped master frog, by my study door and the cobra followed. The frog escaped beneath an article of furniture, and the cobra, after looking around and finding nothing else to catch, glided off the varandah and among the flower-pots standing on the ground, and disappeared.

Where he had gone no one could imagine, but it was not comfortable to sit with the doors all open as we do, and know that he was so near. A careful search was made. Between two flower-pots not eight feet from the verandah by my study door was discovered a hole in the ground, which no one had noticed before. On looking down that hole about ten inches, a coil of snake could be seen. How to get at him was the question. Sunday as it was, he must not be left there. So I took my revolver in one hand and a flat bar of iron in the other, and went out. The sun was shining directly into the hole. I could see a part of his snakeship. Putting the end of my bar of iron in the hole, if turned flat-wise it would prevent the snake coming out. When turned on edge, I could shoot by it. Turning it quickly on edge I shot in. What a squirming. Bar flat again. Once more turning edgewise suddenly, and another shot. More squirming. The five barrels of the revolver were unloaded. Leaving the bar of iron in flat, I went and reloaded. Once more the bar turned edgewise. Up comes the head of the cobra with mouth open, tongue darting, fangs protruding, just in time to take a pistol shot into the open mouth. Fangs are smashed and tongue blown out. The head vanishes in the hole. More squirming. More shots. At last quiet reigns. The blades of a long-handled pair of pruning-shears are introduced cautiously into the hole. The neck of the cobra is seized. Out he comes and the hole is at once stopped again by the bar of iron. Twenty spectators witness the amputation of that cobra's head. The hole is then again cautiously examined and, as I had suspected, more squirming is seen inside. Cobras usually go in pairs. A few minutes more of lively work with the pistol and the shears bring out a second cobra, larger than the first and with eleven pistol holes through his long, body. His head is uninjured. I cut it off carefully tie its mouth open, and suspend it in a jar of alcohol. There it is on the shelf now. See those magnificent fangs. The death of twenty men and beasts is in them, if they could be brought into play. I measured the bodies. One was six feet and one inch long and as large around as my forearm. The other was five feet and three inches long. A goodly pair. I left the hole stopped up, and this morning had it dug out. No more snakes there. We feel relieved, though we doubt not that there are still others in our compound. We kill one every now and then. We killed one in the bathroom at Palamanair, a six-footer. His fangs I sent to America. Cobras do not often come into the house. Other snakes and reptiles do oftener.

Not long ago my wife and son were coming towards my open study door in the verandah, when I heard a shout and call. I sprang to the door and there was a very venomous green viper crawling towards my open door. A walking-stick ended his career. It was one somewhat like this that fell from the rafters of our ceilingless house upon the bed of our sleeping infant a few years ago. He struck on the corner of the bed and rolled off. A shout from the Ayah brought me, and he was turned into a curiosity very speedily. The serpent which, as I looked up from my cot, I saw hanging down over my head, with his body coiled once around one of the sticks of the thatched-roof hut in which I had put up, on a tour some years ago, was of a different kind. He measured full nine feet in length; larger than a cobra ever grows, but said to be as deadly.

Scorpions, we never know when we are free from. Many natives die from their sting, which is in the end of their tail. Those hung up in that bottle of alcohol on my shelf were taken, seven in one hole, on leveling off the ground in front of the house. That dried one in this drawer was mean enough to get into his bed and sting one of my sick catechists in the hospital. The catechist suffered much through the night; but, being in the hospital, remedies were at hand and he was over the pain by the next day, and he seemed to be happy in his vengeance when he brought me the dead scorpion. That smaller dried one was found an uninvited guest in our last Christmas feast. I saw him run out from under the leaf-plate of one of the guests sitting on the mat near me, and my foot proved to heavy for the scorpion before he had done any harm. One night in our tent on a tour, my wife knocked a scorpion over with her bare foot, but was out of his way before he had time to turn end for end and strike, and my slipper quieted his activities.

We have killed scores of them in our own bedrooms, and once in clearing a stony piece of ground under a large tree to pitch my tent, seventy scorpions were killed. Tarantulas we occasionally kill running up the walls of our bed-rooms, or shake them out of our clothes, but we more often find them in our tents pitched under trees. One evening as I sat writing in my tent, I paused and looked up perpendicularly for the next idea, and there hanging on the cloth tent roof exactly over my head was a four-inch tarantula. My slipper suddenly transformed him into a "specimen." The last time I was out in my tent I killed two tarantulas in one day, one within a foot of my head when I saw him.

Yes, between cobras and serpents and vipers and scorpions and centipedes and tarantulas we are sometimes somewhat "bothered," but have never been harmed.

It is a somewhat singular and interesting fact that in the whole history of our mission not a single member of the mission or of the families, so far as I know, has ever been bitten or stung or poisoned by any of these abundant pests. The blessed security of the ninety-first Psalm does seem to be vouchsafed to us most wonderfully. Verily a thousand do fall at our side and ten thousand at our right hand, but it does not come nigh us, and we seem to hear the voice of him whom we come here to serve, saying, "There shall no evil befall thee. Neither shall any plague come nigh thy dwelling."

THE LYING PROPHET.

1 KINGS. XIII.

The story of the servant of God who lost his life by listening to the counsels of a lying prophet, is familiar to all who search the Word. It conveys to us several solemn lessons, some of which we note:

I. A man sent of God must know his own business, attend to his Master's commands, take his instructions direct from headquarters, and observe them.

II. Gray-headed and reputable prophets, ministers, or professed servants of the Lord, with kindly feelings and good impulses, will sometimes lie to gain their own ways or ends.

III. Younger and less experienced servants of God, who would not yield to the commands of kings, or give heed to lies told by blasphemers, or drunkards, or idolaters, are specially liable to listen to lies told by old prophets, or ministers whom they believe to be honest, and whom they suppose to know a great deal more than they themselves do.

IV. God sometimes speaks by the lips of men who have lied, and his message of wrath is conveyed by the very persons whose wrong doing has caused his indignation.

V. The lying prophet does not bear the burden of the mischief he has done. The man who has listened to his words and disobeyed the Lord must meet his doom, even if it is a prophet who has led him astray.

VI. It is a poor reparation, after ruining a man and blasting his life by lies and misdirections, to take up his body and make a fine funeral, and bury him in a most respectable sepulchre.

VII. Let every young man learn to attend to his own work, and not be diverted from it by the advice, admonitions, or persuasions of lying prophets, whether old or young.

VIII. Let old prophets mind their own business; and if they have nothing to do for the Lord themselves, let them not hinder others who are used of God, nor, by lies, seduce them away from the path of duty, into disobedience, danger and death.—The Christian.

HOME HINTS.

THE DIETETIC VALUE OF RICE.

The increase in the consumption of rice has lately attracted the attention of several men of science in Germany, and amongst other investigations an attempt has been made by Professor Voit to discover the relative capacity which various forms of nourishment possess of being incorporated into the system. He has drawn up the following table of the percentage which remains in the body, and of that which leaves it:—

	Remaining	Not retained
Meat	96.7	3.3
Rice	96.1	3.9
Eggs	94.8	5.2
White Bread	94.4	5.6
Maize	93.3	6.7
Potatoes	90.7	9.3
Milk	88.9	11.1
Black Bread	88.5	11.5

According to these results (the Bremer Handelsblatt remarks) meat and rice leave the smallest amount of residum, and occasion the smallest excessive exertion to the digestion, and in fact introduce the minimum quantity of ballast into the human frame. Dr. Konig, of Munster. considers that the fact of large masses of population living on rice is easily accounted for; and in summing up the information collected upon the subject, Professor Voit remarks that potatoes, when consumed in excessive quantity, fail to nourish the frame effectively, make the blood watery, and render the muscles weak. Apart from the subject dealt with in the table drawn by Professor Voit, the question of the relative nutritive value of rice and potatoes has been investigated by Dr. Konig, who is of opinion that if similar quantities of both articles are compared, the former possesses four times the value of the latter in really nutritive properties. It is also remarked that the introduction of rice as a substitute for potatoes is facilitated by the fact that no such variation takes place in its quality as is the case with the potato, which is liable to be materially influenced by the effects of unfavorable weather.

On the cooking of rice, a correspondent of The Miller gives the following directions:—

Just put the rice into boiling water, with a little salt, and let it boil twenty minutes; strain the water away, dash it over with cold water, and strain once more; put the rice back again into the sauce-pan and cover with a cloth, and let it stand near the fire until required for dishing up. Thus prepared, it is a delicious dish. We used to take four times the time and ten times the trouble; but we never had a dish to bear the least comparison with rice prepared as above.

To those who are Going to Sea.—On the subject of sea-sickness Col. Knox, who is a great traveler, has this useful hint to offer: To those who contemplate going to sea I have a little advice to offer that may save them the pangs of the marine malady. The night you are to sail, take a blue pill—ten grains—just before you go to bed, and when you get up in the morning, take, the first thing, a dose of citrate of magnesia. Then eat your breakfast and go on board, and I will wager four to one that you will not be sea-sick, though the water may be as rough as an Arkansas traveler's manners.

The above was given to me several years ago, and I have rigidly followed it every time I have gone to sea since I received it. It has saved me from sea-sickness, and it has been of equal value to many others, to whom I have given it.

To get rid of Mosquitoes.—It is stated by a writer in Nature that quassia-water is a protection against the attacks of these sirenic insects. He tried a weak solution on a child's face, which had become grievously tormented, and it worked to a charm, preventing the gray-backed suckers from dining on the baby's rosy dimples. All that is necessary is to moisten the face with the solution of quassia. It should be weak for this purpose, for a strong solution of quassia is an active poison to flies, sugar being mixed with it to attract them; but it is not powerful enough to kill the insects very quickly.

"Well," remarked a young M. D. just from college, "I suppose the next thing will be to hunt a good location, and then wait for something to do, like 'Patience on a monument.'" "Yes," said a bystander, "and it won't be long after you do begin before the monuments will be on the patients."

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

THE FRUITFUL TREE.

Some think that life should have no strife,
But I do not.
The tree, deep in the forest shades,
Where neither wind nor storm invades,
Though it may tall and shapely be,
Is yet a weak and strengthless tree.

Some think that life should be all strife,
But I do not.
The tree out on the prairie plain,
That aye must fight the hurricane,
Though it may tough and hardy be,
Is yet a gnarled and stunted tree.

Some wish in life both peace and strife,
And so do I.
The tree that in the garden grows,
Where sun now shines and storm now blows,
Although it may not perfect be
Is yet o fair and fruitful tree.

WHAT'S THE HARM?

"Mother, I'd like to know why I can't go? What's the harm in a game of billiards? Most all the boys of my age are learning to play, and they say 'taint any worse than croquet. Hugh Collins' father has bought him a splendid billiard table 'cause he don't want him to play in the saloon, and the boys go there every chance they get, and they wanted me to come over and see them play this evening. Hugh Collins and Seth Leech are going to play a match game. Oh, I do want to go so bad. Can't I go?"

Mrs. Hathaway's face looked grave and troubled, as her precious boy and only son waxed earnest in his entreaties.

"Willie, I will tell you a story, a true one, and then you may answer your own question. Once there was a bright boy, an only son and brother of fond parents and sisters. He learned to play this game as you would now, on a friend's table, and became a wonderful player, an expert at the game. Soon after, when he was about fourteen years of age his parents moved to a country town, where there were no billiard tables outside of the saloon, where, of course, he was not permitted to go; but he had become so passionately fond of the game that he would stop surreptitiously now and then for a game with his companions. He scorned the idea of playing for money, but it was the custom to play for drinks. As nothing stronger than lemonade was taken, he saw no harm in doing so. Ere long a fixed habit, which neither parents' nor sisters' entreaties could overcome, caused him to frequent saloons, where so much evil in every form existed. From playing for drinks he soon played for money, winning often. His success fascinated him the more, luring him to destruction. I think the wily saloon-keeper often put something stronger than water in lemonade, as he soon disliked it when at home. Well, in a few short years he was a confirmed drunkard. His course broke his mother's heart. Indeed, the happiness of the whole family was destroyed by his career, which in his boyhood promised so much."

"Why, mother, what's the matter? why do you cry so? I don't want to go. I won't tease you any more, if it makes you feel so bad."

"Willie, I have been telling you about your Uncle Robert, my own brother—died last year you know—such a fearful death. Oh, it breaks my heart, my son, to think of it. But I tell you of his sad history."

"Don't mother, say anything about it, I can now see 'what's the harm.' Perhaps the boys will get to gambling over this very game, and if I was there, I'm so excitable, I'd be as bad as any of them in betting. I wish I wasn't so easily led into temptation, mother."

"I'm glad, my son, you know your frailty. Reach my Bible from the shelf; here are two verses which I would like you to commit to memory this evening: 'Wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall.' 'There hath no temptation taken you, but such as is common to all men; but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able to bear, but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may bear it.' And now I think I had better tell you another bit of family history which is, and will be for some time to come, a living sorrow—caused by evil companions. You know your father took a hasty journey to the State of O—— some time ago. Perhaps you have observed how sad and distant he has been ever since. He went, my son, to see if something could not be done to keep his baby brother—called so because the youngest of his family—your Uncle William, from going to State's prison, the just penalty for the crime he had committed. It was not his first offense, and his employers were bound the law should take its course—would not allow your father and your grandfather to settle the matterr A month ago the trial came off, and he was senteneed for three years in the penitentiary."

Mrs. Hathaway in anguish covered her face, and Willie cried, "What! my uncle go to prison! Why, mother, mother, I'm named after him! Oh, how terrible! how he has disgraced us!"

"Yes, you see, my son, one cannot do wrong and only suffer himself."

"Oh, mother, what was he thinking of? why did he do it?"

"Ah, my son, no one ever commits a great crime at once. 'Twas so gradual that he did not realize his danger. He told your father it never would have happened had he left evil companions and gambling alone. They usually go hand in hand."

"Oh mother, I'm so glad you wouldn't let me go; and now I'll learn these verses; they are just what I need; I'm so easily urged to do anything."

"Well, my son, we cannot expect the divine aid, mentioned in the verses, unless we ask for it."—Lutheran Standard.

OPEN YOUR BIBLES.

BIBLE READING EMBLEMS.— CORN. Read Luke 2:25-38.

Thou shalt come to thy grave in a full age, like as a shock of corn cometh in in his season. Job 5:26.

1. Corn sown that it may be reaped. Ps. 126:6.
2. All the changes of sun and shower, calm and storm, are preparatory. Jas. 5:7; Rom. 8:28.
3. Corn cut when ripe. Mark 4:28, 29; Luke 2:29.
4. Carefully gathered. Mat. 13:30; Ps. 116:15.
5. Brought in with joy. Isa. 9:3; Eccl. 7:1.
6. All anxiety concerning its safety over. Luke 16:22; Ps. 37:37.
7. Ripening corn hangs down its head and becomes loose at the roots. Job 42:6; Phil. 1:23.

STORIES ABOUT ANIMALS.

F. A. Fernald, in Popular Science Monthly for May, gives among others the following anecdotes:

The higher mental facalties are more developed in the elephant than in any other animal, except the dog and the monkey. The general fact that elephants are habitually employed in parts of India for storing timber, building, etc., shows a high level of docile intelligence. But perhaps in no labor in which they are employed do they display a more wonderful sagacity than in helping to catch wild elephants. A herd of wild elephants is driven into a corral, and two tame ones ridden in among them. The decoys will crowd upon either side of a wild one, and protect the nooser until a rope is fastened round the wild elephant's leg, when the tame one, to whose collar the other end of the rope is attached, will drag the captive out, and wind the rope round a tree, while the other decoy prevents any interference from the herd, and pushes the captive toward the tree, thus enabling the first one to take in the slack of the rope. The conduct of the tame ones during all these proceedings is truly wonderful. They display the most perfect conception of every movement, both of the object to be attained and of the means to accomplish it. On one occasion, in tying up a large elephant, he contrived, before he could be hauled close up to the tree, to walk once or twice around it, carrying the rope with him; the decoy, perceiving the advantage he had thus gained over the nooser, walked up of her own accord and pushed him backward with her head till she make him unwind himself again; upon which the rope was hauled tight and made fast.

One could almost fancy there was a display of dry humor in the manner in which the decoys thus play with the fears of the wild herd, and make light of their efforts at resistance. When reluctant they shove them forward, when violent they drive them back; when the wild ones throw themselves down, the tame ones butt them with head and shoulders and force them up again; and, when it is necessary to keep them down, they kneel upon them, and prevent them from rising till they are secured.

A remarkable degree of cunning was displayed by an elephant who had been chained to a tree, and whose driver had made an oven at a short distance, in which to put some rice-cakes to bake. The man covered his cakes with stone and grass and went away. When he was gone, the elephant with his trunk unfastened the chain round his foot, went to the oven and uncovered it, took out and ate the cakes, re-covered the oven with the stones and grass as before, and went back to his place. He could not fasten the chain again round his own foot, so he twisted it round and round it, in order to look the same, and when the driver returned the elephant was standing with his back to the oven. The driver went for his cakes, discovered the theft, and, looking round, caught the elephant's eye as he looked back over his shoulder out of the corner of it. Instantly he detected the culprit, and condign punishment followed.

TEMPERANCE.

GERMAN LIQUOR LAWS.

The following, showing the German laws with regard to the sale of beer and liquors, is from a speech lately delivered by Gov. Foster, of Ohio:

I have been at some pains to find out what the German laws in reference to this traffic are. I wrote to the Hon. Arthur Lee, who was four or five years Consul at Frankfort-on-the-Main, and asked him if he could tell me. He told me in a general way. But he wrote to a friend in Germany, so as to get all the particulars, and then he wrote to me, and I hold in my hand an epitome of the German laws on that subject, which I will read:

"1 Must obtain a permit, and in order to get that must show a good character. If the presumption is that the person applying would abuse the privilege by permitting drunkenness, allowing gambling, or tolerating secret vice, permission is refused. Also, when the intended place of business is so located and arranged as not to comply with police regulations, permission is refused.

"2. Permission to commence a retail trade in liquors, or to open beer and wine houses with which the entertaining of travelers is not connected, shall only be granted when the proper official authorities shall be convinced of the necessity and usefulness of such an enterprise. This rule was adoped in Prussia in 1835, and has been continued by the Empire.

"3. Permission to carry on a hotel or a retail business in wine or beer in a place of 15,000 inhabitants shall only be granted when the local police and communal authorities shall give their opinions as to its necessities.

"4. The place where the retail business is located shall not be remote, so that police supervision shall not be inconvenient. The main entrance shall lead directly to the place of business, and not through rooms and chambers, which are not appropriate. [No sneaking around corners, or cigar-stands, or through alleys, but the entrance must be from the street, so that the police can enter without any trouble.]

"5. The business shall not be located in the immediate neighborhood of a school, church, or cemetery.

"6. A wide distinction is made between malt and distilled liquors.

"7. In each Prussian village which constitutes the exclusive jurisdiction of a Burgomaster at least one place for the sale of spirituous liquors may be allowed; but where two or more villages are united in the same magisterial jurisdiction they shall be treated as one village in this respect. When the drinking places in any particular town are, in the judgment of the police, more numerous than necessary, the number may be reduced. [Now, imagine some of our old topers having to march all through a village containing 1,500 inhabitants to get a drink from one place! Why, they would find it more troublesome to get a drink than to do without it.]

"8. Brewers and distillers cannot engage in a retail traffic in their own productions without a license.

"9. Burgomasters, village magistrates, guardians of the forest, turnpike-keepers, superintendents of railway stations, auctioneers and their assistants, railway building employees, mine superintendents, proprietors of factories, artisans and master workmen, clerks, and all other persons connected with factories are forbidden to engage in the traffic in alcoholic beverages, and the traffic is forbidden about factories or any place within a mile of the same. [Now, imagine our City Council. If that was in Germany there would not be a saloon-keeper in the whole body!]

"10. Public dancing announcements are not included in the permits granted to the keepers of coffee and beer or wine houses, hotels, or gin-houses. Such amusements must be specially licensed. The regulation of public amusements is referred to the local police, whose discretion in villages is limited to one permission a month. In the Rhine provinces public amusements, as dancing, are limited by law in number and duration. [One dance a month! Why, how could Germans get along in Cincinnati that are now talking of being robbed by our people of their personal liberties if they could not dance but once a month?]

"11. The communes are permitted, with the approval of the States, to tax luxury, ostentation, and public pleasures. In Lubeck, in addition to license tax, special taxes are laid which are not only restrictive, but largely prohibitory. The keepers of such places vigorously resisted the special tax in court, but without success. [Now, that is a sumptuary law: that is what it means, and all that it does mean.]

"12. Whoever remains in a schenkstube (wine or beer saloon) or place of public resort beyond the prescribed police hours may be fined five thalers, and the landlord who permits such violation may be fined twenty thalers or imprisonment fourteen days. The police requirements demand that such places shall be closed on or before midnight.

"13. Whoever violates the ordinance against the disturbance of Sunday, or holidays, or solemn anniversaries may be fined twenty thalers or imprisonment fourteen days.

"14. Keepers of drinking places who continue to sell spirituous liquors to a person whom the police have designated to them as a drunkard, or who permit such persons to remain in their public rooms, may be fined from two to five thalers, and any retail vender of beer and wine who continues to sell such beverages to any one who betrays traces of drunkenness may be fined from one-half thaler to ten thalers. Repetition of the offense results in the withdrawal and cancellation of the offender's license. [Now, that is the Adair law with a double sting to it. Instead of requiring the wives or the friends of drunken men to notify the saloon-keepers, it is made the duty of the police to notify them, and if they sell to them, whether notified or not, they're punished for doing it, and for the second offense their license is withdrawn.]

"15. Keepers of houses where drinks are sold, or billiard-saloons or confectionery shops, are not allowed to receive upon their premises scholars in the public schools and other educational institutions of the place, unless such scholars shall be accompanied by their parents or guardians. Neither is the sale of food or drink to such scholars at the places named permitted, and the fact that the person violating this act did not know that they were receiving or selling to scholars in the schools may not be pleaded in mitigation of the offense."

At the Chester City Police Court lately John Odgen, smith, who has for some time been in the workhouse, was charged with being drunk and assaulting the police. The chief constable said that this was Odgen's one hundred and tenth appearance for drunkenness, etc. He had calculated that he and his family had cost the city of Chester more than $5,000.

In the legislature of Kansas, recently, the House decided not to submit to the people of the State the question of constitutional prohibition. The vote stood 65 to 51.

THE CHURCHES.

—On Friday evening last the friends of A. J. Chittenden of the College church, Wheaton, met him and his family at the house of Pres. C. A. Blanchard and presented him by the latter with a purse of $60. The gathering was very large, quite informal, and marked the general and high esteem felt toward Bro. Chittenden by all the people of the place.

—Rev. Wm. Wishart, D.D., of Ohio has been requested to present a paper to the United Presbyterian convention to be held in the Fourth Church, Allegheny, Pa., which shall be a summary of all the arguments against the use of instruments in the public worship of God.

—Rev. T. C. Jerome, formerly of New Bedford, Mass., now preaching at Gorham, N.H., has during the past year held a Sabbath afternoon service at Gorham Hill, six miles away and in the heart of the White Mountains. A few days since a new church building was dedicated and a new church organized at the place.

—The eighth annual Faith Convention, under the charge of Dr. Cullis, began July 26, on the camp-ground at Old Orchard Beach. Dr. Cullis conducted a devotional service and preached a sermon. Capt. T. A. Carter, of the Pennsylvania State Medical School, spoke on the words, "Is anything too hard for God," and Rev. J. M. Sutherland also preached giving an account of his experience on the stage and his conversion; and others gave their testimony. About 500 persons present.

—Mrs. Letitia Faurot, widow of Bro. R. Faurot, who died last year at his post in Jackson, Mississippi, writes to the Christian Standard from Ottumwa, Iowa, of a journey through the West and expected return to St. Louis, Mich. She hopes soon to return to the South and buy or build a house at Edwards, Miss., which shall be a center of missionary influence and a home for missionary workers.

—In 1830 it was not known that there was a single Protestant among the French speaking people of Canada, now there are 3,000 communicants and a Freneh Protestant population of about 11,000.

—The missionaries among the Indians of Alaska regard them as probably a branch of the Japanese of Coreans, and report their moral principles to be better than those of more civilived people.

—Would it not be a good thing to revive some of the old-fashioned laws that used to hedge society about? An old Baptist church in South Carolina contains the record of the exclusion of a woman from the church for "doing too much talking in the neighborhood."

—The Ministerial Association of York, Penn., composed of clergymen from most of the Protestant denominations, at a recent meeting passed a series of resolutions condemning the sin of Sabbath-breaking, and calling upon railroad presidents especially to use their influence to prevent Sabbath travel.

—The Presbyterians have opened a new mission, not without opposition, in the large commercial city of Wei Hien, China, about 200 miles from Chefoo. One of their temporary structures was fired, and posters were scattered throughout the city, naming a date when their houses would be burned and their families killed. Though confident that the people would not dare to attempt violence, one of the missionaries remarks, "It is not at all pleasant to have the day set for your massacre, even if you feel morally certain it will not take place."

—One of the advantages on the side of the missionaries in Alaska, says Rev. S. Hall Young, who has recently returned from a short rest from Fort Wrangel, lies in the fact that the women are in all respects the equals of the men. The principal obstacles to be overcome are superstition and drunkenness. There are at present twenty missionaries in that field and their labor is meeting with a satisfactory reward.—Central Advocate.

—The United Presbyterian brethren report the following sums for the Quarterly Centennial Fund have been distributed: Foreign Missions, $30,000; Home Missions and Church Extension, $28,500; Ministerial Relief, $7,000; Freedmen's missions and Knoxville College, $10,500; Allegheny Theological Seminary, $13,500; Xenia Theological Seminary, $13,500; Westminister College, $18,000; Monmouth College, $18,000; Muskingum College, $12,000; Orphans' Home, Allegheny, $4,392.91.

Dr. Atticus G. Haygood, agent of the John F. Slater educational fund, Aug. 2, at Mount Eagle Sunday-school Assembly on Cumberland Mountains, Tennessee, delivered an able address on the education of the negro. It is the strongest appeal for the cause of education of the colored race, based on the necessities of morals and good citizenship, humanity and Christian duty, yet delivered by a Southern speaker. He stated, as a practical question, that every child, white and black, should have from his parents or from the government an equal chance for elementary education in the common schools, which, to be efficient and reach the case, must be backed by the government.

—The New York Christian Advocate publishes some cheering items from Japan. On the first day of June last the revival influence in Yokohama and Tokio still continued with unabated interest, and apparantly increasing power. The Conference of Japanese Christians, held May 8–12, in Tokio, was a very remarkable occasion. The presence and power of the Holy Ghost witnessed there has produced a profound impression throughout Japan. Dr. Maclay says the present outpouring of the Holy Spirit in Japan reminds one of similar occasions in the colonial and early history of the United States. The members of the Japanese church in Yokohama have, by vote, voluntarily assumed the entire support of their pastor.

—The mission of the Scottish United Presbyterian church among the Kaffirs in South Africa has advanced its list of communicants the past year from 1,273 to 1,339. The number of its schools has increased from 20 to 25, and of scholars from 914 to 1,175. The basis of union agreed upon between this mission and that of the Scottish Free church has been approved by the authorities in Scotland, and the union will be consumated. The United Presbyterian Mission includes seven congregations and 45 out-stations. Some of the congregations are of a very mixed character, consisting of Europeans, Hotteutots, Kaffirs, Fingoes, and Basutos. One of the discouraging circumstances mentioned is the increase of intoxicating drinks among the natives. The church has in its eight mission fields 71 regularly organized congregations, with an aggregate membership of 10,808, and nearly 2,000 candidates who are being specially trained for admission into the fellowship of the church. At the various Sabbath-schools there is an attendance of about 10,000; while there are 199 day schools, providing a sound Christian education for 12,524 pupils. To carry on this work there is a staff of 73 fully trained agents, 50 of whom are ordained missionares who have been sent from Scotland, six are medical missionaries and seventeen are ordained native pastors. Besides these there are 15 other agents who have been sent from Scotland, 7 of whom are Zenana missionaries, 5 are female teachers in Calabar and Kaffraria and 5 are male teachers. Of native agents, who are not pastors, there are 393, of whom 83 are evangelists or catechists and the remainder are teachers and helpers of other kinds. The net increase of the year was 523 members.

A FAITHFUL WITNESS.

Sabbath evening, July 29th, we listened to a temperance lecture from Rev. E. Steer, the pastor of the Free Methodist church in Holly, Mich., which was one of the best we have heard in many years. Every point the speaker made was excellent, but the closing up, when he charged upon the "seeret empire" in unequivocal terms that is was guilty of obstructing the course of the law in the prosecution of the saloon-keeper for the unlawful sale of intoxicating drinks. That capped the climax. It was a union temperance meeting, and the audience was made up of the various denominations of Holly, five in number, and doubtless there were a number of Masons present as there is a large lodge in the place, yet this brother bore his faithful testimony against this great evil. He seemed to stand upon a great moral eminence, and I could but feel that the weak-kneed clergymen that sat beside him must really envy him. No one of them would have dared to say what he said to such an audience, yet two of them have, if we are correctly informed, expressed themselves as opposed to the lodge.

A.

WHEATON THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

From the second annual report of this iustitutiou given by Prof. L. N. Stratton in the American Wesleyan, we extract the following good record made by the members of the first class. The report for the other class is equally good:

"Second, five of the six young men who began the first year with us, have returned, and spent the past year in our Seminary. All have acquitted themselves with honorable success. Most of them have had pastorates. Brother J. N. Bedford has had a revival of religion on his work noticed in the American Wesleyan. Brother O. C. Bedford has had a number of souls converted on his charge. He has organized a Wesleyan church, and secured the inalienable right to substantial church property in the same neighborhood. Brother S. A. Manwell has shown a martyr spirit, by preaching to a church in Wisconsin during the past year, and riding from fifteen to eighteen miles beyond railroad advantages, and coming through the winter's cold every Monday morning, to the 6:40 train, when the mercury was not unfrequently below zero. Brother J. N. Bedford had an overland journey a few miles shorter, and took the train at the same station; frequently coming on foot. Brother Manwell and his enterprising people, are now building a parsonage. Brother C. R. Hunt is the pastor of the church at Ligonier, and has seen the work of the Lord advance under his labors. Twenty-two, I am informed, have united with the church under his labors. He has come nearly one hundred and fifty miles to his recitations, and a portion of the time has secured the services of another preacher. Miss Orella Blake is a member of the class, and is at once able, modest and gifted. She preaches as occasion offers, and spends her vacations among the Congregational churches of her native county, filling vacant pulpits. She is a Congregationalist."

THE VALUE OF MISSIONARY LABOR.

Gordon Cumming thus writes of the islands in the South Seas:

Think of the sick buried alive; the array of widows who were deliberately strangled on the death of any great man; the living victims who were buried beside every post of a chief's new house, and must needs stand clasping it while the earth was gradually heaped over their devoted heads; or those who were bound hand and foot and laid on the ground to act as rollers when a chief launched a new canoe, and thus doomed to a death of excruciating agony; a time when there was no security for life or property, and no man knew how quickly his own hour of doom might come, when whole villages were depopulated, simply to supply their neighbors with fresh meat! Just think of all this, and of the change that has been wrought, and then imagine white men who can sneer at missionary work the way they do. Now you may pass from isle to isle, certain everywhere to find the same cordial reception by kindly men and women. Every village on the eighty inhabited isles has built for itself a tidy church and a house for its teacher or native minister, for whom the village also provides food and clothing. Can you realize that there are 900 Wesleyan churches in Fiji, at each one of which the frequent services are crowded by devoted congregations, that the schools are well attended, and the first sound which greets your ear at dawn and the last at night is that of hymn singing and the most fervent worship, rising from each dwelling at the hour of family prayer?"

THE

A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following amoug other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the geueral public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlighteued by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

It is now owned and published by the

THE DATE to which your subscription is paid is shown by the tag on your paper. If the date is not changed within four weeks from the time you remit, send notice to publisher. If immediate receipt is required it will be sent in all instances where a stamp or postal card is sent with remittance.

NOTICE.

Persons write occasionally, saying, "I sent a remittance so and so, but the tag on my paper it not changed." Such inquiries are proper, and the explanation is this: when a subscription is received it is entered at once on the book and the letter filed for future reference if needed, but the printed mailing list is not changed until a sufficient number are received to require the printing of a new list. If but few subscriptions are received, the change may be delayed for a month or more, but when the list fiills up rapidly it requires frequent revision. If the date on your paper is not changed within four weeks after you remit it is the safest way to drop us a card.

SEE HERE FRIEND.

Just a word in CONEIDENCE. It's something that concerns you. I mean the subscription list of your paper. It's too short now and slightly shrinking these hot months. It's getting out of proportion with the pay roll. What will you do about it? Well, I suppose the sensible thing for a man like you to do, is to get subscribers and send in your own renewal if you are in arrears. Can you suggest anything better? Will it pay to wait until "the harvest is past and the summer is ended." Would you advise your editors, compositors and press men, to take a month to cool off and get ready for earnest work? Think and pray over this matter and report results to Bro. Phillips who has plenty of room in his cash book, and will keep your accounts to a penny.

"HOLDEN WITH CORDS."

This story recently appeared as a serial in the Christian Cynosure, and is now fittingly put into a neat book of nearly 400 pages. It is a hard hit at Freemasonry. In an incidental way the story tells much about the manner of conducting lodges, and much about the spirit and methods of Masonry. The story covers the period of the abduction and murdering of William Morgan. The strategic position from which the author writes puts a charm in the book, while it gives a good opportunity to show the workings of the order. We wish all the people would read it.—Religious Telescope.

SEVEN DEGREES OF MASONRY

for One Dollaa at the office of the Christian Cynosure, 221 West Madison street, Chicago. Send for catalogue, or call if in the city.

MORE THAN 50,000

copies of Hon. Thurlow Weed's letter to the Batavia Convention of Sept. 13, '82, exposing and opposing Freemasonry have since then been printed and put in circulation. It is not improbable or impossible that the old political opponent of "the secret empire," through this letter written just before his death, may slay more lodge heathen, than Samson, the distinguished judge of ancient Israel, did at his death, when he took hold of the pillars of their temple and buried 3,000 Philistines in its ruins. These letters of Weed are being scattered far and wide by the National Christian Association, and men of mind and national influence are quietly reading them and pondering their orucular utterances. The truths they contain, like leaven, are working silently and potentially for good, and though to thoughtless thousands their influence, like the seed germinating under the soil, may not be seen or even suspected, the good time coming when this nation shall be freed from the sorcery and fatal enchantment of lodgeism will reveal that Weed, the life long enemy of secretism, did a noble work when he penned that letter, which like the Emancipation Proclamation of Lincoln, freed millions from the bondage under which all their lives they had groaned. —Sandy Lake News.

Be sure to get and read this pamphlet. Price, 5 cents. Or get the illustrated Batavia Convention pamphlet, which contains Weed's letter and several grand addresses; price 25 cents, and well worth the money. Send to the National Christian Association 221 W. Madison St., Chicago.

WHAT IS BETTER,

IT WILL PAY TO READ IT.

The speech of Hon. S. C. Pomeroy in Farwell Hall is in pamphlet form. It is a clear, practical discussion of the living questions of the hour, presenting in brief the claims of God to recognition in civil government, reasons for prohibition, and the abolition of the entire lodge system. It is a campaign document that should be not only read but studied by every voter in America.

From the comments that have been sent us since it appeared in the columns of the Cynosure we give the following: "It would do credit to the head and heart of any Christian statesman. How different when compared with the unmeaning twaddle of the mere politician of to-day! How empty the latter; how inspiring and full of hope the former!"

"Senator Pomeroy's speech in Chicago is the grandest thing I have read for many a day."

Let it be widely circulated early in the campaign of 1884.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 6 cents.

THE COMING CONFLICT.

A NEW AND RAPIDLY SELLING BOOK IN OPPOSITION TO FREE-MASONRY.

We desire to call your attention to this useful work, and ask you to help us in its circulation. We want Agents to canvass every community.

By selling this book one can do much good. It is by such literature that we must expect to awaken a popular sentiment against secret societies, and overthrow them. By selling this book one can make money. Liberal terms will be allowed, and any energetic Agent can sell many copies. Masons will buy it from mere curiosity. Anti-Masons will buy it for the facts and arguments presented. Many will buy it to send to their neighbors. Those on the fence will buy it that they may learn the truth on the subject. Those not interested in the discussion, and young people especially, will buy it for the story.

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"It is an attack on Freemasonry with a sprinkle of Slavery thrown in to make it go down well."—A. R. Presbyterian, (S. C.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of the best class of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D., in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia, Pa.)

"A charming work fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ill.)

The book is neatly and plainly printed, handsomely bound, 352 pages, thick paper. A specimen copy sent to any one contemplating accepting an agency for $1.10.

Single copy $1.50; Per Dozen. $15.00.

ON ODDFELLOWSHIP.

Odd-fellowship Judged by Its Own Utterances; Its Doctrine and Practice Examined in the Light of God's Word. By Rev. J. H. Brockman. This is an exceedingly interesting, clear discussion of the character of Odd-fellowship, in the form of a dialogue. In cloth, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00. Paper covers, 25 cents; per dozen, $2.00. German edition, entitled "Christian and Ernst," paper covers, 50 cents each. The German edition is published by the author.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each: per dozen. $1.25.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a LEAGUE WITH THE DEVIL. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Freemasonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degrees of Jephthah's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Eleota, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

ODDS AND ENDS.

DARWINISM IN THE KITCHEN.

I was taking off my bonnet
  One afternoon at three,
When a hiuseet jumped upon it,
  As proved to be a flea.

Then I takes it to the grate,
  Betwcen the bars to stiek it;
But I hadn't long to wait
  Ere it changed into a crieket.

Says I, "Surely my senses
  Is a getting in a fog;"
So to drowu it I eontinues,
  When it halters to a frog.

Here my heart begun to thump;
  And no wonder I felt flunky,
For the frog with one big jump
  Leaped hisscIf into a monkey.

Then I opened widc my eyes,
  Its features for to scan,
And observed with great surprise
  That the monkey was a mau.

But he vanished from my sight,
  And I sunk upon the floor,
Just as Missus with a light,
  Came inside the kitehen door.

And beginning to abuse me,
  She says: "Sarah, you've been drinkiu';"
I says: "No, ma'am; you'll excuse me,
  But I've merely been a-thinkiu'.

"But as sure as I'm a cinder,
  That party what you see
A gettin' out of winder,
  Have dcveloped from a flea!"

An enormous spider's web seen recently in Franconia Valley, N. H., was of the geometrical kind, stretched between two trees. The guys or supports were fifteen feet long, while the web was three feet in circumference.

It is said thc mailing system of the United States is the most complete and perfect in thc world. As an illustration, Mrs. J. P. Pond, of Napa, Cal., a few days since had returned from the dead-letter office a letter written by her husband sixteen years ago to a friend in San Francisco.

Mr. Spottiswoode states as follows: "Setting aside the dust, there are always minute particles of water floating in the atmosphere. These vary in size from the rain drops which fall to earth on a sultry day, through the intermediate forms of mist and of fine fleecy cloud, to the absolutely invisible minuteness of pure aqueous vapor which is present in the brightest of skies. It is these particles which scatter the solar rays and suffuse the heavens with light."

The scarcity of snakes in Ireland, was, at a recent meeting of the Edinburg Scientific Society, credited to the antipathy that exists between the pig and all such reptiles. A letter was read to show that in certain parts of India, the cobra di copello, the most venomous of all serpants, had actually been exterminated by the introduction of pigs. And the great number of these animals to be found in Ireland, sufficed to explain the scarcity of snakes without resorting to an appeal to St. Patrick.

From statistics covering the period between the years 1850 and 1879, it appears that 2,005 persons were fully committed in England and Wales for wilful murder. Of these, 665 were convicted and 372 hanged. In the United States but 33 per cent. of the indicted criminals are convicted. During the same period in England the convictions for non-capital crimes amounted to 76 per cent. In this country the average number of murders is about 2,500 per annum, and the average convictions even lower than is the case in other crimes. France sends but one-half of her convicted murderers to the gallows. Spain sends even fewer, while Austria, during the decade ending 1879, out of 806 persons sentenced to death, executed but 16. In Ireland the proportion of convictions to executions is 54; in Scotland, 38.

FOR THE CURE OF

Or CHILLS and FEVER.

AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient.

The genuine SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP must have DR. JOHN BULL'S private stamp on each bottle. DR. JOHN BULL only has the right to manufacture and sell the original JOHN J. NIGHTS IN A BAR-ROOM

T. S Arthur's great temperance book. complete and illustrated. By mail, 5c each; 50c per doz. By express, $3.50 per 100.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC THE GREAT SOURCE OF CRIME.

Leaves from the diary of an old lawyer.—By Hon. A. B Richmond, author of "Court and Prison," etc. A book of intense interest, rivaling the famous "Diary of a Physician," and, in its truthful, terrible pictures of the power and crime of intemperance, excelling the well-known "Ten Nights in a Barroom." The temperance issue of the present time is. Shall prohibition be partial or entire? Shall the branches of the death-bearing tree be pruned and trimmed, or shall the tree itself be cut down and its stump be torn up by the roots? The answer of "Leaves from the Diary" is, "Cut down the tree, tear up the roots, leave not a shoot or shred behind." It is certainly a very strong and eloquent volume Complete edition on fine, heavy paper, with colored lithograph of Sewall's stomach plates By mail, 30c each, $3 per doz. By express, $20 per 100. Abridged edition, by mail, 15c; $1.25 per doz. By express, $9 per 100.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC AND THE SOBER CITIZEN.

An able and telling work, by Rev. J H. Sherman, which brings out the effects of the liquor traffic in a new light. The following are some of the commendations of the first edition.

"The author drives the nails of conviction through and clinches them."—N Y Christian Advocate.

"Speakers and workers in the temperance field will find valuable aid in this pamphlet. It is crowded with convincing facts "—Zion's Herald

"One of the ablest reviews of the drink curse ever issued from the press."—The Morning and Day of Reform.

"The arguments are put in telling form."—Judge Pittman.

New revised and enlarged edition. By mail, 10c each, $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100.

DRINKS FROM DRUGS.

A startling exposure of the liquor traffic, by El. Johnson. A book that cannot fail to arouse the American people to the gigantic swindle now being perpetrated. The writer was offered $10,000 by a leading brewer to keep still. Liquor not only doctored, but made entirely from drugs. Extracts from a whole library of secret books, giving receipts for making and doctoring; advertisements of essences, fac-similes of labels, engravings, etc., etc. Claret, port, sherry, champagne, whisky, brandy, gin, rum, etc., all out of one barrel, and made at less than 25 cents a quart. Wine that never saw grape juice; cider that never saw apples; beer factories in place of breweries, fine cream ale without barley or brewing; whisky from arsenic; millions of gallons of liquor that pays no revenue tax. The farmer's corn and barley "all in your eye." A wholesale liquor store in a ten-foot square cellar; more French wine sold in New York City than is produced in the whole of France. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By Express, $6 per 100.

W. C. T. U. ORGANIZATION AND WORK.

A book of general information on how to organize and run successfully a Woman's Christian Temperance Union. This book should be widely distributed among W. C. T. U. presidents, pastor's wives and other representative women. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100.

HOME PROTECTION.

A lawyer's view of it. By J. C. Wells, attorney-at-law. The question of female suffrage for the protection of home ably discussed from a lawyer's standpoint. A book for the times. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100.

BAND OF HOPE RECITERS.

172 pages. 164 choice recitations of poetry and prose, containing some of the choisest bits of temperance material for the platform ever uttered, accompanied by an article on elocution. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100.

GENERAL TEMPERANCE SONG BOOK.

"Temperance Songs," a Book for Adult Societies.—Eighty-three choice pieces, both words and music (old and new tune combination) choice selections from standard temperance collections; many choice new pieces. Book carefully edited by David C. Cook. Will prove just what is wanted by every temperance society Price in strong cardboard covers, by mail, 10c each; $1 per dozen; by express, $5 per 100.

TEMPERANCE ANTHEM BOOK.

Temperance Anthems.—A new idea; nothing else of the kind in existence. Will insure good music by the choir at temperance meetings Forty-eight pages of choice anthems by ablest writers By mail, 15c each; $1.50 per doz. By express, $10 per 100.

BAND OF HOPE SONG BOOK.

Band of Hope Songs.—Fifty-seven choice pieces for juvenile temperance gatherings, Bands of Hope, etc. Old, familiar tunes, also choice new words and music. Words far in advance of anything else issued. By mail, 8c each; 75c per doz. By express, $4 per 100.

DANIEL'S BAND.

A temperance concert exercise, with parts suitable for all ages; entirely new. Songs, recitations, dialogues, etc., of a thoroughly aggressive character; sure to carry weight with the rendering of it. By mail, 5c each; 50c per dozen, By express, $2 per 100.

THE COLD WATER ARMY.

For a primary temperance concert exercise. An entirely new exercise, containing songs and recitations, dialogues, etc., suitable for primary scholars. A pleasing and telling concert on temperance. By mail, 5c each; 50c per dozen. By express, $2 per 100.

The "Oxford" Teachers' Bible contains, besides the text with the celebrated Oxford references, a Cruden's Concordance with 25,000 references; Oxford Index with 2,345 words, pronouncing dictionary of proper names with meanings; Scripture atlas of twelve maps, correct to latest survey, including alphabetical list of Bible names arranged with figures and letters indicating location on maps; condensed Bible history of Old and New Testament with interval between chronology of Old Testament and chronology of the New; a complete harmony of the Gospels; etymology, geography and topography of Palestine; mountains, lakes and rivers of the Bible, with special tabular summary; birds, reptiles, insects, trees, plants, flowers, minerals, precious stones, etc.; weights, measures, time and money; obsolete and ambiguous words, and words used as symbols; Paul's voyage to Rome; Paul's missionary journey; history of Jewish sects; parables of our Lord; parables of the Old Testament; miracles of our Lord; miracles of the New Testament; prophecies concerning Christ; titles of Christ; special prayers; chart of the family of the Herodes, etc., etc.

SIZES.—Our small size Bible is 4x5½ inches. Our medium size, 4½x6½. Our large size, 5x7¾.

Our small and medium sizes are most popular ones. Large size for those desiring large type Bible.

For $1.30, small size genuine Oxford Teacher: complete in every respect; same as the very best; strongly bound in morocco covers, with gilt edges; in large, clear print. Book of 1,408 pages.

Postage, 9cts.

For $2.20 Same style of binding as above described, Teachers' medium size, red edges instead of gilt. Postage, 12c.

For $5.40 Same style of binding, large size, gilt edges. Postage, 20c.

For $1.60 Small size genuine Oxford Teacher, gilt edges, flexible morocco cover, circuit, or protection, leather all around. Postage, 10cts.

For $2.50 The same style of binding, medium size. Postage, 12c.

THE PERSIAN SEAL BINDING

Is very handsome and durable. It is this style of binding which is so much admired by Bible readers. Please notice particularly that these Bibles are kid lined and silk sewed. Many Bibles in this style outwardly are lined with black paper and sewed with thread in place of silk.

For $2.30 we furnish a small size Oxford, bound in Persian seal, full flexible; can be bent back, doubled or rolled, without injury. Divinity circuit, gilt edges, kid lined, silk sewed, with book-mark and band Postage, 10c.

For $3.30 The same style of binding, medium size. Postage, 12c.

For $5.75 The same style of binding, large size. Postage, 20c.

LEVANT MOROCCO BINDING.

The Persian Seal bindings are the best kept by most Bible dealers, and usually pass for the best teachers' Bibles made; and, to all appearance, they are so. There is, however, a better wearing binding, of which the Persian Seal is a good imitation; this is known as "Levant Morocco" In all respects the Levant morocco Bible corresponds with the Persian Seal description, except as to leather used for cover which, though looking like the Persian Seal, is stronger, and will last a lifetime.

Prices on genuine Levant Morocco bindings:

For $4.50—Small size. Postage, 10c.
For $5.50—Medium size. Postage, 12c.
For $8.00—Large size. Postage, 20cts.

Handsome Gift Bibles at Low Prices.

For 45c. Embossed morocco cover, gilt edges, gilt title on back. Very neat and durable. This is the handsomest 45c. gift Bible we have ever seen. Postage, 5c.

For 60c. Morocco cover, brass bound and plated, with handsome gilt clasp and gilt edges; two patterns; square and round corners. Exquisite lettering on side; printed in large clear type. Bibles no better are sold as high as $1 and $2. Postage, 6c.

For 70c. Similar size and style of binding to our 60-cent Bible; square corners, brass bound, with clasp and handsome tasseled book-mark; also medallion inserted on side in gold and red.

This was a new importation with the fall of 1882, and a very pretty design. It should be seen to be appreciated. (See cut.) Postage, 6c.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

—President Arthur and party left Chicago at noon Friday by the Northwestern road for Omaha and Yellowstone Park.

—The President and party arrived at Green River, Wy. T., Sunday forenoon, where they encamped for the day, and Monday morning started for Washakie in spring wagons. They hoped to camp Monday night on the Sweetwater, 100 miles from Green River.

—It is estimated that the public debt statement will show a decrease of between $8,000,000 and $9,000,000.

—In the famous whisky bond compromise case of Anton C. Hesing of this city, Solicitor Raynor Thursday decided to accept the offer of $2,500 in final settlement. Acting Secretary of the Treasury French on Friday, refused to confirm the action of Solicitor Raynor. The final settlement will now have to await the return of Secretary Folger from the West.

—The Coroner's jury in the case of the drowning of the three Van Bezey children censured the city for having no protections at the bridges.

—There were 155 failures in the United States reported during the past week, 13 less than the preceding week, 46 more than the corresponding week of 1882, and 80 more than the same week of 1881.

—Charles W. Copeland & Co., extensive shoe manufacturers of Boston, have suspended. The liabilities of the firm are $750,000, and they claim to have sufficient assets to pay their creditors in full. A number of smaller houses have gone under through this failure.

—The suspension is announced of F. Shaw & Brothers, of Boston, the largest tanners in the world. The immediate cause was the failure of the shoe house of Copeland & Co., whose paper Shaw & Brothers hold for $200,000. Their liabilities are estimated at $3,500,000, with nominal assets of $5,000,000.

—F. T. & J. D. Phinney, manufacturers of boot and shoe counters, at Boston, have suspended, with liabilities of $400,000. They were on Shaw & Bros.' paper to that amount.

—Four persons were killed by the collision of freight trains, near Pownall, Vt., Wednesday morning. The locomotives and trains were wrecked.

—The telegraph operators on the Mexican National Railway struck on Thursday for an increase of $30 per month. The movements of trains are interrupted.

—Masked midnight marauders have again made their appearance at Wartrace, Tenn., after remaining quiet for about five years. Thursday night a party of a dozen or more disguised men whipped a man named Clinton, a white wood-chopper. A party of masked men also visited the cabin of a negro who lived about a mile from town, and made him take his things out and burned it. His wife was sick, so they took her out and laid her under a tree on a pallet. Subsequently, a white neighbor came and took her to his home. It is a source of anxiety and alarm to all good citizens to see this revival of the Kuklux work.

—The cholera at Bombay has been declared epidemic. There were 101 deaths from cholera at that place during the week ending last Tuesday.

—The London Daily News asserts that the total number of deaths from cholera in Egypt to the 3d inst. has been 16,000. It says the disease is now less virulent. Of ten men attacked among the British troops, an average of six survive.

—The Emperor William has directed that the 400th birthday of Martin Luther be observed by all the Protestant people of Germany. The students of the universities will celebrate at Erfurt, Aug. 8, the entry of Luther into that town.

—An explosion occurred in a mine at Caltanisetta, Sicily, July 29, whereby thirty-five miners out of seventy were killed.

—The British Minister to Morocco has been instructed to make an earnest appeal to the Sultan of that country for the abolition of slavery.

—The negotiations between France and China in regard to the Touquin question are at a standstill, and a peaceful solution of the difficulty is considered impossible.

—The London Times says: "We are able to state that official news has been received from the Continental capital that a most dangerous Nihilist conspiracy has been discovered in Russia. A great number of people are implicated, and many arrests have been made."

—An attempt, attributed to Feniauism, has been made to blow up a linen factory at Cupar Fife, Scotland. A box of dynamite with a lighted fuse attached was discovered in the building in time to extinguish the fuse before it reached the explosive.

—War has broken out between a gang of negroes and Italians working on the Ohio River Railroad, at Sisterville, W. Va. The negroes put in a blast and failed to warn the Italians, two of whom were killed. The latter are armed with revolvers, dirks, and picks, and the Africans with razors.

—Thursday last the Jews in Ekaterinoslay, Russia, were set upon by a mob, and their houses and shops wrecked. Ten of the rioters were killed by the soldiery, who were called out to restore order. The town authorities voted the Jews 5,000 rubles as compensation for their losses.

—Three informers in the Phœnix Park murder trials were prohibited from landing from a steamer at Melbourne, Australia.

BUSINESS.

Any person experienced in circulating reform or religious literature understands that July and August are the "off" months in the year for receipts. The farmers, upon whom all reforms must rely very largely for support, have less time to read and a greater proportionate demand for money to use in their business at home. The experience of your Cynosure is not unlike to that of other papers of its class, with an additional burden to be carried this year. You will remember that along with the paper we took a paid up subscription list of over four thousand, on the first day of January last, which was equivalent to fifteen hundred and seventy-three yearly subscriptions for which the former publisher retained the money as a part of the consideration in the purchase. We are supplying these subscribers weekly as per contract and paying all bills from subscriptions or other sources The extra number of papers thus furnished increase our bills in amount while they cancel so much of the contract but bring no cash returns to pay for labor and material. It is easy to see that we are working at a disadvantage which must continue until all who remitted before Jan. 1st receive their full quota of papers. We had anticipated precisely this state of things, and hence are not unprepared. No employee who has worked on your paper, or furnished material, has been asked to wait for his pay, but in view of the facts you will see the importance of prompt renewals and of obtaining additional subscribers even during the "off" month that remains. We have sought to make your paper a success in every respect and one which would not suffer in comparison with any in its class, and whether we have succeeded or not you must be the judges. Little leaks exhaust fortunes often, and there are almost an endless number in the publishing business that require experience in management and the closest watching. The past has had its lessons which will aid in shaping the future, and we ask our friends to co-operate with us by renewing promptly and sending new subscribers as you are able to obtain them.

EXTRA COPIES of the Cynosure, June 21st, containing portrait of Bishop Edwards with a sketch of his life, and July 26th, with portrait of Hon. Joseph Ritner and a synopsis of his domestic and public history can be had at the N. C. A. office. Friends will find these numbers valuable helps in securing subscribers among their acquaintances. The time for vigorous work has come and all our workers should be supplied with necessary documents. Send for what you can use judiciously in prosecuting your work and securing subscribers for your paper.

GOOD SUMMER READING.

Accidentally Cured of Consumption.

When death was hourly expected, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting with the many herbs of Calcutta, he accidentally made a preparation which cured his only child of consumption. His child is now in this country, and enjoying the best of health. The doctor now gives this recipe free, only asking two 3-cent stamps to pay expenses. THE PUREST IS THE BEST.

In the selection of SUNDAY-SCHOOL PAPERS, the most important point to be considered is the moral tone of the subject matter. If this is of a questionable character, the papers should be shunned, no matter how large, how attractive, or how low the price. Such papers are
COSTLY AT ANY PRICE.
The country is being flooded with S. S. literature that is largely composed of what may be properly termed "RELIGIOUS FICTION," the tendency of which is to create a distaste for sound reading and foster an appetite for fiction of a more deleterious character.
The engravings of these papers are equally objectionable. In many cases a lady or girl dressed in the height of fashion is made the HEROINE OF A STORY, thus putting the highest sanction to extravagance and pride. With such instructors in our Sunday-schools we cannot expect the children to grow up with a love for sound literature and with correct ideas of Christian propriety. With a view of supplying S. S. papers, of a pure and elevating character, the publishers are issuing
FOUR MONTHLY PAPERS.
They are FREE FROM FICTION, and the cuts are chosen with great care. While they are thus carefully edited, they are not lacking in attractiveness. They are well printed on beautiful tinted paper. The children are delighted with them. The very low price at which this line of S. S. papers is issued, places them within the reach of even schools of limited means

The telegraph war remained up to Monday morning without especial change. The strikers in crowds hang about their Chicago rendezvous seven days of the week, some with a lean and hungry look of disappointment which the many promises from their lodge headquarters fail to banish. The monotony of idleness is broken by an occasional Sunday picnic. The railroad telegraphers were ordered out last week Monday, but failed to respond in any considerable number, and the movement, which was the last resort, has practically failed. Occasional outrages upon operators who are at work and cutting wires are indulged in by way of spite as the case becomes more desperate. Nearly a month has passed and the companies continue to do the business of the country in so satisfactory a way that a heavy suit against them for damaging delay was last week decided in their favor. They are paying large wages, and do not refuse to treat fairly with individual strikers, but refuse to recognize the secret lodge which ordered the strike. The war has become one of endurance; work on the Sabbath is one of more or less pay merely, and the question of advanced wages the companies do not refuse to entertain, but not with the order. The strikers maintain the fight to save their lodge and every day weakens their force and their determination.

One section of the constitution of the Knights of Labor which is sworn to by the telegraphers' brotherhood reads thus:

"ART. XV., Sec. 1.—No member of this organization shall instruct any person in the art of telegraphy until the local assembly of which he is a member shall have first granted permission to do so, and until said permission shall have been ratified by the Executive Board of the district assembly."

And the Declaration of Principles, fifth article, says "that all members of this order shall abstain from teaching our profession, except to a brother, sister, son or daughter, and use all honorable means to suppress fraudulent telegraph offices." If this does not mean a monopoly as infamous as Jay Gould's "Western Union" the language has no force. That company is right in refusing to negotiate with a secret lodge which swears its members into such combinations against the public welfare, wrong as it may be in other things. This strife is justly turning much attention to a postal telegraph system controlled by government for the benefit of the people. No one ever heard of a postmasters' strike, and it is urged that a postal telegraph would be also free from this annoyance.

Railroading in Massachusetts is under some restraints which it would be well if other States imposed. The companies have to respect the public sentiment along their lines as well as the profits, and must submit to the command of the Railway Commissioners appointed by the State. The Housatonic road passing through Pittsfield, proposing to run a train on Sabbath, the commissioners met in the town hall of Great Barrington upon the matter and Robert Carter, the Boston publisher (who first issued Samuel D. Greene's "Broken Seal") and Revs. Henry M. Field and Hiram Eddy appeared in defense of the public to enjoy an undisturbed Sabbath day according to the Creator's arrangement. It is only by bold disregard of the laws of God or man that railway business upon this day has become so extensive.

Nearly 1,700 persons have perished in Egypt and the plague is sensibly abating though as wide spread as ever. If it be not the Asiatic scourge which rises from the pestilence-breeding roads to Mecca, as the doctors affirm, it may be that the Nile itself has contributed to start the death march with a foul and sluggish tide, for such it is said to be. The Suez Canal, too, was but lately said to be in a fair way of becoming and open and stagnant sewer. The stations on its banks are drained into its waters. It is never flushed, there is no tide, and the stench becomes intolerable. Diarrhœa and sickness prevail in vessels detained in the canal, and before the cholera broke out these detentions were becoming more numerous and longer and the sickness attending them of more alarming nature. If the canal has bred the plague, Egypt will not want the other which De Lesseps loftily writes Mr. Gladstone he is going to dig anyhow, England or no England.

Dr. Robert Moffat, whose name will ever be associated with that of Livingstone in the history of African missions, died last Friday at the great age of nearly 87 years. He was sent by the London Missionary Society to South Africa in 1817, where he ventured immediately into the wild region beyond the boundary of Cape Colony and penetrated even to the kraal of the terrible Africaner who had long raided the colony unpunished. The ferocious chief became a convert to Christianity. Moffatl abored successfully in several stations north of the colony, and found his gospel message gladly received wherever he went. His remarkable adventures are described in a work written by him in 1842 during a visit of several years to England, rendered necessary on account of his health. During that year he returned to the African field, retiring finally from it in 1870. His spirit of enterprise and devotion was partaken of by his son-in-law David Livingstone; and in 1873 he was persented with a purse of over $28,000 in recognition of his great services.

The French ambition for seizing the territory of weak nations for colonies is meeting with difficulty. Their army in Tamatave, Madagascar, is besieged by resolute natives, and the admiral who was too reckless with foreign flags and agents has been ordered home. China will not submit to French encroachments in Tonquin, but makes so little parade of opposition that the invaders are alarmed lest the Orientals are preparing to crush them by mere numbers. China has three well-disciplined armies of 60,000 men each, beside another of 150,000, well equipped and drilled. She has some 500 cannon made in Europe and powder mills and shell factories distributed at convenient points, and is no longer formidable by reason of numbers only. France is pursuing a suicidal policy in unreasonably invading the territory protected by these forces, backed by millions more who become soldiers at the word of the Emperor.

Secret lodges, with terrible oaths are liable to lead men who are for some voluntary club or association, where they may find pleasure or profit, to take one degree after another, until they are absorbed, or turn away in silent disgust. Their oath-bound societies prevents us from judging of their good or bad effects, save as one after another in great horror reveals the same.

JOHN BROWN AND "THE CHRISTIAN AT (BAD) WORK."

BY REV. C. C. FOOTE.

It is not a little surprising that so exeellent a magazine as the Century should have printed such an article as that in the July issue on John Brown's raid on Harper's Ferry. In the first place the artiele wants chronology—there is no sufficient record of dates. In the next place the portrait drawn of John Brown—with Cromwell and William of Orange sitting for his portrait!—is out of all perspective of truth. To come to the plain fact of the matter, John Brown was a first-class fanatic, unbalanced in mind if not wholly irresponsible, who thought to uproot slavery by a score of old muskets borne by as many fools. Just as might be expected, he came to the gallows, and who is to blame but Brown himself? But he has served a purpose in his way. Some rabid politicians swear by him, some feeble-minded ministers have found in him an illustration of courage, and for aught we know patriotism, and some fools may turn to Brown with pride and say, "he was one of us!" John Brown is one of his generation, and we hope he will have no successors—and the Century artiele no dupliеate.

The above contemptuous and contemptible sneer at John Brown in a recent number of The Christiun at Work calls for more than a passing notice, both for the party slandered and for the slanderer. From the beginning the world has been divided into two parties; the condemners of the good and defenders of the bad; and the defenders of the good and condemners of the bad. No extraordinary sagacity is required to see to which party the writer of the above article has joined himself.

It is, however, possible, nay certain, that he has penned this article of a man of whom he is profoundly ignorant. I might assure The Christian at Work that I had a pretty intimate personal acquaintance with John Brown, and know that the above utterances against him are utterly false. But then, The Christian at Work would rank me among "rabid politicians," "feeble-minded ministers," and "fools" who say "he was one of us."

Well, would that be a very great calamity? Does not The Christian at Work know that this tirade against the Lord's dear old martyr has not even the merit of originality? He has simply adopted the style employed against all reformers in all ages. He would have us believe it a great injustice to Cromwell to enroll John Brown in the same catalogue. But the merest tyro of history knows that the aspersions cast upon the hero of Harper's Ferry were more than quadrupled upon Cromwell. In the eyes of his traducers he was not only a "first-class fanatic of unbalanced mind" as The Christian at Work pronounces John Brown, but he was a "base-born hypocrite, a murderer and regicide" and all other bad things the sycophants of tyrants could invent against him. Cromwell's enemies beiug in evidence, he was the worse man of the two. The one was master of the situation twenty hours; the other as many years. The one was hung, the other had a secret burial to save him from the headsman's axe after he was dead; and "his grave no man knoweth unto this day." "The portrait of the one drawn from the other," is therefore not at all "out of all perspective of truth."

The Christian at Work editor has given the world the measure of his knowledge of John Brown and his intentions by his ridiculous assertion that he thought to uproot slavery by a score of old muskets borne by as many fools!" Albeit, there was one Gideon "whose chronology is more deficient in date" (than the record of Harper's Ferry), who thought to uproot the "Midianites and Amalekites and all the children of the East, like grasshoppers for multitude, and their camels without number as the sands of the sea" with munitions of war vastly inferior to "twenty old muskets in the hands of fools." And he did it—Judges 7:12.

John Brown at Harper's Ferry was the military beginning that ended in the uprooting of slavery, and the overthrow of slaveocracy, as one of the two writers in the Century has well said: and this is admitted by all who are versed in the facts, and are able to trace causes to their final results. Such men as the editor of The Christian at Work are as thoroughly disqualified to pass judgment upon John Brown and his associates as they are to give the diagnosis of the disease that terminated the life of Adam.

It is safe to say that so brief an article, so packed with sophistry is an anomaly not often met in a lifetime. The editor would fain make us believe that for dashing himself against the firey walls of slavery, John Brown was a fool. But have not thousands and thousands of martyrs dashed themselves against the Gibralter of pagan idolatry and papal wickedness? Did they not know that inevitable death would be the result? And dare The Christian at Work stand up before the universe and pronounce these blessed martyrs, "of whom God is not ashamed," "fanatics," as he has God's martyr, John Brown?

Who were these martyrs, and why did they thus expose their lives to gibbet and flame? They were God's witnesses raised up to bear testimony against appalling wickedness; and so was John Brown.

And to no higher or more noble end can the life God has given be devoted. By this attack upon the dead martyr, and by his former playing the jester with Masonry and Anti-masonry the editor of The Christian at Work has proven to the world that there is not in him "the stuff that reformers and martyrs are made of." If The Christian at Work will allow me the space I will, in another article, furnish its readers with what I know of the raid of Harper's Ferry, received from John Brown's own lips.

SHORT SERMON.

Text: The chief priests answered, We have no king but Cæsar.

My Brethren: The power of the Jewish High Priests stood in danger of being overthrown by the power of the Saviour. Therefore they wished to have the Saviour crucified. But, said Pilate, Shall I crucify your king? We have no king but Cæsar, replied the High Priests.

My friends, the spirit that animates our Masonic High Priests is precisely like that which animated the Jewish High Priests. They are utterly opposed to the Saviour; for if the Saviour reigns the Masonic High Priest must be destroyed, and the place that knew him, would know him no more forever. The Masonic High Priest, like the Jewish High Priest, cannot live where the Saviour reigns. The only king which the Masonic High Priest acknowledges is Cæsar; that is, imperial power, or a power sustained by the force of bayonets. He laughs at mere moral force; he outwits moral force; makes a mockery of it, regarding it as nothing better than a sheep-skin apron, a pair of compasses, an "all-seeing eye," so-called, a little gavel, and similar things. He trifles with the words of Scripture as the servants of the Jewish High Priests and the Roman soldiers trifled with the Saviour.

My friends, what is to prevent the members of Congress from forming a lodge among themselves and the clerks of the Departments, and making the same mockery of the rights and interests of the Republic for their own benefit, that the Jewish High Priests and Roman soldiers made of the Saviour? Do you not know, my friends, that our so-called Christian church, so long as it is trifled with by Freemasons, cannot furnish morality or religion enough to run our republican government? It is true, the Masonic High Priest bends his knee, and cries all hail! to the Republic; and he throws a mantle of royal color around it; but it is in a spirit of mockery that he does this, not in a spirit of sincerity and truth.

My friends, the spirit that animates your two ascendant political parties is the spirit of the Masonic High Priest; and it is of no more consequenee to you which of the two parties wins, than it is which of two horses wins at a horse-race. Both parties look steadily for plunder and power. They are Jews on one side and Pilate on the other. Between the two imperial power alone is served, while the honest virtues that sustain the Republic are mocked at and derided.

My friends, never vote for a Masonic High Priest, nor for any of his crew. Do you wish to know who the High Priest's crew are? I will tell you who the High Priest's crew are; they are those members of Congress who, instead of executing the law against treason, have helped rebel generals to places of honor and profit. They are those members of Congress who have helped to plunder the government, either by silence or by active participation, while land-grabs, back-pay grabs, Credit Mobilier swindles, Star-route frauds, river and harbor bills, Indian-war outrages, etc., etc., have been going on. They are the watch-dogs of the treasury who have suffered themselves to be chloroformed by the Masonic lodges. Against all such unfaithful servants cast your votes my friends, now and forever. So mote it be!

A PARABLE.

BY JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL.

Said Christ our Lord, "I will go and see
How the men, my brethren, believe in me."
He passed not again through the gate of birth,
But made himself known to the children of earth.

Then said the chief priests, and rulers, and kings,
"Behold, now, the Giver of all good things;
Go to, let us welcome with pomp and state,
Him who alone is mighty and great."

With carpets of gold the ground they spread,
Wherever the Son of Man should tread,
And in palace chambers, lofty and rare,
They lodged him, and served him with kingly fare.

Great organs surged through arches dim,
Their jubilant floods in praise of him;
And in church, and palace, and judgment hall,
He saw his image high over all.

But still, wherever his steps they led,
The Lord in sorrow bent down his head,
And from under the heavy foundation stones,
The Son of Mary heard bitter groans.

And in church, and palace, and judgment hall,
He marked great fissures that rent the wall,
And opened wider and yet more wide,
As the living foundation heaved and sighed.

"Have ye founded your thrones and altars, then,
On the bodies and souls of living men?
And think ye that building shall endure,
Which shelters the noble and crushes the poor?

"With gates of silver and bars of gold,
Ye have fenced my sheep from their Father's fold;
I have heard the droppings of their tears
In heaven, these eighteen hundred years."

"O, Lord and Master, not ours the guilt;
We build but as our fathers built;
Behold thine images, how they stand,
Sovereign and sole, through all our land.

"Our task is hard—with sword and flame,
To hold the earth forever the same,
And with sharp crooks of steel to keep Still, as thou liftest them, thy sheep."

Then Christ sought out an artisan,
A low-browed, stunted, haggard man,
And a motherless girl, whose fingers thin
Pushed from her faintly want and sin.

These sat he in the midst of them,
And as they drew back their garment hem,
For fear of defilement, "Lo, here," said he,
"The images ye have made of me!"

THE TELEGRAPHERS' STRIKE.

BY. E. D. BAILEY.

Ten years ago or more the telegraphers of the country formed a secret league, and when organized, struck. At that time the strike was precipitated by trouble between the operators and managers of the San Francisco office. Previous to the strike every possible effort was made to draw all operators into the league. A pressure was brought to bear upon them that could only be resisted by the utmost stubbornness by those who were opposed to such combinations. The strike from first to last was badly managed, and resulted in an utter failure.

The present strike has apparently been managed with more skill. Without reference to the wisdom or justice of strikes, two facts favorable to the demand of the operators are obvious.

(1). The demand for the abolition of Sunday work has certainly come none too soon. Eighteen years ago, when I learned telegraphy, so far as my knowledge went there was very little Sunday work required. On our circuit no Sunday work was done, except in cases of neeessity when there had been a railroad accident or in case of sickness and death. Two years later all offices were required to be opened at 9 A. M. Sunday morning to ascertain if all was well along the line. Sometimes ten minutes would suffice to ascertain and we were dismissed. This was regarded as a work of necessity and cheerfully done.

But this was the beginning of evil. From demanding a few minutes the custom grew into hours, until conscientious men were driven out of the business. In many cases the best positions and salaries could only be had by submitting to an almost total disregard of the Sabbath. Persons who have never been placed under such circumstances can hardly realize the trial such things would be to a Christian. A young man learns the trade and becomes a master workman. He is promoted from place to place, but finds Sunday work increasing. He sees others being demoralized by the custom and fears himself to cut loose from his home training and religious convictions. But he must work Sunday or abandon his chosen occupation. What shall he do? This is no fancy sketeh but a living fact.

Railroad men, telegraph operators, street-car conductors and other public servants must either have a Sabbath or they will become thoroughly demoralized. The Christian public has a duty to these men to aid them in their demand for Sabbath privileges, and sooner or later laws must be passed guaranteeing this right to our laboring classes.

It is (2) manifest to those familiar with the business that in many offices the work required of operators is excessively heavy. Doubtless they have no more reason to complain than other laborers, but this does not lessen the justice of the demand. It is a business which draws heavily upon the nervous system and induces diseases peculiar to itself. What is known as telegraphers' paralysis arises from the too constant use of the hand in rapid transmission and writing. In the larger offices the operators are under very exacting rules and their positions frequently become very irksome.

All this does not justify the strike, although we may heartily wish for a successful issue. There should be legislation speedily to provide courts of appeal for the laborers against the employers where wrongs may be corrected and justice obtained.

THE ARCH ENEMY.

DESPOTISM VS. REPUBLICANISM.

The great American doctrines and principles of popular freedom are the highest conceptions of human liberty. In little more than one short century they have developed a youthful Republic that even now has far outstripped all its predecessors. What a brilliant career of unprecedented grandeur! The Roman Augustan age is here outdone, and the grand days of our Republic have but just begun. It is the day-star of hope to earth's down-trodden millions. Its mission is to encirele the globe, win to its standard all peoples, kindreds and tongues, and proclaim universal emancipation, not only from political thralldom, but from moral and intellectual captivity. Here in the United States is to be fought the great battle of Armageddon. Between the American Republic and despotism there is an irrepressible, life-and-death confliet. The spirit of liberty conquered British oppression, but now despotism seeks to conquer freedom. The foreign element or agent that silently and stealthily leads the enemy of American independence was hatched and formulated in a London grog-shop. Its organization is one of the most complete ever framed by fallen man. It is diabolism gone to seed. It is the devil's masterpiece. Freemasonry is the quintessence of imperialism and idolatry. It is as absolute as hierarchical despotism governed by the mitre and the crown. Its very existence is a standing menace to society and good government. Its influence is felt at the ballot-box, in the court-room, and in the legislative hall. Its motto is "rule or ruin." The struggle is upon us; and, let it come—I repeat it, let it come. For here, under the old "Stars and Stripes," kingeraft and priestcraft must die. Here, in the valley of the Mississippi, despotism will be buried more than six feet perpendicular—it will be buried so deep that the "strong grip" of traitors can never resurrect it.

Ex-rebel General Albert Pike, who led the yelling Indians against his flag and country at the battle of Pea Ridge, Arkansas, is its present imperator, or "Most Puissant Sovereign Grand Commander." His headquarters are at Washington City, almost beneath the shade of the dome of the nation's Capitol and within ear-shot of the Congressional Halls.

Benedict Arnold, first traitor to American liberty, learned his patriotism in Hiram Lodge, No. 1, New Haven, Conn., and died a Freemason in good and regular standing.

Aaron Burr, another traitor to the best government the sun ever shone upon, plotted his treason in Royal Arch cipher and died a Free and Accepted Mason in good and regular standing.

Wm. M. Tweed, the noted rascal of New York City, learned his honesty in Perfect Ashlar Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons, of which lodge he was a bright and shining light.

The leading Star-routers are high members of the Masonic order—good Masons but poor citizens.

At the murder of William Morgan the Masonic lodge went down in the North. An Iowa Grand Lodge report records the fact: "Fifteen hundred lodges went down in the strife! The ranks of the craftsmen were reduced in numbers from rising fifty thousand to less than five thousand." But, as Freemasonry declined in the North, it arose in the South, and in that more congenial clime its tyled recesses became the council chambers of treason. And even since the war the Ku-klux Klans kept their masks in Southern Masonic lodge-rooms.

The very terms used in Masonry are the sycophantic language of a low, degraded slave system. The government of a Masonic Grand Lodge is "completely despotic." The power of the presiding officer of a local lodge "is absolute." It has its Masters, Worshipful Masters, and Grand Masters; it has its Kings and Grand Kings. Freemasonry is the arch enemy of republican government.

As the Carthagenian general swore his little son, the youthful Hannibal, to eternal hostility to Rome, so should every American patriot swear his child to eternal hate to Freemasonry.

Darius, the mighty Persian monarch, conceived a deadly hate for the Athenians, and in order that he might not forget to revenge his land and country his servant was required to say at every meal, "Master, remember the Athenians." So every loyal man should remember Freemasonry and the wrongs she has done.

Freemasonry is a combination of political pirates. Its oaths are extrajudicial and criminal. Its obligations and death penalties constitute it a school of murder and blasphemy. Its boast of antiquity is a sham and the contemptible argument of the mummy. Its doom is sealed and it must go, even at the flow of blood or the tramp of marching armies.

"Hurrah, boys, hurrah!
Down with the traitor and up with the Stars."

MORAL INSTRUCTION IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

In any rational theory of education everything should lead up to character and conduct. The individual's own development finds its completion in a noble character. The interests of society are not secured in a system which turns out brains minus a conscience. Educational authorities have always recognized character as the end of education. When Socrates had been shown a beautiful youth he wanted to know whether his soul was equally beautiful. Plato said: "I mean by education that training which is given by suitable habits to the first instincts of virtue in children." ("Laws," Book II., 653.—Jowett,) Locke declared: "It is virtue then, direct virtue, which is the head and invaluable part to be aimed at in education." ("Thoughts on Education.") Milton, in characteristically beautiful language, writes: "The end then of learning is to repair the ruins of our first parents, by regaining to know God aright, and out of that knowledge to love him, to imitate him, to be like him as we may the nearest by possessing our souls of true virtue." ("Tractate on Education.")

With Pestalozzi and Froebel character was the good supremely and passionately sought. Herbert Spencer's work on education treats of it as "Intellectual, Moral and Physical."

The lack of proper provision for ethical education in our public schools is painfully patent. This defect our public schools share with our private schools. The task of ethical education is so delicate and fine that the wisest may well hesitate over it. Job work here is worse than no work. Prigs and Pharisees are the products turned out from poor character-factories, and no fashion for uglinesses is likely to bring them into favor. It is so easy to spoil a soul in handling it! Still, something needs to be done, as carefully as may be. That something must be done in the people's schools.

General provisions for moral education are found in the legislation of some of the States, and in the schedules of studies and directions for teachers issued by many local Boards of Education. The Legislature of Massachusetts, in 1789, directed teachers "to impress on the minds of children and youth committed to their care and instruction, the principles of piety, justice, and a sacred regard to truth, love to their country, humanity, and universal benevolence, sobriety, industry and frugality, chastity, moderation and temperance, and those other virtues which are the ornament of human society and the bases upon which a republican institution is founded." Philadelphia enumerates "morals and manners," among the studies to be pursued in its schools. In the "directions to teachers," its Board of Education observes: "Remarks upon morals and manners should follow the reading of the Bible by the principal. These remarks should be made in the presence of the whole school, and as frequently as the incidents of the school may suggest." These occasional instructions are urged as a means of school discipline: "Respectfulness to superiors, obedience to parents and teachers; honesty and truthfulness thus enforced and impressed upon the mind of the pupils will be found a powerful auxiliary to the discipline of the school."

The Board of Education of New York (1867) places "manners and morals" among the studies of the primary schools, and directs as follows for the several grades: Sixth grade—"Instruction is to be given in manners and morals, and illustrated by means of the incidents of school and home:" fifth grade—ditto; fourth grade—"Instruction for cultivating love to parents, kindness, obedience, neatness, truthfulness, and politeness, to be illustrated by examples, incidents, and anecdotes;" third grade—ditto; second grade—"Improve opportunities in the daily exercises of the schools by conversations upon the subjects of the reading lesson and all appropriate incidents to inculcate respectfulness, obedience to parents, honesty and truthfulness;" first grade—"Instruction by means of school incidents and anecdotes, so conducted as to aid in the discipline of the school." In the schedules for the grammar schools no reference is made to the subject. The Chicago Board of Education has some admirable instructions to its teachers, worthy of a place in the directions of all School Boards. See "Barnard's Journal of Education," vol. xix., p. 552.

Few of our School Boards offer any detailed directions; the work is one that cannot show for itself as does other teaching; so that practically this whole subject comes to be left very much to each individual principal and teacher.—R. Heber Newton in North American Review.

A GERMAN METHODIST AND THE GRANGE.

[Dr. Nast (see below), was converted to Christ in Southern Pennsylvania fifty-five years ago. I knew him soon after he lay for hours in agony on the floor. He founded the German M. E. church, of which the Apologete is the organ.—Ed. Cyn.

Rev. Wm. Mittendorf of the Ohio German Conference, and editor of the Botschafter, kindly sends us a translation of certain articles in the German Methodist Episcopal paper, for which he has our thanks. Bro. Mittendorf says:

I here send you translations from the Apologist, the Methodist Episcopal German paper, of which Dr. Nast is editor. The German M. E. conference, several years ago, passed a resolution not to receive a minister into the conference who belongs to a secret society. Many of their German preachers denounce the lodges and are bitterly opposed to them. A short time ago Rev. Mr. Grenzenberg published an article in the "Apologete" against the lodge. A Mr. Wolfe objected to it, and stated that he is a member in good standing in the M. E. church, and also in the lodge, and that he tries to live a Christian life. He says that as outsiders do not know anything about the lodges, therefore it is unkind in them to denounce them.

Next comes a Mr. H. Pope from Texas, and wishes to have light about lodges, and says: "About Freemasons and Knights, and other orders, I cannot say anything because I am not acquainted with them, but about the 'grangers' I can say some things because for a time I was a granger myself, which is also a secret society. I lived at the time on a farm in Missouri. An agent or missionary of the Grangers came into our place and made speeches. A dear brother told me about it who had heard the men, and had joined the lodge himself, for he thought that it was a good thing for us farmers, and would give us support in time of need. And because the word of this brother was regarded very highly by me, I went also and heard the men talk, and it pleased me, and I became a member of the lodge. I soon found out that it was no place for me as a Christian. My brother, who got sick, told me upon his dying bed that he regretted having joined the lodge. I found, wrong:

1. The oath. It is too foolish, too common, too laughable in the lodge, to justify an oath. This oath which each member had to swear, is nothing less than taking the name of God in vain.

2. The majority of the members of the grange were of doubtful character. One man was an outspoken infidel who would any time mock about religion and the church. Another also was an infidel and a drunkard. Besides this, there were several women of very doubtful character in the lodge. And all such we had to call 'brother,' 'sister.' Ah, it went against me! The proverb says: 'Tell me with whom thou associatest, and I will tell thee whom thou art.'

3. At each meeting the question was asked whether any member was sick, and in such case a committee was appointed to visit such member. But I tell you I would not and could not have accepted such infidels as visitors. I would have been ashamed, as a child of God, to have such characters visit me on my sick-bed. I ask here plainly, Is the church not enough society to take care of their sick? Must a child of God be supported by such organized associations? Oh no!

4. After about six months our grange wanted to have a feast, and we wanted to have a procession, for the purpose of gaining new members by such pomp. We got regalias, etc., and behind locked doors were drilled for a march, and got instructions to make a big show. When I saw myself and my brothers and sisters of the lodge in this regalia I was so ashamed of myself that I said openly, 'We just look like a band of fools now.' Then I paid my dues and went away forever.

5. I am convinced that the time and expense are greater than the support will be. The true profits, the smart heads put into their pockets.

6. I must confess that, from the beginning, as often as I went to the lodge, the Spirit of God told me: 'Your way is wrong.' Every time, I felt cast down and condemned when I went to the lodge. It pressed me down as often as I found myself among these lodge brethren and sisters. But that evening when I said 'good-bye lodge!' my former peace returned.

7. Religious songs in such a company are mockery, and the apostolic benediction there is a mockery of God. Yes, I tell you it is wrong; therefore, come out from among them, thou who hast been misled into a secret society. It is right for all who have seen their mistakes to tell others, so they may not be misled into the lodge".—Richmond Star.

"THE VOICE OF SCANDAL.

In a little book entitled the "Manual of the Order of the Eastern Star," by Robert Macoy, we find an address to the ladies from which we quote a few sentences, on account of the singular confession therein made, namely:

"The only Masonic privilege denied to you is that of visiting the lodge, and this would be of no advantage to you, even if it were possible to grant it, but it would awaken the voice of scandal against you from a censorious world, and thus produce far more pain to your kind and amiable hearts than it could possibly afford you pleasure. Females cannot be made Masons."

There it is, italics and all, just as we find it in the Manual, on pages 16 and 17. And then, in the name of decency, what sort of a place must a Blue Lodge be if a man cannot take his wife along with him when he goes thither to work on the level and square, without subjecting her to the scandal of a censorious world? A Master Mason may take his wife, sister, daughter and mother to the opera, the ball-room, the theater, and even to the circus, without their being scandalized by his so doing; but, should he take his wife to the lodge, which is said to represent the Holy of Holies of Solomon's temple, why—horror of horrors—from that good hour and onwards, scandal is rife in the community, and people are wondering what could have induced Mrs So-and-so to be so reckless of her reputation as to go with her husband to lodge meeting, where men pray, and sing, and read portions of Scripture, and play murder, wherein four lives are pretended to be lost. Well, if Robert Macoy, or Robert Morris, or any other Master Mason says the esoteric teachings and practices of the lodge are such as to scandalize a woman who should listen to the one and witness the other, we who are supposed to know nothing about these things, will not deny the correctness of the statement. Truly, the ladies of the Eastern Star type of Masonry have occasion to rejoice that they can take their husbands, fathers and brothers with them to their lodges, without awakening "the voice of scandal against" them "from a censorious world." Happy lords of the household.—Olathe Free Press.

THE POPE AND THE FENIANS.

The Pope issued a short time since a letter to the priests of Ireland upon Irish affairs, telling them to mind their own business, to teach the people to avoid all illegal measures, and to keep out of secret, oath-bound societies; and pointing out the very friendly conduct of the British government towards Roman Catholics, allowing them perfect freedom and the same rights and protection as Protestants. This letter was so strong against Fenians, secret societies, and dynamiters, that it caused a universal howl among them. They said, first, that the Pope had nothing to do with secular matters, in which the people were to judge for themselves. Second, that he had been deceived by wily Englishmen, and had entirely misunderstood the matter. When correctly informed he would doubtless withdraw his unwarrantable interference. They informed him, but the letter was not withdrawn. Third, that the letter was not intended for publication at all, but was a matter of form which the priests would understand meant nothing in particular. Its publication was said to be the surreptitious work of an English emissary at Rome. Fourth, the protest of the Irish revolutionists against the Pope's letter took the more serious form of withholding Peter's pence and subscribing largely to the Parnell fund. Seeing all this, and feeling that it was high time to assert his authority, the Pope caused to be issued another missive, showing that he only had followed the established policy of the Vatican; and a third letter or mandate has come out, requiring the priests in Britain and America to abstain entirely from aiding or countenancing in any way the Fenian or Parnell movements.—N. Y. Witness.

"ORDERED OUT."

This phrase, "ordered out," that we hear so often of late, has a very despotic, un-American sound. We are accustomed to hear of "ordering out" the military, but as applied to civil concerns the phrase is new and strange. It is suggestive of tyranny.

Formerly workmen who were not satisfied with their work or their wages agreed together to "go out." Now they are "ordered out," whether they are dissatisfied or not, by an irresponsible body of rulers who are often the only persons directly interested in a strike.

The rulers of the Brotherhood of Telegraphers made certain demands upon the commercial companies and when these demands were not acceded to the operators were "ordered out." As the strike did not bring the companies to terms it became necessary to "order out" reinforcements. The railroad operators have no special grievances to be redressed, but some of the railroads happen to be controlled by the same persons who control the telegraphs, and it is supposed that a strike of the railroad operators, by disturbing travel, would have an effect that the commercial operators' strike failed to have. The railroad operators are accordingly "ordered out."

It is to the credit of these men that they are not disposed to obey the arbitrary decrees of this new order of tyrants. If they have any of the American spirit in them they will tell the commanders of the Brotherhood to mind their own business and leave them to mind theirs. No doubt a general strike of all the telegraph operators together might have accomplished something. But the Brotherhood chose its own time and method, and failed; and now it wants to persuade the other foxes to cut off their tails.

Their is neither reason nor honor nor liberty in this. It is that most despicable kind of tyranny that is only an embodiment of selfishness. Men who assume to lord it over their fellow men in any such way are the ones that should be "ordered out."—Philadelphia Times.

It is refreshing to observe that while a merited sympathy is extended to all oppressed laborers, there is still enough of independence and self respect to resist the tyranny of the so-called "brotherhoods." Grievous as are the exactions, it will be a sad day when we accept as the remedy, the absolute dominion of an oligarchy of sworn secretists. Let us be thankful that there is a little manhood left.

A GOOD VOTE FOR WASHINGTON.

A good brother, whose liberality has been among the most conspicuous according to his means, writes under date of Aug. 2d of an experience somewhat remarkable, in which his union with Christ and his duty to help in preparing the way for the coming of his kingdom was deeply impressed upon his heart. Committing his way to God in earnest prayer, he felt constrained to make his offering to the Washington fund, $50, by adding to what he had previously sent. He closes his letter with the folfowing appeal:

"Dear Brethren and Sisters in Christ: Don't put off until to-morrow what you can do to-day; to-morrow will never come. You have the Father's property in charge, and the Son will hold you accountable if you do not use it in his cause. Our nation and the church of God are at the point of death at this time, and ere you are aware your 'work shall be made manifest . . . and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is' (1 Cor. 3: 13). The world is in commotion, and I should not be surprised to see it in flames within three years."

MASONIC SANCTIFICATION.

There are many Masons, who care nothing for religion, make no profession of religion, except the religion of Masonry, believe not in Bible conversion, nor in being born again to enter the kingdom of heaven. Many others are Methodists, at least professionally, who utterly ignore and detest the cherished Methodist doctrine of full salvation, and entire freedom from sin, by the efficacy of the precious blood of Christ, received by faith, subsequent to conversion. Notwithstanding these two facts, both of these classes have endorsed either consciously or otherwise, these two cardinal doctrines as wrested from Christ by the formidable and gigantic system of Masonic idolatry. At the same time that system virtually and literally banishes the only true Saviour of men, to the farthest isles of the sea, where if possible, there exists no lodge. Masonry claims by the performance of its rites and ceremonies, not only to give the new birth, but entirely to purify man's nature and fully qualify him for heaven. Baptism is administered and the gavel, mall, or mallet is used. Now for the proof of this, refer to their own teachings. In McClenachan's ritual, (page 576) we read this: "In the name and under the auspices of the Supreme Counsel of Sovereign Grand Inspectors General of the thirty-third (33 deg.) and last degree, I proclaim these children to be purified by Masonic baptism, and anointed with the oil of consecration to Masonic duty. Proclaim it along your columns, brethren Senior and Junior Wardens, and charge all Free and accepted Masons over the surface of the two hemispheres to know and acknowledge them as such.—James Hobbs, M. E. Pastor, in the Vanguard.

Prohibition will never be accomplished by the politicians. But it will be by the people.

LETTER FROM GREECE.

Andros, Greece, via Syra, July 10, '83.

Dear Bro. Kellogg:—You will be surprised to know that we are in Greece again. We had no time to write to you from Smyrna, as we were busy packing our things to come to Greece.

We mailed you a short letter from Syra a week ago mentioning that the agents of the American Board have taken the English school building. As they took it we thought best to close our school two weeks before the end of the school term. And now I take this occasion to give you a general view of this school and of the actions of the Board. I shall not leave my husband, Mr. Zaraphonithes, to tell you the story; but I will tell you what I saw with my own eyes and heard with my own ears. And I think that the time has come that the American people should understand all the actions of the American Board and her missionaries.

This school as you know was builded by the English people. From the time it was built until the present day, it has been under a debt of about £200. The English population used it as a school for about six or seven years and for three or more years it has been unoccupied. When they ceased to use it, one of the directors, Mr. Perin, spoke to Mr. Bowen, the missionary of the American Board, that if the Board would pay the debt of the school they could use it as a day school and also the English population will use it for Sunday school on Sunday morning and for English preaching in the afternoon. Although this director has applied to the Board through Mr. Bowen several times since, yet the Board has made no reply or taken any action in the case whatever. Not so much even as to use the building and pay rent.

Last summer Mr. Zaraphonithes visited Turkey to make a tour and see the old friends to whom he had preached long ago when he was colporteur, and also to see if there was any place open for us in Turkey where we could open a school and have preaching and a Sabbath school and spend the most of the year there and in the summer come to Andros, and thus keep the people here on fire until they are ready to receive the Gospel. Because here in Andros, the people are not yet enlightened and we cannot open a school here because the government would close it at once, and also we cannot have public preaching for the same reason, and so we thought we were almost wasting our time to spend all of each year here.

While Mr. Z. was visiting in Turkey, he met one of the Greek missionaries, Rev. George Constantine, in Smyrna, who is under the American Board and who advised him to come and get that school and also help him in converting the people; but that they would have nothing to do with our school. When Mr. Z. came home, I agreed with him that we go and open that school for the Greeks. So we went. We began it as you know with two pupils. As we could not get possession of the building until the 1st of October, it was too late for a fall school as we found by trial and so we did not open it until after New Year's. We closed the school now with 96 pupils. When we had about 50 pupils, we needed a teacher to help us. Mr. Constantine said that he knew of a young lady in the American Board school at Magnesia, and that he would try and bring her for us. So we consented, and he wrote to the teacher, Miss Cull, and the young lady came.

Two months ago we asked the director, Mr. Perin, what would be the rent for the next year? He told us that the school was in debt and that one of the men who held the greater part of the mortgage on the school was dead, and his heirs wanted their money, and that the school must be sold at auction unless some one would come out and pay the debt and occupy the school. Then we told him that we would pay the debt and occupy the school. He then told us that he would go and speak to the American Board missionary, Mr. Bowen, and see what he would say. When Mr. Perin put the proposition to Mr. Bowen, they called in Mr. Constantine and they three had a consultation together, and at first thought to let us have the school, then again Mr. Bowen said, "Let us first write to the Board and then give answer to Mr. Z." But after a few days we heard that a letter had come from the American Board saying that their secretary would be in Smyrna before long on his way to Constantinople.

We thought that it would be a good chance to see him and speak to him in regard to the school. But unfortunately he was sick and staid but three hours, and it was impossible for us to see him. So we waited until after the meeting in Constantinople to know what would be done.

But Mr. Z. thought it best to speak to Mr. Bowen and he went and told him what sacrifices we had made to come and open the school and he begged of him to leave the school to us; and as they had expressed the desire to make it a boarding school for boys, we offered to take in as many boys as the building would accommodate, and if they did not want that, they can pay the debt and leave us to occupy the building but that if they did take it, we would have to write the facts to America and that it would make a very bad impression in every American heart against the Board.

In regard to a young Greek preacher which they expect to take charge of the school, there are four places waiting for him to go and preach the Gospel. Mr. Z. told Mr. Bowen, also, that they would need from $1,500 to $2,000 to carry on that school and we are doing the same Christian work. We are not Turks or Jews, but the same as they are and attending the same church.

We decided to tell all these things to them beforehand so that they would have no apology to make afterward. Mr. Bowen thanked Mr. Z. for what he told him and said that he would speak to the secretary in regard to this matter and do what is right. But after all this talk with Mr. Bowen, he came back from Constantinople and did not say anything to us. We heard through Mr. Perin that the Board had taken the school.

1. We accuse the Board and their missionaries for taking the school away from us after we had made so many sacrifices to bring it to that condition.

2. They showed no better spirit toward us than would a Turk or an infidel.

3. They took it because of envy and jealousy, and nothing else.

4. It is not, as they say, for a boarding school, for if they wanted it for a boarding school they would have gotten it last year or the year before, for this building was four years vacant. But look what they did last year. They got a building for two years at £60 a year. This would have paid more than one-half of the debt. They made it a boarding school. Every father from different cities and towns, believing that this school would be not only for one, two, or four years, but for many years, sent his children there. But what was the result? It was a surprise to every parent to hear in the heart of the winter that the school was broken up and the children were surprised what to do. Some went one direction, some another, learning that they could put no trust in the words or the doings of the Board. If they were not able to keep that boarding school up, are they not ashamed to open another now?

5. We accuse them because after all they had done, they were not ashamed to come and ask us to deliver the children of our school over into their hands, without telling the children or the parents anything why we left.

We thank God for the new Board which was made in Wheaton for the native Armenias. When the news of this new Board came, there was a jubilee among all the native Christians of Turkey; and their prayer is that God may bless this Board and open the eyes of the American people so that they can see where to give their money. And we hope that the day will soon come when there will be no Boards and secretaries; but every church will be a Board, to send its own missionary. For a Board unlike yours, needs a great deal of expense to keep on.

The native Christians of Turkey say that they are under a tyranny. Before the missionaries came they were under the Turkish tyranny; but now they are under the missionary tyranny. The different nationalities of Turkey have better schools than any of the missionary schools.

Lately a Protestant brother in Smyrna told us in regard to a school which the missionaries opened for the Armenians. In the beginning the appearances were for a college. They had a professor for ancient Greek, another for Armenian, another for French and another for the Turkish language. And to-day as the brother explains his sorrows, says, "That school, the report of which thousands of Americans read, has come down to one young common teacher and his wife."

Much more might be written but you are fresh from the missionary controversy, so I will not trouble you farther. And also there is lately published in the Christian Union, May 17, a very able article by Rev. Henry J. Van Lennep, a man of thirty years experience in Turkey.

In our last address to the children, we felt so badly that Mr. Zaraphonithes could not finish his last prayer. Many of the parents came and expressed their sorrow that we must go away. For we had the roughest children of the city and their parents saw that they improved very much. From time to time we talked with the children about returning to the owner when they find that which has been lost, and we were pleased to hear one day that one of those bad boys had found a purse containing several dollars in money and that he had sought and found the owner and returned it. It was a wonderful thing for such a boy to do. We feel badly because we do not know whether they will take back these children, for their rule is to charge a dollar a month.

To go back next year we need a great deal more money than we expended this last year. To get a suitable dwelling house in which to have a school, we need to pay much more for rent than we paid for the English school building, because this school was used by the English as well as by ourselves and the rent was not very high. We will also need money for benches and writing desks. So it is dark to us as to what we shall do for the coming year; but we believe that if it is with God's good pleasure, he will open the way and send us the means to go back. We had in our school four nationalities: five Armenians, two Catholics, two English and the rest were Greeks.

We need your prayers in this time, that God will give us patience and consolation, for as we said before, we feel it as a persecution, and when we left Smyrna, we left with very sorrowful hearts.

With Christian love,

Mrs. A. D. Zaraphonithes.

SARATOGA LETTER.

Saratoga, N. Y., Aug. 7, 1883.

I yesterday attended the "Ministers' Meeting" at Temple Grove. About a hundred clergymen were present from various parts of the country. Dr. Spiers read a paper on the authorship of the Pentateuch, which he attributed to Moses, because Christ and the apostles attributed it to him. That reason alone was sufficient.

A general discussion followed the reading of the paper. One of the speakers, a Methodist minister, alluded to the Creator as the Great Architect, from which we inferred that, like most of his class, he was a Freemason. Be this as it may, we were impressed with the fact that these "Ministers' Meetings" by their silence on the subject of Freemasonry are giving positive, actual assurance to that wicked institution. But persons of any scholarship or penetration can never respect clergymen who remain silent on such a subject. For our own part, we could not hear a Masonic clergyman speak on religion, without feeling a perfect disconfidence in whatever he might say. We should as soon go to a foul cistern for pure water, as to look to a Freemason for sound morals. The cause of true religion must suffer so long as those charged with its interests are silent on the subject of Freemasonry. By their silence they become implicated in the fraud; and especially when a considerable number of their class are actually, though silently, engaged as members of the lodge, in sustaining the imposition.

The subject for discussion at the next meeting (these meetings are held every Monday morning), is to be a popular one—temperance. As this is a subject which concerns the pecuniary interests of a comparatively few persons, and will hardly stand in the way of office-getting, many feel bold to speak upon it. The displeasure of saloon-keepers is but little to be feared by ministers. But when the question concerns the iniquity of the lodge, than which there is no greater evil in Christendom, there is a terror in the institution which neither clergymen nor politicians dare encounter. To be read out of religious standing, out of political standing, out of social standing, and out of business standing by the members of the lodge is a fate more dreaded than it was to the Jew to be read out of the synagogue of old. It was the synagogue, led by the crafty Pharisee, that prevailed over the church in Judea, and which probably destroyed early Hebrew writings on Christian subjects, if such ever existed; and the lodge has an equal power for destroying the vitality of the church. Not until this fact is recognized in our "Ministers' Meetings," and is openly and freely discussed by them, can men of any penetration entertain a proper respect for our American clergy. Viator.

According to Mackey and others the Ancient Mysteries, such as the Eleusinian and Egyptian, were nothing more or less than "Spurious Masonry," between which and the genuine article there a great many points of resemblance, to which they call the attention of the brethren of the mystic tie. But the question arises, how do these writers know what were the teachings of these secret organizations, they never having been initiated into them? Either Spurious Masonry was exposed by some person or persons, notwithstanding their obligations to the contrary, or else those who tell us about the Ancient Mysteries made their stories out of whole cloth. We cannot believe that Dr. Mackey would do such a thing, and therefore we are compelled to believe he had access to some good expose, the statements of which he accepted as being true, and which he repeated as such, as do we who have in our possession a reliable expose of the workings of the Blue Lodge, notwithstanding all declarations to the contrary that Masonry has never been written.—Olathe Free Press.

THE VERMONT UNIVERSITY.

At the re-laying of the corner-stone of the University of Vermont, by the Masonic fraternity, an address was delivered by Past Grand Master I. C. Butler, which, considering the circumstances and occasion, must be considered a most remarkable piece of effrontery. It was bad enough to invite the lodge to lay the corner stone of a State university, but it is beyond all endurance that the occasion should be made use of for a fulsome laudation of so despicable a fraud as the Masonic lodge. But if such an affliction must be endured, decency would at least demand that the speaker should keep within the semblance of truth in his language.

The first cunning endeavor of the speaker is to prove that the fraternity laid the corner stone of the

When the laboring men of the country are reduced to a condition that they can be "ordered out" by an same building fifty-eight years ago. The only evidence of this claim is the fact that Gen. Lafayette was then the hero of the occasion and that "we are assured that many Masons of Burlington and vicinity were present!" This is the way the lodge mutilates history to laud itself.

Of the same sort is the next claim. Speaking of the invitation to lay this corner stone the speaker uses this language: "We accept the high honor thus conferred upon the Masons of Vermont for the first time in their history [a singular admission.] We accept it as a tribute to the fraternal organization, that has from time immemorial been accustomed, upon invitation, to lay the corner stones of buildings dedicated on their completion to the service of God and the well-being of humanity. In compliance with this custom accorded to Masons in all countries, the corner stone of the Capitol at Washington was laid with Masonic ceremonies, our immortal brother, General Washington, participating in the ceremonies."

"From time immemorial" is a good while for on institution that is only one hundred and sixty-six years old. Equally untrue is the claim that the custom has become universal to invite the lodge to lay the corner stones of public buildings. The admission that this is the first time such a thing was done in Vermont is certainly evidence in point. It is well known that in many cases the effort on the part of the lodge to lay corner stones has aroused such opposition that it has been forced into retirement. In some cases the symbols of the lodge have been removed from public buildings in obedience to a just and honorable demand of a free people who hate the despotism of the lodge. As to calling George Washington a Mason it would seem as if an honest Mason would blush every time he thus belied the memory of that great patriot. Many will hear from this Vermont orator for the first time that the corner stone of the Capitol at Washington was laid by the Masons.

"The gorgeous architecture of King Solomon's temple, and the more excellent glory of the new, rebuilt upon the ruins of the old, are monuments of Masonry in its earliest history."

Will Vermont Christians be deceived by such flickering nonsense as this? Must even the Bible be forgotten to give Masonry the credit of every great thing? This claim, like the others, is a senseless falsehood, put forth to blind the eyes of the people and prepare the State to rescind the laws which now prohibit the very existence of the Masonic lodge. In the face of law this institution lifts up its head and flaunts its empty boasts. Let Vermonters beware or their State will go back on the honorable record of 1830 by which the administration of Masonic oaths was forever prohibited.

"In many States of the Union the Masonic fraternity have established and are maintaining institutions of learning." Now why not name one of those institutions, in place of generalizing? Where are they? Has any one ever heard of them before?

It would be impossible to follow this tissue of lies. The concluding portion of the address is suggestive:

"Masonry has stood the test of ages. Its corner stone is firmly laid on the bed-rock of everlasting truth, the Word of God. The waves of persecution, of vituperation, and of calumny have beat upon it. The thunders of the Vatican have roared against it; political demagogues have fired the public heart against the institution and the fraternity. The church has ostracised its Masonic members from its communion and fellowship. It has been perilous to character, to position in society, and almost to life itself, to avow oneself a member of the fraternity. And yet all these combinations and fulminations have failed to disturb a single stone in all its foundation, or to mar the beauty and grandeur of a single pillar in the great temple. There must have been something good, upright and honorable in the organization of the craft, or it could not have withstood the cyclones of fury and of frenzy that have passed over its brilliant pathway."

Our conclusion, from these facts, would be different. We should say "there must have been something bad and dishonorable in the institution that church and state alike, in all countries, have found it necessary to oppose." Such is the fact. It is bad. The churches know it is bad. Statesmen know it is bad. Lawyers and judges know it is bad. The people will not be deceived by such trash as this speaker puts forth.

But, only think of it! This institution which lifts its hands in holy horror, because it was falsely rumored that a certain distinguished preacher spoke of secret societies at a funeral, occupies the occasion of the laying of the corner stone of a State university in praising itself to the exclusion of the only appropriate theme of the occasion.

A correspondent wishes to know if the Grand Army of the Republic is a secret society in the sense of our rule. It unquestionably is, and is doubtless "oath-bound" at that. An old soldier has no more excuse for being deceived into a secret society than others. We went through the war, and never saw the necessity of the clanning in pledged or sworn secrecy of the few or the many, either during the war or since. In the organization of the Grand Army the patriotic sentiment is made to subserve the interests of secret societies which, in their tendency, are in direct antagonism to the true aim of patriotism. Secret societies are the peril of governments, as European history is proving; and especially do they tend to sap the foundation of republican institutions. It is only tending to sell in sworn secrecy what was won on the open battle-field. We would sound this note of alarm in the ears of all old soldiers, for whom from the associations of the past we feel an especial interest.—Wesleyan

LETTER FROM ALABAMA.

Partridge, Ala.

Editor Cynosure:—Our government is fast tending to despotism. All our legislation, both state and national, point to this fact. We see an entirely one-sided presentment of the behoofs of this legislation. The public lands of the country have been squandered by the millions—given away to rich corporations, to the great detriment of the whole country, and to the rising generation. It does occur to me that, among the many other legislative sins of the country, stands the great sin of legislating in the interest of moneyed monopolies and rich corporations to the great detriment of the poorer classes. The legislation of the country is eminently tending to make the rich richer, and the poor poorer, building up a class of aristocracy to lord it over the people.

The last Congress passed some kind of an act that closed up all the land offices for several counties in this State, so that no poor man can homestead or enter any of the public lands within those counties. This class legislation in this particular instance says to the poor man, Step down and out, and give the moneyed men, without competition, the right to pay for and own all the public land, because, it is considered to possess within its bosom hidden millions of wealth. The public land here in these mineral counties must all be offered at public outcry and if there be any that the rich men will not have, the poor men can get it.

Our courts of (so-called) justice are the merest mocks and shams of the same. It is true that there is one class of human beings that the law is rigidly and stringently enforced against, also, there is another class that the law is never righteously enforced against. This immunity class from justice belong to secret orders and the friends, or kindred of these secret order men. This privileged class among us can and do commit all manner of crime and seldom if ever are they punished according to their crimes, and against many of them no bill of indictment is ever preferred.

In this very county of Jefferson not many years ago a former tax-gatherer of the county did embezzle thousands of dollars, and no bill of indictment was ever preferred, but in a neighboring county a negro man was sent to the penitentiary for ten years for stealing two barrels of corn. The tax-gatherer was a Mason and the negro was not. This is the only reason why one was punished and the other was not. Right here in this county we have had robbers, rapers and murderers all turned loose without the infliction of any punishment due for their crimes! This unfair dealing of the courts of law in building up a species of slavery, not so gigantic, but worse than African slavery of yore. These slaves consist in cowans and profanes, and their task-masters have enjoyed the full fruition of Masonic light. How long, O, how long shall the people have to bear these great iniquities!

A gentleman rode forty-five miles the other day to know if I had any revelations of Masonry. He told wife that he had heard so, and wanted to know the truth for himself. I had but one copy of "Freemasonry Illustrated." I was absent, but wife exhibited it, and he decided that he could not go away without the book. So wife sold it to him. Now you see I must have more of the books, and you must send them whether I send the money or not. Your co-laborer Jesse Ward.

DISRUPTION IN THE UNITED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

Already is the U. P. church fast in the toils of Freemasonry. This solemn contest about the introduction of musical instruments into the church as an aid to psalmody is only a faint screen behind which may be seen the lodge maneuvering to work itself in to monopolize place, money, power and influence.

A minister without charge voted for the overture praying for the removal of the rule excluding the use of musical instruments in the worship of God. The clerk of Presbytery whispered in his ear at the close of the meeting, "Sir, you are not wanted in this church." Not one appointment has ever been given him for fifteen months, nor is likely ever to be given him. He had sought work in the denomination through that Presbytery. No work can come to him except through the clerk of the Presbytery, who is opposed to the use of instruments. But said clerk is dumb upon the sin of lodge idolatry, and has only once in his ministry, it is said, given true warning to the lodge. He got no thanks for it. He is now distinguished for his plaudits of celebrated ministers who are members of the lodge.

What will said clerk think now that the vote of the General Assembly has given him a hint that he is not needed any more in this church? But the musical instrument men are equally susceptible of coveting all the other parapharnalia of ritualism with the use of musical instruments. Already we have them using the Odd-fellow's band of music for their strawberry festivals and pleasure parties, while the communion table is open to members of secret societies who are mean enough to come in, with a constituional article excluding them. Every meanness is lawful in war. James Donaldson.

PITH AND POINT.

THE WAFER A SIN.

Some of our readers have not, perhaps, given much consideration to the wafer of the Roman Catholic church, and may suppose it to be as right for its membership as the bread and wine are for the Protestants. This is altogether a shallow fancy, yet it is in one sense true, as it would be true of the errors of Masonic or even of pagan worshipers. We must not, however, forget that truth and error are realities as sure as light aud darkness.

The bread and wine were given believers as memorials of the broken body and shed blood, and our Lord's commands were, "Eat the bread, and drink ye all of the cup." But the invention of the wafer effectually succeeds in preventing obedience to this command. Satan knew the power of the two gospel emblems, and by the wafer he frustrates the power of Christ in the memorial cup, and has substituted a thing which is strangely and superstitiously regarded as a part of the body of Christ himself, and verily the Saviour to the soul. Thus the great deceiver has succeeded in deluding millions to believe in the saving power of a man-made wafer instead of looking away in faith to Jesus. Such a story might be told of heathen idolatries, but it seems almost incredible that it should have excluded from any professing church of Christ and made void the command of Christ to drink of the representable blood so strengthening to the faith-life of believers. How thankful we should be for an open Bible and a free country. T. H.

THE GRANDEST.

In answer to some of your questions I desire to say that Senator Pomeroy's speech in Chicago, as published in the Christian Cynosure, is the grandest thing I have read for many a day. I heartily approve of his coming to Michigan if he can be obtained, and you or we can get money to pay him. C. C. F.

FALSE TO THEIR TRUST.

While waiting for the train, I am improving my time by giving a little information of the Y. M. C. A. rooms of Ionia, Mich. Several times while passing through this city I have visited these rooms, which I almost hesitate to enter, for by their appearance they look more like a gambling hall than a religious institution. The first thing I beheld was a checker board and dice, domiuo or other games that I cannot mention. I inquired for religious papers to read, and was told by the man in charge of the rooms that they did not keep any of them for the people would not read religious papers. So the Y. M. C. A. feeds the people on such poison and chaff as Frank Leslie, books of fiction and novels, love stories, and this under the uame of the pure and undefiled religion of our loving Saviour. Shame on such work of darkness! I not only refer to the society of Ionia, Mich., but many others that I have visited in other States. May God help us to earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints. S. B. Shaw.

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON IX.—August 26.—Gideon's Army.—Judges 7: 1-8.
Golden Text.—The sword of the Lord and of Gideon.—Judges 7: 20.

"Jerubbaal." The surname of Gideon. It means one with whom Baal contends, i. e, an open opponent and enemy of Baal. This hero is the wonderful type of the militant church. Militant: that is, against unbelief, not engaged in internal warfare. His name proclaimed that Baal is nothing and can do nothing, but that God's word is irresistible. Hence it is a symbol of encouragement for all who confess the truth.—Gerlach.

"Midianites." The Midianites were a powerful and celebrated nation of Arabia, which sprung from Midian, the fourth son of Abraham, by Keturah. For a long period they appear to have been the virtual rulers of Arabia, combining into a grand confederacy, and then guiding or controlling, as circumstances required, all the Arabian branches of the Hebrew race. We may suppose that the bulk of this nation inhabited the region extending from the eastward of Moab and Edom, perhaps along the frontier of Palestine, down to the shores of the eastern gulf of the Red Sea, and that some of the wandering branches of it were occasionally found iu the Sinaitic peninsular.—Whitney.

"The people . . . are too many." Though the whole army of the Israelites consisted of only 32,000, while that of the Midianites amounted to at least 135,000, or four to one of the Israelites. His design doubtless was (1), To show that as to any particular instruments, he could, in effecting his purposes, easily dispense with them, and that they were more indebted to him for employing them than he to them for tendering their services. (2) To shame and humble his people for their past cowardice in tamely submitting to the yoke of Midian. By the result of this enterprise he would afford them convincing proof that the disproportion of numbers formed no apology for their remissness; that if they had, as they ought to have done, made sure of the favor of God, one of them might have chased a thousand. But (3), or chief of all, his purpose is to silence and exclude boasting, "lest Israel vaunt themselves against me."—Bush.

"Whosoever is fearful . . . let him return." God will not glorify himself by cowards. As the timorous shall be without the gates of heaven, so shall they be without the lists of God's field. Christianity requires men; for if our spiritual difficulties meet not with high spirits, instead of whetting our fortitude, they quell it.—Bp. Hall.

"Twenty and two thousand." The application of a rigid test is apt to make thinning work in the ranks of God's professed friends. One would have thought that against such an enemy as Midian, and under such a leader as Gideon, no Israelite would have owned himself fearful and proved recreant to his duty. Yet two parts out of three turned their backs upon their country's standard when they saw the numbers and the fierceness of the enemy. Doth but a foul word, or a frown, scare thee from Christ? Doth the loss of a little land or silver disquiet thee? Doth but the sight of the Midianites in the valley strike thee? Home, then, home to the world; thou art not for the conquering band of Christ.—Bp. Hall.

"Every one that lappeth . . . as a dog, etc." The true explanation undoubtedly is, that these men, instead of kneeling down to take a long draught, or successive draughts, from the water, employed their hand as the dog employs his tongue—that is, forming it into a hollow spoon, and dipping water with it from the stream. This mode of drinking is often practiced iu the East, and practice alone can give that peculiar tact which generally excites the wouder of travelers.—Bush. This is the first (1) answer given to the question whether this test showed any moral qualities in those tried by it, and what they were. (2) It can scarcely be doubted that those who threw themselves on the ground and drank freely were the more self-indulgent; while those who, remembering the near presence of the enemy, slaked their thirst with moderation, and without being off their guard for an instant, were the true soldiers of the army of God. Compare David's abstinence when thirsty in 2 Sam. 23: 16.—Cook. Hence they had the cool cautiousness and prudence needed. (3) The more prevalent Jewish interpretation is probably correct. The worship of Baal was accompanied by prolonged prostrations, so that his worshipers became accustomed to this attitude, and it was more natural for them to assume it in drinking. The others who remained erect, had not been brought up in his worship, but in that of Jehovah, which was not performed with such prolonged, repeated, and superstitious prostrations; they were therefore favored by him in being made the victors.—Johnson.

"By the three hundred men." It must have required great faith on the part of Gideon and the few who remained (Heb. 11: 32); and they are worthy of remembrance as religious heroes. Only faith in God could have led them to indulge in such perfectly foolish hopes as theirs seemed to be. Gideon should not be blamed for the anxiety recognized by God in verse 10, and mercifully quieted by the interposition recorded in verses 9–15. Gideon seems never to have doubted God's ability and willingness to save Israel, but only his own call to work out the deliverance; not God's faithfulness to fulfil his promises, but his own reception of a real promise.—Johnson.

"Their trumpets." Trumpets were not usually in the hands of common soldiers, nor were lamps, or rather, torches. These belonged only to leaders, so that each of the hundred would appear to the Midianites as a leader of a large band. The pitchers were to cover the torches from being seen, making, as it were, a dark lantern. They also aided confusion by the noise of their breaking. In the Christian warfare the trumpets express our power of speaking for God. The lamps are our character and example, lighted by God's grace, and shining for men; and the pitchers represent our capacity of receiving the truth and the spirit of God. Thus armed, the Christian can enter upon the warfare against evil, with the certainty of victory.—Peloubet.

BAND OF HOPE BIBLE LESSON.

PUNISHMENT FOR SABBATH BREAKING.

13. Speak thou also unto the children of Israel, saying, Verily my Sabbaths ye shall keep; for it is a sign between me and you throughout your generations; that ye may know that I am the Lord that doth sanctify you.
14. Ye shall keep the Sabbath therefore; for it is holy unto you; every one that defileth it shall surely be put to death: for whosoever doeth any work therein that soul shall be cut off from among his people.
15. Six days may work be done; but in the seventh is the Sabbath of rest, holy to the Lord; whosoever doeth any work in the Sabbath day he shall surely be put to death.
16. Wherefore the children of Israel shall keep the Sabbath, to observe the Sabbath throughout their generations, for a perpetual covenant.
17. It is a sign between me and the children of Israel forever; for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and on the seventh day he rested and was refreshed. Ex. 31: 13–17.
32. And while the children of Israel were in the wilderness, they found a man that gathered sticks upon the Sabbath day.
33. And they that found him gathering sticks brought him unto Moses and Aaron, and unto all the congregation.
34. And they put him in ward, because it was not declared what should be done unto him.
35. And the Lord said unto Moses, The man shall be surely put to death; all the congregation shall stone him with stones without the camp.
36. And all the congregation brought him without the camp and stoned him with stones and he died; as the Lord commanded Moses. Num. 15: 32–36.

Golden Text.—It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God.—Heb. 10: 31.

Central Truth.—We cannot break God's law and go unpunished.

1. The Sabbath was a sign, both to the Jews themselves and the heathen nations around them, that they were God's people.

2. The way in which nations or individuals now keep the Sabbath is a sign either of their piety or their lack of it.

3. Death for breaking the Sabbath may seem to be a very severe penalty. But we must take the circumstances into consideration. The Jews were then a race of escaped bond-slaves, with a large mixture of foreigners. If God had allowed his laws to be broken with impunity, there would soon have been an end of all law in such a vast, undisciplined horde. Anarchy would have succeeded, and the peace and well-being of the infant nation imperiled if not destroyed.

4. In modern times men have been shot for sleeping at their posts. Their act imperiled the safety of an army, perhaps of a whole country.

5. No similar instance is again recorded.

6. Men may not now be punished with immediate death for violating the Sabbath, yet there is a penalty which no transgressor can avoid. Many a merchant and business man has been stricken with paralysis or softening of the brain because he carried his business through Sundays and weekdays alike. He may not go into his counting-room or look at his ledger, but if his thoughts are all the time about these things his brain gets no rest, and his nervous system finally breaks down.

7. The workman who labors seven days in the week finds a demand made on his physical system that must be met by stimulants. And by degrees he becomes addicted to the use of whisky and tobacco.

8. If men do not fear God enough to keep the Sabbath they will not reverence his name. If they rob God of the day which is his due it is but a step to cheating their fellow beings, and so of many other vices and sins.

9. The dropping of all work and amusement at God's bidding one day in seven teaches lessons of discipline and self-restraint. Communism, socialism, and nihilism, never prevail among the Sabbath-keeping classes.

10. The Sabbath is a great national safe-guard. No government can abide on a firm and stable basis where it is desecrated.

PRACTICAL TRUTHS.

The way we keep the Sabbath is a sign whether we are God's children.

God must punish the sinner for the good of others.

Many vices go with Sabbath breaking.

Where God's laws are disregarded government is not secure.

LESSON TALK.

While capitalists and corporations are encroaching more and more on God's holy day, the workmen are beginning to see that compulsory labor on the Sabbath injures them far more than to cut down their wages.

The same sentiment is working in foreign countries. In a province of Switzerland the mail is no longer allowed to be carried on Sunday, the government thus allowing its hard-working servants their much-needed rest.

Sabbath or no Sabbath is going to be one of the great questions of the future which the boys and girls of today will some time help to decide. If they learn now to love and reverence the day they will be sure to decide it right.

It may be hard for you sometimes to put away all your weekday amusements and interests. But as you grow older, as the cares and burdens of life press upon you, then you will understand what a blessed boon is Sunday. And you will understand too that when God punishes men so severely for breaking his holy day, it is because he knows the misery that would result to the human race if atheists and free-thinkers were allowed to set it aside.

FARM NOTES.

EARLY PLOWING FOR FALL WHEAT.

The first object gained by early plowing is time for the proper preparation of the seed-bed. All possible fertility should be made readily available. To be so, it should be soluble, and division aids solution. The ground becomes hard in July and August, and if plowing is delayed too long, the soil breaks up in hard lumps. If plowed early, it will turn up moist and fine. Rain and air are nature's disintegrating forces.

Seeds germinate quickly, and plants grow rapidly in a firm seed-bed. The increase of insect enemies of wheat makes late sowing, coupled with rapid, vigorous growth, desirable. Hence the importance of a firm seed-bed, which also prevents much freezing out of the plants. To make the seed-bed firm, it must first be fine. It is not a hard soil, but compact, fine soil that is desired. It may be compacted with the roller and harrow; but if the farmer, by early plowing, can gain the aid of a heavy rain, it will save him much labor, and it will do the work of preparing the soil far better than he can alone.

Another object gained by early plowing is the destruction of weeds. They are robbers of the wheat, and the sooner their growth is stopped by plowing, the less plant food they will take from the soil. Early plowing will destroy them before they mature their seeds, and thus prevent perpetuating their kind. Late plowing admits of a large growth, and when this is turned under by the plow, it is impossible to compact the seed-bed, and the green manure affords a harbor for enemies.

Early plowing admits of a better application of manure. Manure is most needed in autumn; to be at once available to the roots of the young plant, it must be fine and near the surface; not on top of the ground, but thoroughly incorporated with the upper layer of soil. If the ground is plowed early, the manure can be applied to the surface, and the work of preparing the seed-bed will fine it and mix it with the soil. Commercial manure should be sown with the grain.

Early plowing admits of atmospheric fertilization. Whether it directly adds the elements of fertility to the soil or only frees and unlocks that which it already possesses, is immaterial. Plowing the land exposes a greater surface, and permits of the easy passage of the air into the interior of the soil.—Am. Agriculturist.

HOW TO STACK GRAIN.

Select a piece of ground sloping toward the stack yard, and as near as possible to some gulch or creek, so that all the rain will run towards and destroy the stack. The straw, when threshed, can be thrown by the machine into the gulch or creek. Great care should be taken in selecting the stack yard. Commencing the stack, be careful to lay the sheaves flat on the ground. Put nothing under them, as brush or old straw is too valuable to be wasted.

The pitcher should be a man of great strength and sure aim, so that he can strike you every time upon the head with the sheaves. It keeps the stacker wide awake and his mind clear. We have seen pitchers so careless that they would only hit you once in a dozen times. Keep in the middle of the stack, and shove or throw the sheaves in their places, and then the middle will always be the lowest, and every straw will act as a conductor for the rain into the centre of your stack. You must be very careful to have no ladder, but slide off and jump on the stack as much as possible. Finish the stack by laying a few sheaves loosely across each other, and then slide off, dragging half of them with you to the ground. Be very careful not to finish your stack by putting grass on top, and bind it down firmly with grass ropes, as none but lazy people do so. Smart and industrious people do not mind, after wind and storm, throwing the sheaves upon the stack again.

Before leaving the stack, be very careful to prop them up on every side, and in the morning they will present a fine appearance, their heads bowed one way, their bodies every way. Be careful to leave no room for the threshing machine between the stacks, as no smart man will object to pulling down a stack to make room.

Lastly, be sure to have no protection against fires, for what is a grander sight on a dark night than a lot of burning stacks? Our observations have taught us that by following the above rules you will save money in getting your grain threshed, for we have seen farmers who made a great fuss about their stacks in finishing them off, and keeping the middle high and solid, pay twice as much to get their grain threshed, as did those who followed the rules here laid down.—Ex.

TO GET RID OF LAWN WEEDS.

A correspondent of the London Garden gives the following practical suggestions on this subject:—

During the last thirty years I have tried every mode of eradicating these, suggested by every published correspondence, and, taking the result and cost of time into consideration, I have come to the conclusion that the best method of proceeding is, after the first cutting in the spring, to put as much salt on each weed, through the palm of the hand, as will distinctly cover it. In two or three days, depending on the weather, they will turn brown. Those weeds that have escaped can be distinctly seen and the operation repeated. The weeds thus treated die, and in about three weeks the grass will have grown, and there will not be a vestige of disturbance left. Two years ago I converted a rough pasture into a tennis ground for six courts.

Messrs. Yoeman's & Sons, of Walworth, N. Y., authorize the following milk records of their Holstein cows, all made by setting the milk twelve hours in a Cooley creamer, churning the cream only, and for the full week, at one churning: Lady Walworth, 8 years, made 19 pound in one week, and 37 pounds 6 ounces in two consecutive weeks; Georgie, 2 years, made 12 pounds 2 ounces in one week; Ophelia, 2 years, 13 pounds 5 ounces in one week; Aggie 2d, 13 pounds 6 ounces in a week; Princess of Wayne, 3 years, 8¼ pounds in one week, when she had been in milk ten months, and her next calf was dropped in two days less than one year from date of preceding calf; and in ten months and twenty-one days she made a milk record of 14,008 pounds 9 ounces. This record of nearly one and a quarter pounds of butter per day when over 300 days from calving, and when due with next calf in less than sixty days, is very satisfactory to us, considering her age and the season of the year (Nov. 21).

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)
Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.
Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)
Christian Reformed Church.
Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)
Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.
Disciples (in part.)
Friends.
Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.
Mennonites.
Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.
Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)
Moravians.
Plymouth Brethren.
Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.
Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)
United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

The Associated Churches of Christ.

New Ruhamah Cong. Hamilton, Miss.
Pleasant Ridge Cong. Sandford Co. Ala.
New Hope Methodist, Lowndes Co., Miss.
Congregational, College Springs, Iowa.
College Church of Christ, Wheaton, Ill.
First Congregational, Leland, Mich.
Sugar Grove Church, Green county, Pa.
Military Chapel, M. E., Lowndes county, Miss.
Hopewell Missionary Baptist, Lowndes Co., Miss.

OLD FACTS IN A NEW FORM.

Do you want the Christian Cynosure for one year? There are three ways to get it:

1. Send the subscription price (single copy) $2.00.

2. Send $8.75 for a club of five, at $1.75 each, and get a copy one year for your services.

3. Send $15.00 for a club of ten at $1.50 each and get a copy extra for yourself.

Names may be sent at different times and papers addressed to different post-offices; but when you send the last name and order your extra copy, please give at the same time the entire list of names in your club, with the address of each, so as to avoid confusion or mistakes.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, AUGUST 16, 1883.

The Issue Presented. The thing to be done by the National Christian Association is precisely that before Christ's disciples at Pentecost, viz., to displace the false worships which fill the earth and teach mankind the only way to God through or by Christ.

An Hundred Monthly Concerts of Prayer, in the villages reached by the Cynosure, would unite members of different churches, promote Christian unity and overturn the lodge, as such concerts overturned slavery. Cannot such be formed?

The Richmond Star shines brighter and brighter. See articles from it in this number. The failure of Anti-masonry fifty years ago and its mistakes to-day come of inadequate ideas of the lodge.

Judgments.—The Interior speaks of "the long list of misfortunes, calamities, and horrible casualties of the present year. The press generally speak of it as a year of terror and disaster. At the same time, from Florida to Puget's Sound there is one continuous and intense awakening in the cause of reforms. This is according to Scripture. "The acceptable year of the Lord" is always joined with "the day of vengeance of our God." "There shall be famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes in diverse places," are ever the tokens of Christ's approaches.

"The portals of heaven his bidding obey,
And expand ere his banner appear.
Earth trembles beneath till her mountains give way,
And Hell shakes her fetters with fear."

Idolatry.—If any of our readers omitted to read the article entitled The Feasts of Saturn, in last week's Cynosure, we hope they will return to and read it with care. It is exceedingly able, and the result of much research.

The Interior says: "We are earnestly opposed to secret societies," yet censures excluding Freemasons from fellowship as "coercion" and leading to popery. We respectfully ask Bro. Gray:

1. Were not the "unfruitful works of darkness," which Paul commanded to disfellowship, secret societies?
2. Do not standard Masonic writers claim those disfellowshiped mysteries as Masonic?
3. Is profane swearing in lodges less sinful than out?
4. Is not the lodge a Christless religion, and so idolatry? And is not idolatry to be disfellowshiped?
5. The venerable Synod of Cincinnati (1836) declared lodge membership incompatible with professing Christ. Will the Interior confute them?

The Washington Paper.—So far as our correspondents inform us,

1. The wish for a paper at the seat of our government is nearly or quite universal among our friends. We cannot learn of a single exception.
2. The wish is nearly or quite as unanimous that it should be owned and controlled, not by the N. C. A. but by a joint stock company.
3. There is a like unanimity, too, in the opinion that the various monthly Americans should be merged in one National American at our Capitol.

Mr. Needels expects to be at the Iowa State meeting Aug. 28th inst., and hopes incipient measures will be taken to get a Washington paper under way. Full deliberation should be had not only at Albia but at every State meeting before the National Convention next fall. As the New York meeting at Syracuse is to be Oct. 17, it will throw the Washington meeting into the last of that or the first of the next month. The paper should be started by a mass meeting of the American party at Washington.

PRAISES OF OBERLIN.

The Christian Intelligencer (Dutch) Reformed church speaks thus of the late Oberlin semi-centennial:

"Abundant honor was paid to the memory of Dr. Charles G. Finney. But there was an omission. It was not said that President Finney, in his last and most useful years, decidedly moderated his opinions and his way of expressing them. Nor was it said that Oberlin has steadily approached to greater conformity to the belief and practice of the great body of evangelical Christians."

We sympathize with the Intelligencer in its attachment to the theological teachings of the olden doctrinal confessions which were the result of a direct appeal to the Bible; when Luther had, under God, freed mind from the Pope, and Henry VIII. had broken England off from priests and convents, and Cromwell had freed mind from the dictation of bishops.

We also share the Intelligencer's disgust at the illuminated fog taught by the miscalled "liberal" pulpits of to-day. But there are some men and women at Oberlin who will not be proud of the above commendations, and President Finney's share in them is deplorably erroneous. Only five or six years before he died, Mr. Finney published the following:

"I wish to arouse young men to the inevitable consequences of such horrible trifling with the most solemn oaths."

"An adhering Mason is a dangerous man in society."

"The teachings of Masonry are scandalously false, and their ceremonies a mockery."

"The torments of the damned are but a faint emblem of the punishment which Masonry declares shall be inflicted on the violators of its laws."

"They (Masons) have seared their consciences by what they have done."

"Masonry is a swindle,—knowing what it is, and embracing it in his heart, a man cannot be a Christian."

This was written in Mr. Finney's "last and most useful years." Will the Intelligencer give its readers some of these "moderated" opinions, moderately expressed? Its church has been rent and is still agitated by the terrible malignity of the lodge, and needs its testimony to enlighten it on this living topic much more than on the doctrines of its catechism. It is

"Faults in the life breed errors in the brain."

Masonry is deism, and denies Christ. There are Freemasons in the Intelligencer's churches; does it consider them sound in the faith? If not, why not set itself to remove them? The truth is, President Finney's opinions on public evils never needed "moderating," nor did his mode of expressing them need or receive any toning down.

TWO PAPER CURRENCIES.

"We have in this country two paper currencies, similar in some respects and dissimilar in others; and this is just one too many. One or the other ought to be retired, and in the end one or the other will be. Either greenbacks or bank notes will ere long become the exclusive paper circulation of the people."

The above literal endorsement of the principle of the ninth article of the American platform, is the financial pronunciamento of the New York Independent, whose authority in finance is good. We lately published the endorsement of our fourth article against the charters of secret societies, by the North American Review. And there is not a plank in our platform which has not been scouted or assailed by the Masonic press of the country.

But to the Independent. Why is not this sheet with us? Finance is now the only politics agitated by the old parties. Civil service reform is conceded; and the three commissioners are at work in Washington. And "Tariff" and "Free Trade" are cudgelled by Democrats and Republicans, to force them to yield an issue on which to go before the people in 1884; and both parties are on both sides of each. Morals being out of the question, money is all that they have to contend about. Why is not the Independent with us on money?

The answer is, it is the advocate of the banks. It comes square out for "The retirement of the greenbacks, and the substitution therefor of bank notes." (See number of Aug. 2d). While the American platform is against allowing private corporations the use of the national credit to trade, speculate and make money on. "We hold that the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency." (Am. Platform, Art. 9.) Against the government currency which carried us through the war, the Independent argues thus: "The government lacks the proper machinery to discharge the functions of a bank."

Yet it somehow gave us the money which paid the armies and saved the Union. But if, by "bank machinery," the Independent means, giving out government bonds bearing interest, allowing banks to put up those bonds as security for the redemption of their notes, paying interest all the while to the banks on those bonds, and the people all the while paying interest on the notes of those banks based upon the bonds—thus paying banks double interest, one interest on the bonds and another on their "notes" or promises to pay, this is a bank-machinery which we do not want.

Why are not greenbacks furnished by the government, without interest, paid out and put in circulation for coin and public service just as good as bank notes predicated on bonds, both of which draw interest from the pockets of the people of the United States? United States bonds are public debt. Why should that debt be made perpetual by under-pinning the currency of the United States with it? We confess we cannot see. Perhaps the Independent will enlighten us.

SO-CALLED "CHRISTIAN KNIGHTS."

Are the disgraceful doings of the so-called "Christian Knights" in the Chicago conclave of 1880 to be repeated at San Francisco this year? It would seem probable, if we accept the Sir Knights of Boston as a specimen. It will be remembered that our city dailies reported an enormous consumption of liquor, and hinted darkly at gross licentiousness in the camps, while even business men felt deeply chagrined at the disgraceful conduct of their visitors. The Boston Herald of Aug. 5th announces the departure of 105 Sir Knights for San Francisco, with a "considerable number of ladies," under the management of Eminent Commander John L. Stevenson, who occupied the "private carriage" of T. J. Potter, general manager of the C. B. & Q. railroad. In a Boston daily of March 6th, 1883, is an advertisement of this "eminent commander's" business as follows:

"Serofula and scrofulitic humors. Fine whiskies. Old bourbons, rye, Scotch and Irish. Pine apple gin. Choice brandies. Old Medford, St. Croix and Jamaica rums. Sherry, Port and Madeira wines. California wines. Sweet and dry Catawbas. Elderberry wine. Cherry brandy. Chapin & Gore's and other champagnes. Smuggler cigars, etc., etc. John L. Stevenson & Co., 2 and 4 Faneuil Hall Square."

The train was a "special," consisting of six palace cars, all new except one, and "built especially for the trip." The whole programme, under the leadership of a liquor dealer, is exceedingly ominous of anything but good, and it is significant that railroad corporations build whole trains of magnificent palace cars for the especial accomodation of Sir Knights and their "numerous ladies," and that the general manager of one of the finest equipped railroads in the country surrenders his "private carriage" for the accommodation of a noted Boston "whisky" dealer. The Herald does not give the number of "Christian" ministers included in this "eminent commander's" division, but it is a well-known fact that some of the "lights" of our country are devoted disciples of the order. Is it any wonder that "Zion languisheth" and that the "judgments of God are abroad in the land," when such wickedness is committed in high places and the professed ministers and disciples of Christ join hand in hand with liquor sellers and libertines at the feasts of Bacchus?

—As an evidence that the letter of Hon. Thurlow Weed to the Batavia Convention has permanently fixed the historical status of the Morgan abduction and murder, it is worth observing that the press correspondents accept his testimony as final. Indeed, nothing but the vaporings of Rob. Morris, and the indefinite promises from persons comparatively unknown that counter testimony would be soon given to the world, have even been offered by the lodge to break the force of the blow. A New York letter to the Detroit Post mentions the correspondence of Thurlow Weed Barnes, grandson and biographer of Mr. Weed, with an old lady in Chautauqua, N. Y., who says that the "Mrs. Monroe" who figured in the third inquest over Morgan's body, was none other than a Dr. Lewis. She was personally acquainted with him and was at a dinner party with him when he was called away to attend the inquest at Batavia.

—"Non-payment of dues" is happily a popular failing among American Freemasons who carry their independent spirit to a greater or less degree even into the despotic regions of lodgery. Over in Canada we read that the Master of an English lodge has sued the Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of the Province of Montreal for reporting him as expelled for non-payment of dues. Additional interest is given to the affair since the question of the legality of the Grand Lodge of Quebec will come up. Under the laws of Canada which prescribes secret societies except certain ones expressed by name, this body has never been so excepted, and it is therefore considered an illegal body.

—The conviction of Marshall T. Polk, ex-State Treasurer of Tennessee, and his sentence to serve twenty years in the penitentiary and pay a fine of $366,000, is a most hopeful fact; and an evidence of a healthy reaction of the public mind against the influence of wealth, high life, and distinguished family connections. When the same measure of justice shall be meted out, regardless of the position and favor of men and uninfluenced by powerful (because secret) combinations, we shall have gone a long way towards national purity, and that righteousness that exalteth a nation.

—Bro. Edward Mathews of Spring Arbor, Mich., is expecting to attend a camp-meeting at Toronto, Iowa, beginning Aug. 22d. He hopes also to attend the State convention at Albia. He desires to lecture at points along the route to and fro. Address him in making arrangements at this office till September 1st.

—The St. Bernard commandery of Knight Templar Masons on their way to California took advantage of the Sabbath to make a special excursion from Denver to Georgetown, Colorado. They thus prove to what religion they belong.

—A series of reform meetings continuing for a week is announced to begin on Tuesday evening, Aug. 14th, at Delphos, Kansas. They will be conducted by Revs. Paul S. Fcemster, State Lecturer and J. A. Richards, Wesleyan Conference evangelist. With such men to lead these should be grand meetings. May the Holy Spirit bless the truth they may present.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—President J. Blanchard preached for the Tonica church on the Sabbath.

—Dea. Moses Pettengill, of Peoria, Ill., is prostrated for a third time this season with an insidious and dangerous, but not painful disease. His interest in the work of the National Assoeiation is by no means affected by his affliction, from which we pray he may be soon relieved.

—Bro. E. Ronayne has been for several weeks holding religious meetings in Lowell, Indiana. He was assisted during a few days by Judge Gillett of Valparaiso.

—Rev. Dr. Meloy, of the United Presbyterian church of this city, and chairman of the N. C. A. Board, lately returned from his vacation much invigorated by the fortnight's change and rest.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

THE KU KLUX KLANS.

The recent revival of the Ku Klux in Georgia and Tennessee lacks the poor excuse of Carpetbagism. That unworthy but much misreprcsented class has long siuee abandoned the field. It lacks the excuse of general disorder among the colored population. It is safe to say that never since emancipation has there been more patient industry or morc quiet progress in mental and material development. Nor does this outburst represent the virtuous and thinking whitc people of thc South. Whatever grievances they may have, they have learned too well that unlawful violence is not the remedy, and that they are likely to be the greatest sufferers if it is resorted to. It is simply this: The mean, negro-hating element that is too lazy to work and too proud to see honest industry exalted over them, seeks occasions for war upon the colored people. Of course when occasions are sought for it is not hard to find them, even in the best ordered society. Some poor untutored negro has stolén a chicken or a pig; another has neglected his cotton crop, and the noble, patriotic and philanthropic order must administer a hundred lashes, and burn their cabins. The men who do these things have never read thc rcports of the last census; they do not know that the negro in the South increases faster than the white man; that they increase not only in numbers bnt in all elements of material prosperity; and that they are here to stay. If they know this it were wisc in them to cultivate peacc rather than war, and the good people of the South must demand it.

There is just one thing that makes these raids possible, i. e., the prevalencc and power of secret combinations. It is notorious that in their former era the K. K. K.'s kept their disguises in the Masonic lodges, and from them they sallied out to do their work of arson and murder.

On oue oecasion a witness gravely informed thc authorities that he "could not tell what he knew about the K. Ks. because it had been told him as a Masonic secret." When secret orders shall be regarded as unlawful, and all good citizens, white aud colored, shall unite in reproving them, then we may expect such raids to cease.

What sort of influence is it that protects Howgate and Nickerson from arrest? There is an Ethiopian in the woodpile, somewhere.—Washington Star, Aug. 27.

Yes, and a very black one. So black that if the mass of the people eomprehended his true character they would soon drive him from his hiding place. Capt. Howgate is a high Mason. The great majority of the offieials, that like him have sworn to obey and execute the laws of the land, had also sworn a previous oath, to conceal all the secrets of a brother Mason and to espouse his cause (if a "companion"), so far as to extricate him from any trouble, whether right or wrong. It is possible that there are many Masons in this city who are better than their oaths, and who interpret them as in subordination to their civil oaths. But many do not, and it should not be thought strange that with plenty of stolen money, a net work of secret lodges and the sworn sympathies of a large pereentage of the officers of the law

"Offenee's gilded hand should shove by justice,
And oft the wieked prize itself buy out the law,
But 'tis not so Above."

H. H. Hinman.

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,

JONATHAN BLANCHARD,
OF ILLINOIS.

For Vice President,

JOHN A. CONANT,
OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

A CHICAGO SEMI-CENTENNIAL.

Fifty years ago Friday last, Chicago was incorporated as a village, and of the twenty-eight men who voted at the election four are still alive—Philo Carpenter, Medue B. Beaubien, John Watkins, and Stephen F. Gale. Only one of the men who signed the call for the first meeting is alive. This is Mr. Alanson Swett. At that time the boundaries of Chicago were what is now State street on the east, Jefferson on the west, Ohio on the north, and Jackson on the south—about seven-eighths of a mile square. All the territory on the North Side east of State street was in the village limits, but not that on the South Side, as there was a military reservation from the river to Madison street, and south of that to Twelfth street was canal land. The population was 350. There was some talk about a celebration in honor of the semi-centennial anniversary of the incorporation a few weeks ago, but no movement was made, and the project was dropped. The fact is, however, an interesting one. Every great event, movement and enterprise has just such small beginnings. American voters, remember this. Doubtless Mr. Carpenter often is encouraged to expect great success for the principles advocated in the American platform when he remembers the days of Chicago's cradlehood.

SPIRITS.

There are several kinds of spirits. Among these, ardent spirits are thought by many to be the worst. The only harm, however, in drinking ardent spirits consists in turning one's self over to a power that one cannot control, and which does not operate in accord with right reason.

But it is as bad to surrender one's self to one evil power as it is to another. To surrender one's self to a set of knavish Freemasons is as bad as it is to give one's self over to the power of rum. The Christian man, whose freedom has been purchased at the fearful expense of the blood of the Redeemer, has no moral right to sell himself into the hands of a saloon-keeper, nor into the abominable power of the Masonic lodge. Neither has he a right to give himself over to the spirit of party. There is probably more wickedness done under the influence of party spirit than under that of the whisky jug. Any man who votes for the Republican or Democratic party merely, throws himself away to a party spirit. He is as much a slave to a foul spirit as if he were to take to drink. The long list of frauds committed by the Republican party is as bad as anything that could be done under the stimulus of drugged liquor. It is as impossible that either of the "two parties" can effect the needed reform as it is that a nation of sots could abolish the manufacture of liquor. It is degrading to the American character to suffer itself to be ridden by either of the two parties that are contending for the votes of the country. Even if there were no American party offering its services to effect a reform, it would be a loss of dignity for a man to vote for either the Republicans or Democrats. He had better not vote at all than to vote for parties with such histories as theirs. It is useless to claim any credit for the Republican party for abolishing slavery. The abolition of slavery was a foregone conclusion; the people decreed it; God had ordained it; and the Republican party first delayed and prolonged it, and is now making money out of it in the most shamcless manner. The people are under no obligation to the Republican party, any more than a master workman is under to a shiftless, unprincipled employee who is ruining him.

Every true American should make an effort to break away from the control of the two ascendant parties. Never would I give my vote to either of them, let what will happen. I might vote for a third party, but never for either of the old ones: for the greatest calamity that can possibly happen to the country would be to come under the control of either of them. The choice between these two parties is only like the choice between two different kinds of liquor, both of which are equally poisonous. The spirit that animates them is as greedy, as lustful, and as meretricious as it is intoxicating. It has no more the good of the country in view than the stock gambler has the good of the church in view. None but office-seekers and political gamesters should ever vote for them.

My vote is my political life. I may be thought to lose that life if I fail to give it to one of the "two parties." But on the contrary, I save it. By withholding it from these parties I withhold it from evil, and preserve it for conviction, for honesty, and for truth. Nothing could be more stupid or more stultifying than to vote, in the name of party, for thousands of such men as are now set up for office. Men of honesty cannot associate with them without loss of self-respect. Their election to office is a premium on vice and incompetence. It is absurd to suppose that our republic can be maintained without the intervention of a reform party. The eagle might as well be returned to its shell, as the interests of the country could be brought within the compass of the Republican party.

American institutions must be maintained by American convictions—by men who are not afraid to vote for a new party. The farmer who still adheres to an old, worn-out reaping machine when he needs a new one, is a sensible man when compared with him who still continues to vote for the Republican or Democratic party.

Let us have a new party—an American party, made up of independent men who dare to stand alone.

American.

THE FIRST PLANK.

"We hold that ours is a Christian and not a heathen Nation, aud that the God of the Christian Scriptures, is the author of civil government."

Enjoying, as we do, such general freedom, and such liberty of speech and press, and such blessings, is it any wonder that thoughtful minds should have framed, and with moral courage, laid this down as the first plank in the Great American Platform of Principles? And then is it any wonder that such vast numbers are embracing it, and say, That is my sentiment? It would be indeed a dull mind and an ungrateful heart that could arrive at a less conclusion, though it needs the moral courage of the true Christian to embody these sentiments, and then to carry them out at the polls, and vote as though we believed in the God revealed to us through the Holy Scriptures.

No one will presume to assert that ours is a heathen nation; but with pride he owns that it is purported to be a Christian nation. Then with those fundamental principles laid down for our guidanee, we have this conclusion, that we came to a knowledge of those principles that make us Christians through the Bible or Holy Scriptures. Then why should not the nation recognize the God revealed to us thereby, and make those Scriptures the reading book of the nation? It is objected because there are some that don't believe in the God of the Bible. We have little to do with that. We are American citizens, and as such, are a Christian nation—nominally so, at least. If there are those who do not want to adopt or conform to our government, it certainly should be their privilege, if they prefer heathens better, that they should go where they may gratify such desires. But this nation owes to itself that it embodies in its fundamental laws a recognition of its author expressed in unmistakable declaration.—The Rescue.

SEED TIME AND HARVEST.

"They that sow in tears shall reap in joy. He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him."—Ps. 126: 5, 6.

Go forth! though weeping, bearing precious seed;
Still sow in faith, though not a blade appears;
Go forth! the Lamb himself the way doth lead,
The everlasting arms are o'er thee spread;
Thou'lt reap in joy, all thou hast sown in tears.

Take up thy burden—bear it joyfully—
Fear not sin's darkest cave to enter in;
Though fierce thy foe, yet Israel's Lord is nigh,
And o'er thy fellow-men he hears thee sigh,
Seeking for him thou lov'st, a soul to win.

Go forth! there is no shadow on thy brow,
No tear that rises—no swift cry to bless
The grain thou bearest—but he heedeth: thou
Shalt soon rejoice—joy breaketh even now;
On to the mark of thy high calling press.

The pastures of the wilderness may mock
Thine earnest labors. Look thou to the hills:
God shall the chambers of his dew unlock,
Till living waters from the smitten rock
With fertilizing streams each furrow fills.

Ask not for sheaves, a holy patience keep;
Look for the early and the latter rain.
For all that faith hath scattered, love shall reap;
Gladness is sown—thy Lord may let thee weep;
But not one tear of thine shall be in vain.

'Tis thy Beloved gently beckons on;
His love illumes for thee each passing cloud;
When yon fair land of light at last is won,
And seed time o'er, and harvest work begun,
He'll own the fruit that shadows now enshroud.

Behold! the Master standeth at the door;
Cry for Sabaoth's—raise thou thy voice:
Short hour of labor—soon it shall be o'er:
The dawn is breaking—night shall be no more,
And thou, with him who reaps, shalt then rejoice.

—From "Whispers in the Psalms."

THE CURSE OF ONE DISTILLERY.

Colonel Imiah Holland was a wealthy New York grain dealer, who had come up into New England, and bought for a quiet summer retreat for himself and family a large and picturesque hill farm, whereon were a trout brook, a pickerel pond, partridge coverts and a substantial, roomy house, quite comfortable, although somewhat old, and large enough to accommodate the parties he annually brought up with him from the city for hunting and fishing. Mr. Holland was a pleasant, social man, who always had a cheery word for his new rural neighbors, and asked so many questions about farming, stock and crops that he became very popular.

One mild April morning, as his neighbor, Farmer Stoddard, was driving past "Holland Farm," as the rich grain merchant's country residence was called, he was surprised to see the owner come bowing and smiling towards the gate.

"I ran up from New York last night, to see if it was beginning to thaw out here," he said, "and to carry out a little project which I have had in my head all winter. I have thought that in a place like this some sort of business that would make a local market for products of the neighboring farms would be a blessing to the owners. It has occurred to me that I would put up two or three cider mills and a distillery or two over on Stony Brook. That would use up all the superfluous grain hereabouts, as well as all the apples which I hear are frequently left on the ground to decay in great quantities here in these immense orchards."

"There were cider mills and distilleries in town when I was a lad," said Farmer Stoddard gravely.

"Is that so?" queried Colonel Holland, still chirk and pleasant in his manner. "Did they do a good business?"

"I will show you what they did if you will step into my buggy and ride with me two or three miles out to my brother's."

"All right," replied Colonel Holland. "I'm glad to go with you. I thought I would speak to a few of the leading farmers about it, and you are the first one I have met since my return. I don't know that I have ever met your brother whom you are taking me to see."

"Quite likely not," replied Mr. Stoddard. "He owns a farm in a retired locality in the north part of town. He was chosen overseer of the poor at our last town meeting, and all of our paupers are now quartered there. Here we are," said the intelligent, thrifty farmer, as he drew up his sleek bay filly in front of a long, low, red house, on the south side of which a dozen wretched samples of humanity were out sunning themselves. They all looked clean and well kept, but were very decrepit, and looked out from sore, red eyes set in very sodden and blotched faces; two, one man and one woman were insane. The woman, who was known as "Aunt Huldah," was greatly taken with the handsome, finely dressed, portly city man, and ran after him as he with Mr. Stoddard walked through the door-yard toward the large barns, calling on her companions to see what a beautiful lover had come for her.

"Poor, demented creature!" said Colonel Holland, pityingly, as he passed through a gateway and escaped from her vehement protestations of affection.

"It is a sorrowful sight indeed," said Mr. Stoddard. "She lived near the distillery I was speaking to you about. In those, her younger days, she used to board and help those employed about it. By degrees she became to like cider-brandy made there, and of which nearly everybody drank as freely as of water. Finally the doctors said her brain had become paralyzed. She is harmless, and so is kept here rather than at the asylum, where for a year or two she was homesick and very unhappy. She has no near relatives, and of course no property.

"This is Captain Ball, one of our former leading business men," continued Mr. Stoddard, pausing before a thin, bent, pallid-faced old man, who was sawing wood in a weakly way before the woodshed. "When I was a boy the Captain carried on a thriving business."

"Yes, yes," spoke up the poor creature in a wheezing voice, endeavoring to straighten himself up. "I owned the distillery, and did do a thriving business, to be sure but somehow I lost money. My wife used to say that I was the best wholesale customer I had. Perhaps I was, for I never went dry in those days—although I've had to since I came here; he! he! I tell you I made a prime article of cider-brandy and corn-whisky, too; yet there were always some folks in town who cursed me for it."

"Where are the men who worked for you in your distillery, your neighbors who had money invested in it, and those in this region who were the largest consumers of your fine brands of brandy and whisky?" asked Mr. Stoddard, in his grave, quiet way.

"He! he!" laughed the captain, "those who are not in the burying ground are here, waiting to be carried there."

"It is a fact," said Overseer Stoddard, coming up now and greeting his brother after an introduction, "Colonel Holland, that every one of these 'boarders' of mine was brought hither directly or indirectly by that old distillery. That little hunchback girl over there by the door is a grandchild of the old captain with whom you were just now talking. His only son married a daughter of 'Aunt Huldah.' They were both burned to death one midnight, not many years ago through the carelessness of the drunken husband, who set their house on fire. That poor little creature, who was terribly mutilated by burns, but was saved, is the unfortunate offspring of that union. Oh, it was hell upon earth over there in the 'Still village' when I was a boy. At last the more respectable part of the community would stand such work no longer, and one dark night the distillery was leveled to the ground. The old captain there was fully paid for his loss—in fact much more than the property was worth—but soon he drank up the money, as well as the rest of the property, and he and his sole living descendant are here to-day."

"I am a man of the world, and have seen something of the ill effects of rum in my day, but not exactly in this light," said Colonel Holland, as he and Farmer Stoddard were driving homeward. "I like this old town, however, and want to do something to benefit it in the way of business."

"Build a cheese factory," suggested Farmer Stoddard.

"Eureka!" cried Colonel Holland, "I will do so; and what is more I will start a vinegar-making establishment. Your Vermont cheeses and pure cider vinegar will sell like hot cakes in New York."

And so to-day the grain that is raised in the fertile meadows and plains in Northford feeds the sleek, Juno-eyed cows that graze on the sweet pasturing of its hillsides, and the luscious milk goes into the best of cheeses; while the carloads of apples, that were formerly left to decay in the large and prolific orchards are utilized by the vinegar factory. The farmers are more prosperous than ever, and bless the day when Colonel Holland first came to pass his summer there, and put a little enterprize into them withal. —Selected.

HOW TO PREVENT A DIVORCE.

When the senior Jonathan Trumbull was governor of Connecticut, a gentleman called at his house, requesting to see his excellency in private. Accordingly, he was shown into his sanctum sanctorum, and the Governor came forward to meet Squire W., saying, "Good morning, sir, I am glad to see you."

Squire W. returned the salutation, adding as he did so, "I have called upon a very unpleasant errand, sir, and want your advice. My wife and I do not live happily together, and I am thinking of getting a divorce. What would you advise, sir?"

The Governor sat a few minutes in deep meditation, then turning to Squire W., said, "How did you treat Mrs. W. when you were courting her? and how did you feel toward her at the time of your marriage?"

Squire W. replied, "I treated her as kindly as I could, for I loved her dearly at that time."

"Well, sir," said the Governor, "go home and court her now just as you did then, and love her as when you married her. Do this in the fear of the Lord for one year, and then tell me the result." The Governor then said, "Let us pray." They bowed in prayer, and separated.

When a year had passed away Squire W. again called to see the Governor, and grasping his hand said, "I have called, sir, to thank you for the good advice you gave, and to tell you that my wife and I are as happy as when we were first married. I cannot be grateful enough for your good counsel."

"I am glad to hear it, Mr. W., and hope you will continue to court your wife as long as you live."

The result was that Squire W. and his wife lived happily together to the end of life. Let those who are thinking of separation in these days go and do likewise.

YOUNG ATHEISTS.

A suggestive scene took place lately in a railway car that was crossing the Rocky Mountains. A quiet business man who with the other passengers had been silently watching the vast range of snow-clad peaks by him seen for the first time, said to his companion:

"No man, it seems to me, could look at that scene without feeling himself brought nearer to his Creator."

A dapper lad of eighteen, who had been chiefly occupied in caressing his mustache, pertly interrupted: "If you are sure there is a Creator."

"You are an atheist?" said the stranger, turning to the lad.

"I am an agnostic," raising his voice. "I am investigating the subject. I take nothing for granted. I am waiting to be convinced. I see the mountains, I smell the rose, I hear the wind: therefore, I believe that mountains, rose and wind exist. But I cannot see, smell, or hear God. Therefore"—

A grizzled old cattle-raiser opposite glanced over his spectacles at the boy. "Did you ever try to smell with your eyes?" he said, quietly.

"No."

"Or to hear with your tongue, or to taste with your ears?"

"Certainly not."

"Then why do you try to apprehend God with faculties which are only meant for material things?"

"With what should I apprehend him?" said the youth with a conceited giggle.

"With your intellect and soul!—but I beg your pardon;" here he paused; "some men haven't breadth and depth enough of intellect and soul to do this. This is probably the reason that you are an agnostic."

The laugh in the car effectually stopped the display of any more atheism that day.

But this is a question that cannot be laughed or joked away. The immature lads are not few in our colleges who find a Greek grammar too much for their brains to master, yet who loudly proclaim themselves agnostics or materialists, and challenge the Creator of the universe to stand on trial for their verdict.—Sel.

THE TURPENTINE REMEDY.

An aged physician in Washington, who is retired from practice, a man of extensive learning and high character, says that the younger practitioners laugh at him for recommending turpentine as a remedy for diseases of the lungs. He contends that they have nothing better to suggest, indeed they have no remedy for consumption. He claims that in twenty-seven clear cases of throat disease the use of this remedy under his own direction has restored the several parties to fair health, one of these being his own wife, and another being a man who, from being unable to sit or to lie in a prostrate position, has been for five years past doing engineer's work in the Treasury.

The remedy is simple: Procure at a drug-store some white turpentine; take in the mouth a bit the size of a pea; swallow the slowly dissolving substance and when it is quite soft, swallow the lump. This medicine is an old one, not at variance, however, with the modern notion of sending patients to piny regions to inhale terebinthine odors.

THE FIRST STRAWBERRIES.

A litle girl once had a bed of strawberries. Very anxious she was that they should ripen and be fit to eat. The time came.

"Now for a feast!" said her brother to her one morning, as he picked up some beautiful ones for her to eat.

"I cannot eat these," said she, "for they are the first ripe fruit."

"Well," said her brother, "all the more reason for our making a feast, for they are the greater treat."

"Yes; but they are the first ripe fruit."

"Well, what of that?"

"Dear father told us that he used to give God the first out of all the money he made, and that then he always felt happier in spending the rest; and I wish to give God the first of my strawberries, too."

"Ah! but," said her brother, "How can you give strawberries to God? And even if you could, he would not care for them."

"Oh, I have found out a way," said she, "Jesus said, 'Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me,' and I mean to go with them to Mrs· Perkins' dying child, who never sees a strawberry, they are so poor."—The Pansey.

CRABS PLAYING POSSUM.

A learned friend, a naturalist, owned a large vicious monkey, which, because of its fierceness, had to be kept iu a strong cage. Visitors from motives of prudence kept at a safe distance. At my first interview, I spoke gently to the imprisoned thing, and reached to it my hand. It took hold of my fingers with its black hands, aud toyed with them, cooing like a trustful child. The learned man was astonished. It had never acted thus to a strauger. So, assuming a fierce voice, he shouted: "Go for him, Jack! go for him!" But Jack didn't stir; still holdiug my fingers, he looked entreatingly at his master, as if to say: "Excuse me this time. I like this man." The master, however, iusisted, and shouted again, in assumed earnestness: "Go for him, Jack! go for him!" and Jack obeyed. I let him keep hold of my fingers; and he did "go for me." Such sublime rage—he fairly danced, and screamed with anger. But it was all make-believe. Jack held on to my fingers, and wouldn't hurt a hair of my head.

In animal life there is a great deal of this make-believe. Some manifestations of it naturalists call mimicry. Much of it is inherited habit, in which cases it is for purposes of protection. Some caterpillars are deceptive both in color and habit, resembling the color of the bark, and in their habit imitating the twig of a tree. They attach themselves by one end to a branch, and then extend themselves at an angle, which position is sustained for many minutes at a time, so that birds will mistake them for dry broken twigs.

Many insects will feign death when disturbed. So will a fox on occasion. This trick is so common with the opossum, that out of it has come the proverb. A person who is shamming is said to be playing 'possum.

Some interesting and pretty instances of playing 'possum are found in the habits of the sea-spider, or spider-crab, whose scientific name is Libinia canaliculata. It is decidedly the most crabbed and testy-looking member of its tribe. The body is round pear-shaped. The legs are sprawling thin and spider-like, the two front ones being the longest and thickest. There is a pretty insect, the tortoise beetle, which delights in the leaves of the convolvulus, or morning glory. It shines like a scale of burnished gold, but is far more brilliant in the sunlight than any gold can be. In its larval or worm stage it actually makes for itself a tent-like covering of its own dung. Some think this curious habit is to provide a shelter from the sun. I think the object is to mask itself, and thus to escape the birds.

Of all the crabs this sea-spider is the most dirty and repulsive looking. I have caught specimens which seemed to me to delight in a filthy aspect, being literally coated with a matting of dirt. Hence, naturalists speak of it as encrusted with "a greenish-brown sordes." The last word may be rendered filth or slime. In this condition, if the crab will but keep still, a passing fish would mistake it for a slimy or mud-coated stone.

The spider-crab has upon its shield or back a good many stiff hairs, and some hooked, stout spines. There are also some stiff hairs on the sprawling legs.

It is sometimes seen perambulating in most fantastic garb, having fronds of sea-lettuce like green ribbons attached to its legs and shield. Thus this "high fantastical" with its array of emerald streamers covering arms and back, did look vain, and ridiculous, too, for all that. In the case of spider-crab this "wearing of the green" is a beautiful instance of mimicry for self protection. A ravenous fish does not gobble up a clump of green seaweed. Moreover, a little portable grove like this would probably be very grateful to the crab, as it surely would oxygenate the water about it, and might attract food.

I think that the sea-spider is not likely to practice this dodge in any localities except such as are clean; for instance, sandy and rocky places. It suits its conduct to the situation, hence, in muddy localities it becomes a gutter-snipe. There it affects to imitate a muddy stone, among the rocks it imitates a stone overgrown with seaweed.

It must be added that once I was much amused by a Japauese caricature, representing a party bathing in the sea. The bodily contortions and the excited countenance of one of the party was laughably comical, the truth being that a great sea-spider had him by a toe. And this reminds that some years ago I deseribed a Japanese spider-crab which I have measured myself. This terrible crustacean, when expanded, was exactly eleven feet and six inches in length; and one has since been captured said to be sixteen feet in length!—Mastery.

GOD EVERYWHERE.—A Brahmin in Calcutta asked a European gentleman, "What is your order of society in Great Britain, are you divided into castes, or do you eat and drink together according to circumstances?" The European replied, "We deem it our honor to demean ourselves as brethren in the participation of food at one table, as Providence permits." The Brahmin replied, "That appears to me to be an offence against good morals and good conduct." The gentlemau rejoined, "I think I can prove it to you, by a practice of your own, that you are in error. How do you act in the field of Juggernaut? Do you eat there with the lowest caste of India? There you know no distinctiou of caste, but all feed at one board." The Brahmin answered, "I can screen myself from the imputation you bring against us, for there we are in the presence of our god; there Juggernaut is in our midst, and there we can feast together." "Ah!" said the gentleman, "and I can justify the Christian practice on your own principles, for we are everywhere in the presence of our God."

KING EDWARD AND THE SWORDS.—In the dawning of the glorious day of the Reformation, the Lord raised up the eminently religious King Edward the Sixth to engage in that work. He had a very high esteem for the Holy Scriptures, according to which this great work was to be secured, and which had been, by the enemies and murderers of souls, long concealed from their forefathers. When, therefore, at his coronation, the swords were delivered to him, as King of England, France and Ireland; having received them, he said, "There is yet another sword to be delivered to me;" at which the lords wondering, "I mean," said he, "the sacred Bible which is the sword of the Spirit, and without which we are nothing, neither can we do anything." And as he prized the word of God himself, so he soon restored it to his people; and that they might all have opportunity to peruse the inspired writings, he ordered a large Bible in English, with the paraphrase of Erasmus on the Gospels, to be set up in every church in which at all times those that could, might go and read; and those that could uot read, might go aud hear.

TEMPERANCE.

KANSAS THE PROHIBITION STATE.

"Kansas is one of the most essentially agricultural States on the face of the whole earth, and if any one doubts the ability of a purely agricultural people to rise to the very highest prosperity, refinement and culture by agriculture alone, he need only come to this beautiful State, to have all these doubts removed. Here are a million of people of whom less than ten in a hundred are engaged in manufacturing. Only think of it! The valuation of the property in Kansas is $369,255,961, more than $369 apiece for every man, woman and child in the State. They have a cow to every two persons, and of other cattle they have one apiece. Of sheep they have one apiece, and of swine one and a quarter. They have six bearing apple trees, six peach trees, and of cherries and plums one apiece. Of winter wheat for 1882, they have thirty-four bushels apiece; or oats, twenty-two; of Irish potatoes, five bushels, and they had six gallons of sorghum to each person to sweeten it all. Was there ever such material prosperity? Was there ever on the face of the earth in one community a million of people so well off? And all this has been done within half the time allotted to human life."—Junction City News.

INTEMPERANCE IN LONDON.

This I apprehend is the monster vice in the city. It stares you in the face on every hand. Active workers in the cause of temperance say, as yet but little, comparatively, has been done in this metropolis, to check the fearful progress of this vice; that it is of a more hopeless character here than in the provincial towns and villages. Among the latter, the lower classes, for the most part, drink strong beer, but in London they add to this the free use of gin. Here they have large and splendid establishments which they call GIN PALACES. Some of them are beautiful establishments. The decorative art has made some of them as attractive as the Prince of Wickedness could desire, to catch the victims of this soul-destroying vice. In these institutions the work of death goes on by the wholesale. The custom is so great that the very drippings from the glasses, all are saved by lattice work counters and large trays underneath, are sufficient, it is said, to pay the clerks who wait upon the customers.

A few evenings since, in company with a friend, I stopped at the door of one of these palaces, to see the throng that was passing in and out, I was perfectly astonished, when my friend said, "More than two hundred have passed in and out during the fifteen minutes that we have been standing here." I said, How do you know—it cannot be possible? His reply was, "I counted them by my watch." Do you think, my reader, we can rival that in America? I have never seen the like in our country, and I have visited all, or nearly all, the largest cities of the Union, and never saw anything that approximated it. Now, supposing there are two thousand of the gin palaces, and a hundred thousand smaller places where intoxicating liquors are sold in London, and hundreds of thousands of families where it is drank as freely as water; is it any wonder that intemperance is fearfully common? Many of the customers of these palaces are women; indeed, there was one establishment where we saw more women come out than men. Their dress and appearance were most squalid and wretched. Many of them seemed to be mothers, leading up their children—sometimes a young child in their arms, and another at their side. These poor little children, when hungry for bread, are fed with whisky, and thus early trained to habits of intemperance. Truly, the time is come, when, if a child asks for bread, the parents gives him a poisonous serpent.

Perhaps there there is no city in Europe, outside of some of the large cities of Russia, where drunkenness is so common among women as in London. And it is not confined to the lower classes alone; even ladies in the higher walks of life are not exempt from the degrading vice.—Correspondence of Evangelical Messenger.

GEORGE CRUIKSHANK AND THE "BOTTLE."

Recent reminiscences of the artist, Cruikshank, tell the story of his early dissipatious, his conversion to total abstinance, and his subsequent use of his powerful pencil in the interest of the temperance reformation. "The first hand-grenade he flung at the tyrant Rum, was a pamphlet of twelve pages about the size of Harper's Weekly, which he called 'The Bottle.' It represents the career of a happy and prosperous mechanic who, beginning with one glass of gin, descends step by step through the various stages of misery and crime till he ends by slaying his wife with the instrument of all his misery, the bottle. This was very forcibly treated, and took the town by storm, selling enormously, and of course turning a large sum of money into Cruikshank's pocket. It gave Douglas Jerrold an opportunity for one of his sarcasms. Walking with a friend he met Cruikshank. "Hallo!" he cried, "here comes Cruikshank; hasn't been out of a public house since 'The Bottle' was published." But this was not true. Cruikshank, I believe, never relapsed, and was certainly most sincere and earnest in the cause of temperance when I visited him.

"I want to do something," he said, "for the benefit of my fellow-creatures before I die, and if I can put one spoke in the wheel of this chariot of hell which is carting its millions every five minutes down to the dead sea of damnation, I shall die a little more contented. Five minutes? Did I say five minutes? Every two minutes, every one minute, like the Paddington busses, this infernal vehicle makes a trip, and its always full, too, always full. From Rum to Ruin, by way of Care Cross, Crime Crescent and Penury Square. I fear I have to a great extent fritted away whatever gifts, physical and mental, God has seen fit to give me, and now I want to see if I cannot take up a few of the ever-due bills which I owe the Almighty and his creatures."

WHISKY IN ALASKA.

News from British Columbia dated Victoria, July 15, says: The steamer Eureka, arrived this morning from the North, brings news of a horrible tragedy at Dakan mine, near Harrisburg, Alaska. Two whisky sellers named Rennie and Martin got drunk and unconsciously exchanged cabins during the night. Indians broke into Martin's cabin, where Rennie was sleeping, and stole a bottle of whisky. As soon as the fact was discovered both of them started after the Indians, and in a fight with them Rennie was killed. Citizens in force arrested three Indians, confining them in a guard-house. During the temporary absence of the guard the Indians procured a pistol, shooting the guard on his return, then fled. The firing awoke Major Givens, formerly of the United States army. He rushed to the rescue, and was shot down wounded. The Indians took an ax and hacked his head to pieces. The three Indians then attempted to make good their escape, but a number of miners who had reached the scene shot one of them down and arrested a second. The third escaped. Infuriated citizens constituted themselves a jury and hung the captured Indian on the spot. Next day Colonel Barry ordered the chief to produce the third one who had escaped. He was quickly delivered up and promptly hanged.

Mr. Gladstone is credited with the remark that the drinking customs of Great Britain are bringing on that country all the evils of war, pestilence and famine.

At Hyde Park, Pa., nearly all the saloon keepers were refused a renewal of licenses. This action is due to the strenuous efforts of the Temperance Union.

Dram-drinking drags its deluded devotees down to a drunkard's dreadful doom of darkness, degradation, death and damnation.

Greeley, Col., is a prohibition town of 2,460 population, with no paupers, no jail, no police magistrates, no poor-house.

The whisky traffic makes bad citizens faster than schools and churches make good ones.

SEED TIME AND HARVEST.

"They that sow in tears shall reap in joy. He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him."—Ps. 126: 5, 6.

Go forth! though weeping, bearing precious seed;
Still sow in faith, though not a blade appears;
Go forth! the Lamb himself the way doth lead,
The everlasting arms are o'er thee spread;
Thou'lt reap in joy, all thou hast sown in tears.

Take up thy burden—bear it joyfully—
Fear not sin's darkest cave to enter in;
Though fierce thy foe, yet Israel's Lord is nigh,
And o'er thy fellow-men he hears thee sigh,
Seeking for him thou lov'st, a soul to win.

Go forth! there is no shadow on thy brow,
No tear that rises—no swift cry to bless
The grain thou bearest—but he heedeth: thou
Shalt soon rejoice—joy breaketh even now;
On to the mark of thy high calling press.

The pastures of the wilderness may mock
Thine earnest labors. Look thou to the hills:
God shall the chambers of his dew unlock,
Till living waters from the smitten rock
With fertilizing streams each furrow fills.

Ask not for sheaves, a holy patience keep;
Look for the early and the latter rain.
For all that faith hath scattered, love shall reap;
Gladness is sown—thy Lord may let thee weep;
But not one tear of thine shall be in vain.

'Tis thy Beloved gently beckons on;
His love illumes for thee each passing cloud;
When yon fair land of light at last is won,
And seed time o'er, and harvest work begun,
He'll own the fruit that shadows now enshroud.

Behold! the Master standeth at the door;
Cry for Sabaoth's—raise thou thy voice:
Short hour of labor—soon it shall be o'er:
The dawn is breaking—night shall be no more,
And thou, with him who reaps, shalt then rejoice.

THE CURSE OF ONE DISTILLERY.

Colonel Imiah Holland was a wealthy New York grain dealer, who had come up into New England, and bought for a quiet summer retreat for himself and family a large and picturesque hill farm, whereon were a trout brook, a pickerel pond, partridge coverts and a substantial, roomy house, quite comfortable, although somewhat old, and large enough to accommodate the parties he annually brought up with him from the city for hunting and fishing. Mr. Holland was a pleasant, social man, who always had a cheery word for his new rural neighbors, and asked so many questions about farming, stock and crops that he became very popular.

One mild April morning, as his neighbor, Farmer Stoddard, was driving past "Holland Farm," as the rich grain merchant's country residence was called, he was surprised to see the owner come bowing and smiling towards the gate.

"I ran up from New York last night, to see if it was beginning to thaw out here," he said, "and to carry out a little project which I have had in my head all winter. I have thought that in a place like this some sort of business that would make a local market for products of the neighboring farms would be a blessing to the owners. It has occurred to me that I would put up two or three cider mills and a distillery or two over on Stony Brook. That would use up all the superfluous grain hereabouts, as well as all the apples which I hear are frequently left on the ground to decay in great quantities here in these immense orchards."

"There were cider mills and distilleries in town when I was a lad," said Farmer Stoddard gravely.

"Is that so?" queried Colonel Holland, still chirk and pleasant in his manner. "Did they do a good business?"

"I will show you what they did if you will step into my buggy and ride with me two or three miles out to my brother's."

"All right," replied Colonel Holland. "I'm glad to go with you. I thought I would speak to a few of the leading farmers about it, and you are the first one I have met since my return. I don't know that I have ever met your brother whom you are taking me to see."

"Quite likely not," replied Mr. Stoddard. "He owns a farm in a retired locality in the north part of town. He was chosen overseer of the poor at our last town meeting, and all of our paupers are now quartered there. Here we are," said the intelligent, thrifty farmer, as he drew up his sleek bay filly in front of a long, low, red house, on the south side of which a dozen wretched samples of humanity were out sunning themselves. They all looked clean and well kept, but were very decrepit, and looked out from sore, red eyes set in very sodden and blotched faces; two, one man and one woman were insane. The woman, who was known as "Aunt Huldah," was greatly taken with the handsome, finely dressed, portly city man, and ran after him as he with Mr. Stoddard walked through the door-yard toward the large barns, calling on her companions to see what a beautiful lover had come for her.

"Poor, demented creature!" said Colonel Holland, pityingly, as he passed through a gateway and escaped from her vehement protestations of affection.

"It is a sorrowful sight indeed," said Mr. Stoddard. "She lived near the distillery I was speaking to you about. In those, her younger days, she used to board and help those employed about it. By degrees she became to like cider-brandy made there, and of which nearly everybody drank as freely as of water. Finally the doctors said her brain had become paralyzed. She is harmless, and so is kept here rather than at the asylum, where for a year or two she was homesick and very unhappy. She has no near relatives, and of course no property.

"This is Captain Ball, one of our former leading business men," continued Mr. Stoddard, pausing before a thin, bent, pallid-faced old man, who was sawing wood in a weakly way before the woodshed. "When I was a boy the Captain carried on a thriving business."

"Yes, yes," spoke up the poor creature in a wheezing voice, endeavoring to straighten himself up. "I owned the distillery, and did do a thriving business, to be sure but somehow I lost money. My wife used to say that I was the best wholesale customer I had. Perhaps I was, for I never went dry in those days—although I've had to since I came here; he! he! I tell you I made a prime article of cider-brandy and corn-whisky, too; yet there were always some folks in town who cursed me for it."

"Where are the men who worked for you in your distillery, your neighbors who had money invested in it, and those in this region who were the largest consumers of your fine brands of brandy and whisky?" asked Mr. Stoddard, in his grave, quiet way.

"He! he!" laughed the captain, "those who are not in the burying ground are here, waiting to be carried there."

"It is a fact," said Overseer Stoddard, coming up now and greeting his brother after an introduction, "Colonel Holland, that every one of these 'boarders' of mine was brought hither directly or indirectly by that old distillery. That little hunchback girl over there by the door is a grandchild of the old captain with whom you were just now talking. His only son married a daughter of 'Aunt Huldah.' They were both burned to death one midnight, not many years ago through the carelessness of the drunken husband, who set their house on fire. That poor little creature, who was terribly mutilated by burns, but was saved, is the unfortunate offspring of that union. Oh, it was hell upon earth over there in the 'Still village' when I was a boy. At last the more respectable part of the community would stand such work no longer, and one dark night the distillery was leveled to the ground. The old captain there was fully paid for his loss—in fact much more than the property was worth—but soon he drank up the money, as well as the rest of the property, and he and his sole living descendant are here to-day."

"I am a man of the world, and have seen something of the ill effects of rum in my day, but not exactly in this light," said Colonel Holland, as he and Farmer Stoddard were driving homeward. "I like this old town, however, and want to do something to benefit it in the way of business."

"Build a cheese factory," suggested Farmer Stoddard.

"Eureka!" cried Colonel Holland, "I will do so; and what is more I will start a vinegar-making establishment. Your Vermont cheeses and pure cider vinegar will sell like hot cakes in New York."

And so to-day the grain that is raised in the fertile meadows and plains in Northford feeds the sleek, Juno-eyed cows that graze on the sweet pasturing of its hillsides, and the luscious milk goes into the best of cheeses; while the carloads of apples, that were formerly left to decay in the large and prolific orchards are utilized by the vinegar factory. The farmers are more prosperous than ever, and bless the day when Colonel Holland first came to pass his summer there, and put a little enterprize into them withal. —Selected.

HOW TO PREVENT A DIVORCE.

When the senior Jonathan Trumbull was governor of Connecticut, a gentleman called at his house, requesting to see his excellency in private. Accordingly, he was shown into his sanctum sanctorum, and the Governor came forward to meet Squire W., saying, "Good morning, sir, I am glad to see you."

Squire W. returned the salutation, adding as he did so, "I have called upon a very unpleasant errand, sir, and want your advice. My wife and I do not live happily together, and I am thinking of getting a divorce. What would you advise, sir?"

The Governor sat a few minutes in deep meditation, then turning to Squire W., said, "How did you treat Mrs. W. when you were courting her? and how did you feel toward her at the time of your marriage?"

Squire W. replied, "I treated her as kindly as I could, for I loved her dearly at that time."

"Well, sir," said the Governor, "go home and court her now just as you did then, and love her as when you married her. Do this in the fear of the Lord for one year, and then tell me the result." The Governor then said, "Let us pray." They bowed in prayer, and separated.

When a year had passed away Squire W. again called to see the Governor, and grasping his hand said, "I have called, sir, to thank you for the good advice you gave, and to tell you that my wife and I are as happy as when we were first married. I cannot be grateful enough for your good counsel."

"I am glad to hear it, Mr. W., and hope you will continue to court your wife as long as you live."

The result was that Squire W. and his wife lived happily together to the end of life. Let those who are thinking of separation in these days go and do likewise.

YOUNG ATHEISTS.

A suggestive scene took place lately in a railway car that was crossing the Rocky Mountains. A quiet business man who with the other passengers had been silently watching the vast range of snow-clad peaks by him seen for the first time, said to his companion:

"No man, it seems to me, could look at that scene without feeling himself brought nearer to his Creator."

A dapper lad of eighteen, who had been chiefly occupied in caressing his mustache, pertly interrupted: "If you are sure there is a Creator."

"You are an atheist?" said the stranger, turning to the lad.

"I am an agnostic," raising his voice. "I am investigating the subject. I take nothing for granted. I am waiting to be convinced. I see the mountains, I smell the rose, I hear the wind: therefore, I believe that mountains, rose and wind exist. But I cannot see, smell, or hear God. Therefore"—

A grizzled old cattle-raiser opposite glanced over his spectacles at the boy. "Did you ever try to smell with your eyes?" he said, quietly.

"No."

"Or to hear with your tongue, or to taste with your ears?"

"Certainly not."

"Then why do you try to apprehend God with faculties which are only meant for material things?"

"With what should I apprehend him?" said the youth with a conceited giggle.

"With your intellect and soul!—but I beg your pardon;" here he paused; "some men haven't breadth and depth enough of intellect and soul to do this. This is probably the reason that you are an agnostic."

The laugh in the car effectually stopped the display of any more atheism that day.

But this is a question that cannot be laughed or joked away. The immature lads are not few in our colleges who find a Greek grammar too much for their brains to master, yet who loudly proclaim themselves agnostics or materialists, and challenge the Creator of the universe to stand on trial for their verdict.—Sel.

THE TURPENTINE REMEDY.

An aged physician in Washington, who is retired from practice, a man of extensive learning and high character, says that the younger practitioners laugh at him for recommending turpentine as a remedy for diseases of the lungs. He contends that they have nothing better to suggest, indeed they have no remedy for consumption. He claims that in twenty-seven clear cases of throat disease the use of this remedy under his own direction has restored the several parties to fair health, one of these being his own wife, and another being a man who, from being unable to sit or to lie in a prostrate position, has been for five years past doing engineer's work in the Treasury.

The remedy is simple: Procure at a drug-store some white turpentine; take in the month a bit the size of a pea; swallow the slowly dissolving substance and when it is quite soft, swallow the lump. This medicine is an old one, not at variance, however, with the modern notion of sending patients to piny regions to inhale terebinthine odors.

DARKNESS. Read 1 John 2.

The way of the wicked is as darkness; they know not at what they stumble. Prov. 4: 19.

1. Darkness the emblem of the power of sin and Satan. Luke 22: 53; 23: 44; Ex. 10: 21–23.
2. Darkness is the absence of light. Gen. 1: 2; John 12: 35; 1 John 1: 5.
3. Darkness injures the sight. 1 John 2: 11; Eph. 4: 18.
4. Danger of stumbling or wandering in the dark. Jer. 13: 16; John 11: 10; 12: 35.
5. Darkness gloomy. Ps. 107: 10; Lam. 3: 2–6.

THE FIRST STRAWBERRIES.

A litle girl once had a bed of strawberries. Very anxious she was that they should ripen and be fit to eat. The time came.

"Now for a feast!" said her brother to her one morning, as he picked up some beautiful ones for her to eat.

"I cannot eat these," said she, "for they are the first ripe fruit."

"Well," said her brother, "all the more reason for our making a feast, for they are the greater treat."

"Yes; but they are the first ripe fruit."

"Well, what of that?"

"Dear father told us that he used to give God the first out of all the money he made, and that then he always felt happier in spending the rest; and I wish to give God the first of my strawberries, too."

"Ah! but," said her brother, "How can you give strawberries to God? And even if you could, he would not care for them."

"Oh, I have found out a way," said she, "Jesus said, 'Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me,' and I mean to go with them to Mrs· Perkins' dying child, who never sees a strawberry, they are so poor."—The Pansey.

CRABS PLAYING POSSUM.

A learned friend, a naturalist, owned a large vicious monkey, which, because of its fierceness, had to be kept in a strong cage. Visitors from motives of prudence kept at a safe distance. At my first interview, I spoke gently to the imprisoned thing, and reached to it my hand. It took hold of my fingers with its black hands, and toyed with them, cooing like a trustful child. The learned man was astonished. It had never acted thus to a strauger. So, assuming a fierce voice, he shouted: "Go for him, Jack! go for him!" But Jack didn't stir; still holding my fingers, he looked entreatingly at his master, as if to say: "Excuse me this time. I like this man." The master, however, insisted, and shouted again, in assumed earnestness: "Go for him, Jack! go for him!" and Jack obeyed. I let him keep hold of my fingers; and he did "go for me." Such sublime rage—he fairly danced, and screamed with anger. But it was all make-believe. Jack held on to my fingers, and wouldn't hurt a hair of my head.

In animal life there is a great deal of this make-believe. Some manifestations of it naturalists call mimicry. Much of it is inherited habit, in which cases it is for purposes of protection. Some caterpillars are deceptive both in color and habit, resembling the color of the bark, and in their habit imitating the twig of a tree. They attach themselves by one end to a branch, and then extend themselves at an angle, which position is sustained for many minutes at a time, so that birds will mistake them for dry broken twigs.

Many insects will feign death when disturbed. So will a fox on occasion. This trick is so common with the opossum, that out of it has come the proverb. A person who is shamming is said to be playing 'possum.

Some interesting and pretty instances of playing 'possum are found in the habits of the sea-spider, or spider-crab, whose scientific name is Libinia canaliculata. It is decidedly the most crabbed and testy-looking member of its tribe. The body is round pear-shaped. The legs are sprawling thin and spider-like, the two front ones being the longest and thickest. There is a pretty insect, the tortoise beetle, which delights in the leaves of the convolvulus, or morning glory. It shines like a scale of burnished gold, but is far more brilliant in the sunlight than any gold can be. In its larval or worm stage it actually makes for itself a tent-like covering of its own dung. Some think this curious habit is to provide a shelter from the sun. I think the object is to mask itself, and thus to escape the birds.

Of all the crabs this sea-spider is the most dirty and repulsive looking. I have caught specimens which seemed to me to delight in a filthy aspect, being literally coated with a matting of dirt. Hence, naturalists speak of it as encrusted with "a greenish-brown sordes." The last word may be rendered filth or slime. In this condition, if the crab will but keep still, a passing fish would mistake it for a slimy or mud-coated stone.

The spider-crab has upon its shield or back a good many stiff hairs, and some hooked, stout spines. There are also some stiff hairs on the sprawling legs.

It is sometimes seen perambulating in most fantastic garb, having frouds of sea-lettuce like green ribbons attached to its legs and shield. Thus this "high fantastical" with its array of emerald streamers covering arms and back, did look vain, and ridiculous, too, for all that. In the case of spider-crab this "wearing of the green" is a beautiful instance of mimicry for self protection. A ravenous fish does not gobble up a clump of green seaweed. Moreover, a little portable grove like this would probably be very grateful to the crab, as it surely would oxygenate the water about it, and might attract food.

I think that the sea-spider is not likely to practice this dodge in any localities except such as are clean; for instance, sandy and rocky places. It suits its conduct to the situation, hence, in muddy localities it becomes a gutter-snipe. There it affects to imitate a muddy stone, among the rocks it imitates a stone overgrown with seaweed.

It must be added that once I was much amused by a Japanese caricature, representing a party bathing in the sea. The bodily contortions and the excited countenance of one of the party was laughably comical, the truth being that a great sea-spider had him by a toe. And this reminds that some years ago I described a Japanese spider-crab which I have measured myself. This terrible crustacean, when expanded, was exactly eleven feet and six inches in length; and one has since been captured said to be sixteen feet in length!—Mastery.

GOD EVERYWHERE.—A Brahmin in Calcutta asked a European gentleman, "What is your order of society in Great Britain, are you divided into castes, or do you eat and drink together according to circumstances?" The European replied, "We deem it our honor to demean ourselves as brethren in the participation of food at one table, as Providence permits." The Brahmin replied, "That appears to me to be an offence against good morals and good conduct." The gentleman rejoined, "I think I can prove it to you, by a practice of your own, that you are in error. How do you act in the field of Juggernaut? Do you eat there with the lowest caste of India? There you know no distinction of caste, but all feed at one board." The Brahmin answered, "I can screen myself from the imputation you bring against us, for there we are in the presence of our god; there Juggernaut is in our midst, and there we can feast together." "Ah!" said the gentleman, "and I can justify the Christian practice on your own principles, for we are everywhere in the presence of our God."

KING EDWARD AND THE SWORDS.—In the dawning of the glorious day of the Reformation, the Lord raised up the eminently religious King Edward the Sixth to engage in that work. He had a very high esteem for the Holy Scriptures, according to which this great work was to be secured, and which had been, by the enemies and murderers of souls, long concealed from their forefathers. When, therefore, at his coronation, the swords were delivered to him, as King of England, France and Ireland; having received them, he said, "There is yet another sword to be delivered to me;" at which the lords wondering, "I mean," said he, "the sacred Bible which is the sword of the Spirit, and without which we are nothing, neither can we do anything." And as he prized the word of God himself, so he soon restored it to his people; and that they might all have opportunity to peruse the inspired writings, he ordered a large Bible in English, with the paraphrase of Erasmus on the Gospels, to be set up in every church in which at all times those that could, might go and read; and those that could not read, might go and hear.

TEMPERANCE.

KANSAS THE PROHIBITION STATE.

"Kansas is one of the most essentially agricultural States on the face of the whole earth, and if any one doubts the ability of a purely agricultural people to rise to the very highest prosperity, refinement and culture by agriculture alone, he need only come to this beautiful State, to have all these doubts removed. Here are a million of people of whom less than ten in a hundred are engaged in manufacturing. Only think of it! The valuation of the property in Kansas is $369,255,961, more than $369 apiece for every man, woman and child in the State. They have a cow to every two persons, and of other cattle they have one apiece. Of sheep they have one apiece, and of swine one and a quarter. They have six bearing apple trees, six peach trees, and of cherries and plums one apiece. Of winter wheat for 1882, they have thirty-four bushels apiece; or oats, twenty-two; of Irish potatoes, five bushels, and they had six gallons of sorghum to each person to sweeten it all. Was there ever such material prosperity? Was there ever on the face of the earth in one community a million of people so well off? And all this has been done within half the time allotted to human life."—Junction City News.

INTEMPERANCE IN LONDON.

This I apprehend is the monster vice in the city. It stares you in the face on every hand. Active workers in the cause of temperance say, as yet but little, comparatively, has been done in this metropolis, to check the fearful progress of this vice; that it is of a more hopeless character here than in the provincial towns and villages. Among the latter, the lower classes, for the most part, drink strong beer, but in London they add to this the free use of gin. Here they have large and splendid establishments which they call GIN PALACES. Some of them are beautiful establishments. The decorative art has made some of them as attractive as the Prince of Wickedness could desire, to catch the victims of this soul-destroying vice. In these institutions the work of death goes on by the wholesale. The custom is so great that the very drippings from the glasses, all are saved by lattice work counters and large trays underneath, are sufficient, it is said, to pay the clerks who wait upon the customers.

A few evenings since, in company with a friend, I stopped at the door of one of these palaces, to see the throng that was passing in and out, I was perfectly astonished, when my friend said, "More than two hundred have passed in and out during the fifteen minutes that we have been standing here." I said, How do you know—it cannot be possible? His reply was, "I counted them by my watch." Do you think, my reader, we can rival that in America? I have never seen the like in our country, and I have visited all, or nearly all, the largest cities of the Union, and never saw anything that approximated it. Now, supposing there are two thousand of the gin palaces, and a hundred thousand smaller places where intoxicating liquors are sold in London, and hundreds of thousands of families where it is drank as freely as water; is it any wonder that intemperance is fearfully common? Many of the customers of these palaces are women; indeed, there was one establishment where we saw more women come out than men. Their dress and appearance were most squalid and wretched. Many of them seemed to be mothers, leading up their children—sometimes a young child in their arms, and another at their side. These poor little children, when hungry for bread, are fed with whisky, and thus early trained to habits of intemperance. Truly, the time is come, when, if a child asks for bread, the parents gives him a poisonous serpent.

Perhaps there there is no city in Europe, outside of some of the large cities of Russia, where drunkenness is so common among women as in London. And it is not confined to the lower classes alone; even ladies in the higher walks of life are not exempt from the degrading vice.—Correspondence of Evangelical Messenger.

GEORGE CRUIKSHANK AND THE "BOTTLE."

Recent reminiscences of the artist, Cruikshank, tell the story of his early dissipations, his conversion to total abstinance, and his subsequent use of his powerful pencil in the interest of the temperance reformation. "The first hand-grenade he flung at the tyrant Rum, was a pamphlet of twelve pages about the size of Harper's Weekly, which he called 'The Bottle.' It represents the career of a happy and prosperous mechanic who, beginning with one glass of gin, descends step by step through the various stages of misery and crime till he ends by slaying his wife with the instrument of all his misery, the bottle. This was very forcibly treated, and took the town by storm, selling enormously, and of course turning a large sum of money into Cruikshank's pocket. It gave Douglas Jerrold an opportunity for one of his sarcasms. Walking with a friend he met Cruikshank. "Hallo!" he cried, "here comes Cruikshank; hasn't been out of a public house since 'The Bottle' was published." But this was not true. Cruikshank, I believe, never relapsed, and was certainly most sincere and earnest in the cause of temperance when I visited him.

"I want to do something," he said, "for the benefit of my fellow-creatures before I die, and if I can put one spoke in the wheel of this chariot of hell which is carting its millions every five minutes down to the dead sea of damnation, I shall die a little more contented. Five minutes? Did I say five minutes? Every two minutes, every one minute, like the Paddington busses, this infernal vehicle makes a trip, and its always full, too, always full. From Rum to Ruin, by way of Care Cross, Crime Crescent and Penury Square. I fear I have to a great extent fritted away whatever gifts, physical and mental, God has seen fit to give me, and now I want to see if I cannot take up a few of the ever-due bills which I owe the Almighty and his creatures."

WHISKY IN ALASKA.

News from British Columbia dated Victoria, July 15, says: The steamer Eureka, arrived this morning from the North, brings news of a horrible tragedy at Dakan mine, near Harrisburg, Alaska. Two whisky sellers named Rennie and Martin got drunk and unconsciously exchanged cabins during the night. Indians broke into Martin's cabin, where Rennie was sleepiug, and stole a bottle of whisky. As soon as the fact was discovered both of them started after the Indians, and in a fight with them Rennie was killed. Citizens in force arrested three Indians, confining them in a guard-house. During the temporary absence of the guard the Indians procured a pistol, shooting the guard on his return, then fled. The firing awoke Major Givens, formerly of the United States army. He rushed to the rescue, and was shot down wounded. The Indians took an ax and hacked his head to pieces. The three Indians then attempted to make good their escape, but a number of miners who had reached the scene shot one of them down and arrested a second. The third escaped. Infuriated citizens constituted themselves a jury and hung the captured Indian on the spot. Next day Colonel Barry ordered the chief to produce the third one who had escaped. He was quickly delivered up and promptly hanged.

Mr. Gladstone is credited with the remark that the drinking customs of Great Britain are bringing on that country all the evils of war, pestilence and famine.

At Hyde Park, Pa., nearly all the saloon keepers were refused a renewal of licenses. This action is due to the strenuous efforts of the Temperance Union.

Dram-drinking drags its deluded devotees down to a drunkard's dreadful doom of darkness, degradation, death and damnation.

Greeley, Col., is a prohibition town of 2,460 population, with no paupers, no jail, no police magistrates, no poor-house.

The whisky traffic makes bad citizens faster than schools and churches make good ones.

THE CHURCHES.

—The State campmeeting of the Michigan Holiness Association will be held on the Fair grounds at Ionia, Mich., from the 10th to the 20th of this month. A largc attendance and glorious results are expected.

—The latest from the United Pres. missionaries in Egypt, is dated July 14th. At that time all were safe, and none of the native Christians had died of the cholera. Its ravages, however, have been great, especially in Cairo, sincc that time, and results may have been fatal. The telegraphic news from day to day indicates that the disease is abating in Cairo, and that it is not spreading to the cities and towns up the Nile.

—Major Whittle, says the New York Witness, after a laborious and successful evangelistic work in Britain, has just passed through Canada on his return to Chicago. He addressed to two meetings in Montreal on Sunday, and left with his son, who has been studying in Edinburgh, for Chicago on Monday. He purposes to co-operate there with Mr. Moody and othcrs in the systematic evangelization of that city in September, one great object of the campaign being the practical training of evangelists.

—The Howard Avenue Congregational church of New Haven, installed Rev. Charles W. Park. of Mt. Auburn, Mass., as their pastor recently, notwithstanding the Ecclesiastical Council refused to advise or assist in his installation, on account of heterodox views on infant baptism and the inspiration of the Scriptures.

—The Methodist church at Liffin, Ohio, welcomed nearly one hundred and fifty probationers into full membership July 8. These werc the fruits of a scason of spiritual refreshing enjoyed last week. Nearly fifty others continue on probation, nearly all of whom can be satisfactorily accounted for.

—The Congregational church at Maryvillc, Ohio, Rev. Homer Thrall, pastor, received seventy members on confession of faith at the last communion. This accession is largely the result of a revival enjoyed by various churches, under thc labors of the Rev. J. S. Weber, a Methodist evangelist. Over four hundred persons professcd conversion.

—The Rev. William Cuthbertson, D. D., of London, England, now supplying the pulpit of the Central church in Bangor, Me., has accepted the call of the Leavitt street Congregational church of this city, and will begin the pastorate in the early fall.

—The Northwestern Presbyterian church of Philadelphia has retired from the Presbyterirn denomination, because the Presbytery disapproved of its employing as its pastor a Greek, Waldo Messaros —who was not a Presbyterian, and did not expect to become such. The church is now independent, and Mr. Messaros has been installed pastor by two Free-will Baptist preachers from Massachusetts.

—In the time of the orthodox Edward VI. Richard Taverner, "though," as Anthony Wood, the Oxford antiquary, says, "a mere layman," obtained a special license signed by the king to preach in any place in his dominions, "on account of the scarcity and slackness of preachers." And, in like manner, othcr lay gentlemen such as had bcen educated at the universitics did preach. If the scarcity and slackness of preachers of which we now hear so much continue, we shall have to take a leaf out of King Edward's book.

—The Waldensian congregation in Rome after being driven from one hired room to another, have at length erected a church of their own. The very granite from the Alpine Valley, we are told, was brought to Rome for the foundations of the building—stones oftcn pressed perhaps in the times of persecution by the blecding, weary feet of exiled mothers and children, of trembling old men, or equally unfortunate brave and strong ones. So these gray stones will cry out in the chief street of Rome against the cruelty and perfidy of the Popes to the Waldenses, and the history of that ancient people will be recounted with sympathy in the fortress of their persecutors. Truly thcrc are sermons in stoncs.

—The case of the Rev. Heber Newton, in the Diocese of New York, has not yet been dccided. The New York Observer notices the fact that the last ecclesiastical trial in that diocese was the case of Dr. Stephen H. Tyng, who had preached in the parish of another rector without his consent. He was promptly arraigned. And yet here is Doctor Newton, who has preached doctrines subversive of the Scriptures themselves, who may possibly not be arraigned at all.

—The thirty-seventh Annual Meeting of the American Missionary Association will be held in the Central Congregational church, Brooklyn, New York, (Dr. A. J. F. Behrends'), commencing Tuesday, October 30, at three o'clock P. M. Rev. J. L. Withrow, D. D., of Boston, will preach the sermon. Other addresses and papers, and also arrangements rclating to thc meeting will be announced hereafter.

—A Minncapolis paper says: "Thc superintendents of Congregational and Presbyterian home missionary work in North Dakota have come to a mutual understanding so that various fields, where there was likely to bc a conflict of interests, arc to be taken care of by one or the other of thc denominations alonc."

—The Independent Presbyterian Church, Savannah, Ga., presents a singular anomaly among Presbyterian churches, being independent of the Presbytery and the General Assembly, and strictly congregational in its government, though the pastor, Rev. Dr. Axson, is a membcr of the Presbytery. The church is very wealthy, and supports a missionary in China, besides contributing largely to Presbyterian funds. It was founded by the early settlers of Savannah, 150 years ago, and is incorporated, so that it is likely to retain its independent character.

—Tahiti, the home of the bread fruit tree, already has the Bible in its own language, but it is so expensive as to be beyond the reach of the nativcs, costing about eight shillings. Rev. J. L. Green, the missionary there, who is now on a visit home to England, has persuaded the British and American Bible Society to issue a twenty-penny edition. It is now going through the press, so that before this year is out, the Tahitians will have a Bible sufficiently cheap to be within reach of all.

—The Inland Mission, Africa, has stations on the south of the Congo, planted at intervals of thirty or forty miles, and extending over about 110 miles of a route traversed by no Europeans except themselves. The missionaries have dwelt peacefully among the people for five years, without a single hostile collision. They have learned the language, and are training some of the lads for teachers, being fully supplied with native produce by the people, who also willingly act as carriers for them over the whole line.

—The Indian Mission is in the Indian Territory, and is organized into a Conference with four presiding elder's districts and twenty-nine pastoral charges. There are 112 local preachers; 1,100 white members; thirty colored members; 5,107 Indian members, fifty-eight Sunday-schools, with 1,602 scholars. There are four schools. The Asbury Manual Labor School is located at Eufala in the Creek Nation. The New Hope Seminary is in the Choctaw Nation. The Seminole Female Academy is located at Sasakwa, Seminole Nation. The Harrell International Institute is located at Muskogee, Creek Nation. All of these schools are prospering.—Gospel in all Lands.

THE LUTHERAN CHURCH.

THE PRACTICAL SIDE OF THE SECRET SOCIETY QUESTION.

For a number of years the secret society question has been agitated and discussed to such an extent in our Evangelical Lutheran Church, that it appears to us that all our members have had abundant opportunity to become convinced that fellowship with secret societies is unscriptural and entirely incompatible with true Christianity. Is it not high time that all our pastors and charges should commence practically to carry out the principles of the Gospel in regard to fellowship with such anti-Christian societies? We mean by this, to not receive any more a single member into church fellowship until such a person is convinced, and declares that he will leave the lodge. Again, to place under church discipline all members of our congregations who yet stand connected with a secret society. By this we mean at once to commence instructing and admonishing all such as fellowship secret societyism, and not to permit them to have altar-fellowship with the congregation until they leave the lodge.

We rejoice over the article of our worthy Professor Loy on this subject, which lately appeared in our German magazine, the Zeitblaetter. But, perhaps, many will ask: What will the consequence be of such practice and discipline?

We answer: The consequence must be left to him who rules over his church; for his will would thus be done, that Antichrist and Christ's Church shall not fellowship together. We ask: How can we treat error in the church differently from vice? Who looks upon it as wrong and uncharitable to require a vicious man to abstain from the Lord's Supper until he sees the error of his ways, confesses his sin, and promises to reform? No one. All see this as a right and proper church discipline. Why not treat error, or false doctrine, in the same way?

We do not mean, that secretists applying for church membership, or secretists already, perhaps for years, standing in church fellowship with us, should be dealt with in haste, or in an impatient or unfriendly manner. But we do mean, that all such should be told, Your position is a sinful one; we arc willing in all Christian patience to instruct you and to convince you that your position is sinful and contrary to the Gospel, but until you are convinced we cannot permit you to havc altar fellowship with the congregation. Why? Because you are patronizing and upholding principles in the lodge which are in direct contradiction to the Gospel of Jesus Christ. We further ask: If a man is not willing to permit the church to exercise her right and duty in thus watching over purity of doctrine, what kind of a member will such a person make? Must we not deal with such errorists just as we would deal with any sectarian errorists, who wish to become members of our Lutheran church and would have altar-fellowship with us? We cannot see any diffcrcnce in these two cases. To go to church and to hear God's Word preached is a privilcge which must be granted to all who wish to come, whether such are vicious in their lives, or whethcr they uphold the gravest and worst kind of errors.

But the question of church-membership, of church and altar fellowship, is quite a different one. Why will mcn not see this? Is not God's Word clear cnough on this subject? Hear what God requires: "Endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of pcace. There is one body, and one spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all." Eph. 4: 3-6. Again: We are to "speak the same thing," to bc of "one mind," and to be "perfectly joined together." If a member of a Lutheran congregation will go and join a sectarian church, and wishes to confess their doctrine and also ours, to commune there and also in our church, could we permit such a position? If a member of any sectarian church wishes to become a member of the Lutheran church, and yet wishes to remain also a member of his sectarian church, could we accept such a person? If a person wants to confess and fellowship the "universal religion" of secretists, not grounded on the Gospel at all, can he also be a member of the Lutheran church, which is grounded on Christ the only corner stone and foundation? But would we not lose many members, and also be deprived of getting quite a number of members, by such a practice in our Lutheran church? Of course we can expect this result. But we ask: Is it the number of members that we are to have in view in carrying on the Lord's work? If so, then it would be advisable to drop a number of our precious doctrines and to make our platform, or confession of faith, as wide and easy as the world wants it. To preach and confess the whole truth of God's Word, to lead as many souls as possible to a knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus, and thus to be instrumental in saving as many souls as possible, this is the object and aim of our Evangelical Lutheran church.—S. B. in Lutheran Standard.

A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

It is now owned and published by the

OBITUARY.

Died, at Plainfield, Ill., July 4, 1883, DEA. CYRUS ASHLEY, aged 85 years, 6 months and 12 days.

Dea. Ashley was the model deacon. He was the brother of Elder R. B. Ashley, one of our pioneer preachers, and both were well known throughout our Association. Forty-seven years ago there arrived at Hudson (Oswego) Ill., a middle-aged man, from Martinsburg, N. Y., with a consignment of wagons. He was a good agent and soon sold his wagons, and was so pleased with the country that he concluded to settle there. But he had formed acquaintances at Walker's Grove (Plainfield). They were Baptists. Their little church was but two years old, and they were on the lookout for helpers. They discovered that this Eastern stranger was a fellow Baptist, and one not ashamed of his Lord. So they resolved to lay siege to him, and were successful. He settled at Walker's Grove instead of Specie Grove. The little church was undoubtedly an attraction to him. He had been a deacon at the East, and they appointed him to the same office here, and that office, in that church, Dea. Ashley filled until his death, with the exception of twelve years spent at Cedar Rapids, Ia. And the testimony of all, both in the church and out, was that he was a thoroughly earnest Christian man, and the model deacon. His memory is fragrant. He has been a main working support of every pastor in that church, while there, for nearly fifty years, and no pastor has been more uniformly untiring than he for the spiritual prosperity of the church. He was a firm Anti-mason and Abolitionist. Opposed on principle to all secret societies, and freely using his home as one of the stations for flying fugitives. He served his Lord just sixty-six years to a day, since his baptism. His death was sudden. He lay down to sleep, and "was not, for God took him." The funeral was conducted by the pastor, Bro. D. F. Carnahan, assisted by those well-known friends of the deceased, Elders S. B. Ives, Solomon Knapp and S. R. Beggs. He is with Christ.—Sandwich (Ill.) Visitor.

—The frequent secret society strikes are rendering it evident that it is unsafe to employ laborers controlled by secret oaths. The sooner all industries come to realize this fact, and employ men who are at liberty to use their own judgment in matters of labor and wages, the better. We are in earnest sympathy with the laborers of the country, and opposed to their being swindled by secret societies. —American Wesleyan.

THE BATAVIA CONVENTION MINUTES.

A correspondent writing of the grand addresses in this pamphlet says:

"Let me call particular attention to the address of our noble banner-bearer, the candidate for the suffrages of the nation, under the title "Christian politics." This admirable and timely paper is one which will open blind eyes to the causes of the war and future dangers and ought not to be merely read and shelved. It is like LIVE SEED; Let every reader get and sow it abundantly, and scatter it abroad through every State, and for every year, until victory shall crown our efforts to place a representative of our principles in the Presidential chair of the United States! Print and reprint and circulate in tens of thousands or millions! Our people are intoxicated with national prosperity, and are disregarding "the higher law." In every age the multitude is led more by the senses than by the unseen, but the Ruler of the universe brings to naught things that are by the things that are not! The things that are right and pure are eternal, and in the grand war must finally overcome the cunning and craft of every system like Freemasonry.

MORE THAN 50,000

copies of Hon. Thurlow Weed's letter to the Batavia Convention of Sept. 13, '82, exposing and opposing Freemasonry have since then been printed and put in circulation. It is not improbable or impossible that the old political opponent of "the secret empire," through this letter written just before his death, may slay more lodge heathen, than Samson, the distinguished judge of ancient Israel, did at his death, when he took hold of the pillars of their temple and buried 3,000 Philistines in its ruins. These letters of Weed are being scattered far and wide by the National Christian Association, and men of mind and national influence are quietly reading them and pondering their orucular utterances. The truths they contain, like leaven, are working silently and potentially for good, and though to thoughtless thousands their influence, like the seed germinating under the soil, may not be seen or even suspected, the good time coming when this nation shall be freed from the sorcery and fatal enchantment of lodgeism will reveal that Weed, the life long enemy of secretism, did a noble work when he penned that letter, which like the Emancipation Proclamation of Lincoln, freed millions from the bondage under which all their lives they had groaned. —Sandy Lake News.

Be sure to get and read this pamphlet. Price, 5 cents. Or

IT WILL PAY TO READ IT.

The speech of Hon. S. C. Pomeroy in Farwell Hall is in pamphlet form. It is a clear, practical discussion of the living questions of the hour, presenting in brief the claims of God to recognition in civil government, reasons for prohibition, and the abolition of the entire lodge system. It is a campaign document that should be not only read but studied by every voter in America.

From the comments that have been sent us since it appeared in the columns of the Cynosure we give the following: "It would do credit to the head and heart of any Christian statesman. How different when compared with the unmeaning twaddle of the mere politician of to-day! How empty the latter; how inspiring and full of hope the former!"

"Senator Pomeroy's speech in Chicago is the grandest thing I have read for many a day."

Let it be widely circulated early in the campaign of 1884.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

THE COMING CONFLICT.

A NEW AND RAPIDLY SELLING BOOK IN OPPOSITION TO FREE-MASONRY.

We desire to call your attention to this useful work, and ask you to help us in its circulation. We want Agents to canvass every community.

By selling this book one can do much good. It is by such literature that we must expect to awaken a popular sentiment against secret societies, and overthrow them. By selling this book one can make money. Liberal terms will be allowed, and any energetic Agent can sell many copies. Masons will buy it from mere curiosity. Anti-Masons will buy it for the facts and arguments presented. Many will buy it to send to their neighbors. Those on the fence will buy it that they may learn the truth on the subject. Those not interested in the discussion, and young people especially, will buy it for the story.

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"It is an attack on Freemasonry with a sprinkle of Slavery thrown in to make it go down well."—A. R. Presbyterian, (S. C.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of the best class of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D., in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia, Pa.)

"A charming work fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ill.)

The book is neatly and plainly printed, handsomely bound, 352 pages, thick paper. A specimen copy sent to any one contemplating accepting an agency for $1.10.

Single copy $1.50; Per Dozen. $15.00.

ODDS AND ENDS.

The United States government is the most generous toward its soldiers of any nation on the globe. It has paid them $700,000,000 in pensions.

The Spiritualists have been so ridiculed about their anniversary coming on April 1st that they are trying to change the date to March 29. One of their leading speakers was asked what the number of Spiritualists in this country is. He estimated them at 2,000,000. This is a reduction of 9,000,000. They claimed 11,000,000 a few years ago. The fact is that if the infidels and curiosity seekers be deducted, there is no reason to think that there is half a million of Spiritualists in the United States and many—not all—of them are cranks.—Ex.

The Washington Sunday Herald claims to have information as to the largest holders of United States bonds. The list of these millionaires in this country and Europe is as follows: Mr. Vanderbilt, $37,000,000; Mrs. A. T. Stewart, $30,000,000; Jay Gould, $13,000,000 registered and a large amount of coupon bonds; an estate in Boston and three or four persons in New York have $10,000,000 each: the estate of Moses Taylor, $5,000,000; D. O. Mills, $4,000,000. These with an unmarried lady in New York—name not given—who has $8,000,000, are the largest holders in the United States. In Europe, the Rothschilds together hold the evidences of nearly one-quarter of the entire bonded debt.

Texas has now a population of two millions. She can easily support fifty millions of people. Everybody in Texas works, and yet one-fifth of last years cotton crop still stands in the field unpicked. Enough cotton has gone to waste in a single harvest to furnish every inhabitant in the United States with a new shirt. Even the penitentiary convicts, several thousand strong, are impressed into the field, Experiments have demonstrated that a vast extent of lands, heretofore regarded as sterile, or fit only for grazing, will yield handsomely almost any crop planted; but Texas requires no more agricultural soil. She would not have it if she could; for then she would have no wide ranges for her cattle, or pastures for her sheep. There are now five million head of cattle in the State, and two million head of sheep. Of the latter, one million belong to the three counties of Webb, Dimmitt, and Encinal, on the Rio Grande, and half a million to the Abilene district, on the Texas-Pacific R. R., embracing some fourteen counties in the center of the State. There are also a great many large herds of goats, which produce a silken fleece of the longest staple and most delicate texture. I have seen the fleece of sheep whose staple measured sixteen inches.—American Agriculturalist.

However grim the doctrines of the old Calvinistic divines there was something to admire in the firmness with which they proclaimed and adhered to their convictions. They were men of backbone. There was no dodging and shirking, no backing and filling. They did not try to turn words inside out, and pervert the natural use of language. When they subscribed to their standards, the language in which they were written corresponded to their convictions; and they did not hesitate to accept the logical consequences of their beliefs. We ask ourselves, Is this as characteristic of their descendants? We are reminded of the words which Dr. Withrow so fittingly quoted from Emerson: "I confess our latter generation appears ungrit, frivolous, compared with the religions of the last or Calvinistic age. In its stead, a low prudence seeks to hold society stanch; but its arms are too short." Imagine Mr. Emerson subscribing to a creed which he could not believe!—Christian Register.

Smith's Tonic Syrup

FEVER and AGUE

Or CHILLS and FEVER.

AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient.

The genuine SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP must have DR. JOHN BULL'S private stamp on each bottle. DR. JOHN BULL only has the right to manufacture and sell the original JOHN J. SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP, of Louisville, Ky. Examine well the label on each bottle. If my private stamp is not on each bottle do not purchase, or you will be deceived.

NIGHTS IN A BAR-ROOM
T. S. Arthur's great temperance book, complete and illustrated. By mail, 5c each; 50c per doz. By express, $3.50 per 100.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC THE GREAT SOURCE OF CRIME.

Leaves from the diary of an old lawyer.—By Hon. A. B. Richmond, author of "Court and Prison," etc. A book of intense interest, rivaling the famous "Diary of a Physician," and, in its truthful, terrible pictures of the power and crime of intemperance, excelling the well-known "Ten Nights in a Bar-room." The temperance issue of the present time is, Shall prohibition be partial or entire? Shall the branches of the death-bearing tree be pruned and trimmed, or shall the tree itself be cut down and its stump be torn up by the roots? The answer of "Leaves from the Diary" is, "Cut down the tree, tear up the roots, leave not a shoot or shred behind." It is certainly a very strong and eloquent volume. Complete edition on fine, heavy paper, with colored lithograph of Sewall's stomach plates. By mail, 30c each, $3 per doz. By express, $20 per 100. Abridged edition, by mail, 15c; $1.25 per doz. By express, $9 per 100.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC AND THE SOBER CITIZEN.

An able and telling work, by Rev. J. H. Sherman, which brings out the effects of the liquor traffic in a new light. The following are some of the commendations of the first edition.

"The author drives the nails of conviction through and clinches them."—N. Y. Christian Advocate.

"Speakers and workers in the temperance field will find valuable aid in this pamphlet. It is crowded with convincing facts."—Zion's Herald

"One of the ablest reviews of the drink curse ever issued from the press."—The Morning and Day of Reform.

"The arguments are put in telling form."—Judge Pittman.

New revised and enlarged edition. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100.

DRINKS FROM DRUGS.

A startling exposure of the liquor traffic, by Eli Johnson. A book that cannot fail to arouse the American people to the gigantic swindle now being perpetrated. The writer was offered $10,000 by a leading brewer to keep still. Liquor not only doctored, but made entirely from drugs. Extracts from a whole library of secret books, giving receipts for making and doctoring; advertisements of essences, fac-similes of labels, engravings, etc., etc. Claret, port, sherry, champagne, whisky, brandy, gin, rum, etc., all out of one barrel, and made at less than 25 cents a quart. Wine that never saw grape juice; cider that never saw apples; beer factories in place of breweries, fine cream ale without barley or brewing; whisky from arsenic; millions of gallons of liquor that pays no revenue tax. The farmer's corn and barley "all in your eye." A wholesale liquor store in a ten-foot square cellar; more French wine sold in New York City than is produced in the whole of France. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By Express, $6 per 100.

W. C. T. U. ORGANIZATION AND WORK.

A book of general information on how to organize and run successfully a Woman's Christian Temperance Union. This book should be widely distributed among W. C. T. U. presidents, pastor's wives and other representative women. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100.

HOME PROTECTION.

A lawyer's view of it. By J. C. Wells, attorney-at-law. The question of female suffrage for the protection of home ably discussed from a lawyer's standpoint. A book for the times. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100.

BAND OF HOPE RECITERS.

172 pages. 164 choice recitations of poetry and prose, containing some of the choicest bits of temperance material for the platform ever uttered, accompanied by an article on elocution. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100.

GENERAL TEMPERANCE SONG-BOOK.

"Temperance Songs," a Book for Adult Societies.—Eighty-three choice pieces, both words and music (old and new tune combination) choice selections from standard temperance collections; many choice new pieces. Book carefully edited by David C. Cook. Will prove just what is wanted by every temperance society. Price in strong cardboard covers, by mail, 10c each; $1 per dozen; by express, $5 per 100.

TEMPERANCE ANTHEM BOOK.

Temperance Anthems.—A new idea; nothing else of the kind in existence. Will insure good music by the choir at temperance meetings. Forty-eight pages of choice anthems by ablest writers. By mail, 15c each; $1.50 per doz. By express, $10 per 100.

BAND OF HOPE SONG BOOK.

Band of Hope Songs.—Fifty-seven choice pieces for juvenile temperance gatherings, Bands of Hope, etc. Old, familiar tunes, also choice new words and music. Words far in advance of anything else issued. By mail, 8c each; 75c per doz. By express, $4 per 100.

DANIEL'S BAND.

A temperance concert exercise, with parts suitable for all ages; entirely new. Songs, recitations, dialogues, etc., of a thoroughly aggressive character; sure to carry weight with the rendering of it. By mail, 5c each; 50c per dozen. By express, $2 per 100.

THE COLD WATER ARMY.

For a primary temperance concert exercise. An entirely new exercise, containing songs and recitations, dialogues, etc., suitable for primary scholars. A pleasing and telling concert on temperance. By mail, 5c each; 50c per dozen. By express, $2 per 100.

For $1.60 Small size genuine Oxford Teacher, gilt edges, flexible morocco cover, circuit, or protection, leather all around. Postage, 10cts.

For $2.50 The same style of binding, medium size. Postage, 12c.

THE PERSIAN SEAL BINDING is very handsome and durable. It is this style of binding which is so much admired by Bible readers. Please notice particularly that these Bibles are kid lined and silk sewed. Many Bibles in this style outwardly are lined with black paper and sewed with thread in place of silk.

LEVANT MOROCCO BINDING.

The Persian Seal bindings are the best kept by most Bible dealers, and usually pass for the best teachers' Bibles made; and, to all appearance, they are so. There is, however, a better wearing binding of which the Persian Seal is a good imitation; this is known as "Levant Morocco." In all respects the Levant morocco Bible corresponds with the Persian Seal description, except as to leather used for cover which, though looking like the Persian Seal, is stronger, and will last a lifetime.

Prices on genuine Levant Morocco bindings:
For $4.50—Small size. Postage, 10c.
For $5.50—Medium size. Postage, 12c.
For $8.00—Large size. Postage, 20cts.

Handsome Gift Bibles at Low Prices.

For 45c. Embossed morocco cover, gilt edges, gilt title on back. Very neat and durable. This is the handsomest 45c. gift Bible we have ever seen. Postage, 5c.

For 60c. Morocco cover, brass bound and plated, with handsome gilt clasp and gilt edges; two patterns; square and round corners. Exquisite lettering on side; printed in large clear type. Bibles no better are sold as high as $1 and $2. Postage, 6c.

For 70c. Similar size and style of binding to our 60-cent Bible; square corners, brass bound, with clasp and handsome tasseled book-mark; also medallion inserted on side in gold and red.

This was a new importation with the fall of 1882, and a very pretty design. It should be seen to be appreciated. (See cut.) Postage, 6c.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

—President Arthur encamped Friday on Dinwiddie Lake, in Wyoming, where a remarkable vista is so vividly reflected in the water as to make a sight to be seen but once in a lifetime. Secretary Lincoln remained behind at Fort Washakie to attend to business connected with the governmental care of the Indians.

—The steamer Charmer, with a party of Chicago citizens on board, went out on the lake Sunday to test a smoke consumer. She sprung a leak off Hyde Park and sunk in four or five fathoms of water. A little steamer ran out in answer to signals of distress and was just in time to save the passengers.

—The monster new ship Golden Age, arrived in Chicago Wednesday on her maiden trip. She can carry 3,000 tons of coal and is 300 feet long.

—A movement of wheat from Chicago eastward by lake has begun. The 6,000,000 bushels so long in store here are expected to dwindle rapidly.

—Sections of Iowa and Nebraska were visited Tuesday night by a hail and wind storm, which worked terrible ruin to growing crops. Hundreds of cattle and hogs were drowned, and some persons lost their lives. The hail was of huge dimensions, and in one locality is reported to have fallen to the depth of five feet.

—The Kimball House at Atlanta, Ga., was destroyed by fire Sunday morning. The guests all escaped. Loss, $1,000,000.

—In the outskirts of Lincoln, Neb., Saturday, three boys and a dog which accompanied them, were killed by lightning.

—A tornado at Dodge City, Kan., Wednesday night, accompanied by continuous lightning and heavy rain, did considerable damage to many structures, the total loss being placed at $10,000. The velocity of the wind was ninety miles an hour.

—Runs were inaugurated Thursday afternoon on the First National bank and the Indiana Banking Company, of Indianapolis, and large amounts were withdrawn. The situation is critical, but it is stated a syndicate is being formed to speedily help the institution.

—Twelve men were killed in the Bozeman (Montana) Railroad tunnel Saturday forenoon.

—Near Point Lookout, off Baltimore, Friday morning, the steamer William Lawrence and schooner Sarah Lavinia were in collision, the latter immediately sinking. Four persons perished.

—An open switch near Massilon, Ohio, early Thursday morning wrecked a Cleveland and Lorain train, the engineer and fireman being killed and others injured. Unknown persons had opened the switch for the purpose of derailing the train.

—The Wells-Fargo express was robbed Saturday between Riverside and Pioneer, Arizona, by masked men. The agent, John Collins, was killed and one passenger wounded.

—During the past eighteen months there have been shipped to China from San Francisco 25,000 Springfield rifles, 250,000 cartridges, and many hundred bales of cotton duck for tents. All were from Springfield, Mass., and the total value is nearly $5,000,000.

—Fifteen thousand people attended the opening of the saloon owned by Sullivan, the pugilist, in Boston, Tuesday night. A special detail of police, including some mounted officers, were kept busy in maintaining order and keeping the streets open for travel.

—The theory that the Gladstone Ministry has lost its hold upon the Liberal party will have to be abandoned. The vote on the Suez Canal question and on the government policy in South Africa shows that the Ministry is as strong as it ever was.

—Cetewayo, the Zulu King, reported killed in battle, is now en route to Pietermaritzburg.

—A meeting to further emigration, over which Earl Shaftesbury presided, the Archbishop of Canterbury being also present, resolved at London Friday that 200,000 persons should be sent to Canada and the colonies, the State to buy them farms, taking a mortgage for security. It is proposed to send 10,000 families to Canada next spring.

—Deaths from cholera in the Egyptian provinces Friday were 926. Saturday there were 789 deaths. Hundreds of people have fled to Cairo from Alexandria. There have been no fresh cases of cholera among the British troops in Egypt, and their general health is excellent. Thirty-two persons died from cholera at Alexandria Saturday, including five Europeans. English physicians, who have had experience in India, say the cholera in Egypt is different in character from the Asiatic type.

—Owing to a report that English doctors were poisoning the natives, an Alexandria mob attempted violence Friday night, and shouted, "Death to the Christians." The riot was soon quelled.

—A dispatch dated Hanoi, China, Aug. 5, says: "Six river gunboats are here preparing temporary armor for boilers. Everything points to a severe encounter. The French have no artillery, horses, or mules. The enemy is pressing closer both here and at Namdinh. It is believed the Viceroy Yun Nan is actively forwarding assistance to the enemy.

—Many innocent persons injured recently in the anti-Jewish riots at Ekaterinoslav, Russia, have died of their wounds. No Jews were hurt, as they had left the town upon warning given by friends. The riots broke out again Friday, and in the collision between the military and the populace hundreds have been killed.

—Another demonstration against the Jews was made at Pesth Friday night, and several of the rioters were wounded by shots from the police.

—The New South Wales Government has consented to the landing of the Irish informers, and undertakes to protect them.

—The annexation of Bosnia and Herzegovina by Austria is being negotiated by the German, Turkish, and Austrian Governments.

—Three hundred workmen attempted to hold a demonstration in Vienna, Friday evening because of the seizure of the workmen's newspaper. The mob was dispersed by a large body of police with drawn swords. Many arrests were made and order was finally restored. The police wounded several persons. The mob subsequently gathered again, and was charged and dispersed by dragoons, who were pelted with stones. A large force of infantry and cavalry patroled the streets until a late hour.

BUSINESS.

REGRETS.

To remove a single name from the the Cynosure list is not pleasant, and we have been trying to devise some plan to reduce removals to the smallest number possible.

You of course expect us to consult the financial interests of your paper and the cause, and to keep you advised on all points. You will be glad to know that a considerable number of delinquents have renewed since notices were sent out and a request made in your paper, but there are some who neither renew or send any explanation, whose names we drop with great reluctance this week. To some this may seem unwarranted, but it appears to be a necessity. As yet we have given the list only a partial revision, and it is not impossible that errors have in some instances occurred which when notified we shall be glad to correct. We are thankful that the list of removals is not large, and we hope it will grow less week by week until arrears notices will not be required, and the entire unpaid account with subscribers wiped out of our books. Let us make a united effort to accomplish this very desirable object.

TO PERSONS ANSWERING ADVERTISEMENTS.—Readers of the Cynosure who order any goods advertised in this paper, or ask information about them, will help the Cynosure, by stating that they saw the advertisement in this paper.

SEE HERE FRIEND.

Just a word in CONEIDENCE. It's something that concerns you. I mean the subscription list of your paper. It's too short now and slightly shrinking these hot months. It's getting out of proportion with the pay roll. What will you do about it? Well, I suppose the sensible thing for a man like you to do, is to get subscribers and send in your own renewal if you are in arrears. Can you suggest anything better? Will it pay to wait until "the harvest is past and the summer is ended." Would you advise your editors, compositors and press men, to take a month to cool off and get ready for earnest work? Think and pray over this matter and report results to Bro. Phillips who has plenty of room in his cash book, and will keep your accounts to a penny.

"HOLDEN WITH CORDS."

This story recently appeared as a serial in the Christian Cynosure, and is now fittingly put into a neat book of nearly 400 pages. It is a hard hit at Freemasonry. In an incidental way the story tells much about the manner of conducting lodges, and much about the spirit and methods of Masonry. The story covers the period of the abduction and murdering of William Morgan. The strategic position from which the author writes puts a charm in the book, while it gives a good opportunity to show the workings of the order. We wish all the people would read it.—Religious Telescope.

The Master's Carpet.

BY

F. Ronayne.

Past Master of Keystone Lodge No. 639 Chicago.

Explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the Lodge, thus showing the principles on which the order is founded. By a careful perusal of this work, a more thorough knowledge of the principles of the order can be obtained than by attending the Lodge for years. Every Mason, every person contemplating becoming a member, and even those who are indifferent on the subject, should procure and carefully read this work. An appendix is added of 32 pages, embodying which gives every sign, grip and ceremony of the Lodge together with a brief explanation of each. The work contains 429 pages and is substantially and elegantly bound in cloth. Price, 75 cents.

Freemasonry at a Glance,

THE PUREST IS THE BEST.

In the selection of SUNDAY-SCHOOL PAPERS, the most important point to be considered is the moral tone of the subject matter. If this is of a questionable character, the papers should be shunned, no matter how large, how attractive, or how low the price. Such papers are

COSTLY AT ANY PRICE.

The country is being flooded with S. S. literature that is largely composed of what may be properly termed "RELIGIOUS FICTION," the tendency of which is to create a distaste for sound reading and foster an appetite for fiction of a more deleterious character.

The engravings of these papers are equally objectionable. In many cases a lady or girl dressed in the height of fashion is made the HEROINE OF A STORY, thus putting the highest sanction to extravagance and pride. With such instructors in our Sunday-schools we cannot expect the children to grow up with a love for sound literature and with correct ideas of Christian propriety. With a view of supplying S. S. papers, of a pure and elevating character, the publishers are issuing

FOUR MONTHLY PAPERS.

They are FREE FROM FICTION, and the cuts are chosen with great care. While they are thus carefully edited, they are not lacking in attractiveness. They are well printed on beautiful tinted paper. The children are delighted with them. The very low price at which this line of S. S. papers is issued, places them within the reach of even schools of limited means

A Washington eating-house keeper having attempted to make a white-man establishment of his place, like the Race Bros. restaurant of this city, has answered for it in the courts. Rev. G. H. Smith, a colored man was refused a meal in his place and Judge Mills decides that the act is criminal and the proscriptive victualer must answer for it. The Baptist brethren who were most affected by the Chicago case have now a precedent by which they can do more service to the public than by passing resolutions.

The recent Mormon election was a sweeping victory for the polygamists, but such a victory that it comes near being a defeat. The vote was hardly one half the number of names registered, showing that, although the Gentiles abstained from voting, the Mormons also are not so prompt to obey their leaders as formerly. The Mormon candidates were generally young men of inexperience, whose nomination was displeasing to many voters, and whose administration of affairs in the legislature may hasten a crisis in the affairs of the hierarchy. The Edmond's law and its commission have apparently done nothing to relieve the country of polygamy. God in his providence may make the Mormons themselves the agents to accomplish this work.

Under the State law of Illinois many towns and even some counties have enjoyed the blessings of prohibition. For years the saloon-keeper fought against the public with most ingenious subterfuges; but vainly, for the courts always decided that an evasion was as bad as a violation. Last spring the legislature after a long battle passed the Harper high license bill, fixing a license of $500 upon the sale of whisky and $150 for beer and wine. The Mayor of Chicago joined with the saloonists to defeat the operation of the law in this city by an evasion meanly planned and knavishly executed. It was to give city saloons a license till April 1st next for $103. The Citizen's League began a test case and hoped for a speedy and fair trial, but by another move the Mayor gets the defense turned over to the city for the purpose of defeating the measure by legal quibbles and delay. The papers were spreading the legal correspondence before their readers all last week to the satisfaction of all the liquor dealers and their best friend, whom they proudly call the "best Mayor" of Chicago.

The failure of the telegrapher's strike, after holding public attention for four weeks as few labor movements of the kind have done in this country, bears a lesson which wage workers cannot afford to forget. It is foolish to assume that Gould's money won the day. That factor had little to do with the matter. Against it the strikers pitted the power of a secret lodge oath. They found that public sympathy, as between their lodge and his bonds, was largely indifferent, and the more thoughtful feared the success of the first rather than the other. Gould's company was a monopoly in fact, yet of great public service; the strikers attempted a more odious monopoly which the public had not yet tried. They could not accomplish their end because in the schools and by other means thousands of young men are being taught the telegraph business without regard to lodge proscription. To swear, then, not to teach the art to others was the idlest of oaths. Had the operators struck against Sabbath work, we believe the mass of the people would have stood by them. They demanded, however, only more pay for such work, and by their business meetings and pic-nics upon that day showed that they had as little regard for it as the companies. Higher wages may have been deserved. A small advance was offered, and more might have been agreed upon if the request had not been made by a secret oath-bound combination. The operators are now entirely at the mercy of the Gould monopoly, and their ill-advised action has given it more impunity in its exactions upon the public. Senator Edmunds will take advantage of this agitation to push his measure for a postal telegraph before Congress. He is confident of its adoption, but that will bring him little thanks unless it is more effective than his Mormon bill. What the people want is a postal telegraph which shall not be a wire-pulling arrangement for the politicians.

If Freemasonry is not a religion, as many lodgemen assure us, the performance of the Knight Templar Masons in San Francisco last Sabbath is in singular contradiction of the statement. These lodgemen who have been streaming across the continent, marching through our streets on the Sabbath, shocking our ears with the blare of bands and our eyes with the gewgaws and flaunting insignia of paganism, using the day for pleasure excursions when they were not traveliug on to the Pacific—they must have reserved their pious feeling for one grand demoustration. A temporary meeting for their conclave has been built, and Clinton Locke, their chaplain, though ordinarily presiding over an Episcopal church in Chicago preached from the words, "Thou therefore endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ." Mockery and blasphemy! What had these Masons been doing all across the country! But they came to their "church"—thousands crowded in, thousands could find no room. So auxious were they to participate in the worship that a large force of police even were unable to control them. Women fainted, and men were almost crushed to death, and the police were many of them engaged in carrying away the limp and exhausted forms of women and children. The religious exercises withiu were after the Masonic form and continued for three hours, with such enthusiasm as one might conjecture would fire the hearts of dancing dervishes. After this exhibition of Masonic devotion let no one say that the lodge has no religion.

An abortive but threatening attempt at revolution broke out in the Spanish army about two weeks ago, but its fires were soon quenched by prompt measures of the government, and the rebels driven into Portugal and France. Their numbers seem to have been less formidable than their noise, for the assurances King Alphonso has since received from almost all classes, from nobles to peasants, show that the conspiracy was not wide. As to its depth some judgement may be formed from the news received this week that documents had been discovered proving that an influence among army officers was attempted by Freemason lodges some six years ago, with the purpose of subverting the government. The dates were fixed for an uprising. The first trial was to be made in 1878, another in 1881. The result after so long a time is not flattering. Now to get at the purpose of this Masonic movement in the name of republicanism we must remember that in Spain as in several other despotic countries the practice of Freemasonry was in 1830 punished with death. The revolutions in that country may have modified this stringent law, but no doubt the Masonic lodge is under such restrictions as chafe its autocratic and domineering spirit. What is more, Freemasons throughout the world see in the example of the United States and of France that under a republican form of government the lodge has less restriction apparently to its infamous and grasping power. Hence its policy everywhere is to foment rebellion in the name of liberty, but with the well-determined end that a shameful slavery may be fastened upon an ignorant or confiding people. The efforts of Freemasons in Mexico, Brazil and Italy in years past may be profitably studied in the light of these developments in Spain.

—A Chicago gentleman lately took the ladies of his family to Haverly's theatre, of the kind a first-class institution. He has attended theaters for years and is familiar with the character of the entertainments they give the public, but this is his first indignant protest, published in a morning paper, which is one item in the general condemnation of this kind of amusement: "In the second act some of the dialogue is simply bawdy, and is so regarded by the genteel fraction of the audience, as may be determined from the shamed silence in which the questionable wit is received. In the finale that follows this actually vulgar talk between the characters, the action is so broadly suggestive as to indicate a general inclination on the part of the people to carry out the intimations of the principals. All this affords a shock to a modest nature, and no young woman or respectable wife can listen or look without a blush of shame within their cheeks."

THE GREAT SUBSTITUTE.

BY REV. E. S. UFFORD.

I think I can notice that as the success of the lodge-room has advanced, in the same degree has the church also relapsed. The one has very largely and materially been affected by the other. Therefore the lodge, in its dual nature, having tendencies of a moral influence, yet partaking of the secular, looms up before us and begins to darken the horizon of the church of Christ. The fear in my own mind is that it shall become "the great substitute," the local church being supplanted by it.

Several years ago, I was ordained in E——. The little village with its one church and hearty people was our first home, and we welcomed ten happy converts into the kingdom of grace. Then we had no trouble to gather a congregatiou. In E—— there was a grange, in a fair state of success, with a sprinkling of our members in it. This summer we revisited our old field, and mark the change! No minister there, no meetings, no interest, and no funds. But not so the grange, however. There is interest, and attendauce, and success. If a member had twenty-five cents to spare, it went into the lodge, while the church suffered, and likely, will go down to extinction. There is not a prayer-meeting there, but the harvest feast is well atteuded, and the spirit of worldliness reigns. The chaplain I found to be a swearing man, who keeps a store under the hall, and opened it on Sabbath days for the sale of beer, etc.

There is a strange amalgamation here, when listening to the plea of a supporter, who affirms that the ritual is largely from the Bible, and is an order of very beautiful design. Alas for this "mixed multitude" who pretend to be with us, and claim that their code, if practised faithfully, will usher them into the presence of their "heavenly Father!" Oue member was accidentally shot while out fox hunting on Sunday, but who, in the resolutions, was "removed by the hand of our heavenly Father." A brother minister, who formerly was very acrimonious toward Freemasonry, was informed by another fellow laborer that he did wrong to hold such antipathy toward them, and were he to join them would fare better in this world; to my surprise he did become a Mason. And so do all clergymen who joiu the lodge, go over to them in the vain hope that it will subserve an end toward their prosperity or success.

Besides this great idea of the secret society embodying religion, in its confused Biblical symbols, charts, high priests, worthies, etc., there are a list of evils which it engenders, a few of which are:

1. The pressing of young men into their ranks. They are made to enjoy the lodge room by a very adroit scheme in its system, which works them along and upward in its routine, insuring their attendance for months, at least. Thus they come to venerate their order, and consequently quit their hold upon the church, and exchange the associations.

2. It creates and provides weekly a budget of fun. "The good of the order" is thus maintained, and the meetings looked forward to with gusto.

3. It weakens godliness and reverence. It is the having of "all things common" in too striking a sense. The lines of demarcation grow less marked, and the sacredness of the church and her doctrines become to be the property of masses of men.

4. It tends to a union of Christianity with the world. The entire bulk of organized secretism is pretensious in its religious basis. It aims at, but does not hit it. It is intellectual belief in, and assent to, the fundamental truths of Christianity, without the warm, devoted, sincere love to support it. Hence an organic system of men, who meet together without experimental religion, but who at the altar and the grave, assume an equal merit with the disciple of Christ.

Will the trend of this great system become a substitute for the holy church of the Redeemer? If so, then we are treading upon the edge of that era, foretold by apostolic pen, when the great falling away shall take place. Let us be watchful, and with earnest prayer, meet it.

West Dedham, Mass.

MODERN CHURCH ENTERTAINMENTS.

BY ALBERT SIMS.

All such modern schemes for raising money for God's cause as donation parties, pic-nics, church fairs, lotteries, socials, bazaars, tea-meetings, election cakes, auction sales, etc., are sinful, and that for the following reasons:

1. These methods of raising money for God's cause are contrary to the precepts and examples of the Bible. The simple method of free-will offerings alone is approved, and all other schemes are virtually condemned. Study Ex. 35: 5–29; 2 Cor. chapters 8 and 9; Luke 6: 35; and Matt. 10: 8. What if Moses had got up a great bazaar or social to draw the surrounding heathen into his camp, and get means to build the Tabernacle? How would it agree with the character of the early Christians to read in one of Paul's epistles a suggestion that the saints at Corinth get up some entertainments to raise money for the poor saints at Jerusalem; or an exhortation to Lydia to stir up the godly women of Phillipi, to get up a grand fair, festival or concert with all our latest modern devices?

We say again, God calls upon us to give to the support of his cause, and must we be bribed to duty with a stick of candy and a piece of cake? The money given in such ways is equivalent to saying, "Dear Lord, I'll take half of this money, and have a good time with it, and you can have the other half." How can anyone call this benevolence? The principle that is assumed in the whole business is a false and entirely unscriptural one; and hence its impropriety, not not to say downright wickedness. The idea that for every cent or dollar contributed to the church of Christ, there must be received a consideration in music, or in tea, or oysters, or bazaar articles, as a return for money given is erroneous and impious. What God demands of his people is free-will offerings, not expenditures that come from selfish and ulterior motives, as a sort of investment looking to the largest return of carnal pleasure or profit as an inducement thereto.

If men cannot be persuaded to give to the Lord, "hoping for nothing again," in the spirit of willing and cheerful benevolence, we have the best reason to believe that he does not want them to give at all. Luke 6: 35; 2 Cor. 9: 7; Matt. 10: 8.

The Sunday School Times waxes satirical, and with good cause, in speaking of the modern Sunday-school drama and church fair:

"'And now, brethren, let us get up a supper, and eat ourselves rich,' said a witty Presbyterian elder, in keen satire on the church-fair plan, when this church was proposing indirect methods of raising money for new and necessary expenditures. 'Buy your food,' he said; 'then give it to the church. Then go buy it back again. Then eat it up, and your church debt is paid.'"

Instead of obeying God and trusting him for help, the assistance of the world is sought after, and this is directly contrary to the will of God. What would be thought of a wife whose faithful husband had promised to supply all her wants, if she should distrust and dishonor him by going to his enemies for money; or, to obtain it, should open his house for the entertainment of sensual pleasure seekers? Yet such is the course pursued in these church entertainments. No wonder that a jealous God has said of such characters: "Ye adulterers and adulteresses, know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? Whosoever will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God." James 4: 4. "Woe to them that go down to Egypt for help." Isa. 31: 1.

The world loves its own; and the churches which depend on the world for support of course are obliged to please the world and conform to it. As H. L. Hastings says: "If churches cannot live without dishonoring the Lord, then let them die decently and speedily, and when such cumberers of the ground are cut down, there may be room for other trees that will bear good fruit. And if ministers of the Gospel cannot be supported without resorting to such means to obtain a livelihood, let them go into worldly business with their backslidden churches, and leave their room for men whom God has really sent to preach his Word. The commissioned messengers of Almighty God, sent to warn a slumbering world of approaching judgment, will not be dependent upon such sources for their support. This whole system of supporting religious worship by the sale of gimcraeks and the giving of entertainments is a fraud. A religion that cannot be sustained without such devices is not worth sustaining, and the ministry which is dependent for its support on this sort of 'backsheesh' begged from the votaries of the world, the flesh and the devil, is a disgrace to the Gospel which it professes to proclaim."

How vastly better is the plan God prescribes by his servant Malachi: "Bring ye all the tithes into storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it." Mal. 3: 10.

These modern methods of church amusement and money making, greatly blight the spiritual life, influence and soul saving power of the church. Most of these fun-loving people of the church constitute no part of Christ's church, but are merely a dead weight of baptized worldlings. Professing godliness and practicing worldliness they are making more infidels than all our enemies outside the church. From long observation we are constrained to say that the churches that have these worldly attractions are generally wanting in life and power. "For many walk, of whom I told you often, and now tell you even weeping, that they are the enemies of the cross of Christ: whose end is destruction, whose god is their belly, and whose glory is in their shame, who mind earthly things." Phil. 3: 18, 19.

Many of the churches of the present day wonder why they do not have such powerful revivals as they had in by-gone days. Generally they attribute the cause to "sparseness of population"—"lack of funds"—"people are so busy"—"so many more in the field," etc. But the real cause is to be found in the terrible worldliness, darkness and death that universally prevail among the ministers and members of those churches. Their own sins are blocking up the way of souls and causing the awful desolations in Zion. The craze for money to gratify pride and ambition absorbs so much of the time and labor of these "respectable" Laodicean churches that the salvation of souls is made a secondary consideration. Money first, salary first, concerts first, tea-meetings first, then a few weeks revival effort. And if these so-called revival meetings should come in the way of another entertainment it is easily postponed, for the money must be had whether souls are saved or not. This is not a fancied representation of the condition of things around us in Christendom, but terribly stubborn facts, as constantly occurring events show. A brother in writing to us concerning a protracted meeting held in his church says:—"I am very sorry to say that but one soul has been converted yet; and yet it is not much wonder; for during three weeks the meetings have been closed three times for Christmas trees and the like!"

To say that the church of Christ cannot be sustained without these contrivances to beguile the world into its support, is to confess that Christianity is a failure. The practical effect of such a lamentable confession is to lower the religion of the Bible in the estimation of the very persons whom it seeks to bless. Said an infidel, "I think your God must be in great need of money by the tricks the churches practice to get it for him."

Thus is the spread of the Gospel hindered by this confessed weakness. But we are bold to say this is a totally false representation of Christ's church. While popular, time-serving, world-conformed churches have never been able to get along without leaning upon the world for support, Christianity, without the aid of these devices, has always been able to support itself, and ride triumphant through all difficulties. Notably has this been the case when the world has been most bitter and persecuting towards her. Says a certain writer: "A locomotive with the steam up not only goes without help, but it draws the train." Such is Christianity. When there is real piety there is no need of resort to these worldly customs, and call in flirts and fops to play and snicker over dolls and tomfooleries.

WHAT THE LIQUOR ORGAN MEANS.

THE SIGNAL ANSWERED.

BY H. H. HINMAN.

Now what does this mean? Let some person of detective ability determine. The Champion (Illinois liquor organ) says:

It is very unfortunate for the interests of those who are injured by the Harper high license bill, (and who are naturally making every effort to avert the calamity which the law, should it ever go into effect would produce), that there are certain officious individuals who in order to make their own importance conspicuous, bring to light measures which are taken with proper precautions against publicity. A fool may often by opening his mouth upset a wise man's counsels.—Union Signal.

Here are the ear marks of the lodge. Let me suggest to our good sisters of the Signal that it needs no detective to discover "That every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light lest his deeds should be reproved," and that the world justly regards all conduct that is carefully concealed, as presumptively wrong. The saloon-keeper would have no screen before his door if he were doing a legitimate business, and no oath of secrecy would be required in the lodge if its obligations and ceremonies were such as to commend them to public approval. Gibbon says that the first great persecution against the early Christians was occasioned by their supposed imitations of the Eleusinian Mysteries, since many of their meetings were held in private for fear of persecutors. It was assumed that whatever was carefully concealed must be injurious to the public welfare.

Liquor sellers and Freemasons must needs practiee concealment. They dare not come to the light. Bad as the world is, it would be utterly shocked by a sight of all their abominations. But Christians cannot afford it, for they are "children of the light." When temperance takes on the form of secrecy, it is at once suspected of sinister motives, and its power for good is greatly diminished.

Let saloon-keepers and all wrong-doers resort to the "cunning craftiness whereby they lie in wait to deceive," but let all who are strong in the truth of God "walk in the light, as he is in the light." If any of the friends of temperance have been beguiled into the secret orders of any sort, let them imitate the example of the apostles and "renounce the hidden things of dishonesty, not walking in craftiness nor handling the Word of God deceitfully, but by the manifestation of the truth, commending themselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God."

SECRET TRIBUNALS.

Secret tribunals have never been in favor with mankind. When kings and their advisers condemned whomsoever they chose to imprisonment or death, as in the case of the Bourbon kings, with their lettres de cachet and Bastile, the people rose up and threw down the prison and condemned the Bourbon king publicly to the block. The secret trials and terrible punishments of the Inquisition doomed that truly infernal institution to destruction and abhorrence. So much terror and indignation were excited by the Venetian Secret Council of Ten, which condemned whom they would to cross the Bridge of Sighs, to the secret places of imprisonment, torture or execution, that the government fell and has been held up to public execration ever since. The Sacred Velm of the Middle Ages that decreed the death of tyrannical rulers, and carried out its decrees by courageous emissaries, became an object of terror and hatred to the people. it was intended to protect, and so it is now with the Russian Nihilists. In like manner the secret association of Irishmen called Invincibles, has taken upon itself the business of trying rulers, informers, or other obnoxious men, secretly dooming them to death, and sending obedient followers to execute its sentences. These last are American-Irishmen. This is just the best plan for destroying their own influence and the influence of the friends of Ireland, who are seeking by all lawful means to ameliorate the woes of the people, which are mostly brought on them by drinking, superstition and ignorance, in which Rome always delights to leave the people. The question arises whether threats emanating from the members of this secret society of cutthroats may not be punished for threats to murder as well as murders actually committed. It appears to us that the threat of Mr. Lynch of Rochester, against Lord Lansdowne should be punishable by law, especially when coupled with the boast that he would have killed Carey if that informer had come to Canada.—New York Witness.

Doubtless the excellent judgment of the editor of the Witness has marked the action of the telegraphers' secret lodge in ordering members, who were satisfied with their wages and had no grievance, to leave their work and has especially noted the implicit and humiliating obedience of these men who had given up their independence and their means of subsistence at the order of a secret tribunal with whose members they have no acquaintance. Is there not an identity of principle here that deserves condemnation?—ED. CYN.

"THE BINDING FORCE OF A VOW."

Who can read the legend of the murder of Adah by her father, as it is set forth in the Daughter's Degree, in the "Order of the Eastern Star," without coming to the conclusion that the lesson designed to be taught therein, is simply this: an oath, no matter what may be the character of the thing sworn to, has such a binding force as that it never can be annulled, and that no excuse whatever can be accepted for its non-fulfillment. Nay, more, we get the impression that it is a less crime for a man to deliberately kill his own child, than to break a rash vow. According to this rule of ethics, a man is justified in doing anything, no matter how infamous the act may be, providing that he had previously sworn so to do. Accordingly, Herod the Great chose the least of two evils when he was necessitated to kill John the Baptist, or to break his wicked oath, and spare the good man's life. Not one person in a million will endorse the course pursued by Herod, unless he has a pet theory to defend, either directly or indirectly. We learn from the New Testament that more "than forty Jews banded together, and bound themselves under a curse, or as it is in the margin—with an oath of execration—saying, that they would neither eat nor drink till they had killed Paul." When tidings of this conspiracy came to the ears of the intended victim, he claimed the "protection of the law," by appealing to Cæsar. Consequently the conspirators were compelled to starve themselves to death, or do that other more terrible thing, namely, break their ungodly oath. What course they pursued we know not, but we have no recollection of hearing of the glorious forty who starved themselves to death because Paul was not generous enough to allow himself to be put to death, that the honor of the murderers might remain untarnished. And now, a question arises, did Paul pursue a less praise worthy course than did Adah in not giving himself up to be butchered by more than two score sabres? Ought he to have bared his breast and thereby invited the glittering blade, to the end that forty wicked oaths might remain intact? We do not understand how it is that delicate women can consent to be taught the horrible doctrine that a young woman who consents to be murdered by her father, in order to prevent his breaking an unlawful oath, has done something praise worthy, and which renders her name "forever famous in the annals" of the good and great.

Let us look at this from another stand-point. Suppose the vow of Jephthah had been of such a nature as that its fulfillment required a violation of the seventh command in the Decalogue, instead of the sixth, then what would have been thought of the parties who would by their acts show that the violation of the seventh commandment was in their judgment a less sin than would be the breaking of a wicked oath. Why, then in the name of all that is good are ladies taught that "The Open Bible is appropriate to Jephthht's Daughter, as the symbol of obedience to the Word of God," which says, "Thou shalt not kill." And why insist on calling the murder of a young woman, by her father, "a glorious event?"—Olathe Free Press.

—President Warren of Boston University, says, in his recent Baccalaureate sermon: "I speak with strictest scientific precision when I say that I know far more of the nature of God than I do of the nature of a sand grain. And I speak with equal soberness when I say that it is easier to give a child right conception of the former than it is to give a right conception of the latter."

WAITING FOR THE MORNING.

We are waiting for the dawning
Of that bright and glorious day,
For the good time so long coming,
When old wrongs shall pass away.
We have longed for light and freedom,
Truth to triumph over vice,
Love to make the earth an Eden,
And each home a paradise.

We are waiting for the morning,
Night has been so dark and long,
Dimly now the day is dawning,
And we hail it with a song.
Light of truth to every nation,
Brightly now begin to shine,
Pæans raise from every station,
"On earth peace and love divine."

We are waiting for the morning,
And our courage will not fail,
While our soul for light is yearning,
Until truth and right prevail.
We will work to banish sorrow,
Work and wait for human good,
Trusting to the coming morrow,
For the perfect brotherhood.

We have waited for the morning,
Through the long dark night of years,
But we now behold the dawning
While the light of truth appears.
Human hearts are sweetly singing,
"Mortals see with angel's ken,
Dove-winged Faith and Hope are bringing Peace on earth, good will to men."

DANGEROUS HEIGHTS IN MASONRY.

A few weeks since the New York Tribune published the following account of a dispute between the Masons of high degree upon a question which involves the supremacy and existence of the Supreme Council of Sovereign Grand Inspectors General, thirty-third degree, Scottish Rite Masonry, presided over by Albert Pike. His council, which has come down from Dr. Dalcho and Frederick the Great, gave charters to the Gourgas council of the Northern jurisdiction; but the authority of both is disputed by the Cerneau council, sprung from the atheist Grand Orient of France. The Tribune says:

The question which is the Simon-pure, original and legitimate Supreme Grand council of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite of Masonry in this country, which has vexed high-grade Freemasons for more than half a century, is about to be precipitated for answer upon the Supreme Grand council of France. An adjudication of the rival claims of the so-called Gourgas and the Cerneau councils is not impending, for there is no tribunal in existence having jurisdiction, both these American bodies claiming equal power with the sister council that is now to be fretted with the old controversy. At the request of the Supreme Grand council of which William H. Peckham is the most Puissant Sovereign Grand Commander, Claudius F. Beatty, Grand Marshal General, is about to visit Paris for the purpose of asking recognition from the Supreme Grand council of France, as the representative of the only legitimate Supreme body of the Scottish Rite in the United States. The representatives of the rival body will also be there, and it is believed that the showing of proofs and the presentation of facts and arguments will be such that the French council, from which the present Cerneau council claims original authorization, will speak in a manner that will heal the distraction in which many Masonic craftsmen have long been held. Mr. Beatty is a past grand officer of the Knight Templars of the United States, and will sail on the City of Rome with the Apollo Commandery, of Chicago, which will then start on a two months' pilgrimage to Europe.

Touching the controversy, which has developed convolutions that give the lay mind pause, Mr. Peckham said to a reporter: "In the United States there are two Grand councils that claim to exercise the privilege of conferring the degrees of the Ancient and Accepted Scotch Rite of Masonry. One is known as the Cerneau council, and was founded in New York city on Oct. 27, 1807; the other is the Gourgas council or Northern jurisdiction, founded in New York city in 1813 by Emanuel de la Motta, and resusticated after thirty years of extinction in the Northern States, by J. J. J. Gourgas, formerly a clerk of De la Motta. In 1863 the Gourgas council was split in two parts, one of which was known as the Raymond council and the other as the Van Rensselaer council. Both parties excommunicated and expelled each other. The Cerneau council, then undertook the goverumeut of Edmund B. Hays, united with the Raymond branch of the Gourgas council, the number of officers being doubled so that all the nine officers of the two councils were retained. Under this union, which was known as the Supreme Grand council of the United States, the Southern jurisdiction under Albert Pike, the Confederate general, and the Van Rensselaer council, were entirely ignored. When the war was over Pike objected to what had been done, and the consolidation was dissolved, the Raymond council joining with the Van Rensselaer. The Cerneau council left the Raymond council, and both Supreme Grand councils continued to work as they had done previous to 1863. We are uow fighting for the position we had previous to that time. Gourgas and Pike men are coming over to us in large numbers, and expulsions, red-letter documents, and a flow of printer's ink are following them. We claim that we have had an unbroken succession of legitimate most Puissant Sovereign Grand Commanders since 1807, when Joseph Cerneau established the most Puissant Sovereign Grand Consistory, with De Witt Clinton, Cadwallader D. Colden, Martin Hoffman, and other distinguished New York men as his inferior officers. We claim to be governed by the constitutions of 1762 and 1862, while the Southern and Northern jurisdictions are governed by the so-called constitutious of 1762. These constitutions are impudent and baseless forgeries which made their appearance about 1801 at Charleston. They professed to have been signed by Frederick the Great at an alleged conventiou of high-grade; but for years previous to 1801 Frederick the Great was a hopeless paralytic at Sans-Souci. Besides, he was opposed to high-grade Masonry, and Masonic history is silent concerning such a conference. We propose now to have our rights established on the continent of Europe as they have always been recognized. We want our rivals and traducers to come over and be healed. We were abody in this city in 1807. recognized by France and brough here by France, and our territory was invaded in 1813. We shall ask that we alone be recognized."—New York Tribune.

THE GRAND ORIENT.

Three years ago when the Grand Lodge of France banished the name and idea of God, the Masonic world was in much confusion over the act and a crisis at that time impended as the following editorial from the Chicago Daily News, 1880, sets forth. But who knows how this trouble was settled?

A very serious crisis in Masonry is an event which is exciting much interest among members of the order in the world at large. The Grand Orient of France, it appears, is to be credited or discredited with the distinction of being its exciting cause. In 1771 the ancient Grand Lodge of France, declared extinct, was formally replaced by a body called the Grand Orient of France. Still the Ancient Grand Lodge continued to "work" separately until June, 1798. It was then incorporated with the Grand Orient. The latter has continued to the present time, but it has been placed out of communication with many Grand Lodges on account of some extraordinary deviations from established rule. One of these, according to Dr. Mackey, the well known Masonic author is "the recent abolition of the office of Grand Master, the duties being performed by the President of the Council of the Order." But this it appears has been followed by another and still more serious innovation. Several months ago the Grand Orient of France resolved that they would no longer recognize the existence of a God in any Masonic rites. Considering that Masonry is a religious, though unsectarian, institution, this repudiation was so repellant to the constitutiou of the order, and the sentiment of a large majority of the brethren outside of France, that the Grand Lodge of Ireland severed all paternal relations with the Masons of France. The Grand Lodges of Scotland and England, and some of the American lodges, also took similar action.

It now appears—probably in view of this action of lodges out of France—that the Grand Orient of that country are about to issue a general invitation to their brethren in England, Ireland, Scotland, and the United States, to take part in a "convent," or secret convention, to be held in Paris. The object is to revise the decision of the English-speaking lodges, which have literally read the French Masons out of all fraternity, on account of this repudiatiou of the Deity. If these lodges adhere to their resolutiou, or, it is stated, even if they decline to accept the invitation of the Grand Orient of France, the latter intend to declare themselves independent, with power and a determination to issue warrants under their separate seal constituting grand lodges in other countries.

This is the crisis which the order is called upon to meet; it is one which, to say the least, is the source of much annoyance and solicitude to Masons in countries other than France, and to the religious element of the order in that country.

FAITHFUL DEALING.

Ex-Bishop Wright, of the Richmond Star, endorses the following:

This emeny of God and man has furnished some of his agents one of the most effectual plans that could be conceived, to get the curse of secrecy into the church. It is just to let it in little by little, and by all means to keep quiet and say nothing; and then from less to more. And all this while, it is to be careful never to pull on the reins of discipline, but let them lie slack. This is just what the church is now doing—opening the door little by little, and from less to more. This is just what Satan desires; for he knows it will get up hard feelings and strife and enmity and confusion. This is just what it is doing to-day, and as sure as God made the sun to shine, Christ is not the author of it.

As the result of the evil things referred to in the foregoing, one of two things is bound to take place. The first of these is that those clothed with authority to execute the discipline will turn over a new leaf, and, in the turning of that leaf, turn out every traitor that has forfeited his membership in the church by joining a secret society. This they can do; this they ought to do; this they are solemnly bound to do; and this they solemnly promised to do when they took upon themselves the office of the ministry. This ought to be done before the next General Conference. It will not only unite us as a church, but will also unite us in Christ our living head. But in the second place, if this is not done, they will try at the next General Conference to get hold of the helm of the church, for which they are now making a strong effort. And if they accomplish their end, then, sir, you may look out for a general war for church property, as it was in the Methodist Episcopal church when the split took place between the North and the South on the subject of slavery. Now, Mr. Editor, I wish you and all the readers of the Star to keep this in memory.

MISSIONARIES AND OPIUM.

The missionaries in China forwarded in April a petition, addressed to the British House of Commons, against the opium trade. It carries 239 signatures. Four English and two American missionaries refused to sign it. Two of the former were opposed to the petition, and one did not like the form of it. All the German missionaries signed it. The Americans who held off did so because they thought it not proper that they should, as American subjects, sign a document addressed to the British Government. The question came before the House of Commons April 3d, when Sir Joseph Pease moved that China should be treated as an independent state having the right to arrange its own import duties on opium. By a vote of 68 to 128 the House refused to declare against the policy of forcing the duty on China. This shows a gain of only eight votes since 1875. A correspondent of the Chinese Recorder shows that within a few years the estimate of the amount of opium produced in China has advanced from 100,000 to 300,000 chests. As to the number of opium smokers he says the statements are "perfectly appalling."

"The number has been stated as high as sixty out of every hundred of the whole population in some provinces. Mr. Spence, of H. B. M. Consular service, reports the production of Szechuen, Kweichau and Yunnan provinces to be 224,000 chests annually. The number of 76,000 chests, in view of the statement of the extent of its cultivation, would appear to be a moderate estimate for the quantity produced in Shansi, Shensi. and Kansuh provinces, and in Manchuria. In my former letter I gave as a probable estimate of the smokers of 100,000 chests of imported and 100,000 chests of native drug, of ten millions. But in view of the statement that the quantity of the native drug is three times as much as it was then estimated to be that number is entirely too few to consume such a quantity, and the statements of those who are residents in these opium-producing provinces as to the proportion of the population who use the seductive poison make it evident that the number of smokers is vastly beyond any number which has been hitherto surmised.

"In view of the quantity of the drug which is now produced, and the statements of the residents in and the travelers through these six provinces in which it is grown, a moderate estimate will make the number of smokers to be nearly thirty millions or one-tenth of the whole population of the Empire, estimating it at three hundred millions. As many of the smokers are youth and women they will not use as much as older smokers. This is a most appalling view of the condition of vast portions of this populous country. It looks as if the country was indeed going to ruin. If it is to be saved from this blighting influence, it behooves the friends of China. both foreign and native, to bestir themselves with an earnestness which has never yet been manifested by them.

"Another point which claims attention is this—the rapid increase of the growth over large and extensive districts of country. Hitherto the attention has been more directed to seeking to arrest the importation of the foreign drug. It was supposed that the native drug was not much in quantity, that it was grown in some measure clandestinely and that its growth could be easily suppressed at any time by the enforcement of the laws which forbid the growth of the poppy. But we are awakened from these delusive surmises by the astounding fact that three times as much drug is produced as is imported; that the poppy is openly grown over extensive districts in these six large provinces; and that during the last fifteen years the laws against its growth have been in abeyance; and now the last statement reaches us from Shensi, 'that proclamations have been issued from the highest officials legalizing the traffic in opium and imposing a regular tax on each catty.'"—Independent.

India's Dialects and Darkness.—There is a great variety of languages spoken in India, and this will in itself always be an insuperable obstacle to unity, national or otherwise. Besides dialects, there are no less than one hundred and twenty-three distinct languages enumerated, though many of these are spoken only by small numbers of the people. Hindustani appears to be the principal language, and this is spoken by eighty-two millions; Bengali by thirty-nine millions; and Telegu and Mahratta by about seventeen millions each. All the rest are minor languages, and are spoken by fewer numbers.

The saddest part, perhaps, of all this wonderful population is the six hundred and one thousand one hundred and sixty-four "priests," who are continually engaged in teaching what we can find no better name for than the doctrine of darkness; and it would be well if a great effort could be made to enlist this vast army of enthusiasts on the side of light and progress. If this could be accomplished, a rapid and wholesome change would soon be brought about.

Mankind like and respect men of decision—border men, neutral men, are detested.

To a heart that is full of joy, all it sees is joyful; but to a sad heart all is sad. Change of heart is the greatest change.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

THE PUBLIC PRESS AND PUBLIC MORALS.

There is no doubt that the daily press of this city is conducted with much ability, and that it aims to please rather than offend the better class of the people; but it is equally evident that they do this from no love of truth, or desire to vindicate the right, nor with any regard for public morals. The staid D. D. who keeps in the beaten track, and never in any way disturbs the self-satisfied convictions of his hearers; the lottery dealer, who in violation of the laws of Congress and the laws of God, entices multitudes of poor people to part with their hard-earned money, when he knows it can bring them nothing but demoralization, disappointment and sorrow; and the saloon keeper who coins the heart's blood of suffering humanity into gold to fill his coffers, are all regarded as precisely alike. Each may get a gentle puff, or, for a consideration a grand encomium.

But let a man get out of the ruts; let him dare to lift up his voice like a trumpet and reprove people for their popular sins, and he has committed an offense for which these writers will never forgive him.

The ten commandments of Moses may be set aside with impunity. One only must be kept as the price of peace—"Thou shalt do no indecorum." A little meeting is held for prayer that the power of the secret orders may be broken, and the reporters of two leading dailies come in and write up a long list of contemptible falsehoods, and admit no correction. A faithful and blameless preacher of the Gospel seeks a place on the street where he will not interrupt locomotion and earnestly warns his fellow-men to repent of their sins ond bring forth fruits meet for repentance, and these same reporters pour out the vials of their wrath and falsehood upon his devoted head, while these same papers print elaborate vindications of Mr. Dauphin and his lotteries, representing them as the most honorable, amiable, and benevolent lotteries, and this corrupter of the ignorant and and defier of the laws of God and man as most terribly persecuted and wronged. A daily paper may, and perhaps ought to re-echo public opinion, but if it does this, it should be the matured opinions of the thinking and virtuous class. But when beardless youths who get their inspiration from the saloon and its associations, write vindications of the wicked, and pour contempt on men whose shoe-latchets they are not worthy to unloose, they, or rather their employers, become corrupters of public morals, and the plague-spots on the fair form of the city.

"THE ORDER OF THE AMERICAN UNION."

This youngest child of Freemasonry has already several hundred councils in operation, and its organ, the National Free-School Advocate, seems a special defender of secret orders, especially of the Grand Army of the Republic, the August number being largely occupied with its doings. The platform is evidently designed for the basis of a secret political party, that shall be political only in the sense that it makes the interests of the orders paramount to all other interests:

We ask no man where he was born.
We attack no man's religion.
We interfere with no man's politics.
We are opposed to any interference in local, state or national affairs by any ecclesiastical organization.
We favor the equal taxation of all property, both real and personal, except public property and burial grounds.
We are opposed to any appropriation of public money for any sectarian purpose whatever.
We favor the maintainance of unsectarian free public schools throughout the United States, aided by generous appropriations of money by the State and National governments.
Inasmuch as ignorance engenders crime, and is dangerout to free government, we favor compulsory education where voluntary education is not rigidly and universally practiced.
Electors control the affairs of a free people, as they should. They must be qualified to the highest standard of civilization. We are, therefore, in favor of requiring all who become voters, after a fixed date, to be able to read and write.

Of the above quoted party principles I would say that they are mainly wrong. We do attack all forms (of false) religion; I could neither be a good Christian nor a good citizen without so doing. I do interfere with every man's politics if they are wrong. I am not opposed to protest or remonstrance upon "any local, State or national affairs, by an ecclesiastical organization, if such affairs should be contrary to Christian principles. Nay, it is the duty of the church to bear testimony against any iniquity in the State, and this is interference.

The proposition to tax alike all property except public buildings and burial grounds, would include churches, hospitals and colleges. It is probable that some limit should be put on the amount of such property exempt from taxation, but the principle of exemption is maifestly just. The church building that costs from $1,000 to $100,000 exists for the public good, and in an important sense it is public property. Its construction and use adds to the value of every man's property, and to the amount of taxable property in the vicinity; and so does not put an additional burden on any one. It rather lightens it. But if a church organization shall invest its millions in such property then they manifestly should pay for its protection, and the same principle applies to colleges, hospitals, etc.

The next two propositions are admissible provided we know what is meant by "sectarian." If to be Christian, is to be sectarian, then all Christian teaching, including all reading of the Bible, would be ruled out of our public schools, and they would become simply atheistic. Such is the evident drift of all such teaching.

In reference to compulsory education, and an educational test for voters, much might be said in its favor, but we need no secret order to teach us these things.

A FEAST OF TABERNACLES.

On Tuesday, August 8th, we had the pleasure of greeting our fellow-laborer, Mrs. M. M. Mair, who has given twenty-six years of missionary work in Africa. and from whom we had been separated nearly eighteen years. We left Washington on the morning of the 10th and came together to near Harper's Ferry when Mrs. Mair went southward, and my wife and myself turned north to Chambersburg, Pa., near which place we found the brethren of the King St. Church dwelling in tabernacles in a beautiful grove. We found a cottage erected and furnished for our comfort.

The meeting commenced on the 9th and has been well attended, orderly, and harmonious. There have been three sermons each day, besides a children's meeting, and morning and evening prayer and conference meetings. The preaching has been direct' practical, and earnest. Not much has been said about any theory of holiness, but practical godliness has been strongly insisted on. No iniquity, however popular, has been spared, and the sins and shortcomings of God's people have been faithfully rebuked and honestly confessed. Up to this morning (the 15th) quite a number of persons have been hopefully converted, and others are seeking. On Sabbath there was a great concourse, who in the main, were attentive hearers. It was a blessed privilege to preach to them. A part of Tuesday was given to the foreign mission work, and a collection was taken for that purpose.

It is noteworthy that this single congregation has undertaken the support of a mission-school in Africa, which has been already commenced; and that individuals who are the most faithful and earnest in the cause of Christian reform are the most willing to labor and give for the conversion of the heathen.

Tuesday afternoon was given to the subject of reform, and it was my privilege to speak from Esther 4: 14, in which I endeavored to show the danger to which Christianity is exposed through the influence of the secret orders, and the necessity of meeting the emergency. It was a grand opportunity. and the large congregation listened with earnest attention. Let me say too, that Mordecai's exhortation to Esther, keeps ringing in my ears. "If thou altogether holdest thy peace at this time, then shall enlargement and deliverance arise from another place; but thou and thy father's house shall be destroyed: and who knoweth but thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this."

A large number of the tracts of the N. C. A. were distributed, and it is hoped a lasting impression will be made. It is expected that the meeting will continue till to-morrow night. Other meetings are being planned for Gospel and reform work, aud it is hoped that there is a great reformation to be accomplished in this beautiful valley.

Yours in Christ, H. H. Hinman.

One of the best evidences of the divine origin of the the religion of Jesus Christ is constantly staring atheists in the face; it is the indestructibility of the Bible. There are now some eighty Bible societies in various parts of the world, besides several thousand auxiliary societies, engaged especially in the work of publishing and circulating the Holy Scriptures. Since the Bible society era in 1804, these societies have issued over 170,000,000 of Bibles, Testaments, and portions of the Bible. The Word of God is now printed in two hundred and ninety-eight different languages or dialects. This does not indicate "the decadence of Christianity," but the very opposite. Men may differ about it, but it does not go down. Infidels may war against it, but it still endures. "The grass withereth, the flower fadeth; but the Word of our God shall stand forever."—Ex.

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,

JONATHAN BLANCHARD,
OF ILLINOIS.

For Vice President,

JOHN A. CONANT,
OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

TARIFF AND FREE TRADE.

The Cynosure is neither tariff or free trade, nor is there a paper in the United States which is. Both the Republican and Democratic parties stand with each a foot on opposite sides of the line which separates direct from indirect taxation. Democratic iron-makers in Pennsylvania want protection for their forges and furnaces, and Democratic mule-raisers in Missouri want cheap iron and dear mules. Both vote the Democratic ticket. Senator Hoar, protectionist, says: "I should be willing to leave tariff revision to free-traders." And Senator Beck, free-trader, said lately, "The revenue tax should be adjusted so as to aid the American industries in the proportion in which they can least bear foreign competition." Gen. Grant, a hereditary and, till wanted by the Republicans for President, a life-long Democrat, heads the "New York Protection Association." and there has never been an hour when a bill to pay all government expenses, pensions included, by direct tazation, would not have been voted down in a pure Democratic caucus. Yet the Cynosure will give constant and increasing attention to finance, trade, and commerce, and give its readers the benefit of its studies.

GOOD FOR ANTI-MASONS, TOO.

The Prohibitionists of Ohio have set apart a day in each month, until after the election, for prayers. It looks as if they had better pray every day until the election, and then vote and work. The man who prays and don't vote is a poor specimen of a Christian.—Inter-Ocean.

JOHN P. ST. JOHN NOMINATED.

Miss Frances E. Willard, president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, in the course of a recent address in Brooklyn, is reported by the Daily Times of that city as cheering the voters who stood by their convictions on the prohibition question. Her praise applies indirectly to every voter of the American platform.

Miss Willard was glad to see that there were so many men in Brooklyn, and especially in the Eastern District, who voted with the new party. No man threw away his vote when he placed it in the ballot-box with his conviction behind it, and the speaker thanked the prohibition voters of Brooklyn for their loyalty to humanity, to God, to home and their native land. To carry this movement out there must be an organized, concentrated power, and that power was a party. There was so much that was bad attached now to the name "party," that people forget what a magnificent thing partizanship was when it was on a basis of loyalty to that principle which that party embodies. The party which elected Lincoln in 1860, polled only seven thousand in 1840. What Americans had done, Americans could do again. [Applause.] Revolutions never go backward, and the fanaticisms of to-day are the victories of to-morrow. The people who stand by this new party have not the flimsy, flabby courage which only dares to assert itself in times of success, and they will grow in strength and numbers and will succeed. The prohibition movement must be a partizan movement because it must elect men who will enforce the law. In every country it must elect a sheriff, and constables who will insist upon the rigid enforcement of the law. Until it does that any prohibition law that may be passed will be like a rusty sword in a still more rusty scabbard. "I believe," said Miss Willard, "that before our next Presidential election there will come that which shall not be a mere sound from the tops of the mulberry trees, but a cyclone that will uproot the mulberry trees, and I hope that the man who be carried into the Presidential chair by that cyclone will be John T. St. John of Kansas. [Applause.] —Brooklyn Daily Times.

"THE MISERIES OF FO HI."

This is the title of a late publication by Jansen, McClurg & Co., of this city. It is a political satire directed against the intense thirst for office which influences the majority of our young Americans. An Inter Ocean letter describes it:

This hit of the season sets forth the trials and tribulations of the title-role hero, a Celestial functionary, and the purpose is to exhibit in Chinese garb, the real life of the average servant of the public, by appointment, in this country. The civil service is mainly had in mind, but glimpses are caught here and there of the vapid, inane, dreary, snobbish, and unwholesome life of an army officer in time of peace.

Fo Hi senior was a thrifty paper merchant, who rose by business habits from a stall-keeper to a wealthy tradesman. His third and youngest child was his only son and namesake. In him centered the family ambition. He was sent to college. "The Foust of Pencils," to learn Sanserit, the Greek of the Orient. Then came the study of law, followed by a fourth-rate clerkship under the government, namely, Supernumerary Expectant, Master Surveyor of Stoneheaps, for which high honor he was really indebted not to his merits or indorsements on file in the department, but to this chain of good fortune, a good-natured customer of his father had an old housekeeper who had a friend, an old rag-picker, whose son was a soldier of the Imperial Guard, who was the lover of a cousin of the lady's maid, whose business it was every evening to dress the hair of the Minister's wife. By that route traveled the coveted appointments.

It is hardly worth while to follow in abstract and outline the miseries of Fo Hi. At every step one recognizes the government service in this country. If this story could only cure the insane longing for office which torments so many American breasts, and ruins so many fair prospects, it would be second only to "Uncle Tom's Cabin" as a liberator, but all the genius for story telling, from Boccacio and Rabelais, to Dickens and Howells, could not produce a novel that would make any perceptible impression on the maniacs who insist upon rushing into the outstretched and never folding arms of our Moloch. A very considerable percentage of our best young men will still go on wanting places, some of them being so unfortunate as to succeed.

The immense church of St. Peter in Rome was built in part from funds derived from the sale of indulgences in Germany. The seller of these indulgences (Tetzel) cried out in the market place: "The moment your money chinks into the dish, that moment the soul of your friend flies up from purgatory into heaven." So the Freemason virtually cries out: The moment you have taken three degrees, and paid the money for them, that moment you are assured of the grip of entrance into the grand lodge above. The sale of indulgences led to one reformation, and the abominable impositions of the lodge will lead to another.

The bishop of Manchester, England: "Beer and wine shops with vaults are gate-ways to hell."

CORRESPONDENCE.

AN IOWA TESTIMONY.

GUTHRIE CENTER, Iowa, Aug. 16, 1883.

DEAR EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Not long ago in conversation with the pastor of the Baptist church of this place in the house of one of his members, who is an Anti mason, the reverend gentleman lost his jewel by getting angry. He claims not to be a Mason when conversing with Anti-masons, but is a Mason among Masons. He was made a Mason in Canada, received a demit from the lodge there about fifteen years ago, has never been inside the lodge since, because he deems it a waste of time and money, and that is all the harm there is in Masonry. After some conversation at this time he flew in a passion and took his hat and left the house. So it is when you get a Mason cornered; with all their Masonic holiness they will get mad. God pity such Christians!

A few weeks ago the W. C. T. U. held a mass meeting in the Baptist church in this place. I was called upon among others to give my views of the outlook of prohibition. I said as long as we were governed by hoodwinked and cable-towed governors and judges, we might expect to be defeated, for they were bound under obligations held by them to be superior to all others, to protect their brethren in their business and their brethren were the saloon-keepers, and they would trample the wishes of wives and sisters under their feet and laugh them to scorn, despite their prayers and cries and tears, until God and right and truth prevailed through the instrumentality of a true prohibition party (the American), prohibiting sin in all forms secret, and revealed, allowing the women to vote as well as pray. Then and not till then can we expect success in this warfare against the rum traffic. The little speech created quite a sensation. A Masonic candidate for representative turned pale and squirmed when he found there was one Wesleyan in Guthrie Center who would not vote for him.

When will our people who profess to be reformers learn that the time has come when our reformatory principles must be carried into every-day life and to the ballot, or we will be defeated? God pity two-faced Christianity.

You see that we are doing the best we can for God and truth, though the truth sometimes offends, and we are reproved by our own members for preaching the plain truth. We shall endeavor to be true to God and his cause though all men forsake us. HOMER HULL.

"HOLDEN WITH CORDS."

BOSTON, August 11.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—A few weeks ago while in the southern part of Vermont, I chanced to read a late work entitled, "Holden with Cords." I was at once interested. The great evil workings of past and present secret organizations as herein presented, cannot fail to interest and profit the young reader. Written with purity of character, and woven as it is into a story, the attention of the young reader is the better arrested; while great truths and facts shining through this gossamer texture in characters—arguments in themselves—carry along the mind in a happy manner, till it is fairly hedged about with convincing truths. More books treating upon this subject should be written in similar style. They awaken the sympathy of the young to expression; while those abounding only in facts and complex arguments might fail of weight with only persons of mature mind and thought.

Surely the time seems not far distant when we not only as individuals, but as a people, a nation, must contend with this growing evil as a deadly foe to all that relates to our best interests. Its subtle power already threatens the undermining of our free government, our Christian and judiciary interests, yea, reaches to our very fire-sides and fetters our own freedom of conscience.

All organized combinations enforcing their subjects to profound silence by imposing horrid oath-bound penalties should alone be sufficient evidence that their internal workings are anything but righteous. Let the subject be agitated till the people are educated to the point, that they demand and gain legislative action for their suppression. As nations increase in power and wealth, so spring up and for a time flourish all manner of Satanic powers. Are we to yield the ascendancy by letting them alone? It is by this very means they now have such a strong hold among us, that their overthrow seems well-nigh impossible. But when compared with the various dominate powers of the past which have been brought to naught, we have every reason for encouragement. And when once these secret powers are overthrown, they will be as effectually buried as is the slave power; for by the same means must it be brought about. And it seems to me this reform will be more effectual in its accomplishment than any brought to bear upon its ally, the liquor traffic; although with the destruction of one comes in a great measure ruin to the other. With what persistent efforts, and martyr-like endurance, have the temperance advocates worked with oftentimes the most disheartning results; yet they still work, and not less needful seem we of their helpful influence. For this liquor curse is seemingly possessed with an undying root, from which shoot out in some unseen direction its poisonous branches, as fast as they are made to wither and decay. Our duty is to meet, resist, and battle with these forces of the adversary, that we be not overcome by them. And if we give the present the moral force of our direct influence, our immediate action, the future will claim its opposing forces to vindicate the truth, till waves of purifying revolution sweep oven the land. W. J. S.

PITH AND POINT.

POLE-STAR BEAMS.

Please send the Cynosure one year to the East end branch of the Public Library, Station "C," Cincinnati. I gave a copy to the Y. M. C. A., and they said they would "exchange" with you. I also waited on the librarian of the city library who sited me to Prof. Evans of Lane

Seminary as one of the committee to select reading matter of that kind. I went to see him but he was not at home. I also left a copy with one of the professors with the request that they put it on file in the Seminary library. He said he would present the matter to the Faculty. I told him that it would not carry if any of them were Masons; but I was glad to be informed that none of them belonged to the dark institution, so I think there is a fair prospect of its carrying. I have urged some business men here to subscribe, but I find an utter indifference to become posted as to the workings of the Association, or plottings of the enemy which it seeks to overthrow, or a dread of Masonic persecution and the damage that may come to their business. C. O. W.

INFIDELITY AND LODGERY.

Yesterday an imposing funeral took place in this county over the remains of a noted or notorious infidel. He did not believe in the Holy Bible, and consequently uot in Christ nor the God of the Bible, but seemed to have a profound and profane hatred of every thing of a true Christiau character, even to the last. Perhaps hundreds in this county, in the last twelve years, have been led into the way of eternal ruin through his instrumentality. Quite a concourse of people were at the funeral, mostly, perhaps, of his belief and his converts, but partly through curiosity to see the Masonic parade and heathenish mummery; for he was a "good" Mason. Thus he was saved through "Masonry Divine" and "transplanted from the lodge below to the Grand Lodge above." The lodge was either anxious for a display or else it endorsed infidelity. It was a very appropriate occasion indeed for Masonic display, as it is undoubtedly the most powerful ally of infidelity. S.

SABBATH-BREAKING PAPERS.

I have ever been a friend to the cause and Cynosure; and yet not so ardent as I should be. But of late certain indications and improvements prompt me to more activity in this great cause. I think that the principles advocated therein cannot be too ardently promulgated. I hope that the editors will not shun to declare the whole council of God, and warn the people of all the sins of both church and state. I did not know till I saw it in the Cynosure that the Inter Ocean was desecrating the Sabbath by publishing a Sunday paper. I prize the Inter Ocean, but can not patronize it under such circumstances. To them it will scarcely make any difference, but in eternity it may to me. H. W. Fowler.

THE U. B. WING OF THE ARMY.

It seems as if the Richmond Star and the United Brethren in Christ had bruised the head of the Masonic serpent that has crawled into the United Brethren church. Brethren Tobey and Wright are men who are not obliged to sound a trumpet before them to prove that they are loyal as do some. Their fruit is known to be good by every honest, intelligent man in the church. The United Brethren church, as a part of God's army, has not drilled under their high moral standard as they should, consequently the troops are undisciplined, especially the artillery, the enemy spiking many of our guns. In our late war the heavy and light artillery, cavalry and infantry all drilled under the same standard, and when the artillery opened on the enemy all other parts of the army were ready, all loyal hearts were glad when any portion of the army gained any victory. Praises to our Great Commander, who doeth all things well and never lost a battle and never will. Blessed Redeemer; glorious Captain! When will we learn to trust him as we should, and rejoice in all his works and waysj I am sorry to see many of our brethren that talk as if they were jealous because another company of God's army are drilling under our standard. Many in authority oppose faithful soldiers in our own company for drilling. May they see the error of their way and be saved before it is too late. Yours for a glorious victory, Cyrus Smith.

Bible Lessons.

LESSON X.—September 2.—The Death of Samson.—Judges 16:21-31.

Golden Text.—The God of Israel is he that giveth strength and power unto his people.—Ps. 68:35.

Time.—Samson's was about B.C. 1096, 126 years after the victory of Gideon, our last lesson. Samson judged Israel 20 years in Dan, B.C. 1116-1096, at the same time that Samuel was judge in other parts of Palestine.

Place.—Gaza, the chief of the five cities of the Philistines, 50 miles south-west of Jerusalem, three miles from the Mediterranean, and 10 miles from Asealon. It is one of the oldest cities in the world.—Schaff.

Samson's character. Though Samson was the recipient of certain divine gifts, he was by no means an exemplary character; nor is it to be supposed that all the acts of his life had the stamp of God's approval. Like Jephthah, he was raised up for a special purpose; he had a special work, viz., to begin to deliver Israel—to prove to the people of Israel that the power of Jehovah would abundantly suffice for their deliverance—if by their penitence and prayer it were called forth. For this purpose God gave him a special gift,—the gift of bodily strength. —Stock. It is interesting to study the wild humor of Samson, exhibited even in his moments of greatest achievement and deepest suffering (chaps. 14:12–14, 18; 15:4, 5, 12–16: 3, 7, 11, 13, 25). His good nature under provocation was as conspicuous as, when aroused, was his wrath (chaps. 14:16, 17; 16;6–17). His childlike waywardness in indulging all his whims and modes and passion, even in the face of tender remonstrances, is no less marked; he is not strong enough to control himself (chaps. 14:1–3; 15:18, 19. 16: 1, 2, 4). We have no evidence of great mental powers in Samson; yet his intelligence was sufficient to cause him to be resorted to as judge.—Johnson. He was rough and savage towards his enemies, yet coolly shrewd about it all, never showing sudden outbursts of fiery passion.—Steele. He was full of the spirits and the pranks, no less than of the strength, of a giant. His name, which Josephus interprets in the sense of "strong," was still more characteristic. He was "the Sunny,"—the bright and beaming. Nothing can disturb his radiant good humor. His most valiant, his most cruel actions, are done with a smile on his face, and a jest in his mouth.—Stanley. May we not conjecture that this power given to Samson was specially adapted to Philistia, where the giant race of champion warriors was not yet extinct, and whose pride in her Goliath comes to view presently in David's history? The case of Samson witnessed before those lords of the Philistines that the Great God of Israel could raise up champions against whom no Goliath from their ranks could hope to stand. —Cowles.—His immoralities, while they caunot be excused, must be explained by considering the influence of this corrupt people upon all who mingled with them, and also by remembering the general darkness of the age. We must judge him by the light which he had, and not by that of the 19th century.—Johnson.

"Put out his eyes." There being in that age no regular prisons, a privative infliction of this nature was resorted to, not only to lesson the chances of escape, but to render the man harmless if escape should be made.—Kitto.

"Fetters of brass." Well does the Jewish expositor remark on this inflict on that Samson now looses his eyes and is fettered with irons, because heretofore he followed his eyes too much and allowed himself to be fettered by the allurements of the senses .—Cassell.

"Did grind in the prison house." The silence of Scripture in this period of Samson's life is supplied, as far as possible, by sanctified human genius, in Milton's Samson Agonistes.—Smith.

"The hair on his head began to grow." With blinded eyes he began spiritually to see—fettered with chains he became free—under slavish labor he ripened for the freedom of God. The greatness of the fallen Samson consisted in this, that like all noble natures in similar circumstances, he became great and freer in the deepest suffering than he had been before.—Lange.

"They praised their god." Samson now saw with deep intensity of shame and sorrow, how the name of the Lord had been dishonored through his misconduct, seeing that they ascribed to their own god that triumph over the covenanted servant of Jehovah, which they owed only to his own folly and sin. Yet out of this despair he gathered hope. He was aware that Jehovah was a jealous God, and that he knew well how to vindicate the honor of his own great name. The question was now put upon a different ground. It was no longer a matter between Samson and the Philistines, but between Dagon and Jehovah. —Kitto.

"The pillars whereupon the house standeth." Most of the city is built on hills, which, though comparatively low, have declivities exceedingly steep. The temple was erected over one of these, beyond a doubt, for such was and is the custom in the East; and in such a position, if the central columns were taken out, the whole edifice would be precipitated down the hill in ruinous contusion. There is such a steep declivity on the north-east corner of the present city, near the old dilapidated castle. I am further inclined to believe that the immense roof which rested upon these columns was sustained by arches, and there is every reason to infer from the number of them that are found in the ruined cities of Palestine, that columns large enough to sustain immense roofs were common at that very early day. If this were so, and the center columns stood on the brow of the declivity, the whole edifice would be precipitated down the hill merely by tearing away, as Samson did, these central supports.—Thompson's Land and Book.

"There were upon the roof." The lords and principal persons seem to have sat within, under the roof, while the people, to the number of 3,000, stood on the flat roof.—Cook.

"Avenged of the Philistines for my two eyes." Is it right to pray thus? For Samson it is. For he was called to recompense the Philistines; his whole task was directed against the tyrants. He fell only because instead of avenging the wrongs of his people on their oppressors, he squandered his strength with the Philistine woman. If now he desires the restoration of his lost strength, he can lawfully do so only for the purpose for which it was originally given.—Lange. This is not a Gospel sentiment, but one natural to his age. He acted in accordance with his best judgment of the right. Do you so act?—Johnson.

BAND OF HOPE BIBLE LESSON.

DRUNKENNESS CENSURED.

1. Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging: and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise. Prov. 20:1.
17. He that loveth pleasure shall be a poor man, he that loveth wine and oil shall not be rich. Prov. 21:17.
20. Be not among wine-bibbers, among riotous eaters of flesh:
21. For the drunkard and the glutton shall come to poverty; and drowsiness shall clothe a man with rags. Prov. 23: 20, 21.
29. Who hath woe? who hath sorrow? who hath contentions? who hath babbling? who hath wounds without cause? who hath redness of eyes?
30. They that tarry long at the wine; they that go to seek mixed wine.
31. Look not thou upon the wine when it is red, when it giveth his color in the cup, when it moveth itself aright.
32. At the last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder. Prov. 23:29–32.

Golden Text.—Buy the truth and sell it not; also wisdom and instruction and understanding.—Prov. 23: 23.

Central Truth.—God's word commands total abstinence.

1. Wine is called "a mocker" because it makes men mock at God and sacred things. Strong drink is called "raging" because it makes madmen of those who use it. Under its influence husbands murder their wives: and fathers, even mothers, sometimes kill their children.

2. A healthy brain contains a great deal of moisture. Alcohol takes away a portion of this moisture and temporary insanity is the result.

3. It deceives men in various ways, but chiefly by pretending to do them good when it is only doing them harm.

4. Alcohol is very greedy of water. Even when taken in small quantities it extracts from the nerves a portiou of their moisture. This blunts the power of feeling so that if any pain or discomfort existed before taking it the man feels relieved—not because he is rid of the source of the pain, but because the alcohol has paralyzed the nerves of sensation.

5. Dr. Young, chief of Bureau of Statistics, puts the amount spent in drink in this country for one year at $600,000,000, while the cost of making and selling it is supposed to be about $300,000,000 more. Now although many rich men drink, the great bulk of the consumers belong to the laboring class who have nothing to support them but their daily wages. Everybody can see that they must always be poor while their earnings go to pay such an enormous tax as this.

6. But his money is not all or the principal thing of which alcohol robs the drunkard. It robs him of his health, of his friends, his self-respect, his reputation; of all true comfort in this life, and all hope for the next.

7. High and luxurious living often lead to intemperance.

8. Drunken men are often ugly aud quarrelsome. Some estimate the number of murders directly traceable to alcohol committed in this country in a year at 300.

9. Alcohol is a poison, and any use of poison is excess —not modcration.

10. The free use of beer and wine causes more drunkenness rather than less, because it creates and fosters a taste for the stronger liquors. Dr. T. D. Crowthers says that iu Germany where beer and light wines are commonly used, the consumption of brandy and whisky has enormously increased. The same fact has been noted in France.

11. Remorse is the bitterest ingredient in the drunkard's cup. In his sober moments he realizes that he is ruining his family and destroying himself, but usually his appetite is stronger than conscience, and he keeps on drinking till delirium tremens sets in, or some other fatal disease carries him to a drunkard's grave.

PRACTICAL TRUTHS.

Drink makes men lawless and profane.

It does its evil work by first deceiving those who use it.

It is the chief cause of poverty, for the nine hundred million dollars which drink costs the country every year is principally taken out of the pockets of working men.

Our only safety is in total abstinence.

LESSON TALK.

Dr. Wm. B. Carpenter, an eminent English physiologist says, "No one who is familiar with the action of poisons upon the living animal body, and has made the nature of that action a subject of special study has the smallest hesitation in saying that alcohol is a poison. It is this 'poison' which is present, in a larger or smaller degree, in all the varieties of intoxicating liquors, in 'beer,' 'cider,' and the 'light wines' as well as in whisky, brandy. and gin. The great mass of the blood consists of water, and any other fluid introduced is not only so much surplusage, but so much that is foreign and has to be expelled. The introduction of alcohol into healthy blood can do uothing but mischief."

It used to be supposed that alcohol would keep off cold, and it is true that after drinking it one feels a sensation of warmth. It is because the nerves that control the small blood-vessels near the skin are relaxed and more blood passes into them. A thermometer would show a rise of about half a degree of surface heat; but this soon passes off while the real reduction of vitality caused by alcohol reduces the vital heat a number of degrees, thus making the body much less able to resist the cold. This is the reason why drunkards so often freeze to death. As as an agent to help us resist extreme heat it is still worse. The head physician at Bellevue Hospital, New York, says that full three-fourths of those brought there suffering from sunstroke are under the influence of drink.

God knows that alcohol is a terrible poison. He wants us to know it and keep clear of it, and so he has given us a strict command, that no one can help understanding, not to taste, touch, or handle, or even look at it.

LESSON HYMN.

Tune, America.

God bless our temperance band!
Firm may we ever stand
For truth and right;
Help us to work and pray;
Teach us in wisdom's way
Our nation's curse to stay,
By thine own light.

Help us the chains to break
That greed and av'rice make
By licensed laws;
Help us that we may be
Champions of liberty;
Help set the bondmen free
Through our dear cause.

Mrs. J. A. Ogsbury.

FARM NOTES.

STORING POTATOES.

As potato harvest will now soon be in order and as the crop will probably be a fair average one, and operations will begin rather earlier than usual, we offer some views upon the best mode of storing them, which may possibly be of advantage to some one.

To store potatoes properly we have to guard against heating, for although the potato will not absolutely ferment by heat as so much vegetable matter, a heat becomes warm enough to excite any germ fungus there may be in the tuber, and this exhalation may be sufficient to cause a decay, which can be communicated to roots in which no symptom of rot exists. Moisture is favorable to heating, and hence it is best to have the potato thoroughly dry before storing, if any considerable quantity is to put away in bulk. Thus, if they are spread on a barn floor or other cool place out of the sun, before putting into the root cellar, they will be safe against rotting. When potatoes are perfectly healthy there is not so much necessity for this care in drying. Hundreds of bushels are often taken from the field to the cellar, without any damage whatever resulting; and it is only in view of the possibility of rot that we think it advisable to take the extra precaution in drying. It is best to note that a cool shed is best to dry them in, as the tubers will otherwise absorb more heat than when they come out of the ground, and this is just what we try to avoid.

This is one disadvantage in drying potatoes in this way which is always more or less connected with dry cellars, namely, the great loss from shrinkage which results. In an average dry cellar there is often as much as as loss of twenty per cent. in bulk from shrinkage. Thus, one hundred bushels stored away in a place like this in winter, will give but eighty when taken out in the spring. This is as often as much, and sometimes more than the advanee of spring over fall prices, and is an argument often used to induce growers to sell their crop as soon as taken up instead of keeping them for the spring rise. But this loss can be wholly avoided and the roots kept in excellent condition by carefully storing in the open ground. A dry place is to be selected, where the water can easily run away, and the potatoes laid up in long narrow ridges, say about four feet wide and as long as the quantity to be protected demands. After the whole has been collected together, a thin layer of straw only thick enough to keep the earth from falling in among the potatoes, is to be put along the sides and over the tubers, and a thin layer of soil, just enough to keep the straw in place, is thrown over. It is best not to throw more earth than this over at first, as the natural heat of the potatoes will accumulate, while it is the object to let it pass rapidly away. As soon as there is danger of frost then the potatoes should be covered thickly with soil, as the frost is certain to penetrate. In this way the potatoes are preserved at a temperature but little above the freezing point, and thus guarded against heating much, and at the same time there is little loss from evaporation —a great point gained when a bushel measure is brought out in the spring.—Ex.

—Potato rot first shows itself by fungus on the leaves and stems. "When this is discovered," writes a New York farmer, "if the potatoes are well along, and if early sorts have been planted as they should be, it is best to dig the tubers before the fungus has time to descend the stems. It may be that the fungus has reached some of the potatoes, and all that show any signs of the rot should be left out, while the others are taken to some dry place and stored. If taken to a damp room the conditions for the further development of the 'rot' are furnished, and the whole crop may become a malodorous heap of rottenness. The vines should all be gathered into one place, together with any rotten potatoes thrown out in the harvest, and burned. This destroys millions of spores, which might otherwise serve to carry the pest over the winter season, and furnish 'seed' for future trouble, should the conditions prove favorable for their germination and growth. To be forewarned is said to be forearmed, and it is hoped that this word in season may help to save many bushels of potatoes which might otherwise become rotten. Bear in mind that this is a season for fungi, and watch for the approach of these microscopic thieves, which come in the night or on a rainy day. If the potato crop is ready to harvest, do not delay the work. Dig the tubers at once and store them in a dry, cool place."

Digging Potatoes.—There is a great deal of uncertainty about the best time for digging potatoes. Some are in favor of digging as soon as the tubers become ripe, to prevent them from rotting in the ground; others hold that if the germs of the rot are in them they will rot any way, and that they prefer to let them rot in the ground than in the cellar. We have tried both ways, and with varying results, and have come to the conclusion that to raise good keeping potatoes they should not be planted so early as to mature during midsummer, but so as to bring their ripening after the greatest heat is past, and the tubers, when dry, may be brought directly into a cool dry cellar.

FARMERS, BE CAREFUL!

At Manteno, Ill., Friday evening, a workman, before getting upon his cartload of oats, threw his pitchfork on top. Lying on the load was a boy named William Lanelle, and one of the tines of the fork struck his jugular vein, resulting in his bleeding to death in a few moments.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)
Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.
Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)
Christian Reformed Church.
Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)
Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.
Disciples (in part.)
Friends.
Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.
Mennonites.
Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.
Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)
Moravians.
Plymouth Brethren.
Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.
Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)
United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

The Associated Churches of Christ.

New Ruhamah Cong. Hamilton, Miss.
Pleasant Ridge Cong. Sandford Co. Ala.
New Hope Methodist, Lowndes Co., Miss.
Congregational, College Springs, Iowa.
College Church of Christ, Wheaton, Ill.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, AUGUST 23, 1883.

Opium.—Can it be possible that forty out of every hundred men in China smoke opium? English Christians, alarmed at the horror and ghastliness of that vice, are holding meetings to pray for its suppression, and the Christians in all countries to aid them. The looks of an opium eater are terrific.

The Israelites were never a match, numerically, or otherwise, for surrounding pagan nations; yet while they kept the Decalogue, they lived, flourished, and the swords of their enemies were turned against each other, while they escaped. But "when they offended in Baal," they fell. The secret lodge system, from its beginning, has been, and is, one continuous internal brawl. See the leading editorial in this paper. But the brawls of their enemies did not help them while they practiced those enemies' abominations. Masonic churches and political parties never will overthrow Mormonism.

A mistake.—In last number we wrote, "There is not a plank in our platform which has been scouted or assailed." The types made us say just the opposite. Our platform so far as we have seen, is not assailed. The Masons stand in the political arena, silent, like men bent on murder in a crowd, with their hands in their pockets on their revolvers; and if they say anything it is either blackguard or irrelevent jokes and ridicule. To assail our platform is to assail American principles in favor of a dark system which is secking to subvert and destroy every thing American.

"Pilgrims."—This name, given to the children of God, ancient and modern, to betoken their travel to heaven, is, in Satanic burlesque, assumed by Knight Templars, leaving Boston in resplendent cars built for them, to riot in San Francisco at the expense of business men, farmers, and mechanics who stay at home, work and "pay dues." It is a double-acting caricature. It deceives shallow Masons by a godly name given to swindling, sorcery, extortion and revelling; while, to the shrewd and far-seeing, it makes the Christian pilgrimage a stench by its foul associations.

"Anti-Secret Societies."—Under this head, the official organ of Good Templars, San Francisco, Aug. 9, speaks thus of the anti-secret reform: "The devil was the primary instigator of the movement"; "Meaner and more harmful than the distillers' conspiracy;" "Only comprising the vicious and worthless." The first national anti-secret convention at Pittsburgh, May, 1868, "comprised" the sainted Bishop Edwards, president; Prof. Henry Cowles, who reported the Constitution; President Fairchild, who made an able speech; and thirteen Christian denominations were represented by some of their best men. The California Good Templars' organ treats these men as above.

Politics, 1884.—The Chicago Evening Journal counts the South, except perhaps Virginia, "solid" for the Democracy. New York, Connecticut, Indiana, New Jersey, California and Colorado, uncertain; with some other Northern States on the doubtful list. It calls on the Republican party to give up "favorite sons," and find them a Lincoln or Garfield. Logan, one of the ablest Republican managers, places his hopes openly on secret societies. There are voters enough who are at heart in favor of the American platform, if they can be reached, to form a party of principle, which, with "The Independent army of scratchers," may make an American party in 1884, like the Republican in 1856.

Mormonism.—The Independent, Aug. 16, gives three close-printed columns to the Mormons. And yet that this able mammoth sheet, and, indeed, almost all others, say not one word about the secret oaths and rites of the endowment, which is Mormonism. Is it because Jo. Smith was a Mason in Batavia lodge, N. Y., and that Mormonism is clandestine Masonry, declared so by the record of the Illinois Grand Lodge? The Independent is amazed that in the late election the "Mormons who do not love polygamy, voted the programme of the church." Of course, they are sworn to obedience under oaths whose penalties may be inflicted, if not any day, at least any night. Edmunds' bills, to Mormonism, are chaff thrown at an allegator. That fearful system, it is true, turns whoredom into religion; and that of itself would sink it, but for its Masonic oaths, with each its cut-throat penalty, and men sworn to inflict those penalties; aye, and who, for money and their oaths, are ready to inflict them, as Booth to shoot Lincoln, or O'Donnell, Carey. These secret oaths keep up Mormonism; and the religious and political press does not attack these oaths because they are Masonic.

"'Tis pitiful, 'tis wondrous pitiful"

THE POLYP OF NATIONS.

"——The other shape,
If shape it might be called that shape had none;
Or substance might be called, that shadow seemed;
——Black it stood as night,
Fierce as ten furies, terrible as hell."

The above is Milton's conception of death. It is no bad picture of the secret lodge system, which is "the image of the beast," a vague shadow, yet having the power of the substance which it symbolizes. See Rev. 13:14, 15. And there is a disgusting aquatic creature, having a mouth to eat, but no organs of sense; capable of multiplying itself by sections, as well as by ova, each section becoming a perfect animal. This creature is no bad emblem of Supreme Council Masonry, as its history shows.

Twenty-five years before Morgan, May 31, 1801, the first Supreme Council of the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite ever formed, was opened at Charleston, S. C., by John Mitchell and Frederick Dalcho, who were Sovereign Grand Inspectors General. It was an attempt to centralize, control, tax and govern all the Masons on the globe. Like efforts have been made and repeated over and again. A similar attempt was made by Masons to control all the secret temperance orders by a supreme governing body which rented and occupied the first finished room in the first Farwell Hall building in Chicago. This attempt failed.

This Mitchell-and-Dalcho Supreme Council like all speculations, was copied and imitated, rivalled and for a time eclipsed. But Mackey assures us that this first monster council gave origin to, and is the source of "all the other councils which have been since established in America and Europe." (Cyclopedia, Art. Supreme Council.)

Under its authority and by its charter, a second Supreme Council was formed next year, 1802, by Count DeGrasse, in the French West Indies; a third in France in 1804; a fourth in Italy in 1805, etc. And thus the Dalcho Council, which is now ruled by Albert Pike, Confederate general and scalper of Union soldiers at Pea Ridge, claimed to be, and was recognized and obeyed as the "mother council" of the whole world. These were the palmy days of Masonry, and a trifling tax on the whole Masonic world filled this mother council's coffers with fabulous amounts of gold.

Competition was inevitable to share this secret plunder. To meet and settle and quiet the rival claims to this stupendous secret swindle, "In 1813 the Masonic jurisdiction of the United States" (we quote Mackey) "was divided, the mother council establishing, at New York city, a Supreme Council for the Northern Jurisdiction over the States north of the Ohio and east of the Mississippi." Thus happened the absurdity of two Supreme bodies in one country. The Southern or Pike's Council, held the territory south of the Ohio and west of the Mississippi, which the slave power afterward claimed and attempted to seize by repealing the Missouri Compromise. The seat of that Northern Council is now in Boston, and that of the Southern or Pike's Council in Washington city, to which it was removed from Charleston, as the other was to Boston from New York.

Now, behold, we have a third Supreme Council, hailing from France, denying and defying Pike and his Northern ally, and declaring it will hold on its way "notwithstanding all the venom, defamation and falsehood that may be launched at them by the so-called Supreme Grand Council of the Northern Jurisdiction."

The history of the three, in brief, is this:

1. Frederick the Great, who was an atheist, gave a charter for an American Supreme Council, in 1786. This Council was opened by Mitchell and Dalcho in Charleston, South Carolina, in 1801. In 1813 a branch was started in New York by De la Motta and continued by his clerk, Gourgas. With varying vicissitudes, these two have come down to date as the Northern and Southern Jurisdictions. H. R. Palmer of Milwaukee is head of one, Albert Pike of the other. Pike's Council claims priority and the position of "Mother Council."

2. The French Grand Orient granted a charter for a Supreme Council to Joseph Cerneau, in 1807, to be established in New York. Between this Cerneau Council and the Northern branch of the Dalcho-Pike concern there has been perpetual war, as well as considerable disagreement among themselves. For instance, there are two Supreme Councils claiming to be the legitimate heirs of the Cerneau body; one is headed by Peckham, the other by Thompson. But the principal quarrel is with the Dalcho-Pike Northern Jurisdiction known as the Gourgas Council. These Northern and Southern Jurisdictions, headed by Palmer and Pike, maintain friendly relations. They have the same origin, and stand or fall together when their authority is assailed; and having the start of the Cerneauites, they claim and have the general recognition of the Grand Lodges of Master Masons. The Voice of Masonry for September, 1883, gives the action of the Massachusetts and New York Grand lodges de-Masonizing all the Cerneauites, and making Pike's Council the "Mother" Council on the continent.

This kite-and-snake fight between Supreme Councils for the supremacy is helping to heal a greater and universal lodge-fight.

The Chicago Times, July 16th last, in an article taken from the New York Tribune, says of this fight: "The question, Which is the simon pure, original and legitimate Supreme Grand Council is about to be precipitated for answer upon the Supreme Grand Council of France."

This alludes to the fact that the Grand Orient of France some three years since, resolved that they would no longer recognize the existence of a God in any Masonic rites. The Grand Lodges of Ireland, Scotland and England severed all connection with the French atheist Grand Lodge. American Grand Lodges would have taken similar action, as the boast of Masons has ever been that no atheist could be a Mason. But in this deadly feud in which, says the Times, "both parties excommunicated and expelled each other," they both appeal to France and thus wink out of sight the atheism of French Masonry, and thus virtually give up their Bible and their God. The Grand Orient, seizing its advantage, unless the lodges of Great Britain, like the Americans, wink at their atheism, threatens to declare independence and go to forming atheist lodges throughout England, Ireland and Scotland, which would be a Bradlaugh boom!

Thus this fight is putting French Masonry, without God or Bible, at the head of the Masonic world; and compelling the English speaking lodges, "which have literally read the French Masons out of all fraternity," to "revise their decisions," and recognize Satan as their God!

A JESUIT MISSION.

The Jesuits have sent a man of notoriety, Monsignor Capel, to push them to the front in this country. On the 5th inst. he preached in honor of Ignatius Loyola in one of the Jesuit churches in New York. He held that the "Jesuits were ambitious of one thing alone, to save souls." "The Society of Jesus," once had the schools of all Europe in their hands. They have been, in turn, expelled from every kingdom and principality of Europe for political plottings. They attempted to blow up the king and Parliament of Great Britain. They taught openly that death, in attempted assassination of Protestant princes, entitled to the rewards of martyrdom. In 1773 the order was entirely suppressed by the Pope. They were restored in 1801 in Russia; and by Pope Pius VII in 1814. In 1815 their Secreta Monita were published in the British Review, as furnished by themselves. Like the Masonic lodge, they set aside the laws of God and man, and substitute their own. "Every member of the order, the moment he entered it, surrendered all freedom of thought and action."

Nor is the nature of the order changed; only its policy. In 1878, five years since, I asked a Jesuit in a California College, who had been there from youth to age, "Suppose your General should command one or all of you to leave this pleasant place, where you have seen all these beautiful trees planted, and go and live and die among the Digger Indians, what would you do?" "We should go," was his reply.

The "order" was received, by night in a cavern covered with brambles, back of the town of Manresa, in Spain, in 1520, by an ignorant soldier and man of the world, whose leg was shattered at the siege of Pampeluna the year before. The "exercises," or initiation into the order, took at first twenty-eight days, but were reduced to fourteen. The order was completed in 1540, twenty-three years after Luther began the Reformation. It was Satan's scheme to meet and counteract that great movement for human liberty; and it succeeded in arresting and turning it backward. Since the middle of the sixteenth century the Reformation has not advanced one step in Europe.

The Jesuits landed at Quebec before the Pilgrims landed at Plymouth. The Pilgrims left pillories and jails; the Jesuits were backed by the learning, wealth and culture of Europe and the craft of kings and priests. The Jesuits planted missions and cannon from Quebec to the Gulf of Mexico, and instructed the Indians that the almost penniless heretics along the Atlantic coast had no rights which they were bound to respect. Spanish priests performed a like labor of love through Mexico and up the Pacific coast. Neither France nor Spain now own one foot of North American soil, and no legislators cross themselves or kneel before a Speaker's chair. Jesuitism and the secret lodge system are twins and will ultimately make common cause against Christ and freedom of conscience and of speech.

NOTICE.

THE WASHINGTON BUILDING.

I expect to make a payment of $1,000 and more on the Washington N. C. A. property between the first and tenth of September. It is for the friends to say how much more than one thousand dollars shall be paid and the interest stopped, by sending in their offerings.

J. P. STODDARD.
Sec'y N. C. A.

—Our readers will miss their usual New England letter from this number. Bro. Bailey does not ask that it be mentioned, but it is due him and his faithful wife to say that her continued illness prevents his writing this week. Though recovering, her progress toward health is quite slow. Let us not forget to intercede for her with the Lord.

—In the article on the Knight Templars, page 8 of last Cynosure, the advertisement of the leader of the Boston party began with the words "Scrofula and scrofulitic humors," which by an oversight was put in from another advertisement. It was too mild a heading anyway for a whisky advertisemeut which might begin, Suicide, murder and everlasting woe!

—Rev. J. H. Timmons, Tarentum, Pa., whosc name has for years been an encouragement to reformers in our lecture list, has taken a commission to lecture for the National Reform Association.

—Hon. S. C. Pomeroy returned from a business trip to Kansas and Colorado to his home in Washington last week, stopping briefly in this city Thursday, calling at the Cynosure office with hearty greetings for all. Hc enters with enthusiasm into the plans for State conventions and meetings at prominent points this fall, and will, so far as possible, attend and speak.

—The Daily Saratogian of the 15th inst. announces an address that evening on the "Religion of Freemasonry" by General J. W. Phelps, who is spending the summer season in that celebrated resort. The address was to be giveu in the Free Methodist church, and is, we believe, the first ever given on the subject in that city.

—The remarks at the Farwell Hall noon meeting on Saturday last on the Sabbath lesson rang clear as a bell for some avoided truths in the ears of several hundred Sabbath-school teachers of Chicago. The lesson (Judges 2: 6–16) gave the speaker a fine opportunity to impress upou these earnest Christian men and women that the judgments of God were visited upon Israel because of their forsaking his worship, and that sin came about of the lax instruction or want of instruction on the part of their parents. The heathenism broadcast throughout the world, and the idolatrous practices of the secret lodges allowed and even upheld in our Christian land were displeasing to God, and he would visit in judgment for them in proportion as the people knew his will and condemnation of these evils.

—Among items of interest in the Iowa Masonic Grand Lodge report, 1883, we notice that there are in Monroe county two lodges with an aggregate membership of 138. Official figures show a decrease of eight in membership during the year, and little activity in what is styled Masonic work. It would be well for some of the friends in that locality to ascertain how many of the county offices are held by members of the "fraternity," and what proportion of the voting population of the county are in the lodge. It is claimed that the lodge has nothing to do with politics, but if this is so, it will be well to verify it with the facts. The meeting of the State Association on the 28th inst. in that county will be a good time to look up this matter. Let every delegate come furnished with facts gathered in his locality.

—Cardinal Manning, the head of the greatest Catholic See of England, charges that the Continental secret societies are to blame for much of the trouble in Ireland. He says "the influence of the Continental secret societies in Ireland must be checked somehow, and the American dynamite conspirators must no longer be tolerated. Paris and New York between them if allowed their way, would break up any established order."—Sandy Lake News.

REFORM NEWS AND NOTICES.

IOWA STATE MEETING.

The Anti-Secret Christian Association of the State of Iowa, will meet in eighth annual convention at Albia, Monroe county, Aug. 28-30, 1883. The following programme is prepared:

Tuesday evening, Aug. 28, Address by Hon. S. C. Pomeroy, of Kansas.

Wednesday, 9 A. M. Devotions; 9:30 Business; 10:30 Report of State Agent. 2 P. M. Discussion, Sabbath Question, opened by Rev. T. P. Robb; 3:15 Discussion, Prohibition, opened by Pres. C. A. Blanchard; 8 P. M. Secrecy and the Church, by Pres. J. T. McMichael, to be followed by Sec'y J. P. Stoddard.

Thursday 9 A. M. Devotions; 9:30 Business; 10:30 Political Meeting; 2 P. M. Divine Recognition in Government, Revs. M. A. Gault, Wm. Johnston, and R. C. Wylie; 8 P. M. Degree Working, by Rev. D. P. Rathbun, S. E. Starry, and others.

We would be glad to welcome every friend of reform to this meeting. Let this be made a grand rally. The programme is undoubtedly the best we have yet presented, and we trust, under God, it will be the richest convention yet held under our auspices. Come all.

THE NEW ENGLAND BOARD.

The annual meeting of the New England Board for the election of officers and the transaction of other business is hereby called to meet at Worcester, Mass., at 10 A. M. Aug. 24th, 1883. Important business is to come before the Board and a consultation of friends of the reform is also to be held at the same time and place to which all who are interested, are invited.

By order,
E. D. BAILEY, N. E. Sec'y.

M. C. A.

M. C. A. simply means Michigan Christian Association, one of the graudest advances yet made on the Michigan field of reform toward victory and success. Well may the craft tremble in view of this systematic and formidable method lately adopted by the noble band of workers who have been compelled, in the past, to submit to the unbusinesslike arrangements by which reform work has been conducted. A meeting of the Board of Trustees, and all who are sufficiently interested to attend, will be held in Jackson, Sept. 5.

It is expected that the editor of this paper will be employed for the year to come in canvassing this State in the interests of this Association, selling shares of stock, lecturing, etc. Let every reader make up his or her mind to have work of this kind done in their community during the year. All we ask is that you will enter into this great cause heart and soul with us, and correspond with us as to when you would like lectures and reform work. We would like the privilege of presenting a few thoughts on this great subject in every community in Michigan. Encourage by correspondence, and address,

H. A. DAY.
Parma, Jackson Co., Mich.

OH, MICHIGAN! MY MICHIGAN!

There is to be a meeting of the Michigan Association Board of Trustees at Free Methodist church on Wednesday morning Sept. 5th. in the city of Jackson for the transaction of very important business, which will come before the meeting, concerning future action in Michigan. Let uo member of the Board fail to be present, and let as many others come as can. Bro. J. P. Stoddard expects to be present and it is possible ex-Senator Pomeroy will also be present to speak on the occasion.

H. A. DAY, Sec'y. M. C. A.

THE INDIANA STATE MEETING.

ALBION, Aug. 17th, 1883.

TO THE FRIENDS IN INDIANA:—By the concurrence of the Executive Committee I hereby announce the eleventh annual meeting of the State Christian Association to be held at Oakland City, Gibson Co., Oct. 16th, 17th and 18th inclusive, (commencing Tuesday evening, Oct. 16th). Eminent speakers will be there, of whom due notice will be given. We confidently hope the friends in Southern Indiana will help make this a grand meeting by having the meeting well advertized in the annual conferences and other church meetings, by coming themselves, and having others come. We will of course expect the American Wesleyan, Christian Harvester, Christian Worker, Friends Review, Brethren at Work, and Richmond Star to call the attention of their readers to this meeting. If the friends will send me the means I will advertise it thoroughly in other ways. More will be said in the future. Prepare to come to Oakland City. I will guarantee they will do their duty there and receive you with a thorough hospitality. I will now on my own motion appoint Uncle John Richardson, Justus Miller, James Shaw, Jacob Frame, and W. H. Figg. a special committee to help circulate the word to go and get to go. Dear friends, you who are not named, do not be offended; you will be on the next committee.

Respectfully,
S. L. COOK.

KANSAS.

The Kansas State Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, will hold its semi-annual Convention in the State House, Topeky, Kansas, commencing at 3 P. M., Sept. 25th, 1883 and continuing through the 25th and 26th.

The following programme is arranged: Addresses on Government Reform, by Rev. D. H. Coulter; on Prohibition, by Rev. C. H. Strong; on Anti-secrecy, Rev. B. F. Worrell; each of these to be followed by discussion. Secretary J. P. Stoddard, ex-Senator Pomeroy and other able speakers will take part. The first and the third degrees of Masonry will be explained by S. E. Starry.

W. W. MCMILLAN, Sec'y.

TOPEKA AND THE KANSAS MEETING.

Bro. J. A, Richards, Wesleyan evangelist for Kansas, has lately visited Topeka and his remarks relating thereto in his report to the Wesleyan will be of valuc to every brother and sister who expects to attend the State Couvention in that city:

What is needed in Topcka is a cyclone of spiritual aud moral power in truth, that will wake up dead, formal churches, show the hypocrisy of sin-loving professors, and the wicked, polluting, anti-Christian character and power of secrecy, both in church and state; and to preach the Lord Jesus Christ, as the only Saviour of a lost world. O, ye men of God, come to the rescue! Come to the State Convention at Topeka, Sept. 24th and 25th, and let us have more light, and seek power from on high, the anointing of the Holy Ghost, to fit us to work and defend the truth! Get Starry, Rathbun, Stoddard and others to come over and help us work the "degrees," and show up Masonry as it is, black and damning! and so give a good reason why we are anti-secret," and make it a test of membership. Then God will put a difference between us and the truth, and open the way before us for a glorious triumph! Many will not do or say anything to-day against secrecy, and will not preach the whole truth for fear of persecution, loss of bread and butter, and worldly friends, or position, yea, for fear of the "offense of the cross of Christ." Lord, wake us up! Some say, to testify they are saved from all sin is the same as to bear testimony against any, or all sin; but no! such persons are sadly mistaken. Suppose John the Baptist instead of saying to Herod he ought not to marry his brother Phillip's wife, had said, he was sweetly saved; or Elijah, instead of reproving Baalism, had only said, that he was trusting in the true God, and urged others to do the same; or Isaiah, Jeremiah, Daniel, Amos, Malachi, instead of bearing faithful testimony against evils in their day, had only testified that they were fully saved from such evils themselves. Or suppose Paul, or the early Christians, Luther, or the Wesleys, iustead of preaching against Daina, secrecy, paganism and papacy with its evils, and the dead formalism of the English church, had only testified that the blood of Christ cleansed them from all sin, would the effect have been the same in the triumph of the truth? No! It is not enough that we have a defensive war; we must also have an offensive war against, and to destroy the works of devil; a strong, brawny, vigorous, spiritual, truthful Christianity; "to the pulling down of strongholds" and "spiritual wickedness in high places," and casting down "every high thing, that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God," and bringing all into obedience to Christ. A salvation holiness, or a Christianity that does uot possess these grande lements or power and final success, is a sickly skeleton, without brains, blood, or heart; a sickly consumptive, a faith without works, dead! Bible salvation, or holiness, does possess all these elements of power and success. May the Lord help us to put on the whole armor of truth, aud then when we get it on, to use it,—fight! work! and trusting in Jesus, the victory is ours. Tried ones at Topeka have fought many battles, and are ready for more.

NEW POSTAL NOTES.

The new postal notes, which are to be used after September 3d. in the transmission of small sums of money through the United States mails, were printed rapidly in New York city, and it is announced that they would be ready for shipment to all the post-offices in the country on Wednesday last. Every book contains 500 postal-note forms, with the address of the post-office printed on each note. The pages of the books are perforated, so that when the notes are torn out stubbs remain to show the amounts for which they were issued. A note can be filled out by a post-master for any amount not exceeding $5, at a cost to the sender of three cents for each note. The notes are payable to "the bearer," and they can be used as fractional currency in any place to which they are sent.

The benefit of an acquired fortune is not objective, but subjective; consisting not in the value of the possession, but in the moral character acquired in its pursuit; just as in a gymnasium—the good to the athlete is not the weight lifted but the muscular strength acquired.

WORK.

When, from the great Creator's hand,
In order and in wisdom planned,
  Heaven's countless orbs came forth,
In the world's earliest infancy,
It was his will man's lot should be
  To toil upon this earth.
The mandate ran—"A worker, thou,
Go!—in the moisture of thy brow,
  And quell the stubborn soil.
Whate'er thy hand shall find to do,
Be strong, be steadfast, and be true,
  And I will bless thy toil."

And, strong in heart, and strong in hand,
Man wandered forth upon the land,
  Its teeming breast to till:
Till earth, and sea, and wind, and flame,
And light, and heat, and cold, became
  The vassals of his will.
'Tis but to gaze around to see
How nobly man his destiny
  Has labored to fulfil.
How time, in each succeeding age,
Has left fresh records on his page
  Of man's triumphant skill.

The wise, the wealthy, and the great,
Let these adorn their high estate,
  And do the good they can;
And high and low, and rich and poor,
Learn that to labor and endure
  Gives dignity to man.
That when at last the time shall come
When man is summoned to his home,
  And all beneath the sun
Shall, like a pageant, vanish, all!
Each man—'tis writ—must stand or fall
  As he his work has done.

CONSECRATION AND DEDICATION.

These words though very distinct in their meaning are often used interchangeably. From this has arisen much confusion of ideas and many mistakes. Even when the two words apparently agree there is a wide difference. Both may signify the setting apart to a holy or sacred use, viz: the worship or service of God. But the radical distinction is that dedication is man's act, consecration is exclusively the act of God; either directly by his Spirit and presence, or representatively by his authority. For example, man may dedicate a place to the worship of God, but it is consecrated only by the presence of God and while God is present in it. Man may dedicate—that is set apart a portion of time to the service of God, but it is consecrated or made holy time only by God's appointment or when done by his authority. Men may dedicate or make an entire surrender of themselves to the service of God, but they are consecrated or made holy persons by the power and indwelling of the Holy Spirit. This was symbolized of old by the oil of consecration or holy oil, which was poured upon or applied to persons, places or things—and thus that which was before dedicated to the service of God became consecrated—nor did the act of consecration consist simply in the application of the oil according to the will of man, but in the appointment and authority of God prescribing it. So that to apply the holy oil to any person, place or thing which God himself had not designated was a profanation and not a consecration. From this it will be seen:

1. That the Popish idea of the consecration of persons, times, places and things, whether by canonization, setting apart or anointing with oil and blessing and sprinkling, where God has not appointed and commanded it is a blasphemous profanation which ought to be abhorred and not countenanced in any degree. It is not proper, therefore, to call John or Paul, etc., by the name of Saint any more than any other Christians who have not been canonized by Rome. Nor is it proper to speak of a building as a house of God, except while it is being used as a place of meeting for worship, where and when only God is present, according to his promise. In all places, or "where two or three are gathered together in my name there am I in the midst of them." To speak of profaning a church building, as though holiness attached to the material house savors somewhat of popery.

2. The observing of days and times as holy which have been set apart by merely human authority is unwarrantable and wrong.

3. To call music sacred, or songs sacred which God has not appointed, is an improper use of the term which, though allowable by common consent, is liable to misconstruction. Strictly speaking the only sacred songs are those contained in the Bible, so far as we know, there never was any sacred music, or tunes set apart for sacred use. There were instruments of music which were holy because prescribed by God through Moses and David; and so in the time of Amos there were those who were guilty of sacrilege in "inventing to themselves instruments of music like David," and using them in their feasts, etc. This also explains why the exiles in Babylon "hung their harps on the willows" and refused to "sing the Lord's song in a strange land," (Ps. 137th), because they deemed it a profanation to use these songs or instruments in any other place than at Jerusalem, and in the worship of God. If any songs or instruments are holy or sacred now, it must be by Divine appointment and consecration.

4. To speak of persons "consecrating themselves to God" being "wholly or fully consecrated," "consecrated anew," etc., although sanctioned by common use, is nevertheless using the word "consecrated" in an improper sense, that is the sense of dedication. From this arises much of the confusion and error in the doctrine of the "higher life," "perfect sanctification," "entire sanctification," etc. These would be avoided, if we keep in view the fact that consecration is the act of God—done at once and once for all in the case of his people—and which is equally complete and perfect in all. The duty and privilege of believers is to recognize this fact, just as they do their justification in Christ, and to live accordingly. The difference among Christians in reference to this sanctification (using the term in the sense of consecration, or setting apart to a holy use, which is the primary sense) is in the different degrees in which they realize the fact and not in the fact itself. We can hardly conceive of degrees of consecration in the same object. That which is consecrated at all is wholly, completely, entirely, perfectly consecrated just because it is the act of God. Sanctification in the sense of purifying, moral and spiritual cleansing is a work, and so progressive in the same individual and different in degrees in different individuals, but in the sense of consecration it is an act like justification—completed at once and forever in reference to every Christian or member of Christ's body. The duty also of "presenting our bodies a living sacrifice," that is dedicating ourselves to God may be frequently repeated, and is susceptible of degrees of entireness and sincerity, and properly speaking proceeds upon the basis of our consecration instead of being itself our consecration to God.

These are some of the many considerations which might be mentioned to show the importance of observing the distinction between consecration and dedication.—Prof. J. G. Carson in Christian Instructor.

THE WAY TO GIVE.

As I was riding one Sabbath with a farmer to church, we fell into conversation on the subject of giving. He was an elder in the Presbyterian church, a man between fifty and sixty years of age.

Said he, "I give a tenth of all I make to the Lord. Every crop of corn, every load of hay, every dozen of eggs I sell, I keep account of and one-tenth of the profit goes to the Lord. It came rather hard at first, but that is past long ago. Now I only have to distribute what is already given. I am ready to listen to any reasonable application, and if I think it is a good object, it is nothing but a pleasure to give. That tenth, I have come to feel belongs to God. I never touch it. I should as soon think of spending my neighbor's money as that."

About the same time I met the pastor of this man. Said he: "That farmer is not only the largest giver, but the most cheerful giver in my parish. I preach in two churches. He helps liberally in sustaining both, and the money he gives is the least of the blessings he brings to us."

Some time after this I was conversing with a friend in Chicago, a young business man on the same subject.

"Yes," said he, "I determined, when I was a clerk, the first year that I earned anything for myself, that I would set aside a fixed percentage of my income for benevolence. I made the resolution, and I have kept it."

"Well, you began early," I remarked.

"So I did," was the reply, "and it was well I did. My salary was small, and to give the proportion I had fixed upon was hard; but there has never been a year since when it would not have been harder. A year or two after I went into business for myself it looked as though every cent was needed for capital. I am afraid I shouldn't have commenced the system this year. But having resolved, and made a beginning already, I was ashamed to retreat. Then the year after, I was married. That year I should have begged off, I am sure, if it had not been for the habit, by that time pretty well settled. Soon after came our big fire; then hard times, epizootics—in fact, almost every year something to make that particular year a bad one to begin. Now I always say to my friends, Begin to give as soon as you begin to make; start early."

I do not know what proportion of his income the young merchant gives. Probably a tenth; not less, I am sure.

So here in Cleveland. A young man, just beginning his business life, came to me alone a few evenings since, and said:

"I like this idea of giving a regular proportion, and I'm going to begin now. I think I'll give a tenth. This year that will be five hundred dollars. It looks like a good deal to give away, and my business is growing—it will be more yet, I expect, next year; but it's the right way. My old Bible-class teacher used to talk to us boys about it, and I'm going to do it."—Rev. Arthur Mitchell, D.D.

"HATS STUCK ON POLES."

There is a deal of unreality in the life that surrounds us,—a vast amount of pretenrion, show, and sham, covering a very limited proportion of real, genuine piety, grace and godliness.

W. F. Bainbridge, speaking of his travels in China, says: "Nearly six hundred miles up the Yang-tsi-Kiang, a Chinese officer heard that a high mandarin was coming along on our beat, and he prepared to display a military force equal to the rations he was drawing. Through my field-glass I counted twenty real soldiers, and nearly two hundred coats and hats stuck on poles!"

This was in China;—How is it elsewhere? What shall we say of the church? Here are genuine, devoted, Christian soldiers—a few, but oh, what hosts of "poles with hats on!" Here are soldiers who count, but do not fight; who draw rations but do not defeat foes.

Here is a society or board of officers composed of twenty or thirty men; two or three of them are workers, and the rest are "hats stuck on poles."

Would that we could see more reality; there would then be less call for pretense; less dress parade and sham fight, and more actual warfare against the world, the flesh and the devil. We have real foes; let us see to it that we are real soldiers,—good soldiers of the Lord Jesus Christ, clad in the whole armor of God, and ready to resist unto blood, striving against sin.—Selected.

WHAT WE ARE.

When Martin Luther was combatting the doctrines of human merit that so prevailed in his day he was accustomed to take the conceit out of himself and men generally by the following illustrations of the unprofitableness of the best.

"Miserable creatures that we are!" he said.

"Till we are seven years old we do nothing but eat, and drink, and sleep, and play; from seven to twenty-one we study four hours a day, the rest of it we run about and amuse ourselves. Then we work till fifty, and then we grow again to be children. We sleep half our lives; we give God a tenth of our time; and yet we think that with our good works we can merit heaven."

At another time he would thus take himself to task over his daily time table:

"What have I been doing to-day? I have talked for two hours; I have been at meals three hours; I have been idle four hours! Ah, enter not into judgment with thy servant, O Lord!"

How He Dealt with the Choir.—The Rev. Dr. W. W. Newell, in his book on revivals recently published, tells us how he once dealt with a troublesome choir. He says: "Many years ago I was pastor of a church where there was a large, efficient choir. But they were sadly frivolous. There were frequent whispers, merriment, and note-writing. They gave me much thought and anxiety. I was sometimes tempted of the devil to reprove them openly. They deserved it. But I said, 'This will repel them. My desire is to win them, first to myself, and then to Christ;' and so I studied the case, and looked to God for wisdom. And here came in my rule to treat with special attention those persons by whom I was annoyed. I called upon each of them. Without allusion to their trifling, I spoke to them of my love of music and of my connection with an academic and a collegiate choir. I spoke to them of my high appreciation of their singing, and of our obligation to them on this account. I soon after arranged a series of evening prayer-meetings in the chapel. I then called upon the choir again, invited them to our meetings, and requested them to sit together in a forward seat and to conduct the singing. A large number of persons soon after united with our church. Among them was every member of that troublesome choir. And without ever suspecting my annoyance, they were for many, many years my help and my joy."

"TWO CENTS A WEEK, AND A PRAYER."

"Two cents a week, and a prayer,"
A tiny gift may be,
But it helps to do a wonderful work
For our sisters across the sea.

"Two cents a week, and a prayer,"
From our abundant store—
It was never missed, for its place was filled
By a Father's gift of more.

"Two cents a week, and a prayer;"
Perhaps 'twas a sacrifice;
But treasure came from the storehouse above,
Outweighing by far the price.

"Two cents a week, and a prayer;"
'Twas the prayer, perhaps, after all,
That the work was done and a blessing brought,
The gift was so very small.

"Two cents a week and a prayer,"
Freely and heartily given;
The treasures of earth will all melt away—
This is the treasure laid up in heaven.

"Two cents a week, and a prayer,"
A tiny gift may be,
But it helps to do such wonderful work
For our sisters across the sea!

LIVES OF CELEBRATED MEN.

JUSTIN MARTYR.

The study of the early ecclesiastical writings, which appeared during the formative period of Christianity, and which constitute a distinct department of learning in the Catholic church, has never been pursued with the same ardor, or regarded with the same favor, by those who accept the Scriptures as the sole authoritative rule of faith. Other reasons might be given for the little interest manifested by large numbers of Protestants in these writings, such as the use made of them in maintaining corrupt forms of worship, and their frequent speculative and mystical character. At the same time the truth remains that they contain much that is historically valuable, and important for every Christian to know, concerning the period when Christianity breathed a new life into the world. Their authors, in some cases, gave proof of their sincerity by a martyr's death, such for instance as Justin, who is for this reason called Justin Martyr. He is regarded as the chief among the early Apologists, by which title those are designated who, after the labors of the apostles in the diffusion of Christianity, entered upon its defense and exposition by treatises and apologetic writings. He was a native of Samaria, and born of Greek parents, A. D. 100. He had studied the philosophy of the stoics, Peripatetics, and the Platonists, with a confessed leaning towards the latter, and the occasion on which he renounced it is related in his "Dialogue with Trypho" in these words: "Once, while meditating near the sea shore, a venerable man had appeared, and in a learned conversation, shown him the inefficiency of his philosophy, and had then told him of the prophets, who, being filled with the Holy Ghost, had revealed divine truth authoritatively, glorifying the God and Father of all things, and proclaiming his Son, the Christ. The old man had disappeared, 'but straightway,' says Justin, 'a flame was kindled in my soul; and a love of the prophets and of those men who are the friends of Christ, possessed me; and while revolving in my mind, I found this philosophy alone to be safe and profitable.'"

From that period to the present his praise is in all the churches for the zeal with which he went from city to city, teaching to Jew and Gentile the new religion he had embraced, and which knew no diminution until at Rome, A. D. 163, he sealed his faith with his blood. There is something, even at this distance of time, very attractive in the courage which counted life itself as valueless in comparison with the truth which possessed his dauntless spirit. "He appears," says a writer on early Christian literature, "in the midst of that cultured and curious but hollow and heartless second century, like an old Hebrew prophet waking after a sleep of centuries, and assuming the philosopher's cloak as the nearest approach to his old sheepskin mantle. He denounces woes upon the Cæsar if he does not repent, as boldly as Elijah rebuked the sins of Ahab. He feels through every fibre of his being that he is called to utter the truth of God, and so speaking he knows no fear."

In his first Apology, Justin answers the charge of atheism which was brought against the Christians, and boldly discusses the folly of idol worship. He shows, with great clearness, the fulfilment of the prophecies in the person and work of Christ. The following, from the same Apology, is an interesting description of the manner in which the holy supper was celebrated by the primitive church early in the second century:

"And on the day which is called Sunday, there is an assembly in the same place of all who live in cities, or in country districts, and the writings of apostles and prophets are read so long as the time permits. When the reader stops, the president of the assembly makes an address in which he recapitulates the glorious things that have been read and exhorts the people to follow them. Then we all stand up together and pray. After prayer, bread, wine and water are brought in. The president of the meeting again prays according to his ability, and gives thanks, to which the people respond, Amen. After this, the bread, wine and water are distributed to those present, and the deacons carry portions to such as are necessarily detained from the meeting. Those who are able and willing contribute what they please in money, which is given to the president of the meeting, and is appropriated to the support of widows and orphans, the sick, the poor, and whomsoever is necessitous."

Justin Martyr and Tertullian, in their apologies addressed to the Gentiles, calls the Lord's day Sunday—a designation by which it was generally distinguished among the Greeks and Romans. But it is worthy of remark that Tertullian, when addressing Christians, calls the day the Lord's day, and this not merely when he wishes to distinguish it from the Jewish Sabbath.—Baptist Weekly.

A LOVING DAY.

"Mother, I suppose one reason why they call the Sabbath a holy day is because it's such a loving day," said a little boy, as he stood by his father's side and looked up into his mother's face.

"Why, is not every day a loving day?" asked his mother. "I love father, and father loves me, and we both love you and the baby every day, as well as Sabbath."

"Well, but you've no time to tell us so on week days," said the little boy. "You have to work, and father has to go off early to his work, and he is so tired when he comes home. But Sabbath he takes me on his knee and tells me Bible-stories, and we go to church together. And, oh, 'tis such a loving day!"

DO NOT BITE YOUR NAILS.

One of the strangest habits we have ever noticed is that of biting the nails. If anybody can tell us why it is done or what possible good can come from doing it we shall be glad to be informed. It surely cannot arise from hunger—for there is nothing nourishing in finger-nails; and besides, many of those who indulge in the practice are fat and well favored. It certainly cannot come from a desire to beautify the ends of the fingers; for we can scarcely imagine any one with such strange notions of beauty as to suppose that finger-nails bitten to the quick are more beautiful than if they were neatly trimmed.

It is simply a habit, and nothing else. It is a habit, too, which if it has been long persisted in is very hard to cure, and therefore one which ought to be carefully avoided.

We must learn to subdue self; and one mode of doing this is to correct all habits of an offensive character. The strength of will which does this will become a great help in other matters of importance.—S. S. Classmate.

HOW SPOOLS ARE MADE.

At Drummondville, on the St. Francis River, Canada, on the line of the northern division of the South-eastean Railway, there are large factories for making spools from white birch, which grows in profusion there. The farmers get from two dollars and fifty cents to three dollars per cord for the wood, which, after being delivered to the factories, is first sawed into pieces about four feet long and from an inch to an inch and a half square, according to to the size of the spool it is desired to make. These pieces are put into a stove and thoroughly dried, whence they are taken into the factory and given to the roughers, who in a short space of time bore a hole in the center a couple of inches deep, turn about the same space round, and then cut off the length required for the spool. The machines used for this purpose are revolving planers, in the center of which is a revolving gimlet or bit, and immediately to the right a small circular saw with a gauge set to the proper size for the spools. One proprietor ships over two million spools per month to England, and another firm ships one million to Scotland.—Sunday-school Visitor.

OPEN YOUR BIBLES.

DEATH. Read Luke 8:41–56

And you hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins. Eph. 2:1.

1. A dead body a melancholy sight. Gen. 23:4; Ezek. 37:1–14.
2. Life is extinct. John 6:53; Luke 7:12.
3. Feeling, sight, and hearing gone. 2 Kings 4:31; Eph. 4:18, 19; 5:14.
4. Corruption begun. Gen. 6:12.
5. Physicians can do nothing. Luke 8:48; John 4:49.
6. God can raise the dead. John 5:25, 29; 11:43; Luke 14:32.—Notes for Bible Study.

From the region of Sivas (Western Turkey) comes a story of a little boy who had in some way become somewhat acquainted with the Gospel truth. He was dying, and his friends called in a very holy dervish to pray for him. The child said to the dervish: "But you did not pray. You did not use the name of Jesus." The next day the dervish came to pray again, but the boy objected, saying that he wanted a prayer in Jesus' name. "But if you trust to that name," said the dervish, "you will be lost." "I had rather be lost trusting in Jesus," replied the poor little fellow, "than be saved without him."

TEMPERANCE.

If Iowa prefers to build school-houses and raise men and women rather than build jails and penitentiaries and crowd them with thieves and murderers, she ought to have the privilege. That about covers her demand in the present canvass.

The venerable Earl of Shaftsbury declares that if places of public amusement are opened in England on the Sabbath, the temperance movement will be set back twenty-five years. He is certainly right. Sabbath shows do not diminish the throngs in the groggeries, but increase them, even though the show is an art gallery.

Judge McConnell, of Tennessee, says there is not one place in the fifth judicial district where intoxicating liquors are retailed and "the schools have risen and the whisky dens have fallen."

What nobler watchword lives in history than that formulated by an Iowa statesman for the new prohibition campaign in that State? "A school-house on every hill top, and no saloon in the valley."

Says the Presbyterian: "An equity suit has been brought in Philadelphia to compel an owner to cut down a tree whose roots were undermining an adjoining dwelling. Would not an equity suit be just as righteous against a man whose sale of liquor was 'undermining' the moral character of his neighbor, the happiness of his wife, and the future prospects of his children?"

The Inter Ocean says: "For some reason the year ending May 1, was a thirsty one, for the people of this country drank 733,062 more barrels of beer during that year than ever before in the same length of time. Whisky is not exactly losing its grip, but it can make no such record of increase as brewed liquors can."

The legislature of Rhode Island has amended its license law by allowing a liquor saloon to be planted within two hundred feet of a school-house, instead of four hundred feet as before, thus bringing the attractions and the temptations of the dram shops twice as near to the enticeable minds and hearts of the children.

Senator Dawes of Massachusetts, in a letter to a no-license demonstration held on the Fourth, expressed himself very forcibly, saying: "The slavery of intemperance is a greater curse than colonial servitude. It extinguishes manhood, it insures poverty, it entails misery, it begets crime. Woe follows its footsteps, and despair dwells on its hearth-stone."

The Living Issue says: "Mr. J. F. Somers, a prominent citizen of Camden county, Missouri, while on a recent visit to our office, stated that the counties in that State have the privilege of prohibiting the manufacture and sale of liquor within their confines if they so elect. His county (Camden) has so voted, and accordingly has had no establishments of that kind for some time. The result is there has not been a single inmate in the county jail for five years!"

A comparison between certain towns in Massachusetts, licensed, and not licensed, shows the following: In these license towns the cost of pauperism increased 267 per cent., while the population increased 26 per cent. In the no-license towns the cost of pauperism increased three times as much as the population and the license towns ten times as much as the population. These facts very clearly point to the free use of intoxicating liquors as the direct cause of the increase of pauperism. Do they not also demonstrate that the license system is contrary to sound political economy?

A temperance lecture comes in a telegram from Baltimore saying that a hat, in which was a note bearing the words: "Beware of drink; beware of drink, A. P. Dorsey, 156 St. Paul street," was found lying alongside the railing of a city reservoir. Search was made and the corpse of Mr. Dorsey was found at the bottom of the pool. Mr. Dorsey is a native of Howard county, and highly connected. It is supposed that the suicide was committed while suffering from the effects of intoxicants.

It is said that in Milwaukee, a city of abundant beer drinking, there are twice as many suicides as in any other city in the United States, in proportion to the number of inhabitants. The Illinois Staats Zeitung says: "Beer tippling is neither anything good or wholesome, and by no means an element of culture, however much lauded in German student songs." Another says: "A man drunk with whisky wants to kill somebody else; one drunk with beer wants to kill himself." There's murder in the drink, anyhow. Prohibit it.

Francis Murphy, the well-known Pittsburg temperance advocate, who has for a long time been holding successful meetings in England, will sail for home with his son and daughter on Sept. 5 on the steamship City of Rome.

Miss Frances E. Williard has just concluded a temperance-lecturing campaign of several months in California, Oregon and Washington Territory. She addressed a State Temperance Convention at Denver, Col., Aug. 10th. She has now organized the Woman's Christian Temperance Union in thirty-five States.

The President left Washington early on the morning of the 30th ult., for Louisville, Ky., en route to the Yellowstone Park. Among the supplies were "six cases champagne, three casks Rhine wine, four gallons Bourbon whisky, 1860, fine Cognac brandy, Bordeaux and other wines, and four cases Apollonaris water." Is the President the "medical purveyor" of the party, or is the "Survey of the Yellowstone" another name for that sort of picnic which is vulgarly spelled with a single syllable? —American Reformer.

THE CHURCHES.

—Pres. C. A. Blanchard led the Sabbath-school teachers meeting in Farwell Hall last Saturday noon.

—Mr. Moody, the evangelist, will go to Ireland early in September, and, after remaining there a month, will proceed to London for the winter.

—The Reformed church of South Holland, Cook county, Ill., near Chicago, has extended a call to Rev. Wm. Moerdyk, of Milwaukee, to become their pastor.

—Rev. James O'Connor of the Independent Catholic church of New York city, is visiting the West. He spoke at the Clear Lake Sabbath-school assembly, July 20th, before a large audience. Several Romish priests were in the audience. A number of his Catholic hearers were converted to Christ.

—Rev. S. F. Scovel, D.D., of Pittsburgh has been elected president of Westminster College, Pa. Dr. Scovel is an ardent supporter of the National Reform Association.

—Rev. S. S. Marshall of College Springs, Iowa, has removed to Tarkio, Atchison county, northwestern Missouri, to take charge of Tarkio Valley College.

—It is announced that Major Whittle is in Chicago to remain a few weeks. He will conduct Sabbath evening services in Farwell Hall during September.

—Rev. J. A. Mack, formerly pastor of the Congregational church in Peoria has entered upon the work of agent for the American Bible Society in Chicago.

—The 400th anniversary of the birth of Martin Luther occuring on the 10th of November next, the Lutheran churches are all making an effort to observe the day with some ceremony. Special services will be held, and a thank-offering fund is suggested in the Lutheran Standard to be divided among the literary institutions, orphan's home and home missions.

—The Chicago Avenue church in this city, known as the Moody church, has established a Medical Mission under Miss Condit, M. D., assisted by some of the most eminent physicians of the city. Miss Condit, a graduate of one of the Chicago medical colleges, was educated especially for this work. A system of regular religious visiting is connected with the medical relief.

—The services commenced by Mr. Moody in the Windsor Theatre, Boston, have been continued by Mr. E. W. Bliss with marked success. Every evening an audience has assembled filling the theatre, which holds fifteen hundred people, and a large number of conversions have taken place. The interest and solemnity of the services have steadily increased. Mr. N. N. Rich has charge of the choir, and has rendered effective service. Mr. Moody has been preaching at his home in Northfield, Mass.

—The mission of the American Methodists in Bulgaria is experiencing great trouble from the political obstructionists. The order for the closing of the schools has been enforced at Loftcha, and all representations to the authorities have failed to secure a reversal of the order. Politically the outlook in Bulgaria is far from hopeful. Russian influence has overborne any independent action, and there is little freedom for evangelical missionaries. Still, the missionaries are holding on, and it cannot be doubted that this reaction against religious liberty is but temporary. It is of the highest importance for the welfare of the nation, and for the right settlement of questions relative to religious liberty, that American missions in Bulgaria should be maintained in full force in this trying hour.

—A new building must be immediately erected at Kioto, Japan, for the accomodation of the increasing number of students in the Theological Training School. It will cost $6,500. God is blessing the young men of this institution in a remarkable manner. There is need also just now of $500 for the purchase of a few books for the use of these young preachers. Who will add to their contributions for special thank-offerings for these objects? A few spontaneous gifts of $1,000 or $500 each would be exceedingly refreshing during these hot months.

—The English Baptist Missionary Society, while straitened for funds, is literally burdened by the applications of young men who desire to be sent as missionaries. A large number of applicants have been received conditionally, to be sent out only in case an increase of contributions shall warrant. One of the young men writes: "For years I have been preparing myself for this most blessed enterprise. It has been my one aim night and day, my one longing desire. Can it be, with the world wide open, that the churches at home will decline to furnish the means to send out those who are waiting, and longing, and panting to go?"

—There are missionaries and missionaries, but we apprehend that not every one of them has such practical ideas about missionary work, or gets as close to the ideal of Christianity as a young lady of Chicago, at present a student in the Female Baptist Missionary Training School, and who is not yet twenty years of age. It has been her practice for the past few months to visit the sick and destitute in the lowest and vilest slums of Chicago, entirely alone, at all hours of the day. The little figure dressed modestly in black is known and respected by the criminal classes of the city, and in all her errands of mercy she has never once been molested or even insulted. She says that her object is first of all to do some practical good, and next to fit herself by actual experience for her life as a missionary.

—The Missionary Herald for August gives a remarkable sketch of a convent from Corea, a country which has a peculiar claim upon our interest since its recent treaty with the United States. One of the envoys in the embassy from Corea to Japan, three years ago, was a nobleman who was a personal friend of the king. During the revolt last July he saved the life of the queen by keeping her concealed till the overthrow of the usurper. For this service he was offered any reward that he might choose. Declining all honors, he asked permission to visit Japan in order to study its progress and civilization. After a residence of ten months he became a Christian and was baptized, though the step may cost his life if he returns to Corea. He pleads earnestly for American missionaries to be sent to his native land.

—A St. Petersburgh dispatch says the coronation decree granting liberty of worship to dissenters only affects a million of the so-called registered dissenters. There are fourteen million still unrelieved of their religious disabilities.

—Rev. Dr. Parkhurst, of this city, says that the profits of the Moody and Sankey hymn-books have been in the neighborhood of $400,000. Neither evangelist has derived any personal advantage from the publication. The profit funds have been collected from the publishers by a committee consisting of Messrs. John V. Farwell, of Chicago, William E. Dodge, of New York, and George H. Stuart, of Philadelphia. They have applied the money to charitable and evangelical purposes.

—The American Sunday-school Union, Philadelphia, offers a premium of $1,000 for the best book, written for the Society, upon "The obligations and advantages of the day of rest." The book must be popular in character, of a "high order of merit," and consist of not less than 60,000 nor more than 100,000 words. This premium is offered in accordance with the terms and conditions of the John C. Green trust.

—A successful form of evangelization in France is the Bible Carriage movement. M. Pointet, in a vehicle suitably furnished with religious reading, has itinerated in not less than ten Departments of the Republic, selling Bibles and tracts, and using his carriage as a pulpit from which to preach. The chief opposition is in the vicinity of Paris.

—Mrs. Jennie H. Caldwell, an evangelist in the Methodist church, well known in the vicinity of Chicago, and a graduate of Wheaton in 1865, attended the Irish Wesleyan Conference lately held at Dublin. She conducted a revival in the church where the conference was held. She visited London and Paris, and is expecting to return to this country in August.

—Word comes that Mtesa is dead; that the French Romanist missionaries have abandoned Uganda, and left the field with the Church Missionary Society's force, with whom all is going well; that the Church Missionary Society's steamer, Henry Wright, for the East Coast, has reached Suez; that through the aid of the Natal Government and that of individual colonists the necessary funds for the college building of the American Board at Amanrientote have been secured. This is good endorsement of mission work. On the Congo it is said that the chief with whom De Brazza negotiated has been deposed, and that Stanley is in possession of Brazzaville with a force far superior to the French.

—The fifty-third annual report of the Free Church of Scotland is an exhilarating document. It says: "Our Scottish missionaries and the native ministers trained by them have abounded in their labors for the conversion of the people of India, Africa, the New Hebrides, and the Lebanon, to an extent which recalls the Christian civilization of Germany under Boniface just twelve centuries ago, when his band of Scotsmen established that line of mission houses out of one of which—that of Erfurt—Martin Luther came to reform Christendom." There was a gratifying increase of income, specially that of the congregations, which was the largest yet recalled in the history of the organization.

A CHRISTIAN CONVENTION.

Mr. D. L. Moody, says the Inter Ocean, has promised to visit Chicago before going abroad again, and Christian workers here are arranging to hold a Christian convention in Farwell Hall, and have him take the lead. As now arranged, Mr. Moody will come to Chicago, Saturday, Sept. 15, and Sunday will preach in his church, on Chicago avenue, corner of La Salle street, a church built for him, but only preached in by him on rare occasions. A committee has sent out circulars to all the city pastors asking their co-operation, and a meeting will be held soon to arrange for the convention, which will meet Tuesday, Sept. 18, and continue till Thursday evening. The object of this convention will be to reach the masses of the people and awaken a deeper spiritual interest in the churches. Mr. Moody will preside, and the city pastors assist in the work. The practical methods of church work will be discussed.

Mr. Sankey will also be present, and take charge of the singing, assisted by Mr. James McGranahan. At the close of the convention Moody and Sankey will return to the East, and the 1st of October they will sail for Ireland, where they will labor for a time this fall.

Mr. F. G. Ensign is Secretary of the committee arranging for the convention, and in addition to the city pastors he is sending invitations to many Christian workers throughout the country. It will be during the time of the Exposition, when there will be excursion rates on all the railroads, which may be taken advantage of by those desiring to attend.

—The Rev. Wm. J. Barnett, pastor of Shilo Baptist church (colored), Williamsport, N. Y., is the son of a once powerful African king, Dumba by name. He early came to the conclusion that a trusty trade is a valuable adjunct even to royalty, and so he became a river and coast pilot at Sierra Leone, and while thus engaged was converted to Christianity and baptized in the Atlantic Ocean Then he was kidnapped, and was being brought to New Orleans as a slave when he contrived to escape at Liverpool. From there he went to California, and then back to Liverpool. On his second visit to England, Lord Garney became interested in him and had him well educated. In 1862 he visited New York and Philadelphia, and was sent to Sierra Leone as a Baptist missionary. Returning to this country after a year, he became pastor successively of churches in Philadelphia, Brooklyn, Newport, and New Haven. After the war he went to Richmond and founded a strong church on Navy Hill, the site of the old slave market. After that he preached at Greenbrier, White Sulphur Springs, Lexington, Staunton, Charlottesville, Gordonsville, North Danville, and Louisa Court House. In all these Virginian towns he built up strong and prosperous churches.

THE

CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE

A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

It is now owned and published by the FACTS.

—Frederick Douglass, Professor Gregory, of Howard University, and a Mr. Laws, have been chosen to represent the colored people of Washington in the coming convention of representatives of the negro race in the United States which is to be held in Louisville, Ky., September 15.

—The savings-bank system of the English Postoffice continues to work successfully. During last year 250,000 additional depositors opened accounts in the bank, making the total number nearly 3,000,000, with aggregate deposits of £39,000,000.

—Slaves are to be bought cheaply enough in Tangler, the prices brought being low enough to excite the contempt of a Southern auctioneer under the late order of things. A boy eight years old was, at the last reported sale, knocked off at $38, and a girl of like age at $24. Forty-two persons have been sold there since April 1 at correspondingly cheap prices.

—A singular and somewhat curious freak of nature is causing no little excitement at and in the neighborhood of Hubbellton, a little village eight miles west of Watertown, Wis., on the Crawfish River. A piece of land four acres in size and seven feet thick became loose from the mainland and floated down the stream against the Hubbellton bridge (a large wooden structure), thus almost completely stopping the flow of the water. The farmers dreading an overflow of their lands, which at this place are quite low, are busily engaged night and day in cutting a channel through the center of the float. The land, it is said, belongs to a poor school teacher.

—Within three miles from the business center of St. Louis, on the Illinois side, at the old French town of Cahokia, generations are born, live and die, who do not speak the English language. The people are provincial in the extreme, and jealous of their French origin, customs and language.—Buffalo Express.

—The Roman correspondent of the Cologne Gazette asserts that the Jesuits are about to resume their old ascendancy at the Vatican. Before long, he thinks, the powers will have to recognize the fact the Pope's master is the General of the Jesuits, and that the latter is the real head of the church. This correspondent—who is always well informed—adds that the present Pope virtually purchased his election to the Pontificial throne by an agreement entered into with the Jesuits before the conclave.

—The Railroad Gazette, of the 10th, reports a total of 34½ miles of new railroad constructed, making 2,796 miles thus far this year, against 5,667 miles reported at the corresponding time in 1882, 3,115 miles in 1881, 2,631 miles in 1880, 1,273 miles in 1789, 947 miles in 1878, 845 miles in 1877, 1,145 miles in 1876, 594 miles in 1874, 913 miles in 1874, 1,966 miles in 1873, and 3,372 miles in 1872.

—Attention has been called anew in Paris to the Order of the Barefootcd Clares. There are eighteen of these nuns, and fourteen are under 22 years of age. The reason of this, according to a statement just made by Baron Palet, is that the rule of the Clare is so excessively severe that nearly all the inmates die young. They go barefoot on the cold stone flooring; they never warm themselves at a fire, even the kitchen fire being placed beyond their access; they eat meat only on Christmas day; they sleep on a narrow board; they must spend ten hours every day upon their knees, and they are only allowed to speak to one another on rare occasions. The Abbess, through a grating, assured the Baron that more than one of her nuns, through cultivation of this grace of silence, had actually lost the power of forming a sentence.

FULL OF GRAND IDEAS.

"Masonry and Mormonism are political engines with religious driving wheels. Their conductors are kings; their engineers, priests; their motive power, popular depravity combined with popular conscience, and their practical end is the luxury and power of leaders who form men's interests for eternity that they may tax and govern them in time."

The above is a sample of the vigorous and striking thoughts, the grand ideas of which the pamphlet on the Batavia Convention is full. Get this book by all means. Price, post paid, 25 cents each.

"HOLDEN WITH CORDS."

This story recently appeared as a serial in the Christian Cynosure, and is now fittingly put into a neat book of nearly 400 pages. It is a hard hit at Freemasonry. In an incidental way the story tells much about the manner of conducting lodges, and much about the spirit and methods of Masonry. The story covers the period of the abduction and murdering of William Morgan. The strategic position from which the author writes puts a charm in the book, while it gives a good opportunity to show the workings of the order. We wish all the people would read it.—Religious Telescope.

THE NOYES PORTABLE BOOK CASE.

Holds not only 30 to 50 volumes, but the Unabridged Dictionary, the latter either opened or closed. It is made of dark cherry or black walnut, elegantly finished, and being on casters is practically a Revolving Book Case. Lawyers, ministers, doctors and scholars have found that it fills "the long felt want," and others, with fewer books, find it an ample Book Case. It has attachments for holding large minses and magazines, also a Reading Machine which removes that embargo on reading, the task of holding up a heavy book by the hour, and makes reading and study so easy that there is no excuse for ignorance. The "Machine" holds the book by the covers; the leaves are held open with a Leaf Holder, which, by a touch, can be removed or replaced. The hook tilts to any angle and is pivoted to turn to any position. A Clamp attaches it to a table or desk. An Extension Arm connects it with the book case or your easy chair, for which purpose attachments are always provided. This elegant outfit is sold at a remarkably low price. Send for circular.

Accidentally Cured of Consumption.

When death was hourly expected, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting with the many herbs of Calcutta, he accidentally made a preparation which cured his only child of consumption. His child is now in this country, and enjoying the best of health. The doctor now gives this recipe free, only asking two 3-cent stamps to pay expenses. The Master's Carpet.

BY

F. Ronayne.

Past Master of Keystone Lodge No. 639 Chicago.

Explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the Lodge, thus showing the principles on which the order is founded. By a careful perusal of this work, a more thorough knowledge of the principles of the order can be obtained than by attending the Lodge for years. Every Mason, every person contemplating becoming a member, and even those who are indifferent on the subject, should procure and carefully read this work. An appendix is added of 32 pages, embodying which gives every sign, grip and ceremony of the Lodge together with a brief explanation of each. The work contains 429 pages and is substantially and elegantly bound in cloth. Price, 75 cents.

Freemasonry at a Glance,

—A plan for securing to New York City all the water which could be obtained from the Croton water shed has been matured, and is now under consideration. The reservoir and aquednet would cost about fourteen and a half millions of dollars, not including the cost of land and the elaims for land damages north of the Harlem River. The capacity of daily delivery of the present aqueduct is 1,000,000 gallons; that of the new one would be 2,500,000, It would take from four to five years to complete the works.

—Miss Clara Barton, President of the American National Association of the Red Cross, which has over 1,000 members, has called in her special agent, Dr. J. B. Aubbell, Cedar Rapids, Iowa, who is a recent graduate of the Michigan University at Ann Arbor, and ordered him to report to her for orders. This is done because of the threatened danger of yellow fever at the South and of Asiatic cholera, in which ease her society will be called to work instantly. The association has now some $15,000 deposited in Boston and Washington, which is to be used in any emergeney great enough to eall for it. Since May 1, Miss Barton, as president, has received and disbursed over $30,000 in the work of relief.

Red Fish Lake, above Sawtooth City, on the snmmit of the Sawtooth range of mountains, in the Wood River region, Idaha, has dropped through the bottom. The lake had an era of several miles, and was many fathoms in depth. It was on the snmmit of one of the peaks of the range, some 11,000 feet elevation above the sea. and surrounded by heavy timber, which rendered it a delightful place in summer for eamping, fishing and boating parties. The lake has been there since the white man has known the country but lately—the day of the oeeurrence is not known—the bottom fell out. The country formation is granite and limestone, and an immense fissue has opened, whether caused by separation or settling of the earth's snrface or from volcanic actiou is not known. At present the bed of the lake is dry, and presents the appearance of a deep gorge or valley on the summit of the mountains. The lake has always contained millions of red fish; and beeu a favorite resort for bear, deer and other game. Where the fish went to is as mueh of a mystery as where the water went.—Hailey, (Idaho,) Times.

Skepticism was routed when the people knew the virtues of Samaritan Nervine. No cure no pay.

HOLDEN WITH CORDS.

From "The Free Methodist."

"Holden with Cords, or the Power of the Secret Empire." Priee, postpaid, handsomely bound in cloth, $1.00; paper covers, 50 ceuts.

There is no important history extant but has connected with it numerous other histories of which was the initial point or the dominating influence. The abduction and murder of Morgan set ten thousand secret springs in motion as the surrender of the charters of so many lodges at that time, and the severing of their connection with the order of some forty thousand of its members indicated. The story is one of these histories, and is a collection of facts woven into a story. It cannot fail to be read with interest. Address National Christian Association, 221 West Madison St., Chicago.

NOTICE.

Persons write occasionally, saying, "I sent a remittance so and so, bnt the tag on my paper it uot changed." Snch inquiries are proper, aud the explanation is this: when a subscription is received it is entered at once on the book and the letter filed for future reference if needed, but the printed mailing list is not changed until a sufficient number are received to require the printing of a new list. If but few subscriptions are received, the change may be delayed for a month or more, but when the list fiills up rapidly it requires frequent revision. If the date on your paper is not changed within four weeks after you remit it is the safest way to drop us a card.

DR. JOHN BULL'S

Smith's Tonic Syrup

FEVER and AGUE

Or CHILLS and FEVER.

AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient.

The genuine SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP must have DR. JOHN BULL'S private stamp on each bottle. DR. JOHN BULL only has the right to manufacture and sell the original JOHN J. SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP, of Louisville, Ky. Examine well the label on each bottle. If my private stamp is not on each bottle do not purchase, or you will be deceived.

NIGHTS IN A BAR-ROOM

T. S Arthur's great temperance book, complete and illustrated. By mail, 5c each; 50c per doz. By express, $3.50 per 100.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC THE GREAT SOURCE OF CRIME.

Leaves from the diary of an old lawyer.—By Hon. A. B Richmond, author of "Court and Prison," etc. A book of intense interest, rivaling the famous "Diary of a Physician," and, in its truthful, terrible pictures of the power and crime of intemperance, excelling the well-known "Ten Nights in a Barroom." The temperance issue of the present time is, Shall prohibition be partial or entire? Shall the branches of the death-bearing tree be pruned and trimmed, or shall the tree itself be cut down and its stump be torn up by the roots? The answer of "Leaves from the Diary" is, "Cut down the tree, tear up the roots, leave not a shoot or shred behind." It is certainly a very strong and eloquent volume Complete edition on fine, heavy paper, with colored lithograph of Sewall's stomach plates By mail, 30c each, $3 per doz By express, $20 per 100. Abridged edition, by mail, 15c; $1.25 per doz. By express, $9 per 100.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC AND THE SOBER CITIZEN.

An able and telling work, by Rev. J H. Sherman, which brings out the effects of the liquor traffic in a new light. The following are some of the commendations of the first edition.

"The author drives the nails of conviction through and clinches them."—N Y. Christian Advocate.

"Speakers and workers in the temperance field will find valuable aid in this pamphlet. It is crowded with convincing facts "—Zion's Herald

"One of the ablest reviews of the drink curse ever issued from the press."—The Morning and Day of Reform.

"The arguments are put in telling form."—Judge Pittman.

New revised and enlarged edition. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz By express, $6 per 100.

DRINKS FROM DRUGS.

A startling exposure of the liquor traffic, by El Johnson. A book that cannot fail to arouse the American people to the gigantic swindle now being perpetrated. The writer was offered $10,000 by a leading brewer to keep still. Liquor not only doctored, but made entirely from drugs. Extracts from a whole library of secret books, giving receipts for making and doctoring; advertisements of essences, fac similes of labels, engravings, etc., etc. Claret, port, sherry, champagne, whisky, brandy, gin, rum, etc., all out of one barrel, and made at less than 25 cents a quart. Wine that never saw grape juice; cider that never saw apples; beer factories in place of breweries, fine cream ale without barley or brewing; whisky from arsenic; millions of gallons of liquor that pays no revenue tax. The farmer's corn and barley "all in your eye." A wholesale liquor store in a ten-foot square cellar; more French wine sold in New York City than is produced in the whole of France. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By Express, $6 per 100.

W. C. T. U. ORGANIZATION AND WORK.

A book of general information on how to organize and run successfully a Woman's Christian Temperance Union. This book should be widely distributed among W. C. T. U. presidents, pastor's wives and other representative women. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100.

HOME PROTECTION.

A lawyer's view of it. By J. C. Wells, attorney-at-law. The question of female suffrage for the protection of home ably discussed from a lawyer's standpoint. A book for the times. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100

BAND OF HOPE RECITERS.

172 pages. 164 choice recitations of poetry and prose, containing some of the choicest bits of temperance material for the platform ever uttered, accompanied by an article on elocution. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100.

GENERAL TEMPERANCE SONG BOOK.

"Temperance Songs," a Book for Adult Societies.—Eighty-three choice pieces, both words and music (old and new tune combination) choice selections from standard temperance collections; many choice new pieces. Book carefully edited by David C. Cook. Will prove just what is wanted by every temperance society Price in strong cardboard covers, by mail, 10c each; $1 per dozen; by express, $5 per 100.

TEMPERANCE ANTHEM BOOK.

Temperance Anthems.—A new idea; nothing else of the kind in existence. Will insure good music by the choir at temperance meetings Forty-eight pages of choice anthems by ablest writers By mail, 15c each; $1.50 per doz. By express, $10 per 100.

BAND OF HOPE SONG BOOK.

Band of Hope Songs.—Fifty-seven choice pieces for juvenile temperance gatherings, Bands of Hope, etc. Old, familiar tunes, also choice new words and music. Words far in advance of anything else issued. By mail, 8c each; 75c per doz. By express, $4 per 100.

DANIEL'S BAND.

A temperance concert exercise, with parts suitable for all ages; entirely new. Songs, recitations, dialogues, etc., of a thoroughly aggressive character; sure to carry weight with the rendering of it. By mail, 5c each; 50c per dozen, By express, $2 per 100.

THE COLD WATER ARMY.

For a primary temperance concert exercise. An entirely new exercise, containing songs and recitations, dialogues, etc., suitable for primary scholars. A pleasing and telling concert on temperance. By mail, 5c each; 50c per dozen. By express, $2 per 100.

Oxford Teacher's Bible.

A Bible Concordance, Commentary etc., All in One.

The "Oxford" Teachers' Bible contains, besides the text with the celebrated Oxford references, a Cruden's Concordance with 25,000 references; Oxford Index with 2,345 words, pronouncing dictionary of proper names with meanings; Scripture atlas of twelve maps, correct to latest survey, including alphabetical list of Bible names arranged with figures and letters indicating location on maps; condensed Bible history of Old and New Testament with interval between chronology of Old Testament and chronology of the New; a complete harmony of the Gospels; etymology, geography and topography of Palestine; mountains, lakes and rivers of the Bible, with special tabular summary; birds, reptiles, insects, trees, plants, flowers, minerals, precious stones, etc.; weights, measures, time and money; obsolete and ambiguous words, and words used as symbols; Paul's voyage to Rome; Paul's missionary journey; history of Jewish sects; parables of our Lord; parables of the Old Testament; miracles of our Lord; miracles of the New Testament; prophecies concerning Christ; titles of Christ; special prayers; chart of the family of the Herods, etc., etc.

SIZES.—Our small size Bible is 4x5½ inches. Our medium size, 4½x6½. Our large size, 5x7¾.

Our small and medium sizes are most popular ones. Large size for those desiring large type Bible.

For $1.30, small size genuine Oxford Teacher: complete in every respect; same as the very best; strongly bound in morocco covers, with gilt edges; in large clear print. Book of 1,408 pages.

Postage, 9cts.

For $2.20 Same style of binding as above described. Teachers' medium size, red edges instead of gilt. Postage, 12c.

For $5.40 Same style of binding, large size, gilt edges. Postage, 20c.

For $1.60 Small size genuine Oxford Teacher, gilt edges, flexible morocco cover, circuit, or protection, leather all around. Postage, 10cts.

For $2.50 The same style of binding, medium size. Postage, 12c.

THE PERSIAN SEAL BINDING

Is very handsome and durable. It is this style of binding which is so much admired by Bible readers. Please notice particularly that these Bibles are kid lined and silk sewed. Many Bibles in this style outwardly are lined with black paper and sewed with thread in place of silk.

PERSIAN SEAL.

For $2.30 we furnish a small size Oxford, bound in Persian seal, full flexible; can be bent back, doubled or rolled, without injury. Divinity circuit, gilt edges, kid lined, silk sewed, with book-mark and hand Postage, 10c.

For $3.30 The same style of binding, medium size. Postage, 12c.

For $5.75 The same style of binding, large size. Postage, 20c.

LEVANT MOROCCO BINDING.

The Persian Seal bindings are the best kept by most Bible dealers, and usually pass for the best teachers' Bibles made; and, to all appearance, they are so. There is, however, a better wearing binding of which the Persian Seal is a good imitation; this is known as "Levant Morocco." In all respects the Levant morocco Bible corresponds with the Persian Seal description, except as to leather used for cover which, though looking like the Persian Seal, is stronger, and will last a lifetime.

Prices on genuine Levant Morocco bindings:

For $4.50—Small size. Postage, 10c.
For $5.50—Medium size. Postage, 12c.
For $8.00—Large size. Postage, 20cts.

Handsome Gift Bibles at Low Prices.

For 45c. Embossed morocco cover, gilt edges, gilt title on back. Very neat and durable. This is the handsomest 45c. gift Bible we have ever seen. Postage, 5c.

For 60c. Morocco cover, brass bound and plated, with handsome gilt clasp and gilt edges; two patterns; square and round corners. Exquisite lettering on side; printed in large clear type. Bibles no better are sold as high as $1 and $2. Postage, 6c.

For 70c. Similar size and style of binding to our 60-cent Bible; square corners, brass bound, with clasp and handsome tasseled book-mark; also medallion inserted on side in gold and red.

This was a new importation with the fall of 1882, and a very pretty design. It should be seen to be appreciated. (See cut.) Postage, 6c.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

—The Northern Pacific Railroad will be opened formally by President Villard on Sept 8. It will be actually completed on Aug. 25. There will be over 300 guests present at the opening ceremonies. Among those who have accepted the hospitality of the road are a number of gentlemen from England, Germany and this country.

—The Master Workman of the Brotherhood of Telegraphers in New York issued a circular Friday acknowledging that the strike was a failure, and directing the members to seek work. The New York assembly voted to give the girls the first chance to regain their situations. A number, both male and female, were reemployed in the Western Union office in New York.

—Judge Jeremiah Black died at 2:10 o'clock Sabbath morning at his home in York, Pa. Though not unexpected, his death was sudden and a shock to the community. An unfavorable change began about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, and he gradually grew worse, but remained conscious almost to the end, and died peacefully. From the beginning of his illness Judge Black believed he never would recover, and was perfectly resigned.

—At Winchester Crossing, Ky., Friday morning, a train on the Kentucky Central Road dashed into another belonging to the Chesapeake and Ohio Line, the rear of which, containing 400 kegs of giant powder, rested on the crossing. Sparks from the wrecked locomotive ignited the powder and an explosion followed which shook the earth for miles. The depot building, three cars, and an engine were blown to pieces. Two men were almost instantly killed, and five others are believed to be mortally injured.

—Fire at Albia, Iowa, Thursday morning, destroyed five dwellings, involving a loss of $25,000.

—The iron strikers at Bethlehem, Pa., receiving no financial aid from the central organization, disbanded their lodge of the Amalgamated Association Tuesday, and applied to the mill owners to be taken back. Most of them will be reinstated in their former positions.

—The Devon Inn at Eagle, Pa., burned to the ground Monday forenoon last week, involving a loss of $75,000. There were 225 persons on the premises, and none were injured.

—The wife of United States Senator W. B. Allison, while suffering from an insane attack, drowned herself in the Mississippi at Dubuque, Iowa, Sunday evening, Aug. 12. The body was not found until Monday morning, and attached to it was found a rubber coat filled with stones.

—There was a disturbed condition of the stock market in Wall street last week. The transactions were unusually large, competent authority placing the stock which changed ownership one day at 700,000 shares. The failure of George William Ballou & Co. was announced, causing much excitement. His liabilities will approximate $700,000. Cecil Ward & Co. became embarrassed later and caused the suspension Wednesday of the firm of E. C. Stedman & Co., New York brokers. Mr. Stedman is well known as a poet and prose writer. It is claimed that during a short vacation his son Frederick, aged twenty-three, a partner in the business, by injudicious speculation with the firm's funds, caused a financial crisis. Mr. Stedman has the public sympathy, and has received numerous offers of aid, but declined them. It is believed the suspension will be only temporary, as the liabilities will not exceed $200,000.

—C. M. Dittman, a prominent real estate dealer of St. Paul, Minn., has been arrested for forgery. His crooked transactions aggregate thousands of dollars, one man losing $40,000, and a firm being swindled out of $33,000.

—For lack of business the Farmers' Bank at Richmond, Ind., closed its doors Thursday, and the directors have agreed to wind up its business. The depositors, who are mostly farmers, will be paid in full.

—The Second National Bank of Warren, Ohio, closed its doors Friday evening. K. M. Fitch, the cashier, is reported to be defaulter to the amount of $70,000 or $80,000.

—The Russian Minister of the Interior has ordered the enforcement of the decree prohibiting Jewish manufacturers from employing Christian workmen.

—The Pope has summoned to Rome the chief prelates in America and Europe, and they will assemble in the Vatican in November. They will be consulted as to the means by which the Holy See can maintain friendly relations with all the powers.

—In a mine near Redruth, Cornwall, Eng., while thirteen med were ascending Wednesday, the rope broke and by the fall twelve of the men were instantly killed.

—Nihilism is finding a foothold in the schools of Russia, and arrests of students are quite frequent. The Minister of Education urges the scholastic authorities to enforce discipline, and call on the police for aid if necessary.

—The Emperor of Morocco having refused to pay the claims of Italian subjects, war is imminent. In Tangiers, the capital, the Italian Envoy Wednesday lowered his flag, this hostile act causing a panic among the inhabitants.

—A mob of 400 men attacked the Jewish quarters in Prague Wednesday night. The rioters dispersed before doing much harm. The frequency of riots causing much alarm among the authorities of Austria. The police and military officers have been ordered to crush with the utmost energy every outbreak, however small.

—A mob in Agram, Croatia, Tuesday tore down official notices from the government building because they were printed in the Hungarian tongue. The military took a hand, and wounded and arrested many of the rioters. The troubles were renewed Wednesday, and the windows of the government office wrecked.

—It is reported an express train between Paris and Amsterdam met with an accident between Malines and Vilvorde, Belgium, and several passengers were killed.

—Two thousand Bedouins attacked the Sanitarium at Sinkat and were repulsed with the loss of sixty killed. The soldiers defending the place lost seven men and the civilians five. Sinkat is fifty miles from Suakin, a town in Nubia on the Red Sea. The attack was incited by the False Prophet.

—A dispatch from Anam says that Colonel Baden of the French army made a sortie on the 6th inst., supported by a gunboat. He proceeded northward and outflanked and drove off the enemy. On the 7th, with 1,200 men, he made a movement to the south and attacked the earthworks of the Anamites. The enamy made but slight resistance and abandoned the works in confusion. Their cannon were hauled off by elephants. The loss to the French was two killed and six wounded. The enemy's loss was heavy.

FREEMASONRY AT A GLANCE,

BY

E. RONAYNE,

Past Master of Keystone Lodge, No. 639, Chicago.

Illustrates every sign, grip and ceremony of the Lodge and gives a brief explanation of each. This work should be scattered like leaves all over the country. It is so cheap that it can be used as tracts, and money thus expended will bring a bountiful harvest. 32 pages. Price, postpaid, 6 cents. Per 100, $3.60. Address,

National Christian Association,
221 West Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

THE PUREST IS THE BEST.

In the selection of SUNDAY-SCHOOL PAPERS, the most important point to be considered is the moral tone of the subject matter. If this is of a questionable character, the papers should be shunned, no matter how large, how attractive, or how low the price. Such papers are

COSTLY AT ANY PRICE.

The country is being flooded with S. S. literature that is largely composed of what may be properly termed "RELIGIOUS FICTION," the tendency of which is to create a distaste for sound reading and foster an appetite for fiction of a more deleterious character.

The engravings of these papers are equally objectionable. In many cases a lady or girl dressed in the height of fashion is made the HEROINE OF A STORY, thus putting the highest sanction to extravagance and pride. With such instructors in our Sunday-schools we cannot expect the children to grow up with a love for sound literature and with correct ideas of Christian propriety. With a view of supplying S. S. papers, of a pure and elevating character, the publishers are issuing

FOUR MONTHLY PAPERS.

They are FREE FROM FICTION, and the cuts are chosen with great care. While they are thus carefully edited, they are not lacking in attractiveness. They are well printed on beautiful tinted paper. The children are delighted with them. The very low price at which this line of S. S. papers is issued, places them within the reach of even schools of limited means

The late effort of the friends of the Sabbath in Massachusetts before the Railway Commissioners was successful, and the Housatonic road will not be allowed to run its trains on that day. The arguments of gentlemen Carter, Field and Eddy secured a unanimous vote in their favor. The record of the Louisville, New Albany and Chicago road is given on another page of this number. It is a satisfaction to note the frequent praise given in the public press to the management of this road and its fine equipment. The record of the old Vermont State has always been the highest in respect to Sabbath observance, their being no Sabbath railway business carried on until within a very short time. It is not unfair to attribute to the same depth of religious conviction both the banishment of the lodge and legal proscription of its oaths and this freedom from Sabbath desecration. But as Freemasonry has crawled back into position and power moral sentiment gives way and lately a train has been started on the Montpelier road chiefly for the distribution of "Sunday papers"—a marked instance of the affinity and mutual assistance of evil practices.

The California organ of Good Templarism, the Rescue, must have blushed when it printed the announcement of the lodge authorities that the Knight Templar Masons must not enter a liquor shop with their lodge toggery upon them. Suppose Bishop McLaren of this city should proclaim that neither Rev. Clinton Locke or Rev. Henry G. Perry or other Episcopal clergyman who are Freemasons should patronize saloons in their official robes. Would the gentlemen named feel complimented by the order? It would be interesting to know what they think of the same order, given here in Chicago three years ago and now repeated, of their Masonic relations. Perhaps it is intended to protect the sanctity of the Masonic jewels and feathers, since nothing is said about the same persons drinking in plain dress. Doubtless in the estimate of Freemasonry, the system is more precious than the men who get entangled in it. It is true, however, that the Templar Masons had plenty of liquor outside the saloons. Hundreds of them were entertained in one of the great wine vaults of Napa valley and each took away one and some as many as four bottles of liquor each. At every banquet, excursion or entertainment of any sort, champagne and other wines flowed freely, if the dispatches may be believed. Indeed if we may credit the papers, which would not care to indulge in evil speaking of the lodge, there is no gathering of any kind in the country where drinking is so freely indulged. The saloons themselves are an evidence. In San Franeisco as here, they flung out their banners to welcome their best patrons. It is time a cringing public should rate the character of this order at its true value.

Bismarck is an old lion whose growls yet inspire terror in those who have felt the weight of his paw. His organ, the North German Gazette, last week answered the vengeful attacks of some French journals with a journalistic petard which struck all over Europe. France, says the Gazette, alone threatens the peace of Europe. The present state of affairs cannot long continue without serious danger that the passions engendered may break out in actual war. From any other source these menacing words would have been passed by as so much editorial rhetoric, but coming as they did, directly all Europe, borne down to exhaustion with the load of armies and armaments, is in a tremble of alarm. The French press repells the charge, the Austrian papers ask if it means war, the English think the matter overdone. The London Times, though holding that it proves the French influence in Europe not at all increased by the unjust attempts upon Tonquin and Madagascar, yet maintains that the Gazette is insulting and intends to wound and humiliate France with a vulgar menace. The effect also upon stocks in Paris, Vienna and Berlin added to the general alarm. Nothing could show so remarkably the suicidal war policy of the European governments. Armed to the teeth, every tone and motion of either is a threat in the suspicious eyes of the rest; and this condition of alarm will continue until they begin a paace policy in earnest by general disarmament.

The explorations of Stanley in Africa, important as they were in the discovery of Livingstone and the introduction of King Mtesa to the English missionaries, were but steps to a grander work which is now taxing all the resources of experience, tact, energy and means of the explorer. His effort to open the interior of Africa to the Gospel and the commerce of Europe and America is nearing its first success. A Frenchman, DeBrassa, took advantage of Stanley's absence and seized upon the Congo river in the name of France. To counteract or overcome this movement has cost Stanley much trouble. It has been done, however, to a great degree, and his communication with the interior is not affected. The expenses of his expedition is borne by Leopold II., King of Belgium, who has lately been visited by Mrs. H. Grattan Guinness in the interest of mission work. Mrs. Guinness says of Leopold: "To secure, as far as it may lie in his power, the present and future well being of the new world of Central Africa, seems to be the one great object of his life. With no selfish or personal object, with no view to annexation of territory, or to commercial profit of Belgium, from no other motive than the highest and purest philanthropy, this noble monarch is spending £80,000 a year from his own private purse for the benefit of Africa. We do not remember in all history a parallel ease. A monarch devoting his great influence and ample private wealth, not to the aggrandizement of his own country, or of his own name, but to the elevation of the helpless. His plan is to remove, if possible, the existing impediments to a lucrative commerce between Europe and Central Africa, in order that when they are removed he may be in a position to hand over the advantages he has secured to a large international commercial association, which shall conduct trade with Africa on righteous principles. He wants to save Central Africa from the dreadful fate of the Portuguese colonies, both east and west; to secure the weak against the tyranny of the strong; and to protect the helpless against the demoralization which mere selfish commerce always inflicts on savage nations."

PRAYER AND TESTIMONY ON THE MAINE BEACHES.

(From a special correspondent of the Cynosure.)

OLD ORCHARD, Me., Aug. 8, 1883.

The annual Holiness and Faith-eure meetings of Dr. Cullis and company from Beacon Hill Place, Boston, on this common cosmopolitan outing-ground of the North, are over and gone. They have drawn together, as in years before, notable representatives of a peculiar type of Christianity from all the religious denominations and from different parts of the world; whose hearts (taking their own standpoint) God hath touched; whose disorders faith has healed. And they have touched and kindled others with the same mystic, holy fire—souls panting after God, after the living God, who think with Faber:

"Most good is the brisk, wholesome serviee of fear,
And the ealm wise obedienee of conscienee is sweet;
And good are all worships, all loyalties dear,
All promptitudes fitting, all serviees meet:
But none honors God like the thirst of desire,
Nor possesses the heart so eompletely with him;
For it burns the world out with the swift ease of fire,
And fills life with good works till it runs o'er the brim."

This has been succeeded by an enthusiastic gathering of the practical heroines of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, who have occupied the camp-ground day and night of this superb weather, with song, prayer and address, for the last three days. The Napoleon of the Prohibitory Law movement, Hon. Neal Dow of Portland, gave the stirring address of welcome on the part of Maine. All the other speaking and praying has been by the commanding matrons of the Union, whose discipline and experience have undeniably developed most remarkable gifts and powers of prophesying. There was a masterly address by Mrs. Mary H. Hunt of the Educational Department in the Temperance Union, whose aim is to procure the introduction of such textbooks into the schools as inculcate the scientific and sanitary importance of total abstinence. Legislators and committee-men of our boards of instruction should hear it and act upon its judicious suggestions.

There was a so-called Bible reading in the highest degree instructive and thought-quickening by Mrs. H. W. Smith, authoress, who is Superintendent of the Evangelistic department of the Union, that aims to carry the Gospel-cure to the drinking classes, by holding religious services in reading rooms, depots, theatres, etc., and to sustain Temperance Institutes for the training of women in the methods of conducting evangelistic exercises for the poor and profligate. There was another service at which divers practical questions were spoken to by pre-appointed speakers and then thrown open for general discussion, which elicited very great interest. There was a Bible-reading also by Mrs. Mary C. Sayre of Florida, eminently spiritual and restful as by one taught of the Spirit. These and other exercises were largely attended by earnest men and women who are intelligently at work creating and moulding public sentiment into laws, usages and institutions that will soon, there is reason to believe, by the blessing of God ehange the face of American society, and eventually deliver the English-speaking races from the thralldom of intemperance.

Bordering upon another part of this magnificent seven-miles beach, at Ocean Park, there is a camp-meeting in progress of the Free Baptists, at which are assembled large numbers of this liberal "family of the faithful," whose testimony against slavery, intemperanee and societies of secrecy, and in favor of moral reform in general, has been clear and positive from an early day.

At another of the much frequented watering places of Maine in this region, perhaps the most attractive of all to lovers of the beautiful, the ancient town of York, a discourse was delivered this season by a minister from Massachusetts, Rev. Henry T. Cheever of Worcester, on the Temperance Issue in Polities. He advocated the formation of a National party on the basis of Constitutional prohibition of the liquor traffic, and the right and duty of Maine to lead off in such a party. He argued that if the Republican party in New England, which has it in its power, should not now suppress the liquor traffic by a Constitutional Amendment duly submitted to the people, then the Republican party would be itself suppressed; that is, would give way to a new party that would be true to God and humanity The speaker claimed for Maine that her reliable staples were her timber, her granite, her ice, her men and her Maine Law; and her duteous sons in other States only asked for her, that her timbers might continue to carry the commerce, her ice to freeze the creams, her granite to build the monuments, her prohibitory law to lead the legislation, her blue waters to cool the throbbing brows, her men and her women to mould the minds of the country at large.

The discourse closed with a reference to the late Baccalaureate address of Dr. Cyrus Hamlin, President of Middlebury College and an honest son of Maine, to the effect that the liquor traffic was too atrocious an evil to be hid, too destructive and cyclonic to be regulated, too insolent to be endured. The capital invested in its support was enormous and potential; but God and humanity were allied against it; childhood and womanhood out of the depths lifted up holy hands against it; and the irrepressible conflict must go on until our statesmen should dare assail in the halls of legislation at Washington such a monstrous evil that was so pernicious to national welfare.

Your correspondent modestly suggests to Mr. Cheever and those who think with him, that the tenacity of life may be about the same in the Republican party and the liquor traffic. Both must go to the wall and go under the sod, if they continue to withstand the rising enthusiasm for humanity in the cause of temperance. Bishop Ireland may not err when he predicts that a tidal wave of total abstinence is about to sweep over the land. When that comes the old parties and old issues will be the first to go under and to disappear forever.

JOHN BROWN AND "THE CHRISTIAN AT WORK."—II.

BY REV. C. C. FOOTE.

In his second letter to Timothy, Paul declares that in the "perilous times" of the last days should be found "despisers of those that are good." We have evidently fallen upon these "perilous times." Look at the facts.

Reformers devote their lives to the overthrow of the wrongs selfish men have inflicted upon society and the world. They do this for the love of God and humanity, and for conscience; often at the loss of friends, property and reputation. Their motives, acts and lives are Godlike and Christlike. Where, if not among such, will you find those whom the Apostle designates as "good men." If they are hated it must be by those described by the Apostle. God-fearing men cannot hate godly men. But reformers are hated, and hated because they are reformers.

A quarter of a century ago I traveled in Maine in the heat of the temperance war, and everywhere among liquor men Hon. Neal Dow was assailed as the prince of fanatics and an enemy to society. Gerrit Smith was treated as a Sabbath desecrator, an infidel, and fit for bedlam. A reward was offered for the heads of Mr. Garrison and the Tappans. Charles Sumner, by the slave-holders, was deemed worthy the deadly blows of "bully" Brooks.

And were there ever victims of more deadly hate than were Beriah Green, Charles G. Finney and William Goodell. Can these haters of those that are good name a reformer that was not hated in his day. It surely would not be the man that could stop and kiss a slave baby on his way to the gallows.

From the slanderous judgment of the Christian at Work concerning John Brown, I appeal to the audience of two thousand of Chicago's best men and women at the reception given to Mrs. Brown, who listened with raptures of delight to the eulogy on her martyred husband, by the "Cicero of Chicago." I appeal to the successful conflict against the "border ruffians" in which John Brown acted so prominent a part. I appeal to the entire anti-slavery army of all ranks and conditions. I appeal to the millions of freed slaves who love and revere the name of him who braved all slavedom and who died for them. From the judgment of the unfeeling and unsympathizing editor of the Christian at Work, I appeal to the vast congregation that assembled in Philadelphia to testify their love of John Brown at the hour of his martyrdom. I appeal to the philanthropists of the Old World and to the noble army of our "boys in blue" who marched to battle and to victory, singing, as an inspiration from heaven,

> "John Brown's body lies mouldering in the grave,
> But his soul is marching on."

And they will tell you with one heart and one voice, as the sound of great waters and mighty thunders, that John Brown was among the grandest heroes of the world. And thus shall his name be passed down by impartial history for ages to come, long after the memory of his traducers have passed from the earth as if they had not been.

The friends of the bondmen knew John Brown as the Christian at Work did not. They had seen every effort put forth for the liberation of the slave fail. Never in all the history of slavery were its fetters more tightly riveted than when the blow at Harper's Ferry was struck. The hands of the Abolitionists were pendent in despair. They had petitioned, entreated, warned, written and spoken to the nation. They had flooded the land with anti-slavery literature, and voted for righteous rulers. But the more they toiled the more determined was the South. There was but one more resort—Strike! Our martyred brother loved and pitied the slaves as his own children. He could, he would do and dare anything for the bleeding, dying victims in bonds. He said to God, "I will strike." He believed that God had said to him as to Gideon, Strike!

Gov. Seward knew that he was to do the deed, nor did he object. Gerrit Smith knew it and helped; so did leading Abolitionists in New England, and helped; so did Hon. Frederick Douglass; and I wish my posterity to the latest generation to know that I was "one of them."

But I said to the man whose soul was rock and fire, as we walked along the streets of Detroit in the still hour of midnight, "The blow you are about to strike will cost you your life." I shall never forget his instantaneous answer, as if he had fully weighed the consequences, "It will pay well if it does."

And it did. That first blow resounded through all slavedom like the awful thunderbolt of doom. It was the death-knell to the terrified oppressor, and to slavery as well; and in their terror and wrath they rushed upon their own destruction, as did the Syrians of old, frightened out of their wits by the blows of Gideon's "fools."

The men that fail to see God in human affairs cannot fail to see, from their sphere of vision, that there was vastly greater folly in Gideon's blows than in the Harper's Ferry blows. And if the editor of the Christian at Work believes that Gideon was chosen of God, then let him acknowledge that John Brown was not a whit less so. And so let him hasten to repent of the great wrong he has done to God's chosen servant, who "builded better than he knew," the fruits of whose "work of faith" vastly transcended his hopes.

The hand of God was so manifestly present in the affair of Harper's Ferry, for the part in which the actors are pronounced "fanatics and fools," that it is of small moment to know how the actors expected that slavery was to be effected thereby. The enemies of secretism know they are appointed of God to their mission, and so they can well afford to leave the consequences with him.

WEEK-DAY SERMON.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

There drifted to me the other day on the wings of the press an unsavory little sheet calling itself the Iconoclast, and adorned with a motto from Thomas Paine. The front page was also embellished with a coarse wood-cut supposed to represent his Satanic majesty as he appears to orthodox minds—a kind of cross between a satyr and a dragon, with forked tail, cloven foot, etc.

Of course there was the usual amount of spiritualism, for it is one of the curious inconsistencies of modern infidelity that while it caricatures the Christian's belief in a personal devil, and jeers at his faith in one great, invisible, all-controlling Power, it "keeps open house" for every charlatan who professes to be a "medium" for disembodied spirits to work their vulgar miracles, and pour out their vapid nonsense, unsettling weak brains and puzzling wise ones.

There was a little free-love thrown in, a little socialism, a great deal of Ingersollism, and one truth to a hundred lies. But truth is truth even when spoken by the mouth of an enemy. This infidel sheet only repeated in mocking, insolent triumph a terrible fact, echoed in sadness by religious journals, praying pastors and Bible-loving Christians throughout the land: The church is growing to be like the world. It taunted her with caring for popular applause more than for souls, for fashion and Mammon more than Christ; with her fairs, and raffles and dancing parties, her anxiety to fill up her pews with a minister that will "draw" no matter what doctrine he may preach, and the covering up of scandalous sin on the part of professors. When Zion trails her beautiful garments in the dust no wonder the uncircumcised set up a shout of triumph.

It is the sins of God's people on which infidelity fattens. A church that has foundered on the rocks of worldliness is as much a "godsend" to it as a wrecked vessel to Cornish smugglers. If the church lived up to her full standard of holiness, infidelity could no longer support her ghoulish, vampire existence. She would perish by slow starvation. But some individual Christian asks, What can I do to reform the church? I am not a Luther, nor a Calvin, nor a Wesley. Dear Christian brother or sister, did they do anything more than to follow Christ, and is not your duty the same? What would they have accomplished without the band of earnest souls that gathered about them and upheld their hands? What would Gideon have done without his God-chosen three hundred, and if you can't be a Gideon, can't you be one of the three hundred? Have you borne faithful testimony against the secret lodge—infidelity's strong hold? For she has no better ally than a false religion. Masonry's Christless rites and ceremonies, its pretended new birth, its claim to be better than the church have for years been slowly undermining the foundations of Christian belief and action. But if three hundred devoted Israelites could overthrow the hosts of Midian, the Lord's hand is certainly shortened if three hundred devoted Christians cannot overthrow the hosts of secrecy now.

Have you done all you can to stem the tide of worldliness in your own church? Have you lifted up the standard of Christian holiness high that all around may see it? Have you fed every stray sheep and wandering lamb? Have you been daily crucified to self that you might live the new life that is in Christ Jesus?

Questions that few of us can answer without a sad consciousness of shortcoming. But are we striving after perfection, hating the sin or the weakness that keeps us from it? Then we are at our post. We haven't deserted, we are not asleep, but armed and watching. Infidelity may taunt and defy, may come in like an armed host, but God will always have his chosen band of faithful souls. In every crisis of spiritual declension it is not the thirty-two thousand but the three hundred who deliver the church. Shall slothful ease hinder us from being among them?

MODERN CHURCH ENTERTAINMENTS.

BY ALBERT SIMS.

All these modern, but unseemly entertainments necessarily give sanction to an irreverent spirit as to places of worship, and educate society into a practical disregard of the sanctity of Jehovah's house. The sacredness of the sanctuary is soon forgotten in the roars of giddy laughter, stamping of feet, and rehearsal of silly anecdotes.

These entertainments lead to a forgetfulness of God, and beget in the minds of the young a taste for amusement elsewhere. The pieces and parts acted out on the platform engender a love for theatricals; and from the church performance, they go to the theatre. Facts prove this. A young man who had been employed in a Brooklyn theatre said that he received his first training and taste for the stage in Sunday-school concerts. An eminent writer says:

"The Romish Church of the Middle Ages abolished the 'Mysteries and Moralities,' because they found no good but evil resulting from dramatizing any part of the sacred Scriptures. Those who favor such exhibitions of sacred scenes and characters upon the stage, will soon see their views consummated in the 'Passion Play.' What possible good can result from these juvenile exhibitions of elocution and song, finery and vanity, flowers and gilt pasteboard? They do indeed 'draw' immensely, but not to the truth or to Christ. Our Sunday night 'Choral Services' and 'Sabbath-school concerts,' advertised as 'Entertainments,' are really feeders of the opera and the theatre and not counter-attractions, and probably a strict enforcement of law would close both." "Evil communications corrupt good manners" (1 Cor. 15: 33).

No indulgence is right which unfits us for holy communion with God. Just think of the gossiping, joking and fun in such meetings, and then getting down on our knees to pray! Often these giggling, fun-making entertainments lead to quarrels, disputes, and divisions; and the devil thus steals away all real appetite for prayer. "Neither be ye idolaters, as were some of them; as it is written, The people sat down to eat and drink, and rose up to play" (1 Cor. 10: 7).

We are not permitted for pleasure's sake to enter into worldly fellowship. In all seriousness and sincerity we ask, What are festivals, tea meetings, and entertainments, as usually held by modern churches, but parties of pleasure? What are the attraetions on such occasions but worldly allurements; and the entertainment but worldly pleasure? How can those who so frequently enjoy pleasure parties in a church think it a sin to attend them outside of a church, even though it be in a circus or theatre? "For what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? And what communion hath light with darkness? And what eoncord hath Christ with Belial? Wherefore, come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and toueh not the unclean thing, and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty" (2 Cor. 6: 14–18).

The modern church bazaars, lotteries, ete., lead to extortion, extravagance and gambling. Often prices are asked for articles at bazaars that bear no kind of honest relation to eurrent and legitimate valucs; thus teaehing and practicing extortion. Sometimes young men are led into the sin of extravagance—going beyond their ability—by the persuasiveness of some "pretty young lady;" and the first lessons leads to more.

Relative to this subject, T. K. Lombard asks the following pertinent questions:

What is gambling but a resort to a game of chance to make money?

Are not "lotteries," "grab-bags," "guess-cakes," "gold-ring-cakes," etc., all games of ehance in the fullest sense of the word?

Are they not resorted to by the church for the purpose of making money?

Have not others as good right to make money through games of chance as the church has?

May not church members, and others, as properly attend games of chance in other places as in a church?

Is gambling any less so, when carried on in a church, by church members, and for ehurch purposes?

Must not such works, constantly carried on by the church, tend to encourage a dissolute life in society?

"It is written, My house shall be called the house of prayer, but ye have made it a den of thieves" (Matt. 21: 13).

The eyes of the Lord are in every place, beholding the evil and the good (Prov. 15: 3).

This know, also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without, natural affection, truce breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof; from such turn away (2 Tim. 3: 1–6).

But, and if that evil servant shall say in his heart, my Lord delayeth his coming; and shall begin to smite his fellow-servants, and to eat and drink with the drunken; the lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of, and shall cut him asunder, and appoint him his portion with the hypocrites (Matt. 24: 48–51).

And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold (Matt. 24: 12).

RINGS WITHIN RINGS.

Secret rings are chains by which the devil binds the souls of men. If one hundred men get up a Masonie lodge, ten men within that lodge ean get up a ring within the ring and govern the other members just as the one hundred govern the neighborhood. All that the ten men have to do in order to keep the other ninety in order is to toss them a crust now and then. With that, most of the dupes of the lodge are satisfied. They are willing to vote any Mason into the Presidency if he will give them a pension.

So, too, let us suppose that a ring is got up among the clerks of the departments and members of Congress; there is no reason why a smaller ring of Dorseys and Bradys might not get eontrol of them, and toss them a few crumbs from time to time, while they themselves might be plundering the treasury. There is no end to the capacity of Freemasonry for mischief. It can aid men to plunder any bank, or any treasury, and at the same time maintain them in positions in society that are deemed "ancient and honorable." It can run any ehurch in the interest of the most corrupt set of politicians in the country.

But the lodge can give nothing to the young American in exchange for the manhood which it robs him of. When the lodge member shall sum up his final accounts, he will find that he will have gained nothing from Freemasonry in a pecuniary point of view, while in every element that goes to make up a man, he has lost a great deal. Nothing is more wretched than the condition of the man who has bartered away his freedom and independence for the paltry advantages which the lodge can give him. He is like the young man who has sold his virtue to a bagnio in exchange for a loathsome disease, whieh saps the foundation of his health, respectability and happiness. The youth who has any manhood left after going through the hazing of the lodge, would resent the knavery of its leaders by voting against them on every occasion that might offer. The man who aceepts the insult that has been imposed upon him by the Masonie initiation, can claim no higher distinction than that of being either a clever sharper or the dupe of sharpers. All his boasting is but to cover up his own degradation.

How is it possible that the American farmer can trust a man who acts on the sly, in the darkness of the lodge, while so few men can be trusted in these days when acting openly in the light of day? With the farming interest it is suicidal to vote secret society men into office. It should be a principle of political action with the American freeman never to vote for any man who resorts to the tricks of Freemasonry for any purpose whatever. All the honorable pretences of Freemasonry are but mere devices for covering up fraud; and by voting Masons into office we encourage fraud. Every political success of a Freemason is a premium on vice and dishonesty. To allow a man to practice his tricks in the dark and give him eredit for an honest purpose is to eherish every kind of villiany that can be conceived or accomplished.

We cannot honor a Freemason with the Presidency of the United States without honoring Freemasonry itself; and if we do that, we dishonor every institution that can be called American. There is nothing American in Freemasonry. The Masonic lodge means plunder. It cannot possibly effect a union between the North and South, unless it is upon the grounds of giving pensions to everybody of "both armies," the "Blue and the Grey" alike.

AMERICAN.

THADDEUS STEVENS.

PERSONAL RECOLLECTIONS OF HIS LAW PRACTICE, RELIGIOUS BELIEFS AND DEFENSE OF COMMON SCHOOLS.

An old acquaintance of Thaddeus Stevens, has given the Philadelphia Press the following recollections of him:

"I was intimately acquainted with Mr. Stevens from the time he came to Lancaster in 1841, until he died in 1868. I had met him a few years before, being one of a committee of six or eight who went to Gettysburg to get him to come here to address our people upon Anti-masonry. He consented to come, and his speech made a deep impression.

"William Jenkins, Esq., one of the leading members of the bar at that time, and a Democrat, too, after listening intently to the speech to its elose, turned to me and said: 'That is a great man—he is a giant.' The reception whieh our eitizens gave him at that time, I think, caused him to consider the question of locating here. Then, too, he was hopelessly in debt at that time, and I think he hoped that by coming here he might be able to recover himself financially. His success was assured before he came. He built up a practice very fast, and made money.

"When he died his personalty was appraised at $60,000 and he valued his realty at between $100,000 and $200,000. He was careless about his charges, however. Why, when he died, there was not a single charge upon his books against a living soul."

"Did any one owe him?"

"Of course they did. When he beeame sick the last time, a representative of a very wealthy firm in the eity came to him to pay him for some valuable services he had rendered, but Mr. Stevens said, 'Do not bother me about money now, I have plenty. I do not need any, and when I do I may call upon you.' The money was never paid to Mr. Stevens or his executors. This is only one instanee. One man, I believe, and only one, after Mr. Stevens' death, came to the executors and said he owed them $100 and wanted to pay it. His fees were generally paid voluntarily by his clients, they naming the amount, too.

"Men frequently came to him and asked for his bill, when he would say: 'Why, do you owe me anything? What is it for?' and if he needed any money he would let them pay what they thought was right; otherwise he would pass the matter over and get nothing.

"He shrank from and hated oppression of any kind. His great heart reached out to the people and the race, and the people loved him. He could not have endured that his representatives after his death should oppress a living being for a dollar of indebtedness on his account.

"His method of practicing law was characteristic. He disliked office work. I do not think he ever wrote an agreement over a page long. Some agreements, which other lawyers would spread out over pages, he embodied in a few sentences. He seldom spoke over a half hour in trying a case, but each word counted. He drove right at the salient points, and cared very little for details. He had few equals in examining witnesses, especially in cross-examination. His mystic wand cleft the rock of falsehood and deeeit, and laid bare the hidden springs of truth and justiee. His biting sarcasm was proverbial, and Carlyle himself was not more severe in unmasking sham and driving imposture back to its foul nest.

"He never expressed himself freely about his religious beliefs. It is said that he died a Roman Catholic, but that arose from the fact that in his last sickness some Sisters of Merey came and begged to see him, and when he was told of it and was asked what should be done, he simply said, 'By all means let them come in. If they can do aught toward soothing my pillow, or easing the passage, let no obstruction be placed in their way.' And they were admitted to his chamber, and he simply yielded a passive submission to their ministrations.

"Yes, I believe there has been some agitation recently in some of the papers as to his defense of the common school system of Pennsylvania. Mr. Edward MePherson, I believe, has set that matter right in a recent letter to a Philadelphia paper. I remember well Mr. Stevens' speech on the school law delivered in the legislature in 1835. It brought down the house, and it was universally conceded that it turned the tide in favor of the common-school system. But for that speech the school law would have been repealed, and our school system, the boast of our State to-day, would have been nipped in the bud.

"I have his speech printed in pamphlet form, only eleven pages, short and concise as usual, but a perfect philippic. It is a classical production, and beside, brim-full of common-sense philosophy. He liked the common, and, devoting himself to it, made it respectable, and he won an immortal name, while others, striving after the uncommon, and spurning the common, had their day and are forgotten."

MASONRY ILLUSTRATED.

The tenacity with whieh the average Vermont Mason holds on to the absurd shams of the Lodge surpasses that with whieh Pat elings to the traditions of the priests. His faith in absurdities is illustrated by the following story:

In the early days of Waitsfield, Vermont, a Mr. Savage had a daughter who dreamed three nights in succession that a pot of Captain Kidd's treasure was buried near a ledge of rocks east of her father's house. Mr. Savage immediately began digging for the money. Following the rules prescribed for such cases, while the father dug in silence (for not a word was to be spoken or the mystic charm would dissolve) the daughter sat near by reading the Bible, just as the Masonic High Priest, with a red nose, is often supposed to be doing on his way to the burial of some fellow sot. Mr. Savage's son Sam was present occasionally to lend a hand when necessary.

After digging some days in this manner, Mr. S. finely had the satisfaction to hear his crowbar clink down amongst the pieees of gold and silver! Completely overcome, as if he had heard the veritable "Mahabone!" whispered in his ear, he let his crowbar stand as a landmark of the true spot, and beekoned to Sam with a true cabalistic sign to come and give him help. But unfortunately Sam had not been initiated into hunting for pirate's money, and could not understand what his father wanted. In trying to understand his father's strange signs and gestieulations, he spoke right out, just as any anti-mason or other disbeliever in flummery might do. But of eourse the moment Sam spoke the treasure disappeared! The pirate Kidd had probably given it a horrid oath, in writing, not to reveal the true plaee of its concealment unless the right word should be spoken.

Mr. Savage believed to his dying day that if Sam had not spoken, he should have got possession of the treasure. Like a true Freemason, he could never be ridieuled out of the idea that he had got hold of the veritable key to the great lodge above.

How many Masonic dreams of office are to be disappointed hereafter by some honest word inconsiderately spoken, which will dissolve the mystie charm by which office has heretofore been gotten!

Whenever now I see a Mason making signs for office, I think how happy he might be if it were not for Sam! Let us hope that every other mystic worker who seeks to make money out of piratic plunder may be doomed to disappointment! Many a boss has his crowbar stuck into the lodge, and is making frantic gesticulations for Sam to help him to the official treasures which it holds.—The Sword.

—A new building, to be used for both school and ehurch purposes, is to be erected at Umvoti, in the Zulu Mission, as a memorial of Mrs. Daniel Lindley. She was a daughter of Dr. Willard Parker, of New York, and the first person to begin schools in Umvofi for kraal children. A revival is in progress at this station, at least fifty of the natives expressing a desire to become Christians.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

MACEDONIA.

Dear Cynosure:—This region and season of the year is prolific in camp-meetings. That of the King St. church, near Chambersburg, Pa., closed on the 16th with, I think, excellent results both to the cause of religion and reform. It is noteworthy that this church, though cast out by their brethren, besides their ordinary Christian work, support their excellent semi-monthly paper, the United Brethren in Christ, an annual camp-meeting, a foreign missionary society that sustains a mission school in West Afriea, and aids liberally in the general reform work.

Nor have they forgotten the work of home missions. About two years ago the people living among the slate hills west of Greencastle said to the brethren of King St. church, "Come over and help us," and Rev. John Fohl, a veteran missionary, held a series of meetings for eight weeks, resulting in an extensive revival, the organization of a church where one was needed, and the erection of a neat house of worship. This was called Macedonia and has been fairly prosperous, having been supplied by the King St. brethren since its organization. This little church is also interested in foreign missions, and has called a meeting to organize a missionary society.

I went there by invitation on the 18th, and on that evening they had an excellent meeting for prayer and conference. On Sabbath I preached twice to large congregations, and lectured on Monday evening the 20th. On Sabbath evening my subject was the "Relation of the Secret Orders to the Church," and on Monday their relation to civil government. Excellent attention was given and much interest was manifested. I am constrained to mention Rev. W. O. Tobey, editor and pastor, Rev. J. M. Bishop, Rev. P. Nicklas, Rev. J. Fohl, Bro. Adam Nicklas and many earnest Christian sisters, who have been very active and faithful in Christian work in Chambersburg and vicinity. They all feel a warm interest in our work here in Washington. I returned to our headquarters here on the 21st and found an accumulated mail waiting my attention. May the Lord give me wisdom for my work.

SOME LESSONS FROM THE STRIKE.

The agreement which all the striking telegraph operators must sign who re-enter the service of the Western Union Telegraph Company reads:

I.....of.....in consideration of my present re-employment by the Western Union Telegraph Company, hereby promise and agree to and with the said company that I will forthwith abandon any and all membership, connection or affiliation with any organization or society, whether secret or open, which in anywise attempts to regulate the conditions of my service or the payment therefor, while in the employment now undertaken.

And I do hereby further agree that I will, while in the employ of said company, render good and faithful service to the best of my ability and will not in anywise renew or re-enter upon any relations or membership whatsoever in or with any such organization or society.

Dated.....1883.

[Signed].....

The frog that tried to swell to the size of an ox and burst in the effort, did not more signally fail than did the brotherhood of telegraphers in their late strike. Like the dead frog let the remains of the secret brotherhood be decently buried and—forgotten.

I write this in no want of sympathy with the hireling oppressed in his wages. The grievances of the operators were real and ought to have been redressed, but to submit to a secret, despotic and irresponsible order, officered by men whose personal interests would be promoted by that which injured their so-called brethren, and who exercised their power regardless of the public good, was surely a strange and evil remedy.

One good result has at least been achieved. Like the plotters of the slaveholders' rebellion the strikers built more wisely than they knew. In both instances emancipation is the result, and emancipated labor is the great want of the times. Haply the people are beginning to see this, and while they are disposed to oppose monopolies they are equally disposed to oppose organized despotisms. The following, from the New York Mail and Express, illustrates this rising conviction: "What right have 4,000 men, or 10,000, or 1,000,000 men to turn honest, willing workers out of a job, as was done by the Trades' Union yesterday at the new Park & Telford building? Is a country really 'free' when laborers are not free to find work as, and when they please, without asking leave of any one?"

Let this question be carefully pondered by all working men; and let them also ask, What right have men to organize any secret associations that are not responsible to public opinion or to civil law, and whose members swear to conceal each other's secrets, even to the extent of murder and treason? That the members of such orders are not always as bad as they swear to be, is no justification of their course. Let all secret orders be suppressed.

TRADE UNION FAILURES.

J. S. McClelland, secretary of the Executive Committee of Knights of Labor, in his testimony before the U. S. Senate Committee of Education and Labor now in session in New York, said that the total number of strikes in Great Britain from 1870 to 1879 inclusive, was 2352. The largest number was among miners and colliers and the smallest (18) among agricultural laborers. Of these strikes but 71 succeeded in their object, while the loss in wages was $22,734,000. The loss of wages by the telegraphers' strike is estimated at $400,000. The loss to the Western Union company and to business interests was far greater. It is abundantly evident that as a means of settling differences between laborers and employers, strikes are a failure.

Another fact is coming to the surface. The officers of the trades unions are generally "black listed" by employers, that is, by their position and influence they are in marked disfavor with them, and hence have nothing to gain by continued peaceful labor. It is for their interest to add numbers to the union, keep non-union men out of work, accumulate funds as fast as possible, and precipitate a strike. In fact, their selfish interests are just the reverse of that of the rank and file laborers they are supposed to serve.

It is highly probable that if every trades union in the land were disbanded, there would be an immense gain not merely in personal freedom, but in accumulations and comforts of life. There are three classes that would be sorely troubled: the indolent who want support without work, and who therefore delight in strikes; the incompetent, who want as much pay for poor work as for good; and the officers who get salary and notoriety but add nothing to the means of support. But it would be vastly cheaper to support these men by public tax than that they should hang as leeches on honest laborers.

As an illustration of the despotism of these orders there appears in the Star of last evening an "order" that the Hod Carriers Union, No. 1, Washington city, shall meet at their hall at 10 o'clock sharp, Aug. 27th, form a line and march through the principal streets of the city. "Any member of the Union who works on that day shall be fined $2.50 and his working card shall not be granted till his fine is paid. A medal will be awarded to the fastest loader. The race will come off at 5 o'clock."

These men are, I suppose, colored, and earn an honest livelihood. The enforced loss of a working day and the attendant spree will be severely felt. How much better is such bondage than that from which they were emancipated? H. H. Hinman.

THE MORRIS SCHOOL IN LIBERIA.

REPORT FROM THE AFRICAN ENTERPRISE OF A PHILADELPHIA PHILANTHROPIST.

Philadelphia, Aug. 20, 1883.
No. 4, Merrick St.

Editors Cynosure:—I think you will read with pleasure the following report from the teacher in my Liberia School, received last week:

COPY.

The school is opened regularly five days in each week with reading from New Testament Scripture, and closed with singing and prayer. The books in daily use are as follows: The New American Spelling books, Readers and Arithmetics; Goodrich's Child's Pictorial History of the United States; Mitchell's First and Second Lessons in Geography; Richardson's Temperance Lesson Books; Foster's story of the Gospel and Bible (colored illustrations.)

The children are very anxious to learn, and handle their books with care—the Native children especially prize a book more than our American children. Another son of a chief entered school this month, making five in all; including these, there are now eighty children in your school, more than half of these are natives.

The stories of the Gospel by Foster I must say are the most profitable books we are now using, they are so easy to read and understand. Oh! how the Native boys love to look at the picture of our Saviour and ask, "Is this the American Man's God?" Believe me, my dear Mr. Morris, you have done a great good already in having these poor little boys brought into your school and taught the way of life.

Eight of the Native boys have joined the church, they never heard the name of Jesus until they heard it in your school. So let us praise God for what he has done for us in our labors. This has been my prayer ever since I commenced the school. When these little boys were baptized a great many of their Native brethren were there. They heard these boys praising God, and telling them to "come and find the American Man's God."

Be encouraged, the Lord is blessing your work here, and its influence is spreading far and wide in this dark land. Our church is crowded every Sabbath with Natives to hear the gospel. Believe me when I say, your school is an open door to the heathen around this settlement. It has awakened the church in Arthington to a sense of its duty. When strangers come to your school they cannot tell the country boys from the American, they are all dressed alike with the material you sent made on your sewing machine. The mulberry seed you sent are growing well, some of the plants are three feet high.

The above report is from a Negro teacher, once a slave in Georgia. If the climate of Liberia will allow the mulberry to grow to a tree, then it is my intention to introduce silk culture. This industry, more than any other methinks, will be a practical step towards helping African women to become independent of the men. The future of Africa must come from Christian mothers, not from women slaves. If it is true that the "Home is the father of the State," so is it true that woman is the mother of the home. Your brother for Christian homes, schools and churches in Africa, Edward S. Morris.

THE SAN FRANCISCO CONCLAVE.

Bro. H. J. Becker, author of that original and valuable pamphlet on Good Templarism, "Borachio's Bo-peep," writes from San Francisco to the Telescope some of his experiences and observations connected with the Knight Templar Masonic gathering in that city:

I was taken for a Templar yesterday. A woman on board the steamer "Modoc," on the Sacramento river, came to where I was sitting with my wife and said, "I hope you will not think it impertinent in me to ask you if you are a Knight Templar on your way to San Francisco. I saw you on the street in Sacramento and took you to be a stranger here." I replied. "I am not a Knight Templar. I am a resident of the coast." I was about to ask her the object of her inquiry, but she left sans ceremonie, and did not show her face again. Who is she? What construction shall I put upon the searching looks which she and others gave me before I was interrogated? Do I look like a worshiper of Osiris, or like any of the numerous votaries at heathen shrines? Mr. Editor, the mosquitoes annoyed me some, and to save my blood from being taken by them I did beckon them to desist; and it may be that my gestures appeared like awkward signs of my belief, and that her husband or some one else took me to be a hurried-through candidate, practicing, it may be, the paladinean art. I cannot now recall that any of the little creatures bit me anywhere in the regions of the larynx, or that I arranged my neckerchief, or gave an unusual sign of distress as they now and then succeeded in getting a sip of the life-fluid which courses through my veins. I am glad the woman did not get her surmised reply. How could I be a Sir Knight and at the same time command the respect of my fellow-citizens whose civil rights I had sworn to trample under foot whenever or wherever my Masonic obligation made the demand, or of my Christian brethren whose "religion" I had been taught to "abhor as a monster."

I am acquainted with two members of the Triennial Committee. One of them is a wholesale liquor-dealer in one of our cities. The other is a fallen-from-grace Baptist preacher, who two years ago in a Masonic address at the dedication of a Masonic temple in Woodland, Cal., asserted that Masonry was above twenty-five thousand years old. He sought to prove the assertion from the supposed chronology of Egyptologists. A Methodist minister took him to task concerning the far-fetched fable, and challenged him to give reliable historic proof for the antiquity of the order of the white-apron brethren; but he kept his jewel. It is rather humiliating to the ancient craft to be brought face to face with the historic fact that it was born in a brothel in a European city almost wholly given to licentiousness, and that only one hundred and sixty-six years ago. Some of the most noted infidels on this coast are also noted Knights. Their names appear in public print as though they were worthy of double honor. Great things are contemplated here this month. August 18th is set apart as a day of parade. Sir Knights are coming in every day. Grand Commander H. M. Romberger of Mississippi, it is announced, will be escorted to the city next Sunday. That holy day—a "day which God hath made," and in which he ought to be worshiped in his holy temple—this God-impugning, Christ-rejecting institution proposes to set aside and do greater honor to an earthly master than to the meek and humble Jesus, in whose light alone may be found the life of men. I repeat it: How could I belong to such a craft? Deny Christ? Never! Reject the atonement? Never! Fellowship those who deny Christ and reject the atonement? Never! I would far sooner be a slave in Central Africa, subjected to the unnamable indignities so common among them, than to be a Masonic serf in civilized America, bound under the penalty of death, never to break the shackles which bind me to a religion which ignores the "only way" of my salvation, and in its stead sets up a morality as foul as the atmosphere in which it was conceived, and vulgar as the base den in which it was born.

American Politics.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,

JONATHAN BLANCHARD,
OF ILLINOIS.

For Vice President,

JOHN A. CONANT,
OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

IOWA AND OHIO.

The voters in these States have to decide in a few weeks the important question of the legality of the liquor business. The old parties have been compelled to recognize and act upon it, and their nominations are made ostensibly in view of this fact. Attention has been called to the fact that the Iowa candidate for governor is a 33 degree Mason and member of Albert Pike's "Supreme Council" of "Sovereign Grand Inspectors General." His public advocacy of the prohibition of saloons falls far short of the manly, zealous, sincere devotion of such men as St. John of Kansas. In Ohio, on the other hand, the Republican candidate is of a more hopeful character, as says the Telescope:

Joseph B. Foraker, Republican candidate for governor of Ohio, is yet quite a young man, being only thirty-six years of age. He was reared to the industries of the farm in Ohio, entered the Union Army at sixteen, and served in the Army of the Cumberland till the close of the war. He was promoted to the office of captain for efficient services during the campaigns in Georgia and North Carolina. At the close of the war he returned to school at the Ohio Wesleyan University, and graduated from Cornell College in 1869. In the fall of the same year he was admitted to the bar, and began the practice of law in Cincinnati, where he has since resided. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, is a strong temperance man, and favors the taxation of the liquor-traffic as a party-measure. If elected governor, his influence would be given to the enforcement of any laws which may be adopted relating to the suppression of the curse of intemperance. Judge Foraker is not a member of the Masonic fraternity, as has been alleged by some since his nomination. This shows him to be a man of self-reliance—free from the lodge entanglements with which many public men are embarrassed. Men of positive worth of character do not need the prop of secret societies to lean on in order to reach positions of usefulness and distinction.

FOR THE SECOND PLANK.

In the Cynosure of May 24th it was noted that President B. H. Young, of the Louisville, New Albany and Chicago railway has ordered the discontinuance of trains on the Sabbath day. "So far as possible no work was to be done or trains run" on that day, and that "under no ordinary circumstances must any employe who objects on grounds of his religious convictions, be ordered or required to do any service on the Sabbath. If any difficulties arise in the execution of this regulation, you will please report them to me for consideration; and you will also notify employes of their right, on conscientious ground, to be fully protected in the observance of a day of rest." No excursion trains even for camp meetings were to be allowed. The kind of Christianity which demanded them would be in so far discouraged. Mail trains for which contracts had been made would be continued but an effort for their discontinuance promised; also when absolutely necessary perishable freight and live stock would be passed on.

This unusual order while attracting wide attention and favorable comment met adverse criticism all over the country. Railway managers especially marked the experiment, as it seemed to them, as bigotry and folly. But a few days since, when President Arthur and his company passed over this line the reports were full of praise for the excellence of the road and the ability of its management; and in a business way the road has prospered. The work of two months shows that the predicted loss has not appeared. President Young recently telegraphed: "Our June business has been larger than ever before, and the aggregate earnings are the largest on record."

The Railway Age of Chicago says: "While the experience of one railroad for two months is by no means conclusive of the question at issue, yet it certainly tends to refute the position taken by so many managers that a single railroad or a portion of the railroads of the country cannot afford to cease Sunday work, and that Sunday observance is not practicable unless all railroads unite in it. The Louisville, New Albany and Chicago road has discontinued Sunday traffic and has increased its business, and there are no indications that its earnings for May and June are one dollar less than they would have been if its employes had been worked seven days in each week. The results of the reform inaugurated by the management of this important line will be watched with great interest. While the religious element in the problem should not be ignored or undervalued, the decisive point will doubless be the economical results of the experiment. Meanwhile, it is very gratifying to know that the host of employes of one railroad in this country have been permitted during bright May and delicious June to enjoy the sweets of Sunday quietness and rest without doing financial injustice to any one."

In a letter recenty published in the Railway Age, President Young declares that so long as he remains in the management of the road no change will be made. Taking the high ground of Christian principle he says: "I do not think that Christian railway managers can ignore divine teaching upon this subject. The laws of God and the laws of man are conclusive upon it. Every railway manager operating a road on that day violates human and divine command, and by forcing his employes to do the same sets before them a continual example of the disregard of highest obligations." The points which he makes, with admirable clearness and force, in justification of his course, as summarized by an exchange, are:

1. That "without the day of rest men can enjoy neither health nor freedom." He appeals to the abundant testimony of railroad men to prove this.

2. The universally conceded fact that religion qualifies a man for the discharge of every duty. "If railroads teach their men to violate the Sabbath they dull the obligation which they would feel, both to God and the State, their respect for the laws of the railway itself and their sense of duty to their employers."

3. The defenseless condition of railway property, at the mercy of employes, as the riots of 1877 taught. "Is it wise, therefore, to teach and train them to break, with impunity, the laws made for their protection?"

4. There are 500,000 men in railway service in this country, more than half of whom are compelled to work on the Sabbath. "The results of thus requiring 250,000 persons to violate the day simply to make money for the corporations, often in contravention of their own scruples, are of incalculable injury, not only to the parties, but to society at large." "This compulsory violation of their duties is a monstrous wrong against their religious and family rights."

5. Men who have families are generally more constant and faithful in service than others. The Sabbath is the only day on which the laboring man can enjoy his family. Deprive him of this, and we take from him many of the qualities which make him fixed and true. It is also a wrong to them and the injustice works out a double evil."

THE GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC.

A brother makes the following inquiries: "Will you be so kind as to give us, through the columns of your good paper, what you think of the G. A. R.; also state if you know of any Wesleyans belonging to it, and was you ever a chaplain in the army?" We believe the Grand Army of the Republic to be the invention of Freemasonry to popularize secret societies, by rendering the patriotic sentiment subservient to this purpose. Freemasonry seeks to avail itself of any popular thought and sentiment to advance the general interests of secretism. It has sought to utilize the temperance cause by dragging it into unnatural relations to secrecy. A high Mason, who recently died in Syracuse, wrote the Good Templar Ritual. When the Bible in the schools was the especial issue, a secret society was immediately originated to secure favor from professed devotion to the Bible, when it was clear that it was rather designed to use the general esteem for the Bible to promote the interests of organized secretism, than to render organized secretism a help to the Bible. It is the same thought and purpose in seeking to lead all old soldiers into organized secretism. It is a most unnatural relation for an old soldier, who has nothing of his devotion to country to hide away from general observation.

We served between three and four years as chaplain of the 96th Regiment N. Y. S. V. This regiment was organized at Plattsburgh, Clinton county, N. Y. We personally know of no Wesleyan who is a member of the G. A. R. We most earnestly advise all our brethren to keep clear of all secret societies, of whatever name or profession. We have but one sentiment on this question which has always controlled our personal relations. The gospel of Jesus Christ neither teaches or tolerates secret societies, and that ought to be enough to settle this whole matter with all who profess to follow the teachings of him who declared, "In secret have I said nothing." "He that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest."—Wesleyan.

Correspondence.

LETTER FROM IOWA FRIENDS.

EAST TENNESSEE QUAKERS VINDICATED—SOME OPINIONS ON HISTORICAL CHARACTERS.

Pleasant Plain, Iowa, 8-10, 1883.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—As we have for several years been interested readers of thy paper and do fully realize the great need of the reforms so ably discussed therein, we feel it right to endeavor to correct a statement in No. 45, 8-2, of present volume, signed J. C., by stating to thee that an anti-secret man, a member and elder of the meeting by which those persons were disowned in East Tennessee, is now visiting his children and other relatives in and near Pleasant Plain; and as the communication contained in its face, features which made the writer at first reading doubt the veracity thereof, it was read in presence of this friend; who said, "Well I know all about that case," telling their names in full; but said it was "entirely misrepresented. It was in no way connected with the subject of secrecy. There was no agitation in regard to the subject, and had not been any." He then related the case, as he said, from the beginning, to us. It was a very clear case; but altogether different from the account given in the paper.

We are considerably acquainted with this man personally, and are well acquainted with his character; which is good. He has with him a minute from said meeting, recommending him as an elder in unity with the meeting.

We believe there is an influence exerted, which designs to get incorrect statements made in this paper for the purpose of injuring it. That communication savors of having been written by one unacquainted with the order of Friends.

We have noticed a few communications from, and accounts relative to some whom we know to be noisy professors whose lives do not correspond with their profession; but we cannot suppose in this day of so much loud profession and so much short-coming in living up to it, that such a paper will be likely to keep entirely clear of such. We admire the paper and sympathize with its editor in his arduous duties; also with the noble corps of workers, some of whom we have been pleased to receive at our homes. We heartily desire the success of the cause it so nobly advocates, and gladly lend our influence in its aid.

We would also allude to what is said of O. Cromwell in same paper. We have undeniable evidence of the truth of his being accountable for much of the suffering and persecutions endured by Friends, and others, on account of religious scruples, and for many atrocities which were perpetrated under his protection; and of his being, many times warned by them of what would overtake him if he did not cease to wink at such things as were done under his name. The condition and cause of his death seem to show his sense of guilt. And further, we would say that we cannot accept Macauley as a reliable historian. We learn that it is known and acknowledged by some of the foremost colleges, that of Haverford especially, that he cannot be depended upon in regard to many things; but especially we fault him for giving a disgraceful and untruthful account of George Fox, the first to come out and preach Friends, doctrine; and also of William Penn, the founder of Pennsylvania, and a faithful and true Friend also. When Friends of England learned that Macauley was thus writing of Fox, they visited him with testimonies from various sources, to convince him that he was in error in respect to his character; but he persisted in his course. We would hope that no religious denomination would suffer his book a place in their libraries.

We do not write this in any fault-finding spirit by any means, but for the good of the cause we so much love; and as a watchword, if it may be, to guard against anything that may retard the progress of this good work, which is so much obstructed.

We do especially value H. H. Hinman's letters in Cynosure, and many others. There surely is a noble work going on. May it be abundantly blessed is our sincere desire.

WHAT ARE COLLEGES FOR?

We have an idea in America that colleges are very essential instrumentalities for maintaining our institutions, both religious and eivil; and that by no manner of means were they designed for keeping alive the vieious, malignant buffooneries of that old, effete relic of barbarism, the Masonic lodge. Yet the University of Vermont seems to think otherwise. That institution has recently lent itself to the usual trick for glorifying the vulgar pomposities of the sly craft by giving them a eorner stone to lay, whereby the college has disgraced itself as well as the State of Vermont, whose University it claims to be.

There are these valid and especial reasons why this Vermont College should not so unnecessary be-little itself. First, the head of the college is a Congregationalist, to whose religion the lodge is more uncongenial, even than Romanism itself. Seeond, the State of Vermont has a law on her statute book which classes Freemasonry with crimes against public justice, and prohibits its oaths under the penalty of a fine and imprisonment; and third, the character of the people of the State for honesty and independenee is outraged by this concession to triekery and fraud. The University of Vermont might as well invite a Mormon or a Ku-Klux to lay the corner stone of one of its buildings as to call on a Freemason to do it. The course of the University in this action, which is so regardless of law and self-respeet, cannot meet with the approval of any body but demagogues and political partisans. Just so far as the University possesses any weight of character, it uses that weight to erush down all the real merit of the State; for no man of any real elevation of eharacter can ever thrive where Freemasonry is thus honored. Nor ean a proper moral, politieal, or literary sentiment be disseminated where the rank impostures of Masonic mountebanks are held up as worthy of the respect of the rising generation.

The bombastic, empty grandiloquence of the so-called Grand Master who delivered the address on the oecasion ought to prove sufficient to convince the faculty that they made a great mistake in ealling in his services, if nothing else would Of all the revolting speetaclcs that we ever beheld, the most absurd is that of a Vermonter trying to puff himself up, like the frog in the fable, into the full dimentions of a Masonie grand title. He wholly misconeeives the character of his State, of Republican government, of the Christian religion, and of true manhood, and he devotes all his ingennity to playing the trieks and grimaees that would better suit a baboon in the toggery of a Pope, than an American eitizen. The Vermonter who makes himself a Mason with a long title, needs but one thing more to make himself complete, and that is a pair of long ears.

We presume that the object of the university in thus eonsenting to dishonor itself, lower the State, and deseerate the cause of learning, was merely to serve a partisan purpose in politics with a view to sustaining the Republican party and its next nominee. But a party that looks for support to sueh unworthy tricks as this, ought not to be sustained by the Ameriean people; and least of all by those of Vermont. An institution of learning that for a political purpose, or for any other purpose, offers a place to a Grand Lodge humbug to spout Masonic bombast, is a disgrace to any Christian community of modern days, whether in Vermont or out of Vermont. If Vermont has nothing else to offer for the service of the Republic than the low, dirty tricks of the Masonic lodge, it is time for the rest of the country to know it. I, for one, in the name of the ancient and honorable eharaeter of the State, protest against this wilful degeneracy which the lodge is impressing upon our politics, our religion, and our society. The men who have thus aided in degrading this once honorable institution of learning for a mere partisan purpose, will be justly held in reprobation by the enlighteued sense of mankind. Vermonter.

PITH AND POINT.

NOT QUITE A BUSHEL.

We have a heap of elippings made from newspapers printed in houor of the stupid proceedings of Freemasonry. There is not a bushel of them, it is true; but there are a great many of them. A bushel of such might easily have been got at the time when they were made. This was some ten or a dozen years ago, when the lodge was rampant and in all its glory. To look back at those times, it seems like a strange dream, so utterly derogatory to American manhood was the worship of the lodge by which they were characterized. Relative to the two different ages the worship of calves in Bethel a thousand years before Christ, was not more unmanly than this American adoration paid to the lodge. It is a sickening reflection that men can become so pervertcd, and so void of common sense.

What shall we do with these elippings? Perhaps they might make a good pillow for some Masonie High Priest, or troubled editor. On such laudation of the old handmaid, his dreams would be sweet.

Kitchen Gardner.

SIGNS OF PROGRESS.

Note—One of the eneouraging signs of the times is the faet that in all the great gatherings of the people, in the soeial temperanee meetings, temperanee camp-meetings, mass-meetings for the eonstitutional and statutory prohibition of the great liquor seourge and curse—less and less is seen, or said, or known of "Sons of Temperance," "Good Templarism," "Knights of Temperance," ete., or any other secret "orders." All these seem to be lost sight of in the great struggle—and all the people mingling in the eommon cause for the overthrow of the common enemy. "So mote it be." Geo. W. Clark

WELL REMEMBERED.

When I was quite young Freemasonry became very popular in the plaee where my father lived (near St. Thomas, Canada West, now Ontario), and he and my uneles with many neighbors were about joining them, when it eame out that the lodge had murdered Captain Morgan. That altered the ease and from then until now I have utterly opposed the lodge and have always wondered how any one, especially a Christian, could have any sympathy with the baneful system, which has not as I can see, oue redeeming quality.

LESSON XI.—September 9.—Ruth and Naomi.—Ruth 1: 14-22.

Golden Text.—Thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God.—Ruth 1: 16.

"Ruth clave unto her." Expressing her resolution in action, as Orpah had expressed hers. Ruth's motives. (1.) Ruth's resolve, and her action in throwing her arms around the neck of Naomi, were not merely from love, but also from regard for Jehovah, concerning whom she had been instructed by Naomi and her own husband (vers. 16, 17).—Johnson. (2) Ruth realized, in her affectionate heart, a keen sense of her mother-in-law's forlorn condition. She could not consent to abandon her under these circumstanees.—Kitto. The difference between mere kindness of manner and self-sacrificing love is most vividly depicted in the words, and she clave unto her.—Cook.

"Unto her people and her gods." Both having attraeted her, as she adhered not to Jehovah, but to her own god. Ruth had forsaken her people and her false god for the chosen people and the true God. The two were in opposite states religiously. We must not suppose, however, that Orpah was a very bad woman (see ver. 8). Early education and an unregenerate though ordinarily moral nature determined her course.—Johnson.

"Whither thou goest I will go," ete. The effeet of Naomi's repeated entreaties to Ruth to leave her was only to bring out more elearly Ruth's steadfast determination to east in her lot with the people of the Lord. Compare the very similar entreaties of Elijah, and the steadfast determinntion of Elisha not to leave him (2 Kings 2: 2-6). In Elisha's case, as in Ruth's, the reward of steadfast persistence was very great.—Cook. "And thy God my God." Now this is a pattern of a resolute eonvert to God and religion. We must take the Lord for our God. "This God is my God for ever and ever; I have avouched him for mine." We must take his people for our people in all conditions; though poor and despised, yet, if they be his, they must be ours. We must be willing to fare as they fare; submit to the same yoke, and draw in it faithfully; take up the same cross, and carry it cheerfully; go where God would have us to go, lodge where he would have us to lodge, die where he would have us to die.—Henry.

"They came to Bethlehem." The early home of Naomi, which she had left ten years before. Here, too, she had a small estate (Ruth 4: 3). Bethlehem, although originally of little consequence, is honored as the birthplace of the most illustrious personage of all history, and as the residence of Naomi, Ruth, and Boaz. King David was born here.—Whitney. Then, as now, its single street ran along the double crest of the white chalk ridge, 2,500 feet above the sea; its slopes terraced into hanging gardens, with rows of olives and vines; a pleasant valley lying underueath on three sides, musical with the sounds of brooks, though its eastern end is almost touched by the terrible wilderness of Judah.—Geikie. "All the city was moved." Bethlehem was a small town (Mic. 5: 2); and in such small villages, and especially in an age when there were no newspapers, mails, etc., every event flew quickly abroad by the commuuications of friend to friend. Naomi's return was an uncommon occurrence. The city, and especially the women, were throwu into peaeeable uproar. Everybody ran, told the news, and wondered. For more than ten years had passed since she had left Bethlehem. Her husband, we know, belonged to a prominent family in the city. All this renders it natural that the news that Naomi had returned, poor and sorrowful, spread like wildfire, and created what to her was an unpleasant sensation.—Lange.

"Call me not Naomi." The meaning of Naomi is pleasant, sweet, to which she opposes what she calls a more appropriate name for her in her present circumstances. Call me Mara, i.e., bitter (Ex. 15: 23).—Cook. Ten years have turned Naomi (beautiful) into Mara (bitter). What assurance is there of these earthly things whereof one hour may strip us? What man can say of the years to come, Thus will I be?—Bp. Hall. It is good at times to be in distress; for it reminds us that we are in exile.—Thomas a Kempis. If God have loved thec, thou canst have had no lack of trouble.—Bengel.

"Hath afflicted me." The Jewish writers generally think that they did wrong in leaving their own country to go and live among idolaters. Observing that the law of the old covenant contained promises of unfailing subsistence to those who trusted in God, it is held that it had been the more faithful part for them to have remained, trusting to the Lord for their sustentation. They found death in the land of their choice, which the Jewish writers believe to have befallen them as a judgment.—Kitto.

BAND OF HOPE BIBLE LESSON.

SECRECY A COVER FOR SIN.

2. Hide me from the secret counsel of the wicked; from the insurreetion of the workers of iniquity;
3. Who whet their tongue like a sword, and bend their bows to shoot their arrows, even bitter words;
4. That they may shoot in secret at the perfect; suddenly do they shoot at him and fear not.
5. They eneourage themselves in an evil matter; they commune of laying snares privily; they say, Who shall see them? Ps. 64: 2-5.
14. For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil. Ecc. 12: 14.
20. Jesus answered him, I spake openly to the world; I ever taught in the synagogue and in the temple whither the Jews always resort; and in secret have I said nothing. John 18: 20.

Golden Text. O my soul, eome not thou iuto their secret; unto their assembly, mine honor, be not thou united. Gen. 49: 6.

Central Truth. Seeret societies protect crime.

1. When men band together in secret, and refuse to let those outside know what they are doing, we naturally conelude that they are plotting misehief.
2. The brigands of Italy, Greece, and other eountries, often unite together with a system of secret signs and passwords. They know that in this way they can rob a greater number of travelers, and with less risk to themselves.
3. If Masonry was really pure and benevolent as it pretends to be it would not wish to keep its doings secret.
4. Murders have often been planned in Masonic lodges. The most noted case was that of Capt. Wm. Morgan, but there have been others both before and since.
5. Capt. Morgan's murder in 1826 roused sueh indignation that they have not dared to go to the same length again, and usually try some other way to iujure those who oppose them. One very eommon method is to slander their eharacters.
6. Freemasonry is the mother of all the secret soeieties in the world. Some are more innocent than others, but there are always certain points of resemblanee.
7. The men who have been lately hung in Ireland for murders, committed the erime at the order of a seeret society.
8. Men often learn to drink in the lodge.
9. Secret soeieties bring them into association with profane and godless men, and after a while they learn to be like them.
10. Seereey emboldens men to engage in erime.
11. Secret societies are very dangerous to good government. To-day the peaee of every European nation is more or less disturbed by their plottings.
12. The secrets of Masonry as well as most of the minor orders have been revealed. They are losing much of their power in this way, for when good men can see for themselves how foolish and sinful they are they will refuse to have anything to do with them.

PRACTICAL TRUTHS.

When people are afraid or ashamed to let others know what they are doing, they are probably doing something that is wrong.

Secret societies foster drunkenness and other vices.

They try to injure those who oppose them—sometimes by taking their lives, but more often by telling falsehoods about them.

They are condemned both by Patriotism and Christianity.

LESSON TALK.

Every Freemason breaks the Sixth Commaudment in spirit when he takes its terrible oaths. Many of the degrees are founded on stories of assassination. The next step is to break it in letter, for the taking of sueh murderous oaths, and the acting of such scenes, is in itself a preparation for murderous acts. The noted desperado, Jesse James, was a Freemason. Like many other famous freebooters, he joined the order because of the protection it afforded him in his crimes. An old man who had been a Mason many years once confessed, "I have never gained any advantage from my conneetion with the order." Honest, law-abiding men do not find iu seeret societies the benefit they expeet, aud sometimes they are frank enough to own their disappointment. The reason is because the laws of our land are framed to protect honest people,—the laws of secret societies are framed to protect criminals. Said a Freemason to a young acquaintance who was thinking of joining the lodge,—"If you want to be a slave, join it; if you want to be a free man keep outside." Many a one has fouud out this truth by bitter experience. They see too late that they have surrendered their liberty into the hands of bad mcn whose criminal doings they are obliged to keep secret, and whose orders they must obey however uulawful. A man will often drink a glass of liquor in secret who would be ashamed to do so in public. Thus the lodge fosters intemperanee. The whole principle of secrecy is to cover sin, and a Christian has no business to enter such societies. Nor is it enough to resolve to have nothing to do with them. We should warn others of their sin and harm.

LESSON HYMN.

Thou art a God before whose sight
The wicked shall not stand;

FARM NOTES.

PROVIDE YOUR OWN LIGHTNING ROD.

Dr. Geo. Thurber, gives much valuable information in an article on the above practical question in the American Agriculturist for August.

First. As to the rod itself. It is well known that copper is a much better conductor of electricity than iron, but it is so expensive that iron is most generally used, making the rod much larger than would be necessary if it were of copper. The shape is of no consequence, and the twists and grooves in some "patented" rods are merely to beguile the ignorant. The rod may be of round 7-16-inch iron, or it may be a flat strip an inch wide and 3-16ths of an inch thick. If more convenient to procure, larger iron may be used, but it should not be smaller than these sizes. It is very important that the rods be continuous. The pieces of round iron may be joined by couplings, which are cut with a screw-thread on the inside, while the ends of the rods are made to fit. The portions are usually joined by welding.

Second. The manner of fastening to the building. At one time it was customary to pass the rod through a glass ring, which was fastened to the building, and the rod thus kept from contact with it. But insulators of this kind are quite useless, for as soon as they are wet they cease to insulate. The rod may be attached by staples. There is not the least danger that lightning will leave the rod to pass into the house by way of the staples. A flat rod may be fastened by a strap of iron fashioned to clasp it. Should the rod be painted? Some years ago there was an idea that the conducting power of the rod would be injured by painting it. This is not true. Paint the rod of any color that will make it as inconspicuous as possible.

Third. How far will a rod protect? The old rule was that a rod would protect an area with a radius twice as great as the hight of the rod. In practice little attention is paid to this rule, it being customary to provide each chimney with a rod, which, in most houses, will bring them much nearer than the above rule requires. Each chimney should have a rod, connected with the main rod, which runs along the peaks of the roof and to the ground. Upon all ordinary buildings but one main rod is needed. If there is a roof of tin or other metal, this, as well as all irou crestings and other ornaments, shonld be connected with the rod.

Fourth. The upper end of the rod. Formerly much stress was placed upon having the rod terminated above by a very sharp point, which should be kept gilded to protect it from rust, and later, platinum points were used. At present neither of these are regarded necessary. The rod extends a foot or two above the top of the chimney, and is filed to a point. The various ornamental crestings much used on buildings answer as points. If the chimney is a long distance from the gable-end of the roof, it is well to place a short upright piece of rod there, which should, of course, be pointed.

Fifth. The lower end of the rod. The mere placing of the lower end of the rod in the ground, so that it will be out of sight, will make the rod intended as a protection a source of danger, and the building would be safer without it. The whole object of the rod is to carry off the electricity quietly, and its usefulness depends upon a proper termination in the ground. Dry earth is a poor conductor; moist or wet earth is a good conductor. The lower end of the rod should reach a place where the earth, in the dryest time, is always moist. Some dig down to this point and then surround the lower end of the rod for a few feet with coke, which absorbs moisture and is au excellent conductor. The ease of finding a moist stratum for the rod will differ with the locality, but should always be secured.

SUGAR CORN

Sugar or sweet corn can be turned to such good account that it may be considered one of the best crops to grow in the garden or on the farm. Where a cow or pig is kept, the stalks are valuable to feed. If cut up when green, as soon as the ears have matured and been plucked, and given to the cow, they will increase the flow of milk; and fed to the pig, they will take the place of other food. A pig will grow and even fatten on sugar-corn stalks After the stalks are removed from the ground, it may be sown with turnips, and a double crop obtained.

The largest yield of corn and stalks is obtained by planting in drills, but care must be taken not to sow the seed too thick in the row. Two kernels should be dropped a foot apart, in a furrow which should be made with a hoe or with a plow. The kernels should be covered about two inches deep, and if the ground is dry it should be pressed down with the foot or roller. This will retain moisture better in the soil, and insure quicker germination. Land cannot be too rich for corn. The ground should be kept mellow and free from weeds. It is not necessary to draw the earth up around the corn in the form of hills, as it will do better if the surface is left level. The cultivation ought not to be so deep as to destroy the roots, which grow close to the surface if allowed to grow naturally. By planting later and earlier varieties, a continuous crop may be had until cold weather. The earlier kinds will be ready to eat within about sixty days from planting, while the larger kinds require three mouths. It may be planted as soon as the ground gets warm, but not before, as this seed, unlike most other grain, will rot speedily in cold, wet soil. After the largest and mature ears are taken off, the smaller ones will increase in size, and come on for a later crop on the same stalk.

There are now so many excellent varieties of sugar corn in cultivation, that one can hardly go amiss in making a selection. The earliest to ripen is probably Dolly Dutton, followed soon by Black Mexican, Minnesota and Marblehead; for medium, Triumph and Moore's Concord are best, and for late, Egyptian, Evergreen and Mammoth, Tuscarora has a red cob, and remains a long time fit for boiling.—American Garden.

TO EVERY READER.

A large box of anti-secrecy books, tracts and literature has been sent to Bro. Hinman for use in Washington. Have you any thing to give towards sustaining Bro. Hinman and the free tract work at the capital? The books are for sale, and any friend calling will be glad to purchase one or more; and, while obtaining a memento, aid a trifle in carrying on the good work at No. 215, 4½ street, N. THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)

Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.

Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)

Christian Reformed Church.

Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)

Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.

Disciples (in part.)

Friends.

Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.

Mennonites.

Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.

Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)

Moravians.

Plymouth Brethren.

Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.

Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)

United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowshlp and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

New Ruhamah Cong. Hamilton, Miss.
Pleasant Ridge Cong. Sandford Co. Ala.
New Hope Methodist, Lowndes Co., Miss.
Congregational, College Springs, Iowa.

J. F. Galloway, Okahumka, Florida.

Wm. Hazenburg, Cape Towu, S. Africa.

A. D. Zaraphonithes, Smyrna, Turkey.

Contributions for either of these brethren may be forwarded through the Treasurer of the N. C. A. Please designate to which one such funds shall be sent.

OLD FACTS IN A NEW FORM.

Do you want the Christian Cynosure for one year? There are three ways to get it:

1. Send the subscription price (single copy) $2.00.

2. Send $8.75 for a club of five, at $1.75 each, and get a copy one year for your services.

3. Send $15.00 for a club of ten at $1.50 each and get a copy extra for yourself.

Names may be sent at different times and papers addressed to different postoffices; but when you send the last name and order your extra copy, please give at the same time the entire list of names in your club, with the address of each, so as to avoid confusion or mistakes.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, AUGUST 30, 1883.

Masses for the Dead.—The Catholic Review is pleased with the Independent's pronouncement that no court should throw out claims by priests for money left in wills for masses for the dead. How about Tetzel's auction of indulgences, and German opposition to such mock auctions; and what of "Peter's Pence" in England? Were the German and English courts all wrong?

The Telegraph Strikers are reported beaten. The secrecy, oaths and initiations of the brotherhood almost escape notice by the press. Their funds from their own treasury, contributions of other trades unions, private subscriptions, Sunday picnics and balls have been exhausted. Man-made secret religions help men here as little as in Asia.

Open Brotherhoods of laborers with no oaths or initiations; newspapers well supported by laboring men fearless and firm in the advocacy of just wages; and voting for political candidates faithful to the interests of labor, with the chance always open of laborers becoming stock-holders by industry, economy and patience—if these do not ensure laborers against oppression, secret societies, oaths and worships will never do it. The men who accept the devil's proposition, made to Christ, will lose in the bargain both purchase and price.

The Pacific (Congregationalist) San Francisco, Aug. 15, gives the Knight Templars' Conclave a respectful but questionable greeting, thus: "Grand Master Dean arrived yesterday, and thousands of Knights are expected this week. The gathering is a novel one for this coast. What it all means we shall better know a few days hence." We shall await the Pacific's judgment with more than usual interest, as it is an able paper, and represents most of Puritan sentiment on the Pacific coast, and a single paragraph from "Bradshaw's Apology" places Templarism and Puritanism in simple antagonism:

"They [Puritans] hold and maintain the absolute perfection of the Holy Scriptures, both as to faith and worship, and that whatever is enjoined as a part of Divine service, that cannot be warranted by the said Scriptures is unlawful."—Neal I. 248.

Secretary Seward's "Travels around the World," (p. 725) speaks briefly of the extermination of Knights Templary, "five hundred years ago throughout Europe." But those who wish to see the popular estimate put upon knighthood at that day must read Cervantes' "Adventures of Don Quixote De La Mancha."

Mormonism and the Republican Party. Hon. Edwards Pierrepont has been (say the papers) to see President Arthur to induce him to make the overthrow of Mormonism the one grand issue tendered by the Republicans in 1884. This will not, or, if adopted, would not save the Republican party. True the Mormons have voted Democratic since their prophet Smith claimed to have a revelation in favor of Stephen A. Douglas. But Mormonism was modelled after Masonry, in fact is Masonry with the requisite modifications. The records of the Grand Lodge of Illinois give the action of that body excluding Mormons as Masons, and both the old political parties are run by the lodge. If either attempts to go to work in earnest against Mormonism it will split on that rock, as Whigs and Democrats split on slavery. The party which extirpates Mormonism will be a new party, and though now no bigger than a man's hand it may soon sweep like a cyclone. Ten righteous men would have saved Sodom. We may find at least a like proportion out of the lodge in the United States.

SPANISH FREEMASONS.

The lodge is one the world over. It is the secret enemy of every government which it cannot control. In Mexico, it has conspired, indifferently, against empire or republic. In France, secret lodges overturned the Lamartine Republic in 1848, about four months after Lamartine took the helm. And that brilliant and powerful writer lashed them, comparing them to the squirming creatures which in times of quiet lie hid in the stagnant pools of society, till the breezes of popular agitation blow off their slimy coverings, and expose them to the light for a moment, when they instantly again dive out of sight, and continue the plotting, mining and vices which are at once their occupation and their element. In the siege of Paris and the Franco-Prussian war they made one of their periodical apparitions, marching out in their regalia upon the city walls and then returning to their holes, apparently satisfied with having excited the gaping wonder of the street. Such another apparition has just been seen in Spain as given in the following dispatch:

"Madrid, Aug. 19.—Quiet having been restored throughout Spain, the various bodies of gendarmirie engaged in quelling the recent uprising have returned to their former stations. Provincial officials are actively inquiring into the causes of the rebellion. Documents found on the insurgents who belong to the northern army, show that Masonic societies had been influencing the army since 1877. Among the documents is a circular issued by a junta from Paris, on the occasion of the formation of the dynastic left, setting forth every contingency which was likely to arise, and declaring that it was intended that the first movement should be made in 1878 and another in 1881."

WHAT DOES THE PLATFORM CONTAIN?

Mr. Editor:—I rise to inquire what is involved in the first plank of the platform of the American party, which reads as follows: "We hold that ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government." There is a question in the minds of some conscientious voters in our country as to the full import of the latter part of this proposition. There is no question as to the Divine origin of civil government; but the point of inquiry is, whether this proposition is designed to embody the principle now advocated, to wit, that the Lord Jesus Christ, as Mediator, is the ruler of nations. H. L. Atchison, Avery, Iowa.

ANSWER.

"The fifth-monarchy men," a small sect under Venner, made or attempted two insurrections, one against Cromwell, the other under Charles II., in favor of the reign of Christ on earth. There is no tinge of their sentiments in the first article of the American platform. Christ's kingdom was not of this world. Otherwise his servants would have fought. (John 18: 36.)

What then means the first plank of the American platform?

1. It means that "There is no power but of God," (Rom. 13: 1); no court without the oath of God; that hanging men without a sheriff's warrant from such a court, is murder or lynching; that American after the English common law, is from the Bible, so that laws which deny or repeal the Decalogue are void. (See Blackstone, passim.) In short it means that the Bible is the standard of law and morals.

2. What then means the declaration that, "Governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed?" It does not mean that murderers must "consent" to be hung, or mobs to be dispersed. It means that the people, not kings, priests or aristocracies, who are but a portion of the people, must establish and accept governments to make them valid. But when once established, governments are under the law of God. A law giving one man a dozen wives, or the possessions of another man without compensation, or generally giving one man discretionary power over the life, liberty, or property of another, would be void ab initio, no matter how many people should consent to that law. It is unequal and ought to be broken. Majorities cannot make consciences. The first plank of the American platform, to wit, that human rights and powers of government are from God, has been recognized since there was a Christian government until now; and party platforms omitting this plank are outside of Christian civilization.

BISHOP WEAVER'S OUTLOOK.

Bishop Weaver gives above two columns to "The Outlook of the United Brethren Church," in the Telescope of Aug. 22d inst.

The anti-secrecy antecedents of this bishop are these: In the Lebanon (Pa.) Conference, he was with the great and overwhelming majority against secret societies. The secretists rallied after that Waterloo defeat; started a paper at Harrisburg; then held a nullification convention at Dayton, Ohio; denounced the rule against the secret orders, and recommended removing the nullification organ to Dayton itself, under the eaves of the denominational printing house! Bishop Weaver made no motion and took no measures, either to enforce the law, or to reprove the open and avowed nullifiers who defied the church to enforce the rule excluding Freemasons. But he wrote a coaxing, friendly letter, which was published in the successor of the Harrisburg organ, in which he gave no word of reproof to the nullifiers. Prof. Tobey took charge of a paper at Chambersburgh, Pa., and ex-Bishop Wright started another at Richmond, Ind., against the secret orders, and both are supported by United Brethren, and several conferences endorse and recommend Bishop Wright's paper. During twelve years of agony and struggle Bishop Weaver has looked on in comparative silence. Indeed, excepting his Harrisburg letter, giving "aid and comfort" to the malcontents, we have seen nothing from his pen in the controversy, nor has he officially, that we are aware, taken any measures to enforce the law. But the United Brethren church, and the country generally, are slowly awaking to the horrible nature of the deism and idolatry of the lodge; and Bishop Weaver now comes to the front and utters himself thus:

"On the secrecy question I stand where I stood forty, thirty, twenty, and ten years ago. I am and always have been conscientiously opposed to all secret organizations."

But his whole two columns are an attack on those who have stood for the church against Freemasonry and nullification.

He then proposes his remedy for the distractions of the church:

1. Let men of God, who have carefully studied the whole question, point out the evil nature and tendencies of secret organizations.

2. Let those who believe that our present law is not what it ought to be formulate a law based upon what they may conceive to be the spirit and principles of the Gospel of Jesus, and submit it to and for the consideration of the church.

3. Let all the true and tried friends of the church rise up in the spirit of the Master and demand that this wholesale way of denouncing brethren who may see differently from themselves must be stopped.

This weak fanfaronade reminds one of the grave proposition of the leader in a convention of mice, "Let somebody bell the cat."

Have not "men of God" these many years "pointed out the evils of secret societies," in the Telescope and elsewhere? and are not the very men who have done this traduced by this bishop for "denouncing" Warner and others who declared that the law could not, would not, and should not be enforced.

If Bishop Weaver is sincerely opposed to the secret orders, would it not be more manly, not to say Christian, for him to aid those churches which have Freemasons in them, to enforce discipline and purify themselves? This is what he is chosen and ordained to do. His three remedies are mere brutum fulmen. If he and his brother bishops will meet in Dayton and consult with and aid the First United Brethren church there, to induce their secret society members to quit their lodges, the whole connection would hail it as a benison.

N. C. A. Board.—A meeting of the Board of Directors of the N. C. A. is called for Monday, September 3d, at 10 A. M., in Carpenter Hall, 221 West Madison St., Chicago. All members of the Board are expected to be present. By order of the Chairman.

—The General Secretary left this office for the Iowa meeting on Thursday last, stopping on business at several points. He had an appointment at Albia, Iowa, on Sabbath afternoon, and was to speak in a church near that place in the morning. He had also engaged to lecture on Monday evening.

—Pres. C. A. Blanchard called at this office on Wednesday on his way to Iowa. The friends of Morning Sun and Mediapolis had engaged him for three of his matchless speeches against the lodge, and he was to preach last Sabbath in the latter place. He is at the State meeting this week.

—Rev. Isaac Bancroft, State agent for Wisconsin, reports fifteen lectures in July and visits with 342 families—a good record for midsummer.

—Among the visitors at the Cynosure office of late we are happy to note Bro. J. Brush who "holds the fort" at Marion, Iowa; Bro. T. Hudson of Kalamazoo, Mich., to whose large-heartedness our cause is much indebted; Prof. E. G. Paine of Wasioja Seminary, Minn., who was homeward bound after a vacation of hard study; and the irrepressible Bro. Edward Mathews, who, fresh from the conflicts and halleluiahs of one campmeeting in Michigan, is to begin another at Toronto, Iowa, in a few days. He gives the lodges no peace in the pulpit or out of it.

—The Hebrew Standard, organ of several Jewish lodges, has a biographical sketch of Justice Alfred Steckler of New York, whom it calls the "model judge", and discourses with enthusiasm upon his merits, his popularity, and the great things his friends propose to do when he returns soon from Europe. But the secret of all this eulogy and exaggerated praise is in these lines:

"The following are some of the organizations that Judge Steckler is an officer and member of: Ex-president Cooper Union Literary society. Noble Grand Edward Everett Lodge of Odd-fellows. Member of Wieland Lodge, Knights of Honor. Past President of Gad Lodge, F. S. O. I. Chancellor Commander Republic Lodge, Knights of Pythias. Ex-chairman of Committee on Appeals of Grand Lodge Knights of Pythias of State of New York. Junior Warden of United States Lodge, F. & A. M. Member of Y. M. H. A. Past President Palestine Lodge, I. O. B. B. President for two years of Y. M. H. U. Member of Sons of Benjamin Lodge. Member of Home for Aged and Infirm Hebrews. Director of German hospital, Sixth street. One of the committee of fifty of Citizens Movement. Member of Grand Lodges of I. O. F. S. of I., and I. O. B. B. The firm [of which Steckler is one] are counsel for the Bricklayer's National Protective Union, Longshoremen's Union, Bakers' Union, Cooks' Union, Coachmen's Union; and in fact most of the trade unions throughout the city. the Liquor Dealers' Protective Association, of which George Hillen, Esq., is president, and most of the beneficial lodges and societies throughout the city."

A judge with such antecedents and associations must be a model indeed!

REFORM NEWS.

KANSAS.

The Kansas State Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, will hold its semi-annual Convention in the State House, Topeky, Kansas, commencing at 3 P. M., Sept. 24th, 1883 and continuing through the 25th and 26th.

The following programme is arranged: Addresses on Government Reform, by Rev. D. H. Coulter; on Prohibition, by Rev. C. H. Strong; on Anti-secrecy, Rev. B. F. Worrell; each of these to be followed by discussion. Secretary J. P. Stoddard, ex-Senator Pomeroy and other able speakers will take part. The first and the third degrees of Masonry will be explained by S. E. Starry.

W. W. MCMILLAN, Sec'y.

MICHIGAN.

There is to be a meeting of the Michigan Association Board of Trustees at Free Methodist church on Wednesday morning Sept. 5th. in the city of Jackson for the transaction of very important business, which will come before the meeting, concerning future action in Michigan. Let no member of the Board fail to be present, and let as many others come as can. Bro. J. P. Stoddard expects to be present and it is possible ex-Senator Pomeroy will also be present to speak on the occasion.

H. A. DAY, Sec'y. M. C. A.

INDIANA.

TO THE FRIENDS IN INDIANA:—By the concurrence of the Executive Committee I hereby announce the eleventh annual meeting of the State Christian Association to be held at Oakland City, Gibson Co., Oct. 16th, 17th and 18th inclusive, (commencing Tuesday evening, Oct. 16th). Eminent speakers will be there, of whom due notice will be given. We confidently hope the friends in Southern Indiana will help make this a grand meeting by having the meeting well advertized in the annual conferences and other church meetings, by coming themselves, and having others come. S. L. COOK.

BRO. FEEMSTER AGAIN MEETS THE FOE.

DELPHOS, Kansas, Aug. 20th, 1883.

I came to this county over a week ago by invitation of Rev. J. C. Bernhard, a Wesleyan Methodist minister, stationed at Grover, some nine miles from this place.

On arriving I found brother Richards of Fort Scott, already on the ground to aid in the work. I would to God we had many such workers as brother Richards and brother Bernhard. Our audiences varied with the weather, and with the outside pressure, but the average was fairly good, and the attention marked.

In Delphos we were all strangers. We found it a town of perhaps a thousand inhabitants. It has one M. E. church, and one Universalist church, with a dancing hall in the basement. It has eleven secret societies and is the headquarters of the Spiritualists of the State. In such a place it is not strange that when we came to fill our appointment we found another meeting advertised to occupy the hall at the very time for which we had engaged it. Our first appointment was thus entirely defeated.

But the Lord opened a door for us to enter in. We secured the use of the M. E. church, had our posters struck off and scattered them in the houses of the people with our own hands. We thus secured a fair hearing of the best people of the town, and that notwithstanding the fact that a ball was in full blast within a stones cast on one side and on the other a Spiritualist camp-meeting drew the crowds together so near to us that we could almost hear their shouts as the people "sat down to eat and drink and rose up to play."

I have been deeply impressed during these meetings with the truth of our Saviour's words: "My sheep hear my voice and I know them and they follow me."

Here in Delphos we have found houses that were worthy in which to tarry, and while some met us only to contradict and to blaspheme there were others, earnest souls, who gathered round us to bid us Godspeed and were willing even to suffer shame for the truth. May the peace of God rest upon them.

P. S. FEEMSTER.

THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES IN MISSISSIPPI AND ALABAMA.

COLUMBUS, Miss.

In consequence of a protracted meeting in progress at a church near Ridgeway Academy, the Convention of the Associated Churches of Christ met at the Piney Grove church. The meeting was well attended, most pleasant and harmonious. In the discussion of the best means of opposing organized secrecy, some cheering facts were brought out of the success that had attended the labors of different members of the churches represented in the Convention, among which was the prevention of six brothers from joining the Masonic lodge by showing its wickedness, the turning of the attention of a leading man to the same by a single leaflet, and the breaking up of an entire lodge. According to previous appointment there was a discussion of the best means of putting the Bible into the hands of every one, in which many participated. It was delightful to hear the earnest testimonies to the great experimental value of the Bible and to witness the zeal for its circulation. Among other accounts of destitution a teacher told of his school of seventy-five scholars in which there were only two Testaments and one church Bible, and he placed before the mind's eye the children crowding around the church Bible to read. A resolution was passed recommending to all the churches to form Bible societies and keep on hand the Word of God, and make continued and earnest effort to place the Bible in the hands of every one.

I hope the suggestions to women in a late number of the Cynosure will wake some hearts and pens to speak. I know that many are necessarily so occupied with their home duties that they cannot write for the press, but let us all pray. There are many who can write who keep silence, and many who might be most useful helpers in the reform who keep still. My sisters, do you know that whenever any great good is about to be accomplished Satan steps in, in the form of organized secrecy, to oppose it. Do you know the great responsibilities and also the liabilities of the hour? Shall it be said of each of us, "She hath done what she could?"

MRS. M. A. F. TAPLEY.

LITERARY.

Several valuable additions to Mr. John B. Alden's popular publications have been noted in these columns; as, The Life of Alexander H. Stephens by Frank H. Nortou, and the reprint of the series of Ancient Classics for English readers: Demosthenes, Aristotle and Plato. These volumes first issued in paper covers in the Elzevir library have been also well and neatly bound in cloth, and are sold at the usual low rate established by Mr. Alden, 25c. and 30c. per volume. Other publications uniform in style and price are a "Life of Peter Cooper" by Charles Edward Lester, a well known journalist and correspondent, for some time in the U. S. foreign service and author of a popular life of Sumner. This life of Peter Cooper is a handsome tribute to a great and unselfish soul whose efforts for his fellow men it would be difficult to measure. Mr. Alden has also put in permanent form a recollection of the great Brooklyn bridge in a 25 cent volume, containing the orations by Hon. Abram S. Hewitt and Rev. Dr. Richard S. Storrs, on the occasion of the formal public opening of that structure.

No one can note without an honest pride and satisfaction the progress made by people of moderate means in the construction of their homes. In this is marked the effect of liberal education and a Christian culture. In some communities the exterior appearance of many houses indicates a fine taste in the workman who supervised their construction, and it is one part of the education of a journeyman carpenter, too generally neglected, that he should know something of architectural designs. A company of European architects, Palliser, Palliser & Co., now established in Bridgeport, Conn., recognizing the value of developing and training a correct architectural taste, have made the public their debtor, by publishing their charts of "Useful Details" in a cheap and popular form. These consist of forty plates, 20x26 inches in size, containing details drawn to a scale of all parts of an ordinary dwelling, and must be to every builder almost an cucyclopedia of his art. These forty charts are furnished by the Messrs. Palliser for $3.00 per set. They are a good investment for any builder and in some of rapidly growing towns of the West ought to be a kind of public property for frequent refereuce.

The North American Review for September is almost overburdened with topics that have been of late the burden of political conventions, trade unions, "sand lot" orators and strikers meetings. Chief Justice T. M. Cooley of Michigan shows that in a considerable degree the principles of common law can be applied to restrict the exactions of corporations. Congressman Kasson of Iowa writes on "Municipal Reform;" Richard Grant White on "Class Distinctions in the United States," especially those falsely made by wealth; James Jackson, Chief Justice of Georgia, on the dueling habits of the South; and G. W Green on the "Caucus and Primary." Other contributors are W. H. Mallock, the English writer and moralist, Dr. D. S. Phelau and Grant Allen.

—According to the American Newspaper Catalogue of Edwin Alden & Bro., Cincinnati, Ohio, just published, containing over 800 pages, the total number of newspapers and magazines published in the United States and Canadas is 13,186; (showing an increase over last year of 1,028.) Total in the United States 12,179; Canadas 1,007. Published as follows: Dailies, 1,227; Tri-Weeklies, 71; Semi-Weeklies, 151; Weeklies, 9,955; Bi-Weeklies, 23, Semi-Monthlies, 237; Monthlies, 1,324; Bi-Monthlies, 12.

THE UNITED PRESBYTERIAN CONVENTION.

The convention of members of the United Presbyterian church opposed to the use of musical instruments in the public worship of God, held in Allegheny, Pa., August 14th and 15th, was an enthusiastic, harmonious and august meeting. Over five hundred delegates were in the body, and a large local attendance filled the church. Gen. James A. Ekin of Ohio was selected to preside, and among the prominent members present were S. Collins, D. D., president of the National Convention at Batavia; Prof. J. W. Carson of Zenia; Prof. Ed. F. Reid of Monmouth; Rev. Dr. D. W. Carson of the Christian Instructor; Rev. Dr. R. Audley Browne of Pennsylvania; Hon. James Dawson of Washington, Iowa; Rev. Dr. Geo. Wishart of Ohio; Rev. Dr. James P. Lytle of Washington, Pa.; Wm. Floyd of Pittsburgh; Rev. Dr. W. W. Barr, for years editor of the Instructor; Rev. Dr. James Harper, and others. The addresses were characterized by a moderation unexpected by the advocates of the organ, yet there was so deep and earnest a conviction that the time-honored practice of the church should be maintained that further steps in the controversy will be very cautiously taken.

The resolutions, unanimously adopted, are as follows:

WHEREAS, By the action of the General Assembly, opening the way to the introduction and use of instrumental music in the worship of God, a crisis has been precipitated upon us in which it has become necessary to do something to secure our liberty and rights of conscience in the church; therefore, by this convention of ministers, elders and members of the United Presbyterian church it is Resolved, 1. That whether the rule in our Directory was repealed or not, we assert that even without such rule, the Constitution of the church, its Confession of Faith, Catechism, Testimony, Book of Worship, unwritten law and ancient usage preclude the use of instruments in worship in the United Presbyterian church, and that they always have been unlawful, and their intrusion on unwilling parties is a violation of personal liberty and the rights of conscience.

2. That, standing as we do on the constitution and laws of the United Presbyterian church as adopted at the time of the union, we claim for ourselves the liberty of conscience guaranteed by that solemn compact, and we propose to remain steadfast and maintain our rights and liberties in the church by all legitimate means.

3. That, without derogating from the just respect that is due to the General Assembly as the superior court of the church, we nevertheless claim that our obedience and submission is due to it only as its decisions are in accordance with the mind of Christ, as expressed in the standards of the church.

4. That we concur in the protest of the minority in the last two General Assemblies, against the action of the majority; also, that a memorial be prepared by the officers of this Convention asking the General Assembly to declare that according to the standards of our church the use of instrumental music is unlawful.

5. That we pledge ourselves to stand by and support each other in the maintenance of the principles of our public profession and our just rights in the church.

6. That the officers of this Convention be instructed to memorialize the next Assembly to adopt the proper steps for ascertaining in a constitutional way the sense of the church on the question of the lawfulness of using instrumental music in worship.

7. That an Executive Committee be appointed of seven members, centrally located, with a corresponding member so far as possible from each Presbytery, to which shall be entrusted the duty of giving effect to the action of the Convention by calling ratification meetings in the different Presbyteries, and in any other way judged advisable for securing unity and harmony of action throughout the church, and also have power to call a meeting of this Convention at such time and place next year as shall be deemed advisable.

PROMPT MAIL DELIVERY.

Complaints have been made that the Cynosure was not delivered promptly to subscribers in some instances. We have endeavored to do our part faithfully, and so far as possible protect our patrons from the irregularities of others. There may be some consolation to our friends in knowing that they are not the only victims of unscrupulous employees in the postoffice, and that the government is taking measures to protect the people against further depredations, as appears from the following official order:

SECOND-CLASS MATTER TO BE PROMPTLY FORWARDED.
GENERAL ORDER NO. 145.

Complaint has been made to this Department that second-class mail matter (newspapers and periodicals sent to regular subscribers) is not in all cases promptly forwarded. To the addressee such matter is of at least equal importance with his letter mail, and it should be treated with equal care by postal clerks. If it is necessary to withdraw second-class matter from its wrapper in order to ascertain its destination, it may be done, but will not be allowed for any other purpose. The Postmaster General desires that the practice of reading newspapers and periodicals passing through the mails be discontinued wherever it exists.

W. B. THOMPSON,
General Superintendent.

THE HOME.

THE CHRIST OF THE AGES.

Look, child of time, he comes, the Son of God!
First promise to the fathers from of old!
His steps, through the long ages, marked with blood,
He comes to die the death so long foretold.
First and last promise, lo! he comes, he comes,
To fight our battle, crush the serpent's head,
To conquer death, to burst earth's iron tombs,
Himself the Lord of living and of dead.
The prophet's eye is dim,
The prophet's lips are dumb,
But he, the prophet's theme,
The woman's seed has come!

Creation's gladness, hope of weary man,
How clear thy splendor, though but seen afar!
Light of the universe, long pale and wan,
Now rising in thy strength, heaven's sweetest star.
Son of the Blessed, lo! he comes at last,
The songs of ages in him fulfilled,
God manifest in flesh. The night is past,
And the true day begins to be revealed.
The prophet's eye is dim,
The prophet's lips are dumb,
But he, the prophet's theme,
The woman's seed has come!

He comes to bear our sins, to soothe our woe,
To die the death which only he can die;
To do the work which only he can do,
And lift the lost one up to stand on high.
With crown and sceptre, lo! he comes to reign,
As Prince of Peace to sheathe war's wasting sword;
With glory, honor, blessing, in his train,
He comes, creation's righteous Heir and Lord.
The prophet's eye is dim,
The prophet's lips are dumb,
But he, the prophet's theme,
The woman's seed, has come!

CHRISTIANITY AND THE HUMAN BODY.

Many Christians seem to think it a mark of refined spirituality, to speak in a slighting manner of the human body. A greater mistake could hardly be made. That the body is material and of the earth is no sufficient reason for such contempt; for the material world is as real, and in its way and degree, as worthy of God as the spiritual.

The human body displays the divine power and goodness. We are his "workmanship." The Son of God has honored our physical nature by taking it upon himself, by rising with it from the grave, by taking it with him to the heavenly world. 'Tis true, these earthly bodies are frail and perishing; but they are to be raised in incorruption and glory when the Lord comes. "This mortal" is to "put on immortality," and "this corruptible" to "put on incorruption," upon the coming morning of the resurrection.

Almost all the miracles of Christ were performed upon the bodies of men. It is an error to suppose that we can but serve God in a weak and suffering body. Much of our sickness and disease is caused by violation of the laws of nature, and the laws of nature are the laws of God. All sickness then is a badge of our fallen state, an imprint of the ruin and wreck wrought by the first Adam. Before the fall there was no sickness or disease. Christ suffered every form of human ill, except, so far as we have any record, that of sickness and disease. This is a very significant fact. Would not the freedom of Christians from physical diseases be a triumph for Christ, a wonderful attestation of the power of God, an emblem of their victory over sin, and a type of their future state in the kingdom of God? If God has power over sin, if he can pardon and purify the spirit, can it be that he has no power over physical evils? Does not the greater include the less? Unbelief alone stands in the way. Yet, how inconsistent many are in their unbelief!

Where is there a minister of Jesus who has not knelt beside the bed of pain and disease, and prayed that if it were God's will, the sick might be restored to health. Yet often these very men decry the cure of faith. Is it not almost time to ask whether these prayers are an idle form or a sincere asking? Surely prayer should be modified or faith strengthened. Let us strive for bodily, as well as spiritual, health. We are to glorify God in the body. Surely if our bodies are "temples of the Holy Ghost," we can best glorify God by keeping them in good repair.—Times of Refreshing.

THE DEVIL'S DEADFALL.

Six months ago, two men, Charles Martin and Wm. Hoge, went into Sullivan's saloon, or rather, the devil's deadfall, under the agency of Mr. S., on Main street, B——. They agreed to knock off hats for the drinks. Martin knocked off Hoge's hat three times out of four; so he had to treat the crowd. His brain being maddened by previous doses of the devil's poison, he became sullen over Martin's victory. He was standing outside the door when Martin left the house, and although Martin begged him not to shoot, he fired at him twice. One shot took effect in his arm, the other lodged near his heart, resulting in death in one hour, and sending a soul unsaved to its doom. Money saved Hoge's life, but he is in the penitentiary, while Sullivan, the devil's agent and cause of the crime, is still carrying on his master's business.

About the 22d of May, 1882, Fred Scarf, son of Dr. Scarf, a talented young man twenty-two years of age, went into this same saloon, drank, on a wager, six glasses of poison called wkisky, sat down on a chair and died in three minutes, without God and without hope. His body was taken to his mother a lifeless corpse.

Still this "well-regulated" pitfall into perdition is kept open, and the devil—soul and body murderer—is sustained in his business. Since the doom of the last victim, Major Williams, a brave soldier of the Union army, and at the time a local editor of the B—Index, drank himself crazy, went up the railroad a quarter of a mile, laid down on the track, was cut to pieces by the train, and strewn for a hundred yards along the way. Thus three souls, at least, in a few months' time, in one place, have fallen victims to the saloon deadfall.

Will not this intelligent, humane age and nation, which enacts laws for the protection of beasts, birds and fishes, rise up, in the name of God and humanity, and deliver the already ensnared millions, and destroy this monster curse that threatens the purity and peace, the hopes and fortunes, the very lives and immortal destiny of our rising offspring? O Lord, how long shall the strong arm of the law tolerate this most deadly foe of all the interests of society?—Gospel Trumpet.

THE FIRST AND SECOND COMING.

How great the contrast between the first and second coming of the Lord. We look back into the past and what do we see? A cradle and a cross, and between the two—leading from the cradle to the cross—we see a rough and rugged pathway. Dark clouds overshadow it, and wicked men are ranged on either side of it. With weary step, and sorrowing heart, and tear-dimmed eye, we see the promised Saviour—the sinner's Friend—journeying along that pathway. Words of kindness, and greeting, and love seldom fall upon his ear. The bitterness of wrathful scorn, and the black rage of cruelty are ever tracking his steps and causing grief to his tender heart. We hear a plaintive cry, the piteous wailing of a sorrow-laden soul: "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" His Father's face is hidden from him. The sword of his Father's justice is awaked against him. The arrows of the Almighty stick fast in him. With a bleeding, broken heart, he expires upon the cross. The heavens draw down their curtains in wonder at the sight.

But now we turn to the future, and a different scene meets our view. The curtain is now withdrawn. The veil has passed away. The gates of heaven are open. A triumphal procession issues forth from the realms of glory. The principalities and powers of the heavenlies are there, arrayed in all the glories of celestial magnificence. The angels of God, like a bright cloud of glory, come forth from the heavenly gates. All the unspeakable splendors of the unseen world burst upon our view, giving to all the scene, and to all the circumstances, an air of unutterable grandeur. But we do not pause to look at the subordinate details. For there is One in that assemblage who is evidently the centre of all, the object of admiration and of adoration on the part of all. It is the King—the King of Glory—the great and gloriously exalted Messiah. To him all hearts and lips do homage. Many crowns are on his head. Yea, the crowns of the mighty are being cast at his feet. A long, loud song of praise breaks forth from his attendants, and reverberates through all the realms of space. The King is now in his triumphal march, to take possession of this conquered world, and to bless his ransomed people. And still, as we gaze, the procession moves on. It reaches its destination, and the King of heaven—the King of all the earth—stands once more upon the world; not as formerly, with the tear of sorrow in his eye, and the pangs of grief rending his heart, but with the air of majesty on his countenance, and a crown of glory encircling his brow—that brow which the wicked over-wreathed with thorns.—Rev. Alex. Thompson, in Christian Leader.

HOW TO READ THE BIBLE.

1. Read the Scriptures regularly through. Read alternately, portions from the Old and New Testaments. Begin at the beginning of each. Mark where you leave off and begin there next time. When you have finished each Testament, begin it again.

2. Read with prayer. You cannot by your own wisdom understand the Word of God. In all your readings of the Scriptures, seek carefully the help of the Holy Spirit. Ask for Jesus' sake that he will enlighten you.

3. Read with meditation. Ponder over what you read. You see now the deeper meanings. It is better to think over a little than merely to read a great deal.—George Muller.

HOME AND HEALTH.

If milk be introduced into bottles, put into a pan with cold water, and gradually raised to a boiling point, and after being allowed to cool, be taken out, corked, and set away in a cool place, it may be preserved perfectly sweet for upwards of half a year. The reason is said to be that heat deprives the sugar of its power of changing into lactic acid.

A Simple Insecticide.—Hot alum-water is the best insect destroyer known. Put the alum into hot water and let it boil till it is all dissolved; then apply the solution hot to all the cracks, closets, bedsteads, and other places, where any insects are found. Ants, bedbugs, cockroaches, and creeping things are killed by it; while it has no danger of poisoning the family or injuring the property.

How to Drive Flies out of a Room.—Observations made by M. Rafford, a member of the Society d'Horticulture, at Limoges, show that a castor-oil plant having been placed in a room infested with flies they disappeared as by enchantment. Wishing to find the cause, he soon found under the castor-oil plant a number of dead flies, and a large number of bodies had remained clinging to the under surface of the leaves. It would therefore appear that the leaves of the castor-oil plant gave out an essential oil, or some toxic principle which possesses very strong insecticide qualities. Castor-oil plants are in France very much used as ornamental plants in rooms, as they resist very well variations of atmosphere and temperature. As the castor-oil plant is very much grown and cultivated in all gardens, the Journal d'Agriculture points out that it would be worth while to try decoctions of the leaves to destroy the green flies and other insects which in summer are so destructive to plants and fruit trees. Anyhow, M. Rafford's observations merit that trial should be made of the propertics of the castor-oil plant, both for the destruction of flies in dwellings and other troublesome insects.—From the British Medical Journal.

FLIES.

This is what "The Next Neighbor" in the July Wide Awake has to say about them:

"Now about flies. I can tell you from experience that it is perfectly unnecessary to have even a dozen flies all summer. The neighbors darken their houses and shut themselves up and half suffocate behind screens for fear of these plagues, but I never do either and rarely see a fly. They don't like to come and see me, for they never get anything to eat. One law in this household is executed with the fidelity of a dragon, if dragons are faithful as supposed—and that is to allow no crumbs or smears, and no trace of eatables about the place, outside of the proper rooms and proper hours. Where there is no food there are no flies. You have got to choose between taking strict care to starve them out, or have twice as much trouble with their presence. Yes, I've lived through the usual worry of babies with stickey fingers and children who wanted something to eat between meals, and know what it all means. I don't remember whether I kept a wet sponge to wipe fingers and doorknobs tied to my apron strings or not, but it was something like it. In the first place there is no need of children running about with smeary fingers and slices of bread and butter, for they can learn before they speak to eat in proper places, and to have hands washed as soon as they are through. I have seen a baby worry as much because his hands were not washed, as his nurse could to see him so. Then sticky doorknobs and shelves must be washed anyhow, and it is just as easy to do it first as last, after they have drawn a feast of flies. A smear of sweets on a door knob, a fragment trodden into a carpet, a dust of sugar or drop of sauce on a pantry shelf is enough to feed a dozen flies, and they are alert to take advantage of it. No food is to be eaten or kept in the china closet, which is the place for dishes and table-ware only; all eatables in the pantries are to be kept closely covered in clean plates or jars, all crumbs wiped or swept up as soon as made, and no food or scraps are to stand in the kitchen uncovered when not actually in use. Is it necessary to leave cups of sugar about, with flies taking toll, or gravy with two or three swimming in it, or the freshly baked cake for the whole swarm to parade over, when it is so easy to cover things with saucer or cloth? In the dining-room, as soon as the table is set, it should be covered with the fresh white netting kept for the purpose, and the moment the family rise, let it be replaced till you are ready to clear things away. All food should be set away in ice box or pantry, under cover, tablecloth shaken and the crumbs brushed up before the dishes are washed, which should be soaking all the time. Then air the dining-room thoroughly, so that the odor of food may leave it, and let the windows stand open between meals."

WHO WAS THE COWARD?

Elsie had quite a walk before her to meet her schoolgirl friends for a fern-hunt in the woods. It would not have been so very long if Elsie had "cut cross lots" like most little country girls and boys, but there was a very large field in the way which Elsie always went around.

Now I am afraid if I tell you why Elsie always did this, some of you will think that she was a very silly little girl, and perhaps some little boys or girls will call her a coward, as her brother Jack did.

Elsie was very much afraid of cows. Even gentle old Brindle, whom she had known all her little life, she was somewhat afraid of, and she would go a long way out of her path to avoid meeting a strange cow. You will not wonder then why Elsie would not go through the field when I tell you that there were always several cows in it, some of whom had the name of being very bad tempered. One big black cow with ugly looking horns Elsie was particularly afraid of, and a loud "Mo-o-o" would send her scampering past the field as fast as her feet could carry her.

She had just passed this part of her walk when a familiar voice cried:

"Hello! Elsie, wait a minute, will you?" and looking back she saw Jack coming across the field right among those dreadful cows, without the least fear, his fishing-rod over his shoulder, and a bright tin lunch-pail in his hand.

"Oh, Jack! how can you come through that field?" exclaimed Elsie, with a sigh of relief, as he jumped over the fence and stood safely beside her.

"I'm not a 'fraid cat like you," answered Jack scornfully. I'm not such a baby as to be afraid of a few cows. Where are you going?" he asked, as he saw her basket.

"I'm going to the woods with the girls," answered Elsie. "Let's stop and rest a little while under this big tree, it's so hot."

"All right," answered Jack, throwiug himself on the grass. "I've got lots of time. I say, Elsie," he exclaimed, as he looked up into the green branches waving over his head, "do you see that nest up there? I'm going to make a try for it. Will Ellis said yesterday that he would bet any money that I didn't dare go up and get it; now I will just get it down and show it to him this morning," and he sprang up and took off his coat.

"Oh, Jack, please don't!" exclaimed Elsie. "Perhaps there are little birds in it."

"No, there are not," answered Jack; "for it's an old nest and has been there two or three years," and in another moment he had reached one of the lower limbs and was making his way upward toward the nest.

The bird that had built the nest had evidently intended that it should be beyond the reach of any boy, for she had selected the end of a long and not very strong limb to build upon, and her home had been undisturbed, for no one had cared enough for it to venture after it.

Elsie stood looking up into the tree. She could hear Jach rustling among the leaves as he went up higher and higher, although she could only now and then catch a glimpse of him.

"Jack," she cried, as she saw him venturing cautiously out on the limb, "Jack, please don't go any farther. I am sure that branch will break with you. Don't go out on it."

Jack paused irresolutely. He knew that he would be running a great risk if he ventured any farther out on that slender limb, and he half determined to please Elsie and come down again without making any farther effort to get at the nest.

Then he thought of what the boys would say if they should hear that he had been up the tree and had been afraid to get the nest.

Afraid! At the mere thought of such a taunt Jack's cheeks flushed, and he resolved to get the nest, even at the risk of breaking his neck.

"This branch is safe enough, Elsie," he called down to her, as much to assure himself of its strength as to quiet her fears. "Don't you wish you were up here too," and he rocked himself backward and forward on the swaying limb.

"I see Aunt May coming around the corner," he said, presently. "I must hurry and get the nest before she gets here, or she will be scared too. Here's my hat, Elsie," he added, throwing his broad-brimmed straw hat down on the grass that it might not be in his way.

"Jack, Jack, don't!" pleaded Elsie, almost crying with terror, as she saw the branch bending beneath his weight.

"Stop your noise, Elsie," commanded Jack, rather roughly, it must be confessed. He was a little nervous himself, although he wouldn't have owned it for anything in the world.

Elsie stood still, her hands clasped together, scarcely breathing in her anxiety. Jack was crawling cautiously along, and he had almost reached the nest, and, with his hand outstretched to grasp it, had "Hurrah!" on the tip of his tongue, when there was a cracking noise, and Elsie uttered a shrill scream of terror, as the limb broke off, and Jack came crashing through the branches. One of the lower limbs broke his fall, and he hung in it for a moment, and then fell to the ground.

"Jack! oh, Jack! are you dead?" cried Elsie, as he lay white and unconscious. "Oh, Aunt May, Jack is killed!"

Aunt May bent over him with a face as white as Elsie's own.

"No; he isn't dead, Elsie," she said, as she could hear a faint breathing. "Run home as fast as you can for your father, Elsie. I will stay here with him."

Elsie hardly waited for auntie's words to start off. Her little feet fairly flew over the ground. When she reached the field where the cows were she paused just a moment. Could she go through it? Could she pass those terrible cows? She was only a little girl, you know, and it required almost as much courage to think of going among them as it would have if they had been bears or lions.

Only a moment she paused, then one thought of Jack, lying white and motionless under the tree, decided her. With a very earnest little prayer in her heart, Elsie climbed over the fence. Every moment was so precious; perhaps Jack might die before father could get to him. She ran bravely on, trembling as the cows raised their heads and looked at her with mild eyed wonder, and as the black cow uttered a loud "Moo," it seemed as if her feet would refuse to carry her another step.

At last she reached the fence and clambered over it scarcely believing that she had really crossed the field unhurt. It only took a few moments for her father to harness up the horse and drive back with her to where she had left Jack.

He was sitting up now, leaning against Aunt May, a little color returning to his white cheeks, the nest closely held in his right hand, while his left arm hung helplessly at his side.

He had really escaped with only a broken arm and a slight bruise, wonderful as it seemed, considering the height of his fall. The hardest thing would be to keep him quiet while his arm was getting well again.

For a few days the pain made him so weak that he was glad enough to stay in bed and have the window darkened so that the light would not make his head throb with pain.

When he was strong enough to sit up then indeed it was a hard matter to keep him quiet. He was restless and irritable, and it took everybody's best efforts to keep him in a good temper.

"Oh, Jack, I do wish that you hadn's tried to get that nest and hurt yourself," said Elsie one morning, when it seemed impossible to please him.

"I don't then," said Jack. "I am not a coward. I would rather get hurt than be afraid to do a thing because there is a little danger in it. You're only a girl and girls are always afraid to do anything except walk around or play croquet. Bah! before I'd be a girl."

Aunt May had heard this speech.

"Do you really think that you are braver than Elsie?" she asked quietly.

"Of course I am," answered Jack in surprise. "Do you think Elsie would have dared to climb that tree after the nest?"

"Do you know, Jack, it seemed to me that day as if Elsie was the brave one and you was the coward," said Aunt May.

"Why auntie!" exclaimed both the children in surprise.

"I mean just what I say," said Aunt May. "Tell me Jack, why did you want that particular nest so much?"

"Will Ellis dared me to get it," answered Jack, promptly. "I didn't want the nest specially, but I wanted to get it because it was so far out that no other fellow would go after it."

"Oh," said Aunt May, "then you went because you were afraid not to go—afraid of being thought a coward, and that fear made you hazard your life. I should call that being very much of a coward, indeed. Now, I will tell you how my little Elsie proved her bravery," she added, putting her arms around the little girl and drawing her to her side. "Jack, you know how afraid Elsie is of cows?"

"Yes, she's more afraid of a cow than I would be of a bear," said Jack, wondering how Aunt May was going to prove that Elsie was brave.

"Don't you think it would take a good deal of courage for her to go through a field full of them. I don't say that it would have been brave for either you or me, but don't you think it would be a pretty hard thing for Elsie to do?"

"That's just what she never will do," said Jack, triumphantly. "I've seen Elsie walk all the way round that field a hundred times."

"Yes, I know you have," answered Auut May, "but the other day when you were lying under the tree and Elsie thought you were dying, she went right through that field, because she wanted to briug your father to you as soon as possible. She was afraid to go, but her love for you led her to conquer that fear and go bravely through the cows. Wasn't that true bravery, Jack?"

"You were a brick, Elsie," said Jack, warmly. "I didn't think that anything in the world would make you go past black Daisy."

"There is a difference you see, Jack," said Aunt May, "between daring and courage. It was a daring thing in you to go out on the end of that branch when you knew yourself that it was dangerous, but your daring came from a sort of cowardice after all, while Elsie didn't put herself iu the way of danger from a desire to prove that she was brave, but her courage came to her when she needed it to do what she thought was right for her to do. Boys don't often stop to think about this in the right way, I know Jack, but don't you think it is better to be thought a coward sometimes, than really to be one? I am going to fasten that nest up in a corner of your room, and then it will remind you sometimes of my little lecture. Shall I, Jack?"

"Yes, if you like," said Jack, rather doubtfully.

But I think it was a reminder to him sometimes of the distinction between daring and courage. Of course he sometimes got them sadly confused, all boys do, but I don't think he ever risked his life again to prove that he was not afraid.—Churchman.

Say not, that thou hast royal blood in thy veins, and art born of God, except thou canst prove thy pedigree, by daring to be holy, in spite of men and devils.

The little things which you may do for those about you will fall back upon your heart as the summer dews fall upon the vineyards. What if it is nothing but a kind word to a schoolboy crying in the street; it dries his tears, and the aching heart grows light and glad again. Who knows what cloud of darkness one kind word may dispel?

TEMPERANCE.

A New York paper of recent date, speaking of the heat, says, "No sober persons were overcome by heat in the city," and yet we often hear that a little drink is good in hot weather.

Five thousand dead bodies are, in the course of a year, sent to the Morgue in New York city. Indisputable facts show that the mischief which sends 4,000 of them there, comes of drunkenness. In this state of things is one of the most powerful temperance sermons ever preached.

A coroner's jury empaneled to ascertain the cause of the death of a notorious drunkard, brought in a verdict of "Death by hanging—about a rum-shop." In California a coroner's jury, under similar circumstances, rendered a more courteous verdict: "Accidental death from unpacking a glass.

The Tobacco crop of the United States amounted in 1880 to 473,107,573 pounds. This allows over nine pounds to every inhabitant. It would be an interesting inquiry, were there any way of ascertaining the facts, how much of this crop is used by members of Christian churches; how much they pay for it, and how much they contribute for the evangelization of the world.

A VIGOROUS temperance movement is mkaing progress in Copenhagen. A company has been organized with a capital of 100,000 crowns, with which to erect a number of coffee and eating houses, where no intoxicants will be sold. Good food will be served at moderate prices, and a good supply of newspapers aud periodicals will be provided.

MR. GLADSTONE is reported to have said of the "Gospel temperance mission" in England: "From the first I have watched the temperance question with great interest; but I am bound to say that no phase of it has ever yielded me so much satisfaction as this has done. To witness the large number of ministers of all denomiuations, and, of course, the still larger number of members of perhaps all the churches, wearing the ribbon of blue, is an exceedingly gratifying circumstance, and speaks well for the future. Indeed, I firmly believe, as far as this matter is concerned, that much brighter days will soon, in God's providence, dawn upon us."

DRUNKEN PIGS.—A rich Sweedish philanthropist recently employed two eminent French physicians to test certain theories with regard to the action of alcohol upon animal tissue. Fifteen pigs were treated daily with different kinds of liquor: each pig, however, being confined to one particular tipple. When they had been killed their vital organs were found to be marked with small white spots resembling ulcers. When the flesh was sent to market it was seized by the police as unfit for human food It is safe to say that every human being who daily uses alcoholic stimulants becomes diseased in liver, kidneys, stomach, or brain. Liquor drinking is the curse of the age; and the aim of all legislative bodies should be to discourage it, and if possible to stop it altogether.—Demorest Monthly.

A SCHOOL OF PERJURY.

The saloon of this country is primarily a school of perjury. From the very day it is opened it makes liars of men. You may say this is a strong charge. Indict a saloon-man in this town for the violation of law. Your detectives tell you that he has persisteutly violated it. Bring him into court and put him on trial; subpœna from their houses in the city twenty-five men, young and old, who have patronized him. They come into court; you reach out the Bible; they will swear on God's Holy Word to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. Let them take the stand, and try to prove by them facts which you know to be facts. Nineteen out of twenty-five will swear to a lie to defend the man who sold them liquor.

Such a man willfully perjures his soul, degrades his manhood, dishonors his citizenship to defend the man who, when he has got his last dollar and made him a drunkard, will kick him into the street and call him a drunken dead beat. Have you tried to enforce the law against saloons? If so, you know this to be true.

They, everywhere, try to corrupt judges, to suborn witnesses, to defeat the ends of justice, and prevent an honest, fair, and full enforcement of the law.—Nebraska Liberator.

THE CHURCHES.

—Speaking of the few weeks labor of Rev. Mr Drake, of Northfield, Mass., with the Chicago Avenue church, this city, at the request of Mr. Moody, the Inter Ocean says that the result of his labors has been very satisfactory, and a strong attachment has grown up between the temporary pastor and his parishioners. Likewise the manifest spirit of self-abnegation of Mrs. Drake and her devotion to the interests of others has greatly endeared her to the ladies of the church. On Tuesday of this week it is the purpose of this faithful pair to return to their quiet home in Massachusetts, where they have labored with abundant success.

—On the departure of Mr. Drake, Pres. C. A. Blanchard of Wheaton has been engaged to preach in the same church during September. So well pleased also were the Sabbath-school teachers with his exposition of the lesson at their meeting in lower Farwell Hall on the 18th inst., that he has been engaged to lead the Saturday-noon meeting again this week.

—It is announced that Major D. W. Whittle will conduct the Sabbath evening services in Farwell Hall for a few weeks. The meeting will be of great interest. As Major Whittle will sail for Ireland next month, his many friends will be glad to hear him during the few weeks he remains. Beginning Monday, Sept. 5, he will conduct Bible readings for two weeks in the Y. M. C. A. lecture-room from 4 to 5 P. M. It is expected that Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan will be present to sing. These meetings will be preparatory to the Christian convention to be conducted by Mr. Moody in Farwell Hall from Sept. 18 to 20.

—The Faith Cure Convention at Old Orchard, Me., has closed, but prayer meetings will be continued three times a day for several weeks. About 230 persons attended the Convention. The most striking cures in answer to prayers during the recent session are alleged to have occurred in the case of Miss Gibbs, of Oshawa, Canada, whose cerebro spinal meningitis of six years' standing was suddenly cured, and in the case of Miss Jennie C. Clark, of Berwick, Me., whom heart disease scarcely allowed to reach the Convention.

—Dr. Cullis has received sufficient subscriptions to start the construction of a church on the site of the Old Beacon Hill Church. Vestries will be in the basements, offices of the various organizations that Dr. Cullis has founded on the first floor, the church the second floor, and other rooms will be used for the Faith-Training College.

—The celebrated "Philosophy of the Plan of Salvation," by Dr. J. B. Walker, after having unwonted success in several languages is now being again translated and published in Brazil. Rev. E. Vanordeu, an independent missionary formerly residing in Chicago, has proceeded in his translation of this book, published at Rio Grande do Sul in his Portuguese paper, as far as the seventh chapter, about one-third of the book. He will issue it in book form when completed.

—Prof. Stratton, in an interesting letter to the Wesleyan, speaks thus of the practical side of his seminary work: "God has seemed to give the sanction of his seal to our work. The Holy Spirit so deeply impresses the truth upon our hearts in the "Jerusalem Chamber," that often a tearful interest is manifested among the members of our classes. Besides this, there have been in the two years of our theological school, over twelve hundred sermons preached by its members, near one hundred added to our churches under their influence, and between $6,000 and $7,000 added to the church property. This does not include the parsonage now being built by brethren S. A. Manwell and J. N. Bedford on Sugar Creek charge, Illinois Conference."

—The Second Presbyterian church in Oakland, Cal., declined to accept the proceeds of a dramatic entertainment and social dance in a public hall, kindly offered by them for the benefit of that church.

—The Norwegian Lutheran church of Portland, Me., celebrated the Reformation festival in a unique manner. Each and every member of the church presented, as a thank-offering, one day's wages, for the benefit of the church.

—The American Bible Society have received letters from Constantinople indicating a disposition on the part of the Turkish Government to withdraw its objections to the distribution of the Scriptures.

—A series of revival meetings has been held at Elmira, N. Y., in the rooms of the Railway Young Men's Christian Association. About seventy persons have professed conversion, and have been united with the churches of their choice. Evangelistic work is still continued.

—It is said on good authority that the Society of Friends is not decreasing in membership in America, but is steadily growing. In North Carolina it has more than doubled in the last twenty years, and the increase has been very marked in the West. A large majority of the members are young people.

—There is reason to fear that the invasion of Madagascar by the French will be disastrous to the work of Christian evangelization there. At latest dates some of the missionaries in Madagascar were intending to leave the country, and a number of them who had just gone out were not allowed to land from the vessel which bore them, and had proceeded to the Mauritius. The Nonconformist takes a very gloomy view of the situation.

—To give an idea of the scarcity of clergymen in cities during the summer, the Christian Advocate says that the Rev. Dr. J. M. King, hearing that it was sometimes almost impossible to secure a minister for a funeral, resolved to stay in town one year. He gave notice to the several pastors in his neighborhood that he could be called on for such services, and in three months he officiated at ninety-three burials.

—The Rev. Dr. McLane of Steubenville, Ohio, was some months ago adjudged a heretic, and was suspended by his Presbytery from the exercise of ministerial functions. His case was taken to the General Assembly at Saratoga, where it came very near being tried. But on the understanding that Dr. McLane would retire from the Presbyterian denomination, the trial was indefinitely postponed. Dr. McLane has now become a Congregationalist, and notwithstanding the alleged heretical teachings of his book, "The Cross in the Light of To-day," he has been received by a Congregational Association.

—St. Giles' Cathedral, Edinburgh, having been restored in part by the munificence of Dr. Robert Chambers, lately deceased, was re-opened a few weeks ago. This is the church where John Knox preached, and where Jennie Geddes flung her stool at the head of the dean. Dr. Chambers left $100,000 by his will to complete the work of restoration.

—There are about seven hundred missionaries in India, only twenty-eight of whom are medical men. There is a loud call for physicians in connection with missionary effort. A missionary who is also a physician can accomplish much among the natives, where one who has no knowledge of medicine will find difficulty in obtaining a hearing.

—The Rev. J. C. Hill, a Presbyterian missionary at Guatemala is confident that in the next decade there will be seen a progress in evangelical beliefs in Central America similar to that which has taken place in Mexico. Religious freedom is enjoyed throughout the land, Protestantism is received with marked favor by those who are at the head of affairs.

—The death of King Mtesa, of Uganda, will undoubtedly have some influence upon evangelical work in Central Africa. Just what his religious belief may have been when he died it is impossible to say, as he had avowed himself, by turns, a heathen, a Protestant, a Catholic, and a Mohammedan. But during the period of his allegiance to the missionaries, Divine service was conducted in the presence of the royal court every Sabbath, and a flag was hoisted from his palace as a signal for his people to abstain from labor on that day.

—The Plymouth Congregational Church, Hyde Park, Pa., Rev. J. Edwards, pastor, though organized but a little over one year ago, has now a membership of nearly two hundred. Not a single communion has passed but some have been received on confession of faith. A lecture and Sunday-school room, with a seating capacity of 500, is nearly finished. The Sunday-school numbers about 250, and with the increased facilities soon to be at its command, will doubtless soon be still further enlarged. This church is a working church in all its departments, and is especially active in the temperance cause.—Ex.

—The Presbyterians have dedicated another church in the village of Ozumbo, population 4,000, fifty miles southeast of Mexico, just under Popocatepeti. The attendance has grown in a year from thirty-five to 100, and 300 were present at the dedication. The people are nearly all pure Indians. Many nominal Romanists attend. A meeting of presbytery was held May 30th, in Mexico. Six young men were ordained, and two re-ordained, as to the regularity of whose ordination a question had been raised. They have all gone to their new fields, and great enthusiasm is felt in this most successful and promising of the Protestant missions of Mexico.

—The Union Protestant Congregation of Mexico City make an appeal for funds to erect Protestant churches in Mexico. Numbers of young men go to Mexico every year, hoping to better their condition; they are thrown into society that has no respect for the Sabbath or the Bible; many become converts to Catholicism. In addition to the appeal to provide churches at much-needed points, the Protestant Congregation of Mexico City asks for funds to establish a reading-room where American newspapers and good reading-matter may be found; this will not only give a place of entertainment to strangers, but will also develop into an exchange of courtesies between our citizens resident and transient. Funds may be forwarded to J. Milton Green, Union Protestant Congregation, Mexico City.—Christian Union.

—The Basle Society has long been desirous of extending its mission on the Gold Coast, Africa, to Coomassie, the capital of Ashanti. Its work has been confined to the provinces of Akim and Okwau, but its missionaries have visited Coomassie several times to induce the king to allow them to open work in his capital. Their last visit was made last year. They found the town or city in a dilapidated condition. The king was not too courteous. He said in reply to their request: "You remember the former state of my city and empire, and you see what it is now. As long as it is not restored to its former state I cannot receive any missionaries. When it is built up again I shall be glad to receive and dismiss them in peace." The missionaries understood by this that he was willing that they should visit Coomassie, but did not want them to reside there. He probably feared they would act as spies and inform the British Government of the state of affairs. He has a wholesome fear of the British, and it is because of this that the number of human sacrifices has been decreased. The missionaries believe that ere long the whole kingdom will be open to missionaries. The natives of the capital have a presentiment that the kingdom is coming to an end. The missionaries will await favorable indications.—Independent.

—A dispatch from Cettinge, Montenegro, Friday last, says that a reign of terror exists in the province of Kossono, in Albania. The Arnauts are murdering Christians, and all who can get away are fleeing from the country. The Turkish officials connive at the outrages, and have arrested and exiled a number of priests. In the Ipek district ninety-two persons have already been murdered. Twenty-three villages have been abandoned. The Arnauts are Albanians who have served in the Turkish army and have retired to the estates granted them by the government. In this manner many villages of discharged veterans are formed throughout the empire. The Turks have at all times nourished hatred between the Albanians and Montenegrins, and the Arnauts, who call themselves Turks, cherish a feeling of contempt for their Christian neighbors that breaks out into bloody warfare on the slightest provocation. Human life is held cheap by this semi-barbarous people, and their superstition impels them to deeds of cruelty that rival the atrocities of the most imbruted savages.

THE

CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE

A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

It is now owned and published by the

IN BRIEF.

"A riference, is it?" exclaimed the girl at the incelligence office, when asked by the lady in search of help, for a recommendation. "An' why should I give ye a riference? It is meself that't got to live wid ye, an' not ye wid me."

President Grevy of France is a great coffee drinker—when he can get coffee fit to drink. Calling one day at a country hotel for a cup, he asked: "Have you any chiccory?" "Yes, sir." "Bring me some." The landlord brought a small can full. "Is that all that you have?" "No sir; we have a little more." "Well, let me have it too." Another can was brought. "Positively, this is every grain you have?" "Yes, sir." "Very well; now go and make me a cup of coffee."

"The Rev. Frank G. Woodworth, pastor of the church in Wolcott, Conn., is peculiarly and not altogether unpleasantly situated, in being pastor of the only church in a town without a pauper, a dram shop lawyer, or doctor. Taxes are merely nominal; the people, we are told, are intelligent and unexcelled in the equal distribution of refinement and wealth."—Phil. Obs.

The highest bridge in the world is the railroad viaduct of Garabit, in France, now being erected over a river in the department of Cantal. The bridge has a total length of 564 meters—say 1,880 feet—and near the middle of the great center arch, which is the most remarkable feature, the height from the bed of the river to the rail is 124 meters, or 413 feet. The viaduct was begun in 1881, and is to be completed next year. It is estimated to cost about £120,000.

It is remarkable that shipping, as old as civilization, and once the great carrier of the world's commerce, has been far outstripped in its capitalized value by the railroad, an institution but little more than fifty years old. The value of British shipping is $1,000,000,000; value of British railroads, $3,700,000,000; value of American railroads, $6,300,000,000. Great Britain herself, the queen of marine commerce, finds her railroad investment to treble that in shipping, while our railway plant nearly doubles in value that of the mother country.

Those who are talking of the Brooklyn Bridge as the most wonderful work of the kind in the world, should remember that China has a little affair at Langang, over an arm of the China Sea, some five miles long (the Brooklyn Bridge is hardly a mile), with 300 arches; over the pillar of each arch reclines a lion, 21 feet long, made of one block of marble. The roadway is 70 feet wide, a generosity of space quite in point to cities building deathtraps on bridges.

The earls and barons who are traveling toward the Yellowstone under the guidance of Uncle Rufus Hatch had their eyes opened to the size of American agriculture when they reached the Dalrymple farm in Dakota and saw 150 American reapers started into a 28,000-acre wheat field to harvest 500,000 bushels of wheat.

Mr. Vanderbilt while in the White Mountains learned that thirty of the waiters in the hotel where he stopped were college students, earning money during the summer vacation to further their education. He left behind him a check for $3,000 to be divided among these students, giving them $100 each. That act was probably as noble as anything Vanderbilt ever did.

The Congregationalist tells a "veritable incident" of the faith in good prevailing over the power of iniquity. A steamboat had among its crowd of passengers one who had the delirium tremens. In the midst of his fearful agonies of mind and body he called for a Bible. When the book was brought him he seized it, and, triumphantly placing it on his breast as he lay, in the berth, shouted: "There, devils! You are beaten now; you can't get over this book." He became calmed straightway, and kept his eye intently fixed on the book for continued security.

Dr. Gautier recently read a paper before the Paris Academy of Medicine, the object of which was to state and explain experiments he had made, proving the human saliva to differ from the venom of servents only in degree. He obtained about 20 grammes of human saliva, concentrated it, and injected it under the skin of a bird, in which it at once produced signs of poisoning. The bird quivered, tottered and soon feel down, showing all the symptoms of tetanus. In the course of an hour or a half-hour, according to the size of the dose, death took place. These symptoms are the same as those produced by the bite of a poisonous serpent, and the principle that is supposed to constitute the poison is allied to that which Bouardel and Bouting obtained cadaver-poison. Up to a temperature of 100 degrees C. the saliva-poison is not destroyed, and this is also the case with the venom of the cobra.

The balsamic healing and soothing properties of Samaritan Nervine are something marvelous.

Dr. Benson's Skin Cure consists of internal and external treatment, and contains no poisonous drugs.

"My brother aged 19 had fits from his infancy, Samaritan Nervine cured him." A. W. Curtis, Osakis, Minn. $1.50 at Druggists.

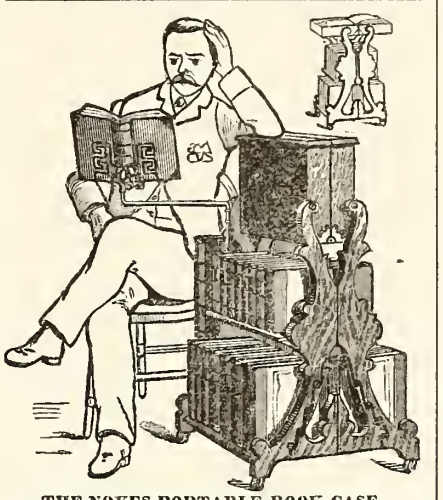
The Master's Carpet.

BY

E. Ronayne.

Past Master of Keystone Lodge No. 639 Chicago.



Explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the Lodge, thus showing the principles on which the order is founded. By a careful perusal of this work, a more thorough knowledge of the principles of the order can be obtained than by attending the Lodge for years. Every Mason, every person contemplating becoming a member, and even those who are indifferent on the subject, should procure and carefully read this work. An appendix is added of 32 pages, embodying which gives every sign, grip and ceremony of the Lodge together with a brief explanation of each. The work contains 429 pages and is substantially and elegantly bound in cloth. Price, 75 cents.

Freemasonry at a Glance,

THE NOYES PORTABLE BOOK CASE.

Holds not only 30 to 50 volumes, but the Unabridged Dictionary, the latter either opened or closed. It is made of dark cherry or black walnut, elegantly finished, and being on casters is practically a Revolving Book Case. Lawyers, ministers, doctors and scholars have found that it fills "the long felt want," and others, with fewer hooks, find it an ample Book Case. It has attachments for holding large atlases and magazines, also a Reading Machine which removes that embargo on reading, the task of holding up a heavy book by the hour, and makes reading and study so easy that there is no excuse for ignorance. The "Machine" holds the book by the covers; the leaves are held open with a Leaf Holder, which, by a touch, can be removed or replaced. The book tilts to any angle and is pivoted to turn to any position. A Clamp attaches it to a table or desk. An Extension Arm connects it with the book case or your easy chair, for which purpose attachments are always provided. This elegant outfit is sold at a remarkably low price. Send for circular.

MASONIC OATHS,

BY

E. Ronayne,

Past Master of Keystone Lodge, No. 639, Chicago.

A masterly discussion of the Oaths of the Masonic Lodge, to which is appended "Freemasonry at a Glance," illustrating every sign, grip and ceremony of the Masonic Lodge. This work is highly commended by leading lecturers as furnishing the best arguments on the nature and actual character of Masonic obligations of any book in print. Paper cover, 207 pages. Price, 40 cents,

National Christian Association,
221 West Madison St. Chicago, Ill.

SERMONS AND ADDRESSES.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. W. P. M'Nary, pastor United Presbyterian Church, Bloomington, Ind. This is a very clear, thorough, candid and remarkably concise Scriptural argument on the character of Freemasonry. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Prest. J. Blanchard, before the Pittsburgh Convention. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Prest. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Sermon on Secretism, by Rev. R. Theo. Cross, pastor Congregational Church, Hamilton, N. Y. This is a very clear array of the objections to Masonry that are apparent to all. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Sermon on Odd-fellowship and Other Secret Societies, by Rev. J. Sarver, pastor Evangelical Lutheran church, Leechburg, Pa. This is a very clear argument against secretism of all forms and the duty to disfellowship Odd-fellows, Freemasons, Knights of Pythias and Grangers is clearly shown by their confessed character as found in their own publications. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Secret Societies. A discussion of their character and claims, by Rev. David McDill, Prest. J. Blanchard and Rev. Edward Beecher. In cloth, 35c. per doz. $3.25. Paper cover. 15c. Per doz. $1.25.

Discussion on Secret Societies. By Elder M. S. Newcomer and Elder G. W. Wilson, a Royal Arch Mason. This discussion was first published in a series of articles in the Church Advocate. 25 cents each; per doz $2.00.

Prest. H. H. George on Secret Societies. A powerful address, showing clearly the duty of Christian churches to disfellowship secret societies. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

COPPER AS A CHOLERA REMEDY.

Dr. E. M. Hale read a paper on this subject before a late meeting of Chicago physicians from which the following is taken:

Fifty years ago Hahnemann wrote: "The use of copper, combined with a mild and regular regimen, and cleanliness, is the most certain and efficacious preventive." He adds: "It has been proved in Hungary that a plate of copper worn next the skin will preserve one from the infection, as I have been assured by several authentic reports from that country."

In support of these statements I will quote from the writings of an eminent allopathic physician of Paris, Dr. Burq, whose fame as an investigator of the medicinal power of metals is world wide. Thirty years ago he ascertained, by numerous expcriments made in the hospitals under the supervssion of the head physicians, that the application of copper to the limbs, in the form of rings, is a certain means of causing the cramps in cholera patients to cease immediately, and often all the serious symptoms which accompany them vanish at the same time. This important discovery obtained for him from the government a medal of distinction and a pension.

I will add here that Dr. Burq entered into an extensive investigation on the preventive power of copper in cholera. He examined all the great manufactures of copper and its alloys, in France and other European countries, and the results were an astonishing amount of testimony in favor of that metal. One day he visited an important copper foundry in Graviliers street; he found that all the workmen and inhabitants of the establishment, in number over 200, had not had the slightest attack of cholera either in the year 1832 or 1849. This was likewise the case in three other copper foundries in the same street: He then entered into a laborious examination, in which he examined over 100,000 persons in Paris as well as in the provinces and foreign countries. The result of this inquiry was placed before the French Academy of Medicine. I cannot give you in full the result or its deductions, but will try to place them before you in brief.

The cholera epidemics of 1832 and 1849 were very severe all over Europe. I do not know the exact percentage of deaths to the population in great cities and towns, but from the expressions used by writers it must have exceeded 20 or 30 per cent.

During these two epidemics, which were so devastating in their character, the workmen in copper, brass, bronze, etc., had almost complete immunity from this scourge. Out of 11,500 persons thus engaged only 23 died or were attacked, about .002 per cent. Dr. Burq's report goes so far as to assert that this was but an example illustrating the universal influence of copper as a preventive. He gives instances where the workmen fled from the foundries and were soon attacked by the disease, while those who remained did not suffer from the epidemic.

At a meeting of the Societe de Biologie, of Paris, Dr. Burq presented an interesting communication upon the immunity enjoyed by workers in copper during epidemics of cholera and typhoid fever. He stated that of 40,000 such workmen two only died during each of the epidemics of typhoid fever in 1876 and 1883. Furthermore, the statistics of a society of 300 members, all copper workers, showed that during the entire period of the existence of the organization (sixty-four years,) there had been but three deaths from epidemic diseases among its members. If Burq's views are true, it may not be so very visionary, if I venture to suggest that cities and other communities might be protected from the ravages of the dread visitor if the public health authorities would devise some means whereby copper or its preparations could be volatilized in large quantities so as to saturate the atmosphere. If this method could not be extended to the open air, it might be utilized in the residences of all classes alike. Or, it can be easily applied to the water supply of communities, when all the water was supplied from one common source, as is now generally the case. In such cases the amount of copper in each gallon of water need only be minute in quantity, so minute that no possible injury could accrue from its influence over any person of any age.

DR. JOHN BULL'S

Smith's Tonic Syrup

FOR THE CURE OF

FEVER and AGUE

Or CHILLS and FEVER.

AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient.

The genuine SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP must have DR. JOHN BULL'S private stamp on each bottle. DR. JOHN BULL only has the right to manufacture and sell the original JOHN J. SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP, of Louisville, Ky. Examine well the label on each bottle. If my private stamp is not on each bottle do not purchase, or you will be deceived.

Persons write occasionally, saying, "I sent a remittance so and so, but the tag on my paper it not changed." Such inquiries are proper, and the explanation is this: when a subscription is received it is entered at once on the book and the letter filed for future reference if needed, but the printed mailing list is not changed until a sufficient number are received to require the printing of a new list. If but few subscriptions are received, the change may be delayed for a month or more, but when the list fills up rapidly it requires frequent revision. NIGHTS IN A BAR-ROOM

T. S Arthur's great temperance book, complete and illustrated. By mail, 5c each; 50c per doz. By express, $3.50 per 100.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC THE GREAT SOURCE OF CRIME.

Leaves from the diary of an old lawyer.—By Hon. A. B Richmond, author of "Court and Prison," etc. A book of intense interest, rivaling the famous "Diary of a Physician," and, in its truthful, terrible pictures of the power and crime of intemperance, excelling the well-known "Ten Nights in a Bar-room." The temperance issue of the present time is. Shall prohibition be partial or entire? Shall the branches of the death-bearing tree be pruned and trimmed, or shall the tree itself be cut down and its stump be torn up by the roots? The answer of "Leaves from the Diary" is, "Cut down the tree, tear up the roots, leave not a shoot or shred behind." It is certainly a very strong and eloquent volume Complete edition on fine, heavy paper, with colored lithograph of Sewall's stomach plates By mail, 30c each, $3 per doz. By express, $20 per 100. Abridged edition, by mail, 15c; $1.25 per doz. By express, $9 per 100.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC AND THE SOBER CITIZEN.

An able and telling work, by Rev. J H. Shermau, which brings out the effects of the liquor traffic in a new light. The following are some of the commendations of the first edition

"The author drives t enails of conviction through and clinches them."—N Y Christian Advocate.

"Speakers and workers in the temperance field will find valuable aid in this pamphlet. It is crowded with convincing facts "—Zion's Herald

"One of the ablest reviews of the drink curse ever issued from the press."—The Morning and Day of Reform.

"The argumeuts are put in telling form "—Judge Pittman.

New revised and enlarged edition. By mail, 10c each, $1 per doz By express, $6 per 100.

DRINKS FROM DRUGS.

A startling exposure of the liquor traffic, by Eli Johnson. A book that cannot fail to arouse the American people to the gigantic swindle now being perpetrated. The writer was offered $10,000 by a leading brewer to keep still Liquor not only doctored, but made entirely from drugs Extracts from a whole library of secret books, giving receipts for making and doctoring; advertisements of essences, facsimiles of labels, engravings, etc. etc. Claret, port, sherry, champagne, whisky, brandy, gin, rum, etc, all out of one barrel, and made at less than 25 cents a quart. Wine that never saw grape juice; cider that never saw apples; beer factories in place of breweries, fine cream ale without barley or brewing; whisky from arsenic; millions of gallons of liquor that pays no revenue tax. The farmer's corn and barley "all in your eye." A wholesale liquor store in a ten-foot square cellar; more French wine sold in New York City than is produced in the whole of France. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By Express, $6 per 100.

W. C. T. U. ORGANIZATION AND WORK.

A book of general information on how to organize and run successfully a Woman's Christian Temperance Union. This book should be widely distributed among W. C. T. U. presidents, pastor's wives and other representative women. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100.

HOME PROTECTION.

A lawyer's view of it. By J. C. Wells, attorney-at-law. The question of female suffrage for the protection of home ably discussed from a lawyer's standpoint. A book for the times. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100

BAND OF HOPE RECITERS.

172 pages. 164 choice recitations of poetry and prose, containing some of the choicest bits of temperance material for the platform ever uttered, accompanied by an article on elocution By mail, 10c each, $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100

GENERAL TEMPERANCE SONG BOOK.

"Temperance Songs," a Book for Adult Societies.—Eighty-three choice pieces, both words and music (old and new tune combination) choice selections from standard temperance collections; many choice new pieces. Book carefully edited by David C. Cook. Will prove just what is wanted by every temperance society Price in strong cardboard covers, by mail, 10c each; $1 per dozen; by express, $5 per 100.

TEMPERANCE ANTHEM BOOK.

Temperance Anthems.—A new idea; nothing else of the kind in existence. Will insure good music by the choir at temperance meetings Forty-eight pages of choice anthems by ablest writers By mail, 15c each; $1.50 per doz. By express, $10 per 100.

BAND OF HOPE SONG BOOK.

Band of Hope Songs.—Fifty-seven choice pieces for juvenile temperance gatherings, Bands of Hope, etc. Old, familiar tunes, also choice new words and music. Words far in advance of anything else issued. By mail, 8c each; 75c per doz. By express, $4 per 100.

DANIEL'S BAND.

A temperance concert exercise, with parts suitable for all ages; entirely new. Songs, recitations, dialogues, etc., of a thoroughly aggressive character; sure to carry weight with the rendering of it. By mail, 5c each; 50c per dozen, By express, $2 per 100.

THE COLD WATER ARMY.

For a primary temperance concert exercise. An entirely new exercise, containing songs and recitations, dialogues, etc., suitable for primary scholars. A pleasing and telling concert on temperance. By mail, 5c each; 50c per dozen. By express, $2 per 100.

For $2.50 The same style of binding, medium size. Postage, 12c.

THE PERSIAN SEAL BINDING Is very handsome and durable. It is this style of binding which is so much admired by Bible readers. Please notice particularly that these Bibles are kid lined and silk sewed. Many Bibles in this style outwardly are lined with black paper and sewed with thread in place of silk.

For $2.30 we furnish a small size Oxford, bound in Persian seal, full flexible; can be bent back, doubled or rolled, without injury. Divinity circuit, gilt edges, kid lined, silk sewed, with book-mark and band Postage, 10c.

For $3.30 The same style of binding, medium size. Postage, 12c.

For $5.75 The same style of binding, large size. Postage, 20c.

LEVANT MOROCCO BINDING.

The Persian Seal bindings are the best kept by most Bible dealers, and usually pass for the best teachers' Bibles made; and, to all appearance, they are so. There is, however, a better wearing binding, of which the Persian Seal is a good imitation; this is known as "Levant Morocco." In all respects the Levant morocco Bible corresponds with the Persian Seal description, except as to leather used for cover which, though looking like the Persian Seal, is stronger, and will last a lifetime.

Prices on genuine Levant Morocco bindings:
For $4.50—Small size. Postage, 10c.
For $5.50—Medium size. Postage, 12c.
For $8.00—Large size. Postage, 20cts.

Handsome Gift Bibles at Low Prices.

For 45c. Embossed morocco cover, gilt edges, gilt title on back. Very neat and durable. This is the handsomest 45c. gift Bible we have ever seen. Postage, 5c.

For 60c. Morocco cover, brass bound and plated, with handsome gilt clasp and gilt edges; two patterns; square and round corners. Exquisite lettering on side; printed in large clear type. Bibles no better are sold as high as $1 and $2. Postage, 6c.

For 70c. Similar size and style of binding to our 60-cent Bible; square corners, brass bound, with clasp and handsome tasseled book-mark; also medallion inserted on side in gold and red.

This was a new importation with the fall of 1882, and a very pretty design. It should be seen to be appreciated. (See cut.) Postage, 6c.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

—The Presideutial party arrived iu the Upper Geyser Basin of the Yellowstone Park Friday last, and went into camp near Old Faithful Seyser, which treated the excursionists a few momcnts after dismounting with one of its hourly eruptions.

—By the burning of a tenement house in Boston Sunday morning four persons were smothered to death and one fatally injured by jumping from the building.

—In a collision in the English Channel Sunday between the French steamer St. Germain and the English steamer Woodburn, the latter sank and eighteen of her crew were drowned.

—The upper story of the Union Building, corner of Washington and LaSalle streets, opposite the Board of Tradc Chicago, was burned out Tuesday morning. The building is situated in the very heart of the business district, upon one of the busiest corners of the city. It was well known as the headquarters of the Western Union Telegraph Company and also the telephone companies and the Western Associated Press. The Union National Bank occupied the coruer on the first floor, while besidc it was the International Bank.

—Sir Henry Parkes, Premier of the Government of New South Wales, and the oldest member of Parliament now liviug, arrived in Chicago yesterday from Sidney, via San Francisco. He is eu route for New York, thence to England. It is intimated that one errand in this country is concerning a line of steauers to connect Australia with the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe R. R. at Guyamas, Mexico.

—A strange spectacle was witnessed iu the South Branch of the Chicago river Tuesday. From Thirty-fifth to Thirty-eighth street the "water" is not water at all, but is a thick liquid of filth and grease, made so by refuse from the packing-houses, slaughter-houses, etc. Suddenly the river took fire aud blazed up, and the flames swept along at a fearful rate and continued burniug for fifteen minutes. Vessels lying along the docks escaped.

—About one hundred men are busily engaged daily in putting the Exposition Building in condition for the annual industrial exposition which will open the evening of Sept. 5 and close Oct. 20. The department of manufactures promises to be one of great interest, as care has been taken to exclude everything that is uot novel. Among the euriosities of the Exposition will be a band of Navajo Indians, who are to be brought here by the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad. These Indians, it is well kuown, are experts in the manufacture of blankets, and consequently will represent a manufacturing element in the show, especially as they will bring their looms with them and make the blankets from the raw material. They will also make gold, silver, and copper trinkets with their primitive tools. The smelting works will also be an interesting feature, as the entire process of reducing gold, silver, and copper oars will be exhibited.

—W. J Davis, butter-maker near Beloit, Wis., and in other places, has failed, with liabilities estimated at from $80,000 to $100,000, and nominal, if any, assets.

—Mobile has declared quarantine against Pensacola because of the outbreak of yellow fever. The scourge has appeared in Woolsey, a Penscola suburb, resulting in two deaths. Surgeou Owen, of the navy yard, succumbed to the malady Thursday. The house-to-house inspection uow in process in Pensacola reveals no new cases.

—A post-mortem examination, says a later dispatch, has shown that the man who died Thursday at Pensacola did not have yellow fever, and that another suspicious case is simply one of malarial fever. Experienced physiciaus and nurses believe the deaths reported at the navy yard have not been from the much-dreaded malady.

—Lord Chief Justice Coleridge, of England, was given a dinner at New York Friday night by Elliott F. Shepard.

—At Wells Beach, Me., Thursday, four young people, who were bathing, were swept out by the undertow and drowned.

—Five Chinamen recently deprived of their cues in the State Prison at Trenton, N. J., threatened to sue the authorities for damages, on the ground that the United States Constitution gives liberty of conscience, and the cue figures prominently in a Chinaman's religion.

—An open switch at Redhouse, Pa., on the New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio Railroad, derailed a passenger train there Thursday morning. The wreck was a frightful one, but fortunately no person was seriously hurt. At the time of the accident the train was running sixty miles an hour.

—The New Hampshire Legislature has passed a joint resolution favoring a government telegraph system.

—A great storm swept through Southern Minnesota, and Northern and Central Wisconsin Tuesday night, last week, which levcled buildings and feuces, ruined crops, and in some instances residents were killed. The hail was of unusual size and terribly destructive. The same fearful cyclone wrecked 300 houses in Rochester, Minn., damaged 200 others, and killed sixteen persons. The total loss to the little city is $400,000. At Kassou five people lost their lives, and in the counties of Dodge and Olmstead the destruction of property has been terrible. The whirling storm blew a passenger train off the track between Gumbrota and Rochester, the force of the gale smashing the cars to kindling wood. It is stated nine travelers were killed or injured, aud fifty wounded alone removed to Rochester and Owattouna. Appeals for aid have been sent to the Governor and the large cities, and liberal sums have already been raised for the sufferers.

—Near Forest City, Ark., Tuesday evening, last week, three cars of a Memphis and Little Rock train were precipitated through a trestle by a broken rail, three persons being killed out right and fifteen severely injured.

—All day Wednesday forest fires threatened Ashlaud, Wis., and the mills were shut down and the hands employed iu fighting the flames. Rain fell at 9 o'clock at night, and it is believed all danger is passed.

—A fierce rain and lightning storm in Northwestern Ontario on the 19th washed away railway tracks and bridges and destroyed standing grain. Some towns were deluged, the water standing two feet in the streets of Listowel.

—The French are in possession of Haiduong, Tonquin, and in the fight for its capture also took 150 cannon and $50,000 iu Anam money.

—The decomposed remains of twelve children were found in an uudertaker's establishment in Bermondsey, a London suburb, Wednesday.

—Mount Versuvius is in a state of activity, and buildings in its vicinity, and the railway running to its summit, have been damaged by the trembling of the earth.

—Mr. Collings, an English Liberal member, announced in the Commons Wednesday that at the uext session he would introduce a resolution for grantiug home rule to Ireland.

THE PUREST IS THE BEST.

In the selection of SUNDAY-SCHOOL PAPERS, the most important point to be considered is the moral tone of the subject matter. If this is of a questionable character, the papers should be shunned, no matter how large, how attractive, or how low the price. Such papers are

COSTLY AT ANY PRICE.

The country is being flooded with S. S. literature that is largely composed of what may be properly termed "RELIGIOUS FICTION," the tendency of which is to create a distaste for sound reading and foster an appetite for fiction of a more deleterious character.

The engravings of these papers are equally objectionable. In many cases a lady or girl dressed in the height of fashion is made the HEROINE OF A STORY, thus putting the highest sanction to extravagance and pride. With such instructors in our Sunday-schools we cannot expect the children to grow up with a love for sound literature and with correct ideas of Christian propriety. With a view of supplying S. S. papers, of a pure and elevating character, the publishers are issuing

FOUR MONTHLY PAPERS.

They are FREE FROM FICTION, and the cuts are chosen with great care. While they are thus carefully edited, they are not lacking in attractiveness. They are well printed on beautiful tinted paper. The children are delighted with them. The very low price at which this line of S. S. papers is issued, places them within the reach of even schools of limited means

THE IOWA MEETING at Albia is reported as interesting and earnest. Mr. Pomeroy was not present, but other able speakers nearly made good his place. Mr. Starry gave a degree in Masonry the last night; and of course the Opera Hall was filled and a strong impression made. Secretary Stoddard and others will give details. A committee was appointed to get up a strong local paper in Iowa—which with the proceedings entire will appear in the official report.

On Saturday evening preceding the Iowa State meeting Gen. J. B. Weaver, Greenback candidate for governor, spoke in the Opera Hause to a crowded audience on Prohibition. His speech is printed in the papers.

"SHALL WE GIVE UP THE PRAYER MEETING."—The London Christian World, the New York Christian Union, and other like papers concede the general decline of the prayer meeting, and are discussing the cause of it. The Union thinks the spiritual life of the church may evince itself in missions, Christian activity, Bible study, etc., while prayer meetings decline. We think not. "These all continued with one accord in prayer and supplication," is the description of the meeting which opened the Christian dispensation for the conversion of the world, and Albert Barnes says that Pentecost was not only a wonder, but our model for the coming ages. Moshcim says that the very century which was most remarkable for religious corruption and error was greatly distinguished for the success of its foreign missions. The disciples were directed to continue at Jerusalem until they were "endued with power from on high;" and the meetings which they held, while waiting for that "power," were prayer meetings. Peter was delivered from prison while the church was in a prayer meeting.

"Restraining prayer we cease to fight,
Prayer makes the Christian's armor bright;
And Satan trembles when he sees
The weakest saint upon his knees."

The Civil Service machinery is at last in operation, but is somewhat too exact for many of the neophytes who try to jump on and find a clerk's desk waiting for them. It may be considered a singular augury by most people that the first appointment under the rules is a young lady from Connecticut. If the new arrangement continues to favor the sex it may play a different and more important part in future politics than it has even in the past.

The grain of comfort is very small, but it is of some interest to know from later intelligence that O'Donnell, the murderer of the Irish "Invincible," Cary, required some further stimulant to the performance of his hellish work than the mere demand of his lodge oath. It is said that he drank heavily before committing the deed to give to his desperate determination the aid of a stupified conscience. The wretched man will be brought to England for trial and some further facts may be developed respecting the operation of the lodge oath when it is used to cover assassination.

A paragraph is going about the papers saying that General Grant does not like to travel on Sabbath if he can help it. When his practice of years ago when in public service is remembered this seems to deserve a smile of incredulity, but if Gen. Grant has refused the offer of a special train on that day it marks a hopeful improvement in his practice, whatever may have been his private convictions. Every one who has any sincere regard for American institutions must rejoice at the indications of an improved public sentiment in regard to the observance of the day which we have set apart for that worship and rest ordained by the Creator.

In most unhappy contrast with the sentiment of General Grant is the action of Lord Chief Justice Coleridge of Great Britain, now visiting this country. On Sabbath of last week in company with his son and some of the party who came with him from England, and also by our own Chief Justice Waite, he went to Manhattan Beach, the great pleasure resort for New York city. They dined upon the piazza of the hotel while English and American airs were played by Gilmore's band, and then returned to New York. The Intelligencer does not speak too severely of this public exhibition of immorality on the part of men whose exalted position should of itself, from a decent self-respect, restrain them from such Sabbath desecration: "This example will fill God-fearing hearts with regret and sorrow. The action of these gentlemen is the more pernicious because they are set for the maintenance of righteous laws and are expected to be a mighty bulwark against the advance of practices morally injurious. The Sabbath desecrators at Coney Island have not often received such encouragement and justification."

Our Chicago dailies have opened to public gaze some of the filthy lodgings filled with Italians, who come to this country on the Chinese principle to make the most, spend the least, and get back to Italy as soon as possible. That a perpetual pestilence does not rage in such quarters is a matter of special thanksgiving to God. Of a similar character are nearly all the Mediterranean cities, an old sea captain tells us; their sewerless and filthy streets being surpassed by the squalor and foul sights and smells within the houses. One of our valued exchanges, the India Watchman, comes with several sharp gashes cut through and through. It is the work of sanitary officers for the purpose of fumigation. An exchange tells of the experiences of European physicians who have bravely gone to Egypt: "Dr. Haddaad, a Syrian physician, sent to Mansoman by the Alexandian Relief Committee, reports the impossibility of the securing the cleaning and disinfection of the houses of the Moslems. Houses vacated by the removal of their tenants to tents, and subsequently sealed, were found, next morning, in possession of their old tenants. A horrible stench arises from the cemeteries where the vaults, only three feet wide, are filled to the top with bodies uncovered by earth. Dr. H. found the large government hospital in a terrible condition. The bedding was foul with the ejections of patients; the sick received only a little rice water twice a day, and were dying from want of nourishment. Dr. Dutrieux, a Belgian volunteer physician, reports an equally deplorable condition of matters in other respects. The native physicians object to the service of foreigners, because their own profits are reduced. The government will not allow Dr. Hooker, another volunteer, to go to Bilkoss, where the daily mortality is reported as two per cent of the entire population. Help must not pass from one infected district to another, not because it would spread disease, but because the incompetency and brutality of the authorities would be disclosed. This is only a partial view of the sanitary condition of matters among the fatalistic Moslems of Egypt.

The Northern Pacific railway is introducing its line to the world by a monster excursion of some fifty gentlemen from Germany and England and 200 from different parts of the United States. By several trains this party will proceed over the now completed line to Oregon and return during the latter part of September. The railway company, it is said, will expend some half a million dollars in this public opening of its new route. The programme of the company included the laying of the last rail and driving a golden spike with a wine-guzzling accompaniment, but enterprising and prompt contractors have spoiled this part of it. Two weeks ago the armies of workmen approaching each other from east and west were within a hard day's work of meeting. A tall pole was set up and a flag hoisted at the connecting point. The two companies rose early on the last morning, every man from overseer to Chinese cook bound to be first at the rendezvous. The description of this track-laying race is extremely animating, and the satisfaction of the hundreds, who saw the last rail honestly spiked down with a workman's arm and an iron spike, was just as honest and as noble as if the two or three hundred grandees had been present.

TEMPORIZING.

BY H. H. HINMAN.

"They have healed also the hurt of the daughter of my people slightly saying peace, peace, when there is no peace." Jer. 7:14th.

Not less now than in the days of Jeremiah are people disposed to resort to temporizing expedients and yet always to their hurt. Thirty years ago the Abolitionists said we must emancipate or be ruined. Elihu Burrit, as a practical measure, said, set aside the proceeds of the public land to aid the slave States in compensated emancipation. But both North and South denounced such radical schemes and patched up compromises to tide over the national differences until their folly was made manifest, and the Abolitionist was called to the front. It was dear bought wisdom and cost half a million of lives, and more money by six fold than would have purchased every slave in the land.

At the commencement of the present difficulties in Ireland Peter Cooper wrote to Mr. Gladstone respectfully suggesting that the British government purchase the great Irish estates, and sell them in small parcels on long time, to the holders. This would have done for Ireland what the first Napolean did for France, and have added immensely to the prosperity and happiness of the people. But this was regarded as far too radical a measure, the interests of the great land owners and the law of primo-geniture stood in the way. Temporizing expedients were resorted to, assassinations, misrule and suffering have followed, and the end is not yet.

The dreadful consequences of war are abundantly manifest. The people of Europe even in time of peace are groaning under its accumulated burdens. It would be easy to provide by treaty for the settlement of all disputes by arbitration, and it would then be safe to reduce their great armaments. But such a measure is far too radical, especially for those who aspire to military glory, and the people must continue to groan until actual war shall make their rulers tremble.

Intemperance is one of the most momentous of the evils of the world. How to surpress it is the great problem of statesmen and moralists, Prohibition is a safe, practical and wise remedy, but far too radical for ordinary politicians who resort to all time-serving expedients and plans of "how not to do it."

The labor question is of great and pressing importance. The exactions of monopolists have been most cruel, the tyranny of secret labor unions has been most oppressive, and their violence extreme and full of dangers, the radical remedy is the suppression of all secret combinations and compulsory arbitration when other means of settlement have failed. But this would be a difficult measure for Freemasons to adopt. The mother trades union has taken off her working apron and put on a fancy one, but she is still the guardian of her children.

Mormonism rears its head in defiance of good government and scoffs at the legislation of Congress. What to do with this plague spot in the nation has been a problem for more than twenty years. All expedients have failed. The one radical remedy is the suppression of the ceremonies of the Endowment House together with all other secret rites, and to require all marriages to be in public before a U. S. officer. But surely secretists are not prepared for so radical a scheme. Most likely they will go on temporizing till polygamy, like slavery, shall demand universal recognition and dominion, and then it will fall together with the system of secrecy that supports it.

Washington, D. C.

BAALISM IN IRELAND.

In the "Personal Recollections" of Charlotte Elizabeth we have the following account of what she saw on first going to Ireland. After describing an Irish jig, she says:

"But something was to follow that puzzled me not a little; when the fire had burned for some hours and got low, an indispensable part of the ceremony commenced. Every one of the peasantry passed through it, and several children were thrown across the sparkling embers; while a wooden frame of some eight feet in length with a horse's head fixed to one end, and a large white sheet thrown over it, concealing the wood and the man on whose head it was carried made its appearance. This was greeted with loud shouts as the 'white horse,' and having been safely carried by the skill of its bearer several times through the fire with a bold leap, it pursued the people, who ran screaming and laughing in every direction. I asked what the horse was meant for and was told it represented all cattle. Here was the old pagan worship of Baal, if not of Moloch too, carried on openly and universally in the heart of a nominally Christian country, and by millions professing the Christian name. I was confounded, for I did not then know that popery is only a crafty adaptation of pagan idolatries to its own scheme; and while I looked upon the now wildly excited people with their children and, in a figure, all their cattle passing again and again through the fire, I almost questioned in my own mind the lawfulness of the spectacle, considered in the light that the Bible must, even to the natural heart, exhibit it in to those who confess the true God. There was no one to whom I could breathe such thoughts, and they soon faded from my mind."

Yes, and the impulsive, warm-hearted Irishman enjoys even yet the sport of the ragged remnants of ancient idolatry! How lamentable that its delusions should in any degree have been incorporated into their own religious ceremonies! The instincts of enlightened, devout minds naturally shrink from such corruptions of the worship of God as are not authorized by his Son, and yet even among Protestants these corruptions are nourished in the secret lodges where man's or devil's authority rules in every one of those religious rites which Jesus has not given in the New Testament. T. H.

"I DON'T SEE ANYTHING WRONG IN IT."

BY GEORGE H. WILLIAMS.

One may often hear an adhering Mason, even if a church member or a minister, say of Masonry: "I don't see anything wrong in it," or, "I see nothing in it contrary to Christianity." Is this a testimony in favor of Masonry? No! But it is a clear testimony that the condition of his conscience is very bad; that it is not moved by that which would torture a healthy conscience. If an adhering Mason can see in Masonry no wrong done to Jehovah—Father, Son and Holy Ghost; no wrong done to his fellow man; no wrong to community; what security does his conscience give to his fellow man that he will not do him the greatest wrongs, and this without disturbing his conscience in the least? Who that knows but a little of the enormous wickedness of Freemasonry could have confidence in that man; in his word, or that he would not, in favoring circumstances (and with the encouragement of the concealment of his acts, which Masonry promises him—acts that he well knows community would condemn if they knew of them,) wrong him grievously?

THE LONG ROLL.

BY ALEXANDER THOMSON.

Rouse, sons of freedom! rouse, or sleep forever—
Ignoble sleep unworthy of your sires;
And to your children cravenly deliver
Corrupted altars and unhallowed fires.
Shall we whose fathers stood for freedom's blessings
Against an empire, when but weak and few,
Be cowed and conquered by the constant hissings
Or deadlier biting of a reptile crew?
Oh, for a voice to bid the people stand
Like heroes to their arms and save the land.

Shall we whom neither priest nor king has humbled,
Shall we who guard great freedom's lofty tree,
See that vast column from its rock base tumbled,
By hidden legions of iniquity?
Shall we who sing with joyous exultation:
We're fifty millions, freemen every man;
See every right and honor of the nation
Usurped or trampled by a secret clan?
While tamely standing, white with craven fear,
Before the shaking of its vengeful spear.

What power is this, that shuts the door of knowledge,
And at its girdle bears the holy keys,
Whose terror rests alike on press and college,
All fettered by its cursed mysteries?
What power is this, that at God's holy altar
Limits the truth, and bids his saints obey;
Or slips its hounds, when any dare to falter,
Or stem the power of its tyrannic sway?
The secret lodge, within whose dark recesses
Resides a power rules pulpit, bench and presses.

Then rouse and move like children of the free,
To storm and overcome its dark defences;
Who ventures forth upon the stormy sea
Must have the heart to risk the consequences.
And he who leads the van of freedom's power
Against the foe conducts a desperate sally,
Where massed and dark the evil legions lower,
In battled front with black hell for their ally,—
And he may fall, but o'er his lowly bed
God's flag of truth in triumph yet shall spread.

ACCOUNTABILITY IN OFFICE.

There is one damnable thing to be observed in the lives of the Christian bishops of the middle ages; instead of stepping in between their flocks and the Inquisition, they recreantly sided with that den of wolves against their own lambs; just as recreant clergymen of the present day side with the lodge against the Christian congregations that employ them. And the clergy will always be thus recreant to their trusts unless there is some accountability in office more than they are subject to now. For the worst possible sin against the Christian religion of the present day, which is Freemasonry, the Protestant church has prescribed no penalty. It admits to the service of its sacred altars men whose immoral tricks and practices are more un-Christian than are those of the Jesuits.

Nor is there any sufficient accountability in our political offices. The very cornerstone of republican institutions is accountability in office. Let this stone crumble away (as it must do when mumbled over with Masonic ceremonies) and the Republic must rapidly go to ruin. But there is virtually no accountability in office where rebel leaders take high seats in the councils of the nation which they aimed to destroy; where back-pay grabs, Credit Mobilier swindles, Star-route frauds, Indian war outrages, river and harbor jobs, with other numerous schemes for plundering the treasury not only go unpunished but are absolutely encouraged with positions of honor and profit.

Men in office must be held accountable for the ill deeds that are done under their administration, or the Republic must cease to exist. A mere failure to re-elect recreant men to office is not a sufficient bar against official neglect of duty. This is the punishment that is now virtually bestowed upon every good man, and can be easily borne by rogues. The current of popular opinion must turn, and set with opprobrium against Freemasons as it now sets against Anti-masons. Freemasonry must come to be regarded as *dis*reputable and *dis*honorable as it now claims to be reputable and honorable. No greater mistake could ever be made by any people than to crown with glory a character who is self-branded with infamy.

It is impossible to make any honest use of the Republican party. It is worm-eaten with Freemasonry. It has brought over the Democracy by elevating the lowest of the Democrats to office. The Republican party is republican only in name. Its Grand Army of the Republic, slavering with greed, pensions and office-seeking, is no more like the army that defended the government against rebels than a band of plundering camp-followers is like the forlorn hope that heroically assults and crushes the head of the enemy's intrenchments. The objective point of the armed band of patriots who turned out to defend the government was the salvation of the Union against the pretended divine institution of slavery, while the aim of the "Grand Army of the Republic" is for plundering the treasury.

The men who organized this plundering band of camp-followers, and has thus stolen from an army of patriots the honor that is due to it, ought to be held accountable for their work at the bar of public opinion. But instead of this, one of them holds a seat in the United States Senate; another is distinguished by the exceptional honor of ex-ambassador and retiracy asMajor General in the United States army; still another as a 32nd degree Mason is at the head of one of the leading States of the union, and thousands of others, their followers, whose chief services, self-laudation have been rendered since the war, are living on the offices and resources of the country. Such are the men who are now running the Republican party and shaping the destinies of the American Union. They are not content with their wages but aim at back-pay grabs and pensions. They are chiefly old slave Democrats whose conversion to the Republican party savors more of the craft of Simon the sorcerer than of the lofty fervor of Paul the martyr. They are men who have attained to leaderships and office through the practice of Masonic arts, and are receiving the confidence and trust of their fellow citizens while playing into the hands of a foreign organization wholly inimical to the institutions of the United States!

Our American party cannot possibly burden itself with the corrupt alliances of the Republican party, with Democracy and Freemasonry, and still possess the moral freedom, energy and power necessary for saving and maintaining the Republic. We must throw overboard all political men who have no other comment to make on the baneful power of the lodge than either a silly smile or the silent pallor of fear. We must demand men, American men, men too sterling to play the monkey tricks of the lodge, and too honest to fear them, for our American leaders; for it is only by such leaders that our American institutions can be saved. To trust to the leaders of the lodge any longer, would be like turning away from the doors of our Christian temples and throwing our bodies beneath the wheels of a Juggernaut. AMERICAN.

LODGE MORALS.

Many well meaning people do not see the nature of the education the rising generation are receiving from the secret lodge. It is not enough for Masonry and Odd-fellowship to exclude Jesus Christ from their religious system, but they must, in order to successfully cover up their wickedness, completely debauch the public conscience. James Carey belonged to the secret lodge that assassinated Lord Cavendish and Mr. Burke. Carey turned state's evidence and several of the murderers were convicted and hung.

For bearing true witness against those secret lodge murderers Carey has been assassinated. Now mark the teaching of the lodge organs of our own country in reference to this horrid crime. The most widely circulated Republican and lodge paper in New Hampshire says: "Judases are not good subjects for life insurance companies to take risks on." Another lodge organ says: "No one with a drop of patriotic blood can regret the death of the infamous scoundrel." Those public teachers who claim to think the influence of the secret lodge is too small to be noticed, may wake up too late. The lodge, by its abominable secret rites and its public teaching, benumbs the conscience and brutalizes the minds of its votaries, thus preparing them for crime.

The Church Advocate recently published a strong editorial defense of reformers, of which the following is an extract: "John Brown, at Harper's Ferry, was the prince of fanatics only to be cononized afterward. William Lloyd Garrison, John G. Whittier and Wendell Phillips, a half century ago were the crazed and erratic spokesmen of the dispensation of fool-hardiness, and now their former fanaticism is part of the national Constitution. Time has shown that they were wise while the public was crazy. When we hear the cry of 'fanaticism' we are sure somebody is making himself felt, that somebody is not satisfied with the indolent, droning monotony of mere existence. Whenever truth and righteousness are the actuating impulses of any reform, the cry of 'fanaticism,' 'erratic indiscretion,' etc., is but the penny-whistle of blind bigotry, without ability to originate an idea or the courage to express it. There are erratic and fanatical men who attempt the impossible, not because their theories are underlaid with the granite of eternal righteousness, but because of unbalanced mental organizations, in consequence of which they are constantly pursuing some visionary, unreal chimera. But society at large ignorantly confounds this class of theorists with the real, radical reformers of the world."

LIQUOR AND LODGE IN ENGLAND.

Dr. E. P. Thwing of Brooklyn, during a summer trip to Europe sent back to the Baptist Weekly a testimony on the drinking habits of the lodge which have just had again so disgraceful an exhibition at the California conclave:

"To-day, August 1st., one Nobleman is happy; it is William Noble, in whose lovely suburban retreat I am writing. Hoxton Hall is the theatre of his triumph. Here have been held on consecutive nights 2,000 meetings, without break for five years and a half, about 7,000 in all, for it is a bee-hive of industry. Over a million pledge cards from this hall alone have been issued. A committee supervise the work, for the founder, who has given his time and labor without pay, found his strength inadequate to meet the demands here, and over the kingdom in hundreds of places, where the work goes on, first started here. The reform has enlisted the efforts of conspicuous men in church and in state. Business men begin to see its importance. A letter has just been handed me written by one who has had forty years experience of commercial traveling and speaks in behalf of 40,000 now employed. 'Public houses are the devil's turnpike,' he says. He recalls the dinners the publicans used to give his associates on Sunday, for which, in return they were expected to buy liquors of the landlord. After five hours' revel they adjourned to the smoking room, to drink black coffee with brandy poured into it. This was 10 P. M. Before bed a glass of grog to each. 'Then a restless night, hot head and no energy for Monday. So on daily, weekly, ad nauseam, in old days.' The writer then extols the Blue Ribbon movement, as well he may. He grieves to say that Freemasonry is one lure to ruin. 'Signs of the craft make landlords crafty' in seducing members to drink that might not otherwise yield. 'The Prince of Wales is one. Lucifer was once in heaven, but makes hell no better."

DELUSIONS IN FREEMASONRY.

[From the London Saturday Review.]

Another error respecting Freemasonry is that its "secrets" and ceremonial are somehow connected with the ancient mysteries of Egypt and Greece. There is not the slightest foundation for such a supposition, for although all secret societies are so far alike that they have their forms of initiation, degrees, signs, and password, there can be no possible point of contact [not in the historical sense.—ED. CYN.] between the secretly taught science and religion of the ancient world and the essentially modern cock-and-bull story about Solomon's Temple which forms the motive for the Masonic ritual. The claims which have been advanced for it, that it was in some way connected through the Crusades with the Knights Templar and other secret orders, are also without foundation, the known history of the craft being totally opposed to any such idea. The Knights Templar were undoubtedly connected with the Assassins, and through them with some of the older secret orders of the East, but their story, though most interesting, and one which deserves careful rewriting, has no more to do with the constitution of Freemasonry than it has with that of the "Good Templars" of temperance notoriety.

The secret of Freemasonry is a secret de Polichinelle, and is to be read in 50 different treatises, any one of which will enable a reader to make his way into a lodge quite as well as though he had submitted to the inane ceremonies of probation and initiation. If this is not the case, the society should authoritatively deny its truth, or it will continue to be under the imputation of having for a great number of years made a great fuss about nothing at all. But in the matter of the antiquity of the order no disclaimers which they could make would be of any avail. The story of Hiram Abiff, and of the mysterious pillars Jachin and Boaz which stood at the temple entrance, as told by Masonic ritual, bear the unmistakable "Brummagem" brand, and will not for a moment bear the test of criticism, either from an archæological or Oriental point of view. The real origin of the order as we have it now appears to date from about the beginning of the eighteenth century, while an extinct organization which furnished the motive for Freemasonry, though having no immediate connection with it, is some three or four centuries older. It has been indisputably proved that the institution of Freemasons took its rise in the guild of operative masons which, under the name of the "Fraternity of Masons," was formed by the architect and workmen employed from the thirteenth to the fourteenth century in the building of Strasburg Cathedral. The flower and pick of the profession were engaged upon this masterly edifice, and they were naturally desirous of perpetuating the secret of such good work, just as the Comedie Francaise preserve the traditions of the art of perfect acting. Their example was followed by other groups of masons throughout Germany, and all these different lodges were, some twenty years after the completion of the tower of Strasburg, merged into one association. Their Act of Uniformity was drawn up in 1459, and ratified by the Emperor Maximilian thirty years later by an imperial diploma. They adopted the instruments of the craft—the square, level, and compass—as their emblems, and had a secret password, "Liberty," which in itself gives a clue to the ulterior aims of the society. The Fraternity of Masons lasted until 1707, when it was authoritatively abolished by the Imperial Diet.

These are the simple facts about the origin of the society, or rather of the society whose constitution served as a model for the more recent and spurious association which has taken its name. It is not necessary to enter into the question of the so called higher degrees in Masonry, such as the Knights Templar, Rosicrucians, and the like. The rituals are even more impudent pretenses than those of the craft itself, and exhibit a mixture of arrant nonsense, child's play, and profanity which is rather shocking than ridiculous.

A LETTER TO THE SISTERS OF THE UNITED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

GOOD FOR ALL OTHERS.

Dear Sisters:—It is a cause of gratitude that the women of the church are being more and more inspired with a missionary spirit, and a desire to be useful in the vineyard of the Lord. While devising ways and means of doing good a word of encouragement from an "old laborer in Christian work may not be amiss." It is woman's duty to labor side by side with her husband and father in church as well as reform work. The Apostle Paul recognized woman as an agency for good, when he commanded the church at Phillipi "to help those women that labored with me in the gospel." Greater blessings are being bestowed on women now than in the past. Their educational advantages are better and their opportunities and facilities for doing good are greater. For these innumerable blessings, willing hearts and hands should be given to the service of the Lord. Works should be commensurate with privilege.

Something more is required than a mere negative Christianity. "They should let their light so shine before men that they seeing our good works may glorify our Father which is in heaven." The talents hid away in napkins, are to be brought out and improved for God's glory and the good of souls. "The Lord hath need of them." Humanity is crying out for them. Tact and management in raising funds for the Lord's cause is a duty; but this is not all that is required.

Woman should witness for and in behalf of the truth. The perilous condition of the church and nation are matters of deep concern to every true Christian. As members of Christ's body, they should do their part in maintaining the purity of the church; and labor for the suppression of those national evils which are coming in like a mighty flood. They are foes to church and state destroying men socially, religiously and politically. May not the Lord be pouring out his Spirit on his handmaidens to enable them to more carefully consider their responsibility and duty to the church, and children in guarding them from those evils to which they are exposed.

They should set an example in the home. For purity in the home lays the foundation of all good government in church and state. Years of labor in reform has demonstrated the fact that all true reform must begin with children, and to be effective must be followed up. Dear sisters do you need to be reminded that the two great evils abroad in our land which demand the attention of the women of our church are intemperance and secretism?

Notwithstanding the fact that we have an article in our Testimony against secret societies, somehow the lodge has "crept into houses and led captive silly" men, and they are trying to make the lodge respectable by leading women also into them. Can you sit idly and see your sons and daughters in danger and not lift a warning voice? The sons whom you are rearing so carefully around the hearth-stone will some day have to run the gauntlet to avoid this evil. Mother, have you no fear and trembling when you kiss that noble boy good-bye as he goes to college? In many of these there are fraternities. And many a mother to-day is mourning the fact that her boy has taken sinful oaths to maintain that which she is not permitted to know.

Money is squandered in the lodge, keeping up officers, that is needed in the home, and for Christ's cause. Husbands and sons have learned to drink through the banquets given in the lodge. Said a Mason's wife, "I have not had a happy day since my husband joined the lodge, for he learned to drink there." Secret Temperance organizations are but stepping-stones to Masonry. Let them come to the light. They prevent the settlemen of this great subject of temperance by belonging to both, and by being pledged to shield one another, thus making it impossible to enforce law.

This subject is becoming more and more one of the living issues of the church's moral warfare. You sacrificed sons on the altar of freedom, and gave character to noble men whose lives are a benediction to every good cause. Are you willing to see sons sacrificed to the lodge Moloch? Let our testimony against secrecy be the theme in the home and Sabbath-school. Teach children to shun the lodge and wine cup as they would vipers. Let suitable tracts be circulated. When speaking of Christ the Saviour of sinners warn them to have no fellowship with the Christless lodge. Make these subjects themes for discussion in missionary meetings. This is practical church work; and the church should be the advance guard in every reform; and women should help work out their own destiny. Do not fold your arms and say these great social problems must be solved by wiser heads.

Adolphe Monod said: "The greatest influence on earth, whether for good or evil, is possessed by woman." A greater oracle said: "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." Here is authority, as well as encouragement to duty.

The young ladies in the church will exercise a potent influence over young men by preparing essays on these subjects and reading them in the missionary meeting. Let Esther's example and Mordecai's word be their incentive: "For if thou altogether holdest thy peace at this time," etc. Who better than they could point out the nature of that wicked oath which cost John the Baptist his life? Whose labors are more appreciated than theirs in the cause of temperance? God grant their example and work may show a higher type of Christian culture than prevailed when Salome danced before Herod. Above all old and young should seek greater consecration. Take Christ as the great exampler, who said: "In secret have I said nothing." Avoid those associations whose principles are not in harmony with the Word of God.

Mothers, there is a grand opportunity before you. See to it that the lodge have no votaries from your homes. From the capital of the nation to the Pacific these secret forces are working so insiduously as to cause alarm and suspicion. They are planting lodges among the colored people and Indians, and all for political power. You are part of the body politic. Your ancestors helped to free the land from a foreign foe. Shall they now come and rob you of your children.

The destiny of this great Republic will depend largely upon the education at the fireside and in the school. Then let us all be up and doing whatever we can by counsel, admonition, and by our pens and agitation to protect the home, and help our brothers to suppress the saloon and its ally, the lodge.—Mrs. J. S. Collins in the Christian Instructor.

SUNDAY AND THE RAILROADS.

In view of the general discussion on the subject of Sunday railway work, the editor of the Railway Age lately addressed a letter containing the following questions to several railroad presidents and managers in different parts of the country:

Do you consider it practicable to abandon the running of railway trains on Sunday?

If not, is it practicable to diminish the number of trains now run?

If practicable, is it desirable to prohibit all Sunday work on railways?

Has your company taken any action toward diminution of Sunday labor?

What is the present practice on your road in respect to Sunday labor?

What, approximately, would be the net annual loss to your company from stopping all work on that day?

Would the public as a whole be benefited or injured by a strict observance of the Sabbath by railways, as a day of rest?

While most of the answers express the opinion that it would not be practicable, under existing circumstances, to discontinue entirely the running of trains on Sunday, they are agreed that trains should be run only as a matter of necessity or convenience, and not for profit. This provso, "and not for profit," opens the door to all that could be asked. All work can be grouped under "necessity or convenience." Public opinion and public demand must both change radically before the railroads will cease their Sunday work.—The Outlook.

ACCORDING to Mackey and others the Ancient Mysteries, such as the Eleusinian and Egyptian, were nothing more or less than "Spurious Masonry," between which and the genuine article there a great many points of resemblance, to which they call the attention of the brethren of the mystic tie. But the question arises, how do these writers know what were the teachings of these secret organizations, they never having been initiated into them? Either Spurious Masonry was exposed by some person or persons, notwithstanding their obligations to the contrary, or else those who tell us about the Ancient Mysteries made their stories out of whole cloth. We cannot believe that Dr. Mackey would do such a thing, and therefore we are compelled to believe he had access to some good expose, the statements of which he accepted as being true, and which he repeated as such, as do we who have in our possession a reliable expose of the workings of the Blue Lodge, notwithstanding all declarations to the contrary that Masonry has never been written.—Olathe Free Press.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

COLORPHOBIA.

The recent conviction of a restaurant keeper in this city for violating the law, by refusing food to a respectable colored citizen, has been made the occasion by a part of the public press, for a prolonged howl in behalf of colorphobia. It is argued that Rev. Smith is a disturber of the public peace; that race and color prejudice is an existing fact, and should be recognized factor in law; that there should be no law compelling social relations; and that to have admitted a colored person would in effect have driven away the whites, and compelled the owner to keep simply a black restaurant, etc.

I desire to say that as a general fact the colored people of this city are peace-loving, industrious and respectable. Some of them are persons of wealth and refinement, hold high official positions, and have such social standing as makes them welcome in the best society of this country and Europe. Their rights are as well respected here as anywhere in the nation. With advancing education the color prejudice has rapidly abated, and it is a singular phenomenon that this fast-decaying relic of barbarism should receive the endorsement of such papers as the New York Evening Post and the Evening Star of this city.

2. Colored persons are freely admitted on all the railroads and street-cars of this city. Some of the best dining halls make no distinction on account of color, nor was it generally known that any made such distinction. The pretense of driving away white people, and injuring business is the purest fabrication. It may be said, however, that many of the restaurants here keep a bar for the sale of liquors, and as it has become an axiom in morals, that "the meaner a white man is, the worse he will hate negroes," we can readily see why bar-keepers and their customers should want to draw the color line.

3. It is notoriously true that great and cruel wrongs are done to colored people by their exclusion from hotels, railroad cars and eating-houses. This is very generally done in the South, and in some cases in the North. Persons of the highest moral and social standing are compelled to ride in a smoking car after purchasing first-class tickets, and denied all access to railway eating houses, which practically means denial of all food. For these wrongs there has been, as a general fact, no redress. All over the South the Civil Rights Act has been openly trampled on, and the 14th and 15th Amendments of the Constitution skillfully evaded.

4. The claim that there should be no law to compel social relations is doubtless correct, so far as voluntary relations are concerned. There should be no law to compel a negro-hater to ride or eat with the abhorred race. He surely should be privileged to walk and eat by himself. But his prejudice should be no bar to the rights of all well-behaved people to the full benefits of public conveyances and public tables. To secure these rights was the object of the Civil Rights Act. This is said to be the first and last case, and it is a matter of rejoicing that the right has triumphed.

FREEMASONRY AND CIVIL SERVICE APPOINTMENTS.

I think it it may be safely assumed that the President and heads of the Departments are patriotic, fair-minded men, who, whatever may be their shortcomings, desire to administer the government with due regard to the interests of all. The fact that some of them are Freemasons should not be regarded as a proof that partiality is consciously used in appointments, but rather that these men have made use of this among the many helps to climb to their present high positions. The fact that Freemasonry could be and often has been so used, is strong reason why it should be suppressed.

It is, however, notoriously true, that in some of the Departments there is a large number of men, often a majority, who surely lack the qualities of gentlemen, who fill the rooms with tobacco smoke and abound in profane and impure language to the great annoyance and hindrance of the few Christian men and women with whom they are associated. If such things are contrary to the rules of the Department it does not make it any the less a fact and an evil.

But these men are generally Masons or members of kindred orders, and woe be to the fellow clerk who would dare complain. It were good for him that he never had an official position.

In a recent case a Christian man called attention to these annoyances, and though he had spent years of faithful service, both in the military and civil departments, and though his record stood high both for accuracy and rapidity, he was dismissed at brief notice. Of course there was a pretext. It would have been awkward to have given him the real reason.

Moreover it is this class of unscrupulous men who, other things being equal, climb fastest and highest. A modest Christian man may work for years and constantly find unworthy upstarts, with lodge influences to back them, climbing over his head. It is perhaps not so much the fault of the men who make the appointments as of the system under which they act. So long as favoritism pervades almost every department of society, it will be hard to keep it out of the civil service. The stream cannot rise higher than the fountain nor can it send forth purer and better water. The remedy lies deeper than in any mere political change. There must be national reformation. The Civil Service rules just coming into effect may modify these things in a degree, but they are not the remedy. H. H. HINMAN.

THE CONCLAVE OF 1883.

KNIGHT TEMPLAR ARROGANCE DENOUNCED.

August 24th, during the San Francisco Conclave, the corner-stone of a monument, ostensibly to the memory of Garfield, but no less in honor of Freemasonry, was laid by Freemasons with great parade and ceremony. The Governor of the State disgraced his office by proclaiming a holiday. The San Francisco Monitor speaks thus of the matter:

Governor Stoneman, at the request of the Masonic fraternity, has proclaimed Friday the 24th inst. a legal holiday for the very peculiar reasons "that a great number of prominent and influential citizens of other States will on said day be visiting this State as the guests of an important organized society of our citizens; and whereas, on said day the corner-stone of the monument to our late President, James A. Garfield, will be laid in Golden Gate Park, in the city and county of San Francisco, by the Most Worthy Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons, escorted by the Knights Templar from all parts of the Union then sojourning in San Francisco, and by the military force of the United States and the State of California." This is the first instance in the history of the Republic where a secret society has been officially recognized by any State executive, and this is the first time when a day has been declared a legal holiday for their sole accomodation. Such special privileges are bad precedents to set in a Republic where all men are supposed to be free and equal.

RESPECT FOR THE SALOON.

The Rescue, Good Templar organ, San Francisco, Aug. 16, says: "Ex-Gov. Perkins has publicly prohibited the entering of any dramshop by a Knight Templar of this State wearing any insignia of Masonry. That order reflects credit upon Commander Perkins and upon the Masonic fraternity. And it deservedly places a stigma of disrepute upon the dens of sin called saloons. One of the fraternity of mankillers has put up a deadfall on Market street which he calls the Conclave with especial designs on the purses and lives of the Knight Templars."

What credit? No Mason is forbidden to patronize the grogshop—only he must not show his lodge trinkets there. It is also a requisition of the lodge that all who enter must leave at the door with their umbrellas all their political prejudices and religious convictions, that nothing may interfere with the prevailing religious spirit of devil worship within. Now when Knight Templars gather in great numbers it is ordered that when entering drinking holes they leave their Masonic peculiarities at the door. Is not this by analogy an acknowledgment of the superior power of the spirit dwelling within the vile place.

THE CHICAGO REPUTATION MAINTAINED.

"O thou invisible spirit of wine, if thou hast no name to be known by, let us call thee devil."—Shakespeare.

[From a San Francisco dispatch to the Chicago Tribune dated August 22, 1883.]

"The excursion party to Napa Valley returned last evening much pleased with their trip. It was participated in by 800 Knights, their ladies and friends. At Yountville the Knights paid a visit to the immense wine vault of G. Grossienger, in the loft of which great preparations had been made for the reception of the guests. Arriving at St. Helena, the party marched in a body to the grove, where eight refreshment tables, each 100 feet in length, were spread. Buggies for the accommodation of 300 excursionists were placed at the disposal of those wishing to take a short drive in this garden spot of California. Time was too limited to make a long stop at Calistoga, at the end of the road, and at 4 o'clock the excursion started on the return to San Francisco, each Knight bringing one and some as many as four bottles of wine as mementos of the California wine-growers' hospitalities."

"At 10 o'clock nineteen yachts, carrying nearly 600 guests, started out for a cruise. As the breeze was light and the fog rather thick the program was changed, and instead of an each-for-himself two tugs took the yachts in tow towards the Golden Gate. Four steamers accompanied the yachts—one in front, one in the rear, and one on either side—forming a diamond-shaped quadrangle. The steam-yacht that served as a flag ship and commissary ship drew ahead to the first yacht handing over the hampers of wine and refrestments, then, dropping astern to succeeding yachts, continuing its process of supplying the wants of the guests. The five steamers carried nearly 700 people and bands of music."

MASONS, JESUITS AND JEWS.

The exploiters of labor are organized into three great capitalistic secret societies. These are, the "Knights Templar," the "Jesuits" and the "B'nai B'rith."

The Knights Templar is a collection of the Protestant robbers, the Jesuits of the Catholics, and the B'nai B'rith of the Jews. Each of these organizations are run in the interest of and controlled by the capitalists and aristocrats for the main purpose of enslaving labor. Whenever there exists a necessity for their joint operation against labor they strike hands and present a united front to us.

Their scheme of operation is simple and effective: They all cry out that they are organized to benefit humanity. Under these false colors they go out to organize the world. They endeavor to make all the working people become members of their subordinate degrees. They rope the producers into the organization with plausible stories, assess them there for the money to carry on their schemes, and pledge them there to assist all members of the order. Then they pick out those that have the most money or brains and raise them up to the higher degree, and keep up this weeding and selecting process until they have in the highest degrees only the most aristocratic, selfish, shrewdest and wealthiest men. These fellows do the governing and enjoy the power and profit that springs therefrom.

They exact from the poor devil of an "Entered Apprentice" that he shall support every brother of higher degree, and yet not one of them will carry out on their part the obligation they have taken to that subordinate.

Through this system they control the world.

Now, what is needed is that all laboring men shall see what asses they are making of themselves, and shall withdraw from these capitalistic robbing machines and band themselves together in an organization of their own.—Correspondent of San Francisco Truth.

THE RETURN HOME.

On the 31st of August a stranger from some despotic country might have been reminded of scenes in his own land. Armed men marching through our streets with the semblance of military rule—for what? Is the city under martial law? Are there riotors to be quelled? Is there political disaffection dangerous to the peace of the community? or what?

No, Sir! No. None of these. Only some of our citizens delight in parading and playing at soldiers, a game at which our colored people are likely far to excel them as they will do also in the trumpeting of their joy in their display. Silly vanity is an essential element of it.

But there are a few who lead such slavish crowds. These few delight in power, have military instincts, are natural monarchists, and have no great faith in the permanence of our Republican form of government. They moreover toady to the rich. They would have been (if in France) for the late Duc de Chambord as king of the French and now would likely support the claims of Count de Paris as the nearest heir to the throne.

Knights Templars indeed! What need for them in these United States in the year A. D. 1883? What childishness to play at such historical follies! How utterly out of place in this day of constitutional freedom and open Bibles! But the silly play is not altogether free from danger—perhaps like some of our city boys the other day who were playing, and in sport built a toy shed and set fire to it, and in their delight cried out fire! fire!! fire!!! Whew! Quickly the real alarm was given and the engines came hurrying along to the utter confusion of the boys and stoppage of their sport

Now take warning, all ye gallant Knight Templars, whether colored or white, and don't display your swords and drill too much or you may meet the fate of our silly playful city boys. T. H. (Chicago.)

Say nothing against pride, secrecy and other side-issues; get the heart right and all will be right. This is the logic by which, we are bold to state, Satan has deceived his thousands. The majority of the churches today pretend to be acting on this principle, but the genuine fruits are not forthcoming. The sins that are by them termed side-issues, and which to rebuke they call indiscretion, are gaining an alarming prevalence, and what seems to us so passing strange is that some who seem to be walking in the light themselves, do not seem to perceive that this logic is a trap of the devil whereby he is ensnaring many; and especially such as are inclined to compromise. Beware!—Gospel Banner.

WESTFIELD COLLEGE.—Rev. L. Bookwalter has been chosen president of Westfield College, and it is understood that he will accept the position. He will enter upon the duties of his office as soon as he can close up his work judiciously at Greenville, Tennessee, where he has been laboring for a few years as a missionary with signal success. For scolarship and ability as a teacher, he proved himself first-class while serving as professor in that institution, and before that by his very valuable services in Western College. He regained impaired health by resigning his position at Westfield a few years ago, and going as a missionary to Tennessee, where he has developed his naturally superior preaching and evangelical ability. He as a man of moral worth ranks very high. He is in every way worthy to succeed that great and good man, President Allen.—Richmond Star.

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,

JONATHAN BLANCHARD,

OF ILLINOIS.

For Vice President,

JOHN A. CONANT,

OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

Ex-Senator Pomeroy, of Kansas, now of Washington, D. C., honored the Union Signal office with a call one pleasant morning last week. It was greatly desired that he should address a meeting at Lake Bluff, but his engagements prevented. His earnestness in reform work of all kinds is an inspiration to all who have the good fortune to see or hear him. Prohibition and woman's ballot are themes on which he delights to speak, both in public and private. All this goes far, we believe, to keep him the young, vigorous man he is to-day after years of battling and enduring hardness like a good soldier of Jesus Christ.—Union Signal, Aug. 23.

ONE VOTE.

I think that a better man than Mr. Pomeroy could not be placed at the head of the American ticket. I believe that every Christian and lover of truth should vote for that ticket. I shall do what I can at the coming election. It may be said that these votes are lost, but that cannot possibly be, for acts of righteousness, like principles, are immortal; and lived up to are the life and power of any people. H. W. FOWLER.

THE MASONIC CANDIDATE FOR THE PRESIDENCY.

It is well enough to know the qualities of that thirty-two storied character, Gen'l. Butler, whom the pensioners of the "Blue and Grey" are going to nominate for our next President. This character is one of those men who are thus described by Picton in his Life of Oliver Cromwell, as actuated by self-consciousness, ambition, and fussiness—"their sense of self and self-interest is much keener than their loyalty to the body corporate of which they are organic parts. And therefore, instead of doing with instinctive devotion to the general good what first comes to hand, they scheme and intrigue to secure for themselves the largest possible share of power and honor. Woe to the commonwealth which in any time of sudden and unusual peril counts a large proportion of such men among its numbers."

The political drift of things is evident. Under the management of the lodge the old democracy, the "Blue and Grey," and the disaffected Republicans are to be united for the election of a President. General Butler is their first choice. If they fail to secure his nomination, then they have some Masonic dark horse in Massachusetts or Indiana to put in his place. But if he is elected it will not be by MY VOTE.

THE MORAL FORCES IN POLITICS.

FROM AN ADDRESS BY SENATOR WILSON OF IOWA, AT CLARINDA, AUG. 11TH.

Moral forces are moving upon the political elements of this good State of ours to-day. No student of political history can fail to appreciate the great significance of this fact. Sneer as some may and do at the activity of preachers, and churches, of prayer meetings and Sunday-schools, of women in their homes, and in their Christian temperance unions, of that quiet and unobtrusive force of voters which moves resolutely only when put in motion by the spur of moral conviction, they will find that political history will repeat itself in Iowa this year by perching victory on the banners under whose folds these promoters of the world's true progress march. I have not the least alarm as to what the result will be. When that vital political principle on which our system of government is based, and through which alone a people's sovereignity can speak, receives the active support of the moral forces of the community it will not be overthrown. And the conditions here involved will not confine the sundering of party allegiance to one political organization. There have been times in the history of our own country when party disintegration was more active than any like thing in the present political conditions of Iowa; but the right was not the loser. In the quiet of the homes of Iowa from now on until the second Tuesday of October next the better natures and moral convictions of the men and women of the State will hold their way and do their work; and a majority greater than that given to the constitutional amendment at the non-partisan election on June 27, 1882, will approve the position of the party which affirms the right of the majority to rule, and has planted itself "on the side of the homes of our own people in their contest with the saloons." We will all find at the outcome that there is more of the non-partisan movement in Iowa politics this year than many men now dream of, and that there are more active homes than aggressive saloons in the State. Thousands of men who never have voted a Republican ticket will do it this year, not because they surrender their political convictions, but because they cannot vote to maintain the rule of the majority and represent their moral convictions by doing anything else. There is no difficulty in finding the line which divides the parties this year. So, at least, it seems to me, and so I believe the result will show to all.

YOUNG MEN OF IOWA!

to you I signal—"Hold the Fort!" Make no mistake in your political action this year. When I look back upon the lines of my life's march, and take in the wondrous things which have transpired in the comparatively few years which I have numbered, I almost envy you that reach of life and experience which will carry you far beyond me in the future. I pray you to consider the mighty responsibilities and bewildering possibilities which are coming to meet you. Keep in line with the better thought and moral forces of your times. If you meet with doubts resolve them on the better side. This great country needs your best endeavors. It opens up to you fields of usefulness, happiness and success beautiful as Eden's garden, but no more free from temptation than was it. Start right this year, and be assured that even slightest efforts, if made with earnest purpose to create and promote better conditions of society and thus advance the true interest of your country, will help you in all others. Though your right effort seems to fail in its aim, its very making will give you strength. You have heard older men wish for better politics and cry aloud for reform in political methods. Doubtless there is room for both. But they will never come through wrong ways, nor by departures from moral convictions. It will not be long until you will have the political affairs of this country in your own hands. Some of you have had the ballot for a few years, others of you will exercise it for the first time next October. It is a great trust. Whatever the future of this country may be will depend largely on the use which the young men of to-day shall make of the votes of which they are the masters. All along the lines of your lives you will meet with important political conditions which you must help to resolve. Be careful in your study of them, do your best to understand them, follow your moral convictions, and you seldom will go wrong. The politics of a great country like ours is something more than to be played for public office and personal advantage. There is no more serious employment in the country than its politics It needs all of the care and thought, heart and mind, earnest purpose and moral vigor you can put into it. It relates not only to individual and party, but also to State and Nation. If anything more than another should be guided by wisdom and characterized by purity by an organized community, however small or however great it may be, it is its politics. And nothing can be more forceful to this end than a determination on the part of the young men of the State that it shall be so.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE THING TO BE DONE.

ARCADE, N. Y., Sept. 1, 1883.

It is correctly avered, editorially, in the Cynosure of August 16th, that "the thing to be done by the National Christian Association is precisely that before Christ's disciples at Pentecost." It is of vast importance to mark well the circumstances and condition of things which were precedent to the gift of the Holy Ghost as the motive power, moving, inspiring and giving efficacy to the labors of these disciples.

The thing to be done by the N. C. A. is also the thing to be done by the Christian brotherhood universally. That thing, as given by the editor, is "to displace the false worships which fill the earth and teach mankind the only way to God through or by Christ." If desired and desirable ends are sought through Christ, then is it indispensably necessary that his plans and ways should be honored by a strict and practical observance of them.

The inexpressably rich blessings, including that of the gift of the Holy Ghost, received from the Father on the pentecostal and succeeding days were preceded by humble, devout and earnest prayer, and other preparatory work. Promises of bestowment of blessings always involve conditions. "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse." Then, and not until then, will God "open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it." Sacrifices must be made. Crosses must be shouldered. This involves the sundering of cherished ties heretofore considered to be God-approved, but which increased light has shown to be offensive in his sight.

One condition, and that the only one named immediately preceding the history of that wonderful pentecostal season of the baptism of the Holy Ghost, as recorded in the second chapter of Acts, in which the disciples were previous to that baptism, was that of unity and union. "They were all with one accord in one place." Such union, being in numerous instances insisted upon in the Scriptures, it is unquestionably right to conclude, was and is an indispensable and fundamental prerequisite to successful labor for the Master, whether that effort be for adding graces to the militant church, or for the displacement of "the false worships which fill the earth."

No sane Christian man or woman can, for a moment, believe that had the Christians of the year of our Lord 33 been organically divided into sects, as at this day they are divided, that God, by the Holy Ghost, would have come down and accomplished such a glorious work as that performed on and immediately succeeding the day of Pentecost.

With like preparation, as on that occasion, it requires no prophetic ken to affirm truthfully that like results will be realized, for God's covenant promises are sure. This being so, they who create and those who perpetuate sect divisions, and those who institute and maintain other stumbling blocks, incur a great responsibility.

A WORD OF APPROVAL FROM ENGLAND.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, Eng., August, 1883.

[Extract.]

"MY DEAR S.—I thank you for the various newspaper (Cynosures, etc.) you have sent me. I was surprised to find that the opponents of Freemasonry, etc., were strong enough to be represented in the press, or rather, I should say, that Freemasonry was so strong as to require a paper practically and expressly to combat it.

"My opinion of unions of this kind is what it has always been, that they are vicious in principle and practice.

"A few weeks ago, the Prince of Wales, (a worthy man !! ??) laid the foundation stone of a building at York, with Masonic honors. The blasphemy of the religious (?) service produced a feeling in my mind which was only equalled by the feeling of surprise that, any man, calling himself a minister of Christ, could be found to do and say what the Rev. Chaplain did and said!

Yours, etc., T. A."

The foregoing is a true extract from a letter received by a subscriber to Cynosure in answer to copies of the paper he had sent to his brother-in-law who is a lawyer of Christian standing in Newcastle, Eng.

We see the good effect of scattering the papers.

A SMALL DOSE ENOUGH.

ELDORA, Iowa, Aug. 27, 1883.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—I have always been opposed to the principles of secret orders, though I was induced to unite with one of the milder orders, whose main object seemed to be life insurance, and for that purpose I joined. I never attended the lodge except the night of my initiation; in fact, I did not feel the least interested, for the reason that the ceremony was conducted in a manner and by such persons that it caused a feeling of the greatest condemnation, when asked to kneel and place my hands on God's sacred Word. I paid my dues for about eighteen months, and last December requested my name to be taken from the roll. When I united with the church they wished me to know their full doctrine before becoming a member. So help me God, I will never take the oath of a secret order again.

When brother Blanchard was in Cedar county, Iowa, near 1871, delivering his anti-secret lectures, an Odd-fellow expressed himself in disfavor with secret orders and said he had not attended a lodge in the State (though he had been a resident of Iowa for some years), neither did he intend to. He is now a resident of this (Hardin) county, and I was surprised that he took part in the Odd-fellows' reunion at this place, though soon after I learned that he was a candidate for a county office. This, I think, will explain everything when I say he was nominated by Republicans, who are usually sure of success in this locality.

We have heard secret society men telling how it has helped them in business, or assisted others in time of trouble, by being a member of the order, but when you remark that such help often leads to injustice or corruption in business and politics, they are quick to reply, "No! O no!" Sworn to defend the order, you know.

L. BUTLER.

THE FREEMASONS AND NICOLAITANS.

Some people believe that in these two systems there is much in common; but the point calling for notice is the fact that the Nicolaitans, like the Freemasons now, did hold membership in the church of Pergamos, while by the church of Ephesus their deeds were hated. The deeds are not specified, but the fact of their evil tendency is one of great practical importance in our own day. And as the Lord commends the church of Ephesus for "hating" the said "deeds" and calls on the church of Pergamos to repent or incur the penalty, the duty in our day is clear, that no church should fellowship "THEM THAT HOLD THE DOCTRINE OF THE NICOLAITANS, WHICH THING I HATE," saith the Lord. That is assuredly certain. Then the question is, What were the deeds hated? Do Freemasons commit them?

Almost every number of your valuable paper proves that the deeds of Freemasonry are such as the Word of God condemns. Hence Freemasonry should be a matter of discipline as much as other wrong things taught or encouraged by any other anti-Christ.

A question might be put, or a case supposed, thus: A member of the church of Pergamos who hates the deeds of the Nicolaitans is silent in regard to them, and allows members to be snared without a word of warning. Question; What would the Lord say of him?

Another finding the church vote to continue them in fellowship, or even never bring the matter into question, feels compelled to "hold no fellowship" and withdraws from the church which walks so disorderly. What would the Lord say of him?

Would it be better to adhere to the corrupt church, or to withdraw from it even if there was not a purer one to receive him?

THE TEMPERANCE WAVE.

A grand series of temperance camp mass meetings are being held through western New York, attended by thousands of the people, and addressed by such able speakers as Gov. St. John, Revs. Boole, Copeland, Cushing, Mrs. Ellen Foster, Mrs. Mary Lathrop, and others whose souls are embued with the vital importance of constitutional and statutory prohibition of the great liquor crime and curse from society.

"HOLDEN WITH CORDS."

I have just finished reading "Holden with Cords," and to say that I am more than satisfied would be but a faint way of expressing my appreciation of the volume. This book placed in the hands of the young men of the nation will prove an insurmountable barrier in the way of the lodge and will cause many who are already members to throw off the shackles of slavery. It is a book that should be circulated in every neighborhood. Friends of the reform buy "Holden with Cords," and loan it to your neighbor.

A SYNAGOGUE OF SATAN AT SPRINGVILLE, PA.

July 17th was a grand day with the lodge. The band paraded the streets playing the most inspiring airs. At 3 o'clock, the "Grand Master" of the State being present, a hall over a blacksmith's shop was dedicated with the usual formalities. A new lodge, composed of some members of adjacent lodges and three new members, was formed. During the exercises a song was given to the tune "Coronation" of which the following is one verse:

"All hail the power of friendship's name,
Let angels prostrate fall;
Bring forth the royal diadem
And crown it Lord of all."

The name of Jesus was carefully excluded from all the exercises.

After the dedication the Grand Master made a speech full of sophistry and bombast in the Methodist church. One of his assertions was that Odd-fellowship was not a religion but an adjunct. The idea seemed perfectly ridiculous that the religion of Jesus Christ needed any improvement.

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON XII.—September 16.—A Praying Mother.—1 Samuel 1: 21-28.

GOLDEN TEXT.—I have lent him to the Lord; as long as he liveth he shall be lent to the Lord.—1 Sam. 1: 28.

"Elkanah." Elkanah, the Levite is called an Ephraimite (chap. 1: 1), because, so far as his civil standing is concerned, he belonged to the tribe of Ephraim, just as the Levite in Judges 17: 7 is described as belonging to the family of Judah.—Keil.

"Hannah" (beauty or charm). It is the same name with Anna of Luke 2: 36, and with our modern names Anne, Anna, Annie. She is distinguished not only as the mother of Samuel, but also as a prophetic poet of high order. Her hymn of thanksgiving for the birth of her son (chap. 2) belongs to the highest class of inspired poetry. That of Mary, the mother of Jesus, resembles it. Compare 1 Sam. 2: 1–10 with Luke 1: 46–55. See also Ps. 113. It contains the first designation of the Messiah under that name (1 Sam. 2: 10).—Johnson.

"Until the child be weaned." He would then be two or three years old. It is still a common practice in the East to suckle children for two years, and in ancient times they were sometimes not weaned till three years old. The weaning was made an occasion of festivity (Gen. 21: 8). The objection has been made that so young a child would have been troublesome to Eli, but there were women engaged in the tabernacle service (chap. 2: 22) to whose care he might have been committed. It was important that he should be dedicated as soon as possible. The house of God was to be the only home he knew; the earliest impressions of his boyhood were to be those of the sanctuary.—Cambridge Bible.

"The child was young." Note the impressive connection between Samuel's character and Samuel's mission. Wild excesses in youth are often followed by energy, by zeal, by devotion. We read it in the examples of Augustine, of Loyola, of John Newton. Sudden conversions like these are among the most striking points of ecclesiastical history. But no less certain is it that they are rarely, very rarely, followed by moderation, by calmness, by impartial wisdom. The especial work of guiding, moderating, softening, the jarring counsels of men, is, for the most part, the especial privilege of those who have grown up into matured strength from early beginnings of purity and goodness.—Stanley.

"They slew a bullock," viz., the one which had been brought as a dedicatory offering with the child: the sacrifice of the others is taken for granted. We may try to picture the scene. Elkanah leads the bullock to the north side of the altar of burnt-offering, in the court before the door of the tabernacle, and binds it to the horns of the altar. Hannah brings her child, and lays his hand on the head of the victim in token that it is his representative; at that moment Elkanah or one of the priests slays it (Lev. 1: 5). Its blood is sprinkled, and its limbs burnt upon the altar, as an emblem of the complete dedication of the child to Jehovah.—Cambridge Bible.

"My lord." My master and commander. Here we perceive the great reverence in which Eli was held. He was the greatest man in Israel, greater, indeed, than a king, since he was sovereign, judge, and high priest.—Johnson.

"For this child," etc. Three things move Hannah's soul deeply and joyfully: (1) the recollection of the moment when she stood here and called on God for this son; (2) the contemplation of the answer to her prayer, and the granting of the thing asked; and (3), the determination now to restore to the Lord what he had given her in this answer to her prayer.—Lange. It is well to desire children. It is almost impossible to become such persons as God means us to be, without the influence of children. We are trained in training them. We are made unselfish by loving them. They teach us how we ought to act and feel toward God. They show us how the most we can do for God is simply to love him. They help us to govern ourselves, to restrain our feelings and passions, lest we set an evil example before them. We are made better by their innocence and loving faith. In every way children are a blessing.—Peloubet.

"Therefore also," etc. Whatever we give to God may on this account be said to be lent to him, for though we may not recall it as a thing lent, yet he will certainly repay it with interest, to our unspeakable advantage, particularly what is given to the poor.—Henry.

BAND OF HOPE BIBLE LESSON.

PROFANITY A SIN AGAINST THE LORD.

33. Again, ye have heard that it hath been said by them of old time, Thou shalt not forswear thyself, but shalt perform unto the Lord thine oaths;
34. But I say unto you, Swear not at all; neither by heaven; for it is God's throne;
35. Nor by the earth; for it is his footstool; neither by Jerusalem; for it is the city of the great King.
36. Neither shalt thou swear by thy head, because thou canst not make one hair white or black.
37. But let your communication be, Yea, yea; Nay, nay; for whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil. Mat. 5: 33–37.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain. Ex. 20: 7.

CENTRAL TRUTH.—Profanity is a great sin.

1. The Jews did not consider an oath binding in which the name of God did not directly occur.—Alford.

2. Many people seem to think if they substitute some other name for that of Jehovah, they are not guilty of swearing.

3. Our Saviour shows us that as God is everywhere, creating and supporting all things, to swear by any object, animate or inanimate, is really profanity because an indirect appeal to him.

4. When people use such expressions as "By George!" or "By Jove!" it shows that they have enough reverence for God not to take his name directly in vain. But it is a sin nevertheless. It betrays a coarse mind and low breeding, and as the tendency of evil is always down hill, a person in the habit of using such expressions will be apt by and by to use stronger ones.

5. Habits are formed when we are boys and girls, and the first bad word we use is like the first glass of liquor, we never know where it may lead.

6. Any light, irreverent treating of sacred things is profane. There is no habit better for the young to cultivate than the habit of reverence.

7. Every man who takes a degree in Masonry takes several oaths. If he goes through all the degrees he takes between two and three hundred. Only a magistrate can lawfully administer an oath, and nobody has a right to take an oath except before one.

8. Men who take so many oaths lose their reverence for God's name. When a man ceases to reverence God he is very apt not to respect the rights of his fellow beings. This is one reason why profanity usually goes with other crimes.

9. Christ commands us not to affirm or deny anything in our common conversation by any stronger words than a simple Yes, or No.

10. When a man seeks to bolster up a statement by profanity, or even by using strong expressions of any kind, he only creates a doubt of its truth.

11. There is no habit, unless it is the habit of intemperance, which is harder to break off.

PRACTICAL TRUTHS.

The first bad word leads to the second.

Any want of reverence for God is profanity.

Men who become Freemasons must violate the Third Commandment.

Profanity springs from evil, and only evil comes from it.

LESSON TALK.

A gentleman once entered into conversation with a stranger who, in a few moments, uttered an oath. Another and another soon followed, upon which the gentleman said:

"Don't you think swearing is wrong?"

"I know it is wrong," promptly replied the man; "but it is a part of my business."

"And pray, what is your business?" inquired the gentleman, in some surprise.

"Liquor selling. A man can't sell liquor and not swear. It is a part of the business."

Wherever we find saloons, there we find profanity. If the sale of liquor could be entirely stopped, we should hear much less bad language.

Society has altered since Dr. Johnson's day. A lady calling to see him when absent, the servant told him that she did not leave her name and he could not tell who she was, but he was certain she was a woman of high rank because she swore so. Profanity is no longer fashionable nor tolerated in good society. The steady progress of Christian principles has brought about a great reformation in morals and manners. But there is still room for improvement.

Any light, irreverent quoting of God's Word is profanity. If we should receive a letter from a loving, absent father, and some thoughtless person should take a sentence here and there and turn it into a witticism to laugh over and make others laugh, our filial feelings would be shocked. We should feel hurt and indignant. We ought to feel so when God's Word is made the subject of idle jests. But this is very often done in our daily prints and in conversation.

We know there is a penalty attached to every broken commandment. In this one we are distinctly reminded of it, perhaps because it is one which in some form or another we are very liable to break and think it a small thing. Let us always remember that God will not hold him guiltless who taketh his name in vain, and shun the slightest approach to this vice.

LESSON HYMN.

Dear Jesus, let thy pitying eye
Look kindly down on me;—
A sinful, weak and helpless child,
I come thy child to be.

O, blessed Saviour! take my heart,
This sinful heart of mine,
And wash it clean in every part;
Make me a child of thine.

My sins, though great, thou canst forgive
For thou hast died for me;
Amazing love! help me, O God,
Thine own dear child to be.

The Masonic orator at Montrose on St. John's day said that the reason it would not do to make Masons out of women was that it would make them angels and they would take wings and fly away. So it seems that in the case of Masonry what is sauce for the goose isn't sauce for the gander, for Masonry lacks a long stretch of making angels out of men. The orator also said that "if he was allowed to tell the women a part of the Master Mason's obligation they would have no objections to their husbands and sons joining the order." What a pity there are so many good things the Masons can't tell. But that trouble is all over now for since the antis have gone into the exposition business it is all being told, and our lady readers can see in our columns that which a Masonic orator can't tell them.—Banner of Truth.

FARM NOTES.

—If you wish to propagate a hardy shrub that does not sprout from the roots, the way to do it is by layering. Select a slender, low-growing branch, strip off all but the terminal leaves, bend it down and fasten it against the ground and cover with earth. From the leaf nodes tiny rootlets will start and a new plant form, which, when well rooted, can be severed from the bush.

—"A farmer has no more right," says the American Cultivator, "to grow a crop of weeds upon his own land to furnish seed to trouble his neighbors than he has to build fires upon his own land where they will oblige the neighbor to fight the fire in order to protect his own property from the flames." Denmark farmers are compelled to destroy all weeds on their premises, and in France a man can prosecute his neighbor for damages who permits weeds to go to seed which may endanger neighboring lands.

—A successful dairyman says: "The length of time that a young heifer keeps in milk after her first calf is likely to measure her staying qualities for all after life. For this reason young heifers should have their first calf in the Fall. By good care and ensilage food in Winter, an abundant flow can be established, which can more easily be kept up the next Summer. If heifers calve in the Spring they are very liable to go dry early in the next Fall."

—In South America cattle have increased so rapidly the last few years that bullocks have declined from $10 per head to a few cents over $6 per head. It is estimated that in two years from now the number of cattle in the Argentine Confederation will number 28,000,000, against 13,000,000 in 1877, 5,000,000 of which are in the State of Buenos Ayres. The Confederation also claims 60,000,000 sheep, 10,000 goats, 4,000,000 horses and 18,000 ostriches. The population is only about two to the square mile.

—A correspondent of the Ohio Farmer says that the good effect of salting clover is unquestionable; that it brings out the full flavor of the hay, but that if too much salt is used it will be sickening. To throw into the mow or on the stack great quantities of salt is to absorb too much moisture, a second fermentation sets in, and mold results. In that condition it is nauseous to stock, and, if growing hunger forces them to eat it, heaves and other disorders are apt to follow. A portion of the moldiness escapes as a penetrating dust, when stirred. This gets into the lungs, and the effort of nature to expel causes an unnatural action.

It is stated that $23,000 worth of wines and liquors have been corraled to supply the excursionists who are going out to drive the last spike of the Northern Pacific Railroad. As the party is limited to 250 gentlemen, the size of the bust can be ascertained by a mathematical calculation.

—It is very alarming to learn from the last annual report of the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics of the Treasury Department, that there were imported thirty thousand pounds more of the smoking opium than during the previous fiscal year, and our Government received more than half a million dollars duty on it. There is no word strong enough to describe the ruin which the opium habit entails. It is of the same dire brood as alcohol and tobacco, with some effects worse than either. It is the duty of every Christian to fight, always and everywhere.

Native potatoes have been discovered in Arizona by Professor Lemmon. They were found in one of the highest peaks north of the Apache pass under a tangle of prickly bushes and cacti. They were found at an altitude of about 8,000 feet in Tanner's cannon, and some of the plants were two feet high. Others were found near the summit of a peak 10,000 feet high, under the shade of fir, pine and poplar trees, growing in soil kept moist during the greater part of the year by melting snow. These potatoes are unquestionably indigenous. There were from four to ten small but unmistakable potatoes on each plant. Those blowing had blue and white blossoms. The professor brought quite a number of the potatoes back with him. Various cultivators have manifested the utmost interest in his discovery, and are making careful preparations to cultivate the specimens he has forwarded them.

As between the two extremes, says Colonel Curtis, the largest hogs are the best. I do not find any fault with a pig because it grows, and if it takes as long again for it to grow to maturity as it does for a fine little one, and it weights as much again, I think it is an advantage. It certainly takes more food in proportion to keep two sets of lungs and other organs in operation, and four more legs, than it does one. The fancy part of pig-breeding is giving away to a more practical standard. There are families of red hogs, medium in size, which will mature when a year old, and which will fatten at any age. These hogs possess the characteristics of vigorous appetites and a remarkable power for digesting and assimilating food; hence they can be fed strongly without any waste. In this respect red hogs are not excelled by any breed, and all they lack to place them in the front rank is more care and uniformity in breeding.

In transplanting fruit trees place them shallower than they formerly stood. Roots are of two kinds—the young and tender rootlets, composed entirely of cells, the feeders of the trees, always found near the surface, getting air and moisture; and roots of over one year old, which serve only as supporters of the tree and conductors of its food. Hence the injury that ensues when the delicate rootlets are so deeply buried in the earth. Placing fresh or green manure in contact with the young roots is another great error. The place to put manure is on the surface, where the elements disintegrate, dissolve and carry it downward. Numerous forms of fungi are generated and reproduced by the application of such manures directly to the roots, and they immediately attack the tree. It is very well to enrich the soil at transplanting the tree, but the manure, if to be in contact with or very near the roots, should be thoroughly decomposed.

Headache,—sick, nervous, neuralgic, removed by Dr. Benson's Celery and Chamomile Pills.

ALL REMITTANCES should be made by draft on Chicago, New York or Boston, postal money order, express or registered letter. Currency by unregistered letter at sender's risk. In sending money the amount and what it is for should be distinctly stated. In every instance the name of the writer and his post office address should be given to avoid confusion or mistake.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)
Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.
Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)
Christian Reformed Church.
Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)
Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.
Disciples (in part.)
Friends.
Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.
Mennonites.
Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.
Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)
Moravians.
Plymouth Brethren.
Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.
Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)
United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

New Ruhamah Cong. Hamilton, Miss.
Pleasant Ridge Cong. Sandford Co. Ala.
New Hope Methodist, Lowndes Co., Miss.
Congregational, College Springs, Iowa.
College Church of Christ, Wheaton, Ill.
First Congregational, Leland, Mich.
Sugar Grove Church, Green county, Pa.
Military Chapel, M. E., Lowndes county, Miss.
Hopewell Missionary Baptist, Lowndes Co., Miss.

J. F. GALLOWAY, Okahumka, Florida.
WM. HAZENBURG, Cape Town, S. Africa.
A. D. ZARAPHONITHES, Smyrna, Turkey.

Contributions for either of these brethren may be forwarded through the Treasurer of the N. C. A. PLEASE DESIGNATE to which one such funds shall be sent.

OLD FACTS IN A NEW FORM.

Do you want the Christian Cynosure for one year? There are three ways to get it:

1. Send the subscription price (single copy) $2.00.

2. Send $8.75 for a club of five, at $1.75 each, and get a copy one year for your services.

3. Send $15.00 for a club of ten at $1.50 each and get a copy extra for yourself.

Names may be sent at different times and papers addressed to different post-offices; but when you send the last name and order your extra copy, please give at the same time the entire list of names in your club, with the address of each, so as to avoid confusion or mistakes.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 6, 1883.

THE LABORERS' RIGHTS AND WRONGS.

The U. S. Senate sub-commission is in New York city taking testimony from laborers concerning their condition and wages. And the newspapers are discussing the wrongs and remedies of the laboring classes. This is a movement in the right direction. But it is painfully amazing how, even the religious press omits God and the Bible from their remedies for the wrongs of labor. The Psalmist held that the people is "happy" "whose God is the Lord." That when and where that is the case there will be "no breaking in or going out;" neither burglary nor strikes, nor "complaining in our streets."—Ps. 144 : 14. Now David in spirit calls Christ "Lord." And that happy people whose God is the Lord Jesus Christ is surely not that people whose politics and religion are governed by a secret lodge system which excludes Christ altogether or insults him by a vain and impious worship.

Now a procession of eight thousand men, Masons and other secretists, were marching in San Francisco Aug. 24. They had no visible or declared object but secret and public worship, except the laying of a corner-stone, and their worship, it need not be said, is not that recognized by the Bible or appointed by Christ. Forty thousand dollars were subscribed to entertain them. And the papers estimate their expenses as fabulously vast. They must have amounted in all, reckoning time, excursions, etc., to money enough to support the underpaid laborers of New York, whose sufferings draw the attention of the U. S. Senate, for years, so that they and their families should want neither bread nor raiment; and the lodge dues which support such frauds are chiefly drawn from the laborers of the United States. And so far are they from harmonizing or helping capital or labor they are a damage and drawback on both! Can any rational man believe, for a moment, that the San Francisco conclave has advanced any one substantial interest of society?

But emptiness, inanity and folly are not the sum or chief of their evils. They destroy the worship of God by false worship. They weaken the oath; adulterate and confound religion; they unbridle lust and vice and intemperance; and are just as surely bringing down the wrath of God on our country as the same sort of things destroyed the Hebrew commonwealth; and those presses and political speakers who harangue us on "rings" and "monopolies," while they ignore the secret, oath-bound rings, swindlings and monopolies of the lodge must be conscious to to themselves of cowardice or hypocrisy or both.

PRESBYTERIANISM VS. MASONRY.

The following from the Interior, which is the organ of the General Assembly Presbyterians, is altogether a hopeful sign of the times. We received our instruction in reference to the lodge from leaders in that great denomination, some of the noblest, mightiest, and most apostolic of men; as Nathan S. S. Beman, Samuel Crothers, the Rankins and others. The Interior, Aug. 23, discourseth thus:

"We oppose Masonry for a variety of reasons. Our observation is that it is, like the clubs in our large cities, bad for the family. A semi-religious organization which admits the husband and excludes the wife has the elements of demoralization in it. It takes the husband away from his home, where he ought to be, in the evenings. It cultivates a selfish charity—not the charity of the Gospel. It teaches false doctrine concerning the way of salvation. Christian Masons deny this, and put a construction upon Masonic ethics which makes them include Christianity, but their interpretation is rejected by their own brethren; and rightfully, as we think. The tendency of Masonry is to subvert interest in the church, and on that ground the Pope combats it."

After such clear and manly utterances, we regret that Mr. Gray should have added an argument somewhat longer than his utterances against the lodge, in favor of receiving and retaining Masons in Presbyterian church fellowship! The order is "bad for the family," "a semi-religious organization which admits the husband and excludes the wife," "takes the husband away from his home," "cultivates a charity—not the charity of the Gospel," and "teaches false doctrine concerning the way of salvation." Surely, a man "yoked" in an order which does and is all this, yoked too by twenty-eight oaths, not administered in the name or sworn by the God of the Bible, must be "unequally yoked," and that too with "unbelievers" in Christ. And this we know, is positively forbidden.

But the above teaching is sufficient, if heeded, to draw every child of God, who has been drawn into the lodge, directly out of it: and as he is second to no Presbyterian editor in the art of amusing while he instructs, and pleasing while he profits those whose opinions differ from his own, we respectfully request Mr. Gray to open his columns to facts and quotations from Episcopal and Presbyterian writers like Bishop Warburton and Macknight, as also from standard Masonic writers; to instruct the readers of the Interior, and sustain and enforce his very just and sound opinions above expressed.

In 1837, in the General Assembly at Philadelphia, the Southern leaders who rent the denomination the next year keenly ridiculed the party led by Dr. Beman, for their opposition to the Masonic lodge! So true was it, that the power which rent the Assembly and the Government, was Slavery, Lodge & Co! Ought not this dark and mighty power, which is capable of mischiefs so stupendous, to be uncovered to the eyes of the readers of the Interior, by more than an occasional paragraph? Will not Mr. Gray give from Masonic standard writers, and Presbyterian divines the reasons which sustain his just condemnation of the body, which has lately sent several thousands of men across our continent to parade on our Pacific coast, without assigning one substantial reason for such an assembly, either political or religious.

—Secretary Stoddard returned from Iowa Saturday morning. He attended the meeting of the N. C. A. directors on Monday, and was to be in Jackson, Mich., on the 5th to attend the meeting of the incorporated association of Michigan.

—Rev. Joseph Travis, editor of the Free Methodist, has for several weeks been traveling in the West and Northwest, from Kansas to Manitoba, attending camp meetings and other gatherings of his denomination.

—An Iowa correspondent, upon whom we place much reliance, wishes to know something of the influences controlling the schools of Cook county, Ill., in which Chicago is situated. A Mr. Speer from that State has just been appointed principal of the Normal School of this county, located in the suburb of Englewood. This Mr. Speer has been six years superintendent of schools in Marshall county, and is said by our correspondent to be Freemason and an infidel, and is a man whose reputation is not so much by merit as by puffs from Masonic editors. The capabilities of the lodge in manipulating our school system, makes the grave charge of our Iowa friend not by any means improbable.

—"Ancient Order Shepherds" and "Knights of Sherwood Forest" are two secret lodges of limited membership, which make their so-called "benevolent" or mutual Insurance work prominent among their objects.

—The Forester's Journal of New York city is the organ of the "Ancient Order of Foresters." On its editorial page a standing headline announces this secret lodge as "instituted from time immemorial." An editorial in the August number says with the greatest assurance: "He has studied Forestry to but little purpose who does not know that its teachings are not only wholesome and beautiful, but such as every man should follow in order that he may attain to his highest good and usefulness. No better code of morals, no higher and more perfect standard of true manhood can anywhere be found than Forestry presents." The Foresters have been adding largely to their membership for a few years past. Perhaps it is their assuming unlimited antiquity and a superexcellence of virtue and perfection of moral instruction that produces the mistaken notion that this society is just as good as the Freemasons!

—The father of our esteemed fellow-worker and correspondent, Rev. C. C. Foote of Detroit, died on Saturday, September 1st, at the remarkable age of 102 years, seven months. At his 100th birthday a suitable remembrance of the occasion was made by a large gathering of the descendants of this father in Israel, a description of that most interesting occasion appearing in the Cynosure of current date.

"HOLDEN WITH CORDS."—Mrs. Willard, editor of the Union-Signal, has been reading our great story with pleasure and profit, and gives it a noble commendation in the last number of her paper, thus:

"It is often said, and said with truth, that reform stories, novels with a purpose and the sort of fiction that seeks to embody unpalatable truths, must ever be lamentable failures. The few notable exceptions, like 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,' and a few of Dickens' and Charles Reade's works, it is claimed only prove the rule. Well then let us add a new name to the exceptions, for "Holden With Cords" is no failure, it is a story which one finishes before he can lay it down. It represents the struggles of a conscientious nature in the toils of secret orders, and gives, in story, much of unwritten history. The author is not widely known, but is the author of two or three prize books, and if we mistake not, will be renowned some day as one who can 'lead captivity captive' in the domain of reform literature. Will she not try her hand at temperance story-writing?"

NEW ENGLAND.

THE NEW ENGLAND BOARD of the National Christian Association has its headquarters at No. 8 Portland St., Worcester, Mass. A full supply of books and tracts constantly on hand. Orders promptly filled. Correspondence solicited.

TO NEW ENGLAND FRIENDS.

WORCESTER, Mass., Aug. 31st, 1883.

Last year an appeal was made to friends of the anti-secrecy reform for money to carry on the work in New England. Many responded liberally to the call, and their gifts aided the cause greatly. The responses, however, fell short of the demand, and we were obliged to curtail our operations to some extent. For the coming year the New England Board will be wholly dependent on the gifts of friends to sustain its efforts, and the undersigned were appointed a committee to appeal to friends of the cause in New England for a more liberal support. We need most of all a regular income—something which can be relied upon, monthly or quarterly. A number of persons last year made monthly remittances, and such gifts were of great value. They were evidence of a consecrated devotion to the cause. It is believed that many more could set apart small sums monthly to aid us, and we earnestly appeal to all who read these words for a pledge or a contribution. In no other way can we sustain the work.

It would save trouble and expense if friends would, without further solicitation, write to the New England Secretary, Mr. E. D. Bailey, No. 8 Portland St., Worcester, Mass., and state what they can and will contribute. The cause is worthy of a liberal support, and the work already accomplished is a guarantee that the money invested will produce worthy results. We appeal to friends of reform not to be backward or negligent in so important a matter. Let the responses be prompt.

S. A. PRATT,

E. D. BAILEY,

NOTES.

—Masons and Odd-fellows sometimes put on long faces and deny the truth of the expositions of their secrets, but among themselves they make use of the books to commit the work. Here is an ingenuous note from an Odd-fellow: "Send me two copies of Revised Odd-fellowship Illustrated. Recommended to me by Brothers of Shetucket Lodge, No. 27, Norwich, Ct.!"

—Philip Bacon sends a donation to the work with one of his ringing letters, urging the N. E. Board to provide more laborers. His part of Connecticut is in need of more work.

—Bro. Daniel Stratton, who expected to be at the N. E. Board meeting, was detained but he did not forget that such meetings cost something and that somebody has to pay the bills. Such thoughtfulness is helpful.

—Elder Barlow has returned from his trip to New York somewhat invigorated in health and stimulated in mind. His observations concerning the progress of the reform are very encouraging. It is his opinion that if men can be sent out to organize for political action we can poll a large vote in the country next year. This accords with the opinions of many others from various places.

—The call for the N. E. Board meeting published in the Cynosure made the date the 24th instead of the 29th, a typographical error.

—Two seceding Masons denounced the lodge at a large Advent camp-meeting in New Hampshire, and other Masons visited the speakers to inquire how they might honorably leave their lodges.

THE NEW ENGLAND BOARD.

AN IMPORTANT MEETING.

WORCESTER, Mass., Aug. 30, 1883.

The N. E. Board held its annual meeting yesterday at Horticultural Library. The meeting was one of the best yet held. Besides the members of the Board, who have before attended our meetings, a large number of friends came and took part in the discussions. Although the Board itself consists of only seven members, there were over twenty persons in attendance. The best of all is the fact that those who came were people of clear heads and clean hearts, who are thoroughly enlisted in the work and who have good ideas about how it should be prosecuted.

The officers of the Board were re-elected as follows. Rev. D. McFall, president; J. A. Conant, vice president; Prof. S. C. Kimball, recording secretary; D.

Manning, treasurer; L. P. Goddard, S. A. Pratt and the N. E. Secretary (ex officio) executive committee.

It was voted to propose an amendment to the constitution, limiting the Board to thirteen members and proposing that each organized State shall have at least one representative, instead of two as formerly provided. The reason for the change is that the former provision located so many of the Board at remote places from the headquarters that it would be exceedingly difficult to get a quorum for ordinary business meetings.

In accordance with this proposed amendment the Board recommended that the N. C. A. reappoint the former members and add to the list names enough to make the full number. If the suggestion is approved the Board will consist for the coming year of the following named persons: D. McFall, J. A. Conant, S. A. Pratt, S. C. Kimball, L. P. Goddard, C. L. McCracken (these being the former members) and Geo. Buck, J. E. Gates, A. M. Paull, I. Leadbetter, I. Flagg, D. Stratton and A. J. Hinckley (new members). The intention was to select men who could attend the meetings, being located sufficiently near headquarters to come when necessary. Each organized State has at least one representative. It is a matter of pride with me to believe that a "baker's dozen" of abler men could not be selected in any part of the country. This fact was fully demonstrated in the independent tone of the discussion of the business before the Board.

The Treasurer's report showed the receipts to have been $1,703.56 and the disbursements the same. The money was used in paying the salaries and expenses of four men who have been employed part or all of the time by the Board.

The N. E. Secretary's report introduced the finances and the location of headquarters for the consideration of the Board. Considerable time was given to discussing the best method of raising money for prosecuting our work. During the past year some eight or ten persons in different States have made monthly pledges and have remitted the money with great regularity. These remittances have come with such unerring certainty that they have removed much embarrassment and have been a continual solace in the work. The smallest of these subscriptions was fifty cents monthly and the largest two dollars and a half. The largest donation from one man was $170. There are more than one hundred men who call themselves poor who could easily pay 50 cents or $1 monthly which would aggregate not less than $50 monthly or $600 yearly, enough to support one man in the work. This, added to the larger gifts, would insure a comfortable fund for the work. After a full and free discussion of the subject it was decided to ask for pledges for our expenses the coming year and brethren Pratt, Manning and Bailey were appointed a committee on finance to draft an appeal and secure pledges to meet our expenses.

The question of locating our office in Boston received careful attention. It was urged on the one hand that we had already made a place for our reform in the hearts of Worcester people and a move would be hazardous. On the other hand the building offered in Boston was considered especially valuable in its location and in the room afforded, and it was said that a location in Boston would exert more influence in New England than to remain in Worcester. On the final vote the majority were favorable to moving provided the state of the finances would warrant it and the whole question was referred to the finance committee. The executive committee was empowered to fill any vacancy which might occur in the New England secretaryship.

After the business of the meeting was concluded opportunity was given for a general discussion of the reform and reports of progress. The necessity for immediate political action received attention and the efforts in that direction were heartily approved.

This meeting cannot help but produce a most salutary effect in New England. Those who attended were business men and women who have embarked with the purpose of succeeding, and with the blessing of the Lord they will succeed.

E. D. BAILEY.

THE WORLD'S ARBITRATION LEAGUE is planning for a great exposition in 1892. At a meeting of the World's Arbitration League in Washington, Aug. 28, resolutions were adopted favoring the holding of a world's exposition of art and industry at the Capital of the United States in 1892, the fourth centennial of the discovery of America, and recommending it be held in connection with a representative congress of nations for the discussion of "questions affecting the moral and social relations of the human race." It also decided to appoint a committee of seven members of the league to wait upon the President and request him to take into consideration the propriety of recommending to the next Congress some legislation looking to the successful attainment of the ends contemplated

REFORM NEWS.

THE CHICAGO ANTI-SECRECY CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

The next meeting of this association will occur Thursday evening Sept. 6th, at 221 W. Madison street, at 8 o'clock. Members and friends will please note the time of meeting.

Readers of the Cynosure, resident in the city, and all who are in any way interested in the agitation and discussion of vital reforms of the day, are hereby cordially invited and urged to identify themselves with the association, and as far as possible aid in pushing the cause of truth and righteous reform work in this city. The topic proposed for discussion at the meeting Sept. 13th, and on which a paper will be read, is: "The propiety of voting men into office who are members of a secret society."

FROM THE GENERAL SECRETARY.

ALBIA, Iowa, Aug. 27, 1883.

The two services held on Sabbath were well attended and I trust profitable. Gen. James B. Weaver spoke in the Opera House here Saturday evening and reviewed the record of the Republican party and some of Iowa's leading politicians in a very bold and impressive manner. The charges he preferred were exceedingly grave, and sustained by official records, in such a way as to appear conclusive. He was especially severe in his criticisms of the course pursued by the Republican leaders on the prohibition issue and thought their conduct indicated a want of sincerity and a willingness to sacrifice the welfare of the people to gain selfish ends.

The General is a fine speaker, in the prime of life, and I am told by the Mayor of this city is always greeted with a full house in this neighborhood, where he grew up from a boy.

I have seen little indication of general interest in our convention, and think it is not very well known in this community. I shall do what I can to spread the notice in the brief time remaining and hope that the attendance may exceed my expectation.

At Fairfield on Saturday I met a few of our old friends, but was disappointed in not seeing Bro. Elliot, who was away looking after his farming interests. The people of that enterprising little city were astir on political questions. A convention was progressing in which candidates for county offices and a State representative were to be nominated. There were several contestants, and no one when I left at 2:30 seemed to have a decided advantage for the legislature. I distributed tracts No. 2 and 13 and encountered both opposition and encouragement. While the secrecy question was not made a distinct issue the craftsmen were carefully watched and the secretists compelled to use great circumspection to avoid detection. The question was prohibition or modification, and as the platform and sentiment of the people are strongly prohibition, the modifictionists were attempting to carry their measures by placing "liberal" men with "broad ideas" in nomination. So far as I could learn, the men put forword by this faction were "Brothers of the Mystic tie," and some were of opinion that they would succeed in forcing their favorites to the front. I conversed with parties who gave it as their opinion that such a measure would split the Republican party in Jefferson county, and change the county administration. The Denocrats enjoyed the situation of course, and were sanguine in the expectation of getting into the lead.

I have heard considerable talk about the "Beverage Construction" of the Prohibition Amendment, and from what I have picked up, I understand the situation to be this: Republican leaders say that the law was not intended to prohibit the manufacture of liquor in the State of Iowa, or its sale to be transported to other States; but it must not be sold to drinkers in the State, thus ignoring the moral question entirely. Of course real, conscientious temperance people are disgusted with such trifling with a grave question, and the pandering of a great party to the whisky interests and the basest element in the State. The more thoughtful and discriminating look upon the whole move as a trick of party leaders to perpetuate their power by deceiving honest voters, and many of them will not follow in the road to ruin.

How far the American party will succeed in gaining a recognition remains to be seen, but it is absolutely certain that there is, and is to be a terrible shaking up of the old parties which will result in a new deal. The "Secret Empire" will move heaven and earth and hell itself, so far as they are able, to prevent any recognition of the fourth plank in our platform, and their combined efforts may succeed for a time, but a day of visitation and righteous retribution will come, and the overthrow and demolition of the "Secret Empire" will be all the more complete by reason of strength gathered in the delay. We have only to push on with undeviating firmness toward the goal, which if we do not reach, those who come after us surely will.

THE CONVENTION.

GALVA, Ill., Aug. 31st.—I find here my mother in her 89th year, in good health, and remarkably vigorous for one of her years.

Looking back upon the Iowa Convention just closed, I recall a gathering of vigorous men who have already achieved much and are ready to undertake still greater things. The absence of ex-Senator Pomeroy and Revs. Robb and Johnston, put down in the programme as speakers, was noted with regret, and the sessions opened with a mist if not a cloud on the prospect. But the presence of speakers of recognized abillty mitigated the disappointment and gave courage to all. The speakers, without exception, acquitted themselves with credit, presenting an array of talent of which any good cause might justly be proud. I mention those who presented prepared addresses in the order followed: C. A. Blanchard, on secrecy; D. P. Rathbun, report of his year's work; C. D. Trumbull and E. B. Graham, on the Sabbath; C. A. Blanchard, on prohibition; J. B. McMichael, D. D., on secrecy and the church; brethren R. C. Wylie and M. A. Gault on government reform. The last evening of the convention was given to work on the third degree by Bro. Starry, in which there is no doubt of his having sustained his justly earned reputation as a competent expositor of the mysteries.

I left Albia on the 6 P. M. train and reached this place at 2:30 this A. M. Brethren Wm. Layton, J. M. Kent and S. E. Starry were chosen to represent Iowa in the National Convention, and a committee of four appointed to formulate a plan for a joint stock publishing company in Iowa. The brethren contemplate enlarged and active labors during the year, in which they will doubtless find along with successes new and profitable experiences. The sessions of this eleventh annual gathering were characterized by a kindly spirit in general and that freedom of utterance to which no reformer is a stranger. For personal courtesies I am greatly indebted to the brethren, and my prayer is for their abundant success.

J. P. STODDARD.

ANOTHER MILE-STONE SET UP.

MORNING SUN, Iowa, Aug. 27, 1883.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—President C. A. Blanchard delivered two lectures last week in Morning Sun on the subject of secrecy. I have heard but one opinion concerning them, and that of hearty commendation of the ability and power of the speaker. The attendance for various reasons was not as good as we could have desired. The secret society men with one consent stayed away. Some of them have claimed that the advantage in the previous discussion was with them, but it seems to me they have confessed in very practical ways that they are the losers in the argument. In the first place for weeks past they have been crying for peace; they want no more agitation. I have no experience in pugilistic encounters but I have always understood that when one party cries "enough," he confesses he is whipped. Again, heretofore they have always come out to hear our lecturers. By refusing to do so this time they confess that their cause cannot bear discussion.

We have now erected another milestone to mark the progress of the reform in Morning Sun. A late writer has said "When we hear the cry of 'fanaticism,' we are sure somebody is making himself felt.' That cry is raised here against us. The inference is anti-secrecy work here has not been abortive. There is however room for more work. It must however take another form, viz: that of personal effort to persuade men individually to give up lodge connections and to walk in the light.

As I am writing I will chronicle another fact, viz: that the lodges have controlled the Republican primaries in this county. The election was on the 25th. There were three candidates for nomination as representative in the next legislature; two prohibitionists, one anti-prohibitionist. One prohibitionist is a Mason, the other an Anti-mason. The Mason was nominated and it is a potent fact that secrecy has done it. The same is true with respect to the other nominations.

President Blanchard preached in the United Presbyterian church of this place Sabbath forenoon. So far as I have heard, his sermon was well received. From here he went to Mediopolis where he preached two sermons and delivered two lectures on secret societies.

THE HOME.

THE END.

The course of the weariest river
Ends in the great gray sea;
The acorn, for ever and ever,
Strives upward to the tree.
The rainbow, the sky adorning,
Shines promise through the storm;
The glimmer of coming morning
Through midnight gloom will form.
By time all knots are riven,
Complex although they be,
And peace will at last be given,
Dear, both to you and to me.

Then, though the path may be dreary,
Look onward to the goal;
Though the heart and the head be weary,
Let faith inspire the soul;
Seek the right though the wrong be tempting,
Speak the truth at any cost;
Vain is all weak exempting
When once the gem is lost.
Let strong hand and keen eye be ready
For plain and ambushed foes;
Thought earnest and fancy steady
Bear best unto the close.

The heavy clouds may be raining,
But with evening comes the light;
Though the dark low winds are complaining,
Yet the sunrise gilds the night;
And Love has his hidden treasure
For the patient and the pure;
And Time gives his fullest measure
To the workers who endure;
And the Word that no law has shaken
Has the future pledge supplied;
For we know that when we "awaken"
We shall be "satisfied."

"JEHOVAH-JIREH!"

A few years since my friend, Mr. John Quin, traveled from San Francisco to New York, and he afterward related the following occurrence to me:

The train had reached a junction where the two Pacific roads met. Everyone was dusty and weary and glad to leave the car for a breath of air and a draught of fresh water, as well as for a relief from the cramped-up quarters they had occupied so long. All sorts of people came out to exchange friendly greetings and sentiments and conjectures on the weather, the probable length of the journey and similar topics which occupy the thoughts of travelers on the same road.

One old Scotchman, who was particularly brusque, crabbed and querulous, just looked out and then returned to growl by himself in his own corner. Two merry, dainty young Englishmen, with their cart and maps and rugs and gay young hearts, had been out on the plains for a fishing and hunting excursion. They seemed quite critical and had a merry word or question for their American cousins.

Seated a little way from the depot, on a string-piece, was a forlorn-looking woman seemingly careless of her surroundings. Her two children, a boy and a girl, were looking toward the town, as if in wonder or waiting for their mother to rise. By her side was a rough pine box which looked familiar to the travelers who had left the train. One more curious than the others, perhaps more sympathetic, went to the group and addressed the woman. This was her story:

She and her husband had left the East years before and settled in Kansas, and were doing pretty well; blessed with three children, the oldest a fine, brave girl, who was the stay, the joy and the comfort of the family. The father, hoping to improve his chances, heard of an opportunity further to the southwest, whither he removed with his belongings, but soon began to experience all the trials of an emigrant's life. He was unsuccessful. His daughter, only fourteen, did all in her power to encourage her parents, and to supplement with her own labor the work that her father, now fallen ill, could not do. The father died. The widow, with the three children, toiled on in hopes of better days to come. The daughter fell sick and died.

Alone, dejected, friendless and far from home, the mother in her widowhood thought of her former home in Kansas and of the friends she had left there, and resolved to return.

The Southern Pacific road gave her a pass for herself and her children and the rough box that contained the remains of her dear daughter. She had now come as far as the junction, and had learned that the pass was valueless on the other line. She had pleaded in vain with the officers. No one had authority to pass the party on free, and there she sat with a few pennies in her purse, alone among strangers, with her dead child at her side and her two others, almost helpless, stranded, as it were, on a desolate island. She was too heart-broken even for tears. The sum asked to forward her the rest of the way was one hundred and seventy dollars, I think. The story was related to the group who had disembarked, when the two young Englishmen exclaimed, "We'll go through the train."

No sooner said than done. Back and forth these gay young men went, representing the facts. A hundred dollars was soon collected, and with this sum the kind fellows hurried to the officers of the road.

"No! it would not do;" they had no authority to pass any one with a corpse for a less amount than they had named.

The youths were disheartened. Some one called out, "Try the train again!" Again they went through it and collected a little more. Still the deficiency was great.

In their dilemma, as they stood so sorry, so sympathetic, a voice was heard from a distant corner: "Let her get on, I'll be responsible for the rest."

It was the brusque, crabbed Scotchman who spoke. There was a murmur of approbation, a fervent "Thank God and you"—almost a cheer! went up. One young fellow ran to the office and then back again to explain to the woman that the fare was paid and she could go on; and the poor box was raised and carried to the baggage-car through a line of bare-headed men. The mother followed with her children, the kind young fellows on either side, but she was too dazed to understand or express her thanks. "The Lord has indeed provided for us, as Molly said he would," she murmured, and being seated, the young gentleman saw her lean her head down and burst into tears.—Intelligencer.

EXCUSING SIN.

It is strange that the judgment of men is so often more under the influence of human greatness than of divine wrath. The Word of truth tells us that sin is sin whether found in the great, talented and mighty favored few, or in the low and poor many, and that in each and every case it is a transgression of God's laws, the wages of which transgression is death. But how differently do we judge of the faults and failings of men, and how often is not our accusing or excusing prompted or prevented by the financial or social position of the culprit. The escape of the great robber and the punishment of the little thief is not only an every day occurrence before the bars of corrupted justice, but also before the larger tribunal of the world's and even of the Christian's opinion. If a man is wealthy, influential or a genius, we are ever ready, in order not to offend him and his, to close our eyes to his departure from rectitude and seal our lips to the sins which in his near and lower neighbor would arouse our deepest indignation and call forth loud and long condemnation.

When famous men or women commit infamous deeds, the mantle of public charity is generally large enough to cover the multitude of transgressions, be they ever so great in number. In a late number of a prominent Eastern paper we read a criticism of a new life of the great French immoral novelist who called herself George Sand. She is described in these terms: "She inherited a disregard of marriage, and was surrounded by illegitimate relatives, whose position in society was not questioned. Her disregard of conventionalities exposed her to slander; her genius and fascinations exposed her to jealousy; her impulsiveness led her into blunders; her warm heart, generosity and intellect won for her crowds of friends. She owed her fame to her own power and will. Her life was a series of enchanting illusions, each in turn losing its charm and vanishing, and of transient love affairs that interested and occupied her for a time, till the lover became tiresome and then he was dropped. This mode of proceeding involved some annoyance to her and much pain to her victims; but she had genius which required such excitements, apparently, for her intellectual powers grew stronger, and her intense, defiant life led her to a serene and lovely old age." What in other cases is called a disgraceful violation of law both human and divine, a total submission to the lowest lusts of the flesh, finds here an apologist because the author of these sins is a great and gifted sensational writer. Goethe, among the greatest of German writers, was another whose marital relations were in open conflict with the demands of the sixth commandment. Yet who among his biographers will point the finger of condemnation at him and say, Thou hast sinned.—Lutheran Standard.

HOW MUCH SHALL I GIVE?

This question is constantly staring us in the face, or rather dinning us in the ear, and the likelihood is as things are going, that we shall hear it oftener in the future than we have in the past. It becomes an important matter, therefore, to answer it rightly. Some of the wrong ways of answering it are as follows:

1. I will give as much as the next man.
2. I will give according to my individual interest in the object.
3. I will give if I happen to like the minister, or the other man who may happen to ask me.
4. I will give if I have anything left over Saturday night.
5. I will give as little as it will do to give.

Now some of the right ways of answering the question "How much shall I give?" are these:

1. I will give without any reference to what the next man may give.
2. I will give from a sense of duty, if I may not fancy the object.
3. I will give, even if I don't happen to like the asker.
4. I will take care to have something left over to give.
5. I will give as much as I possibly can.—The Diocese.

HEALTH HINTS.

Of all the various drinks with which civilized man has tried to sharpen the blood and tone up the system; to prevent fevers and insure good health the year round and in all the various parts of the world, God gave us the lemon. So says a great traveler who has not been sick an hour in thirty years. He used lemons and pure fruit acids instead of alcoholic beverages.

If a person swallows any poison whatever, or has fallen into convulsions from having overloaded the stomach, an instaneous remedy, more efficient and applieable in a larger number of cases than half a dozen medicines we can now think of, is a heaping teaspoonful of common salt and as much ground mustard, stirred rapidly in a teacup of water, warm or cold, and swallowed instantly. It is scarcely down before it begins to come up, bringing with it the remaining contents of the stomach; and, lest there be any remnant of a poison, however small, let the white of an egg, or a teacup of strong coffee be swallowed as soon as the stomach is quiet, because these very common articles nullify a larger number of virulent poisons than any medicines in the shops.

WEIGHT OF DRIED FRUIT COMPARED WITH GREEN.—The California Horticulturist quotes the following from the Bulletin, as the result of dried fruits by the Alden process:

Apples—100 pounds green fruit make 12 dry.
Pears—100 pounds green fruit make 12 dry.
Peaches—100 pounds green fruit make 12 dry.
Apricots—100 pounds green fruit make 14 dry.
Plums—100 pounds green fruit make 14 dry.
Cherries (pitted)—100 pounds green fruit make 16 dry.
Grapes—100 pounds green fruit make 20 dry.
Gooseberries—100 pounds green fruit make 20 dry.

THE COST OF VEGETARIAN DIET.—The great temperance enthusiast, Dr. Norman Kerr, recently furnished a vegetarian dinner to one hundred persons. The repast consisted of three courses, accompanied by a plentiful supply of brown bread and a cup of exeellent cocoa for each guest. A "hotch-potch" soup was first served. The ingredients in this were potatoes, turnips, carrots, leeks, celery, green peas, parsley, and butter. It was palateable, and it is claimed for it that it is nutritious. The next dish was a savory pie made up of haricot beans, flour, onions, and butter; and then followed the sweets, in the shape of a pleasant hot mess of rhubarb, rice and sugar. The cost of the entire meal was less than $6.25, being at the rate of six cents each person.

—M. Czartoryski, M. D., of Stockton, Cal., writes as follows to the London Lancet: "During a prolonged residence in the interior of China I become acquainted with the fact that the Chinese place great reliance during epidemics of diptheria on the internal use of the fresh juice of limes and of the fruit itself, which they consume in enormous quantities in every conceivable form—as lemonade, with native spirits, cut in slices, etc.—during attacks of this dreadful disease, with apparently most successful results, it hardly ever failing to effect a cure. The Chinese consider it a specific, and will, in case of need, do anything to obtain a supply. Since I have come back from California, as also in Louisiana, I have used limes and their juices in my practice as a physician, with most successful results in cases of diptheria—even in the most desperate cases. As soon as I take charge of a case of diptheria, I order limes to be admiuistered as freely as possible, in any manner the patient can be prevailed upon to take them, especially in the form of hot lemonade, swectened with white sugar or honey, or cut in slices with powdered white sugar. Besides lime juice (which I suppose acts by imparting an excess of oxygen to the circulation, and thereby prevents formation of vibriones, etc., and so has almost a specific effect on disease), I prescribe whatever drug may be indicated to relieve symptoms as they develop, and impart strength by appropriate stimulants and nourishment."

LIVES OF CELEBRATED MEN.

MARTIN LUTHER THE STUDENT.

In 1501, Luther, then in his 18th year, was sent to the University at Erfurt, at that time one of the most famous institutions of learning in Germany. The financial condition of his father had improved, so that John Luther was now able to support his son at the university. As we have already stated, Luther was well prepared to enter upon the study of the higher branches. He had laid a good foundation at Mansfeld and Eisenach. He had paid much attention to Latin, read Virgil, Cicero, and Livy, but his favorite Latin author seems to have been Plautus. Up to this time he had not studied Greek or Hebrew; these languages he studied afterwards, and studied them very thoroughly. Dr. Trautvetter was the leading professor at Erfurt. This man led Luther into the intricacies of the scholastic philosophy, as the science of moral philosophy was then called. In connection with the lectures of Trautvetter, he read the works of Occam, Bonaventura, Dum Scotus, Thomas Aquinas, and other celebrated schoolmen. These men were all the servile followers of Aristotle, whose absurd system of logic had governed the whole intellectual and theological worlds for a thousand years. Everything had to be taught in conformity with this false system. Luther had to study this absurd system of logic in order to see its fallacy, and to demolish it. He commenced the undermining of it, which was more successfully prosecuted by Peter Ramus, of Paris, and at last altogether overthrown by Sir Francis Bacon. If Luther had never done anything more than to destroy the influence of Aristotle over the human mind, he would be entitled to the everlasting gratitude of the literary world! Luther was a great reader, he read everything that came in his way, and seems to have remembered nearly all he read. This is evident from all his writings, but more especially from his protracted debate at Leipsic with John Eck. One of the rules of that debate was that no books should be used on the rostrum. On that occasion Luther quoted the Fathers, the Decretals, and the Clementines by the hour. It was during the second year of his residence at Erfurt, that an event occurred that changed the destiny of this young man. It was the finding of the Bible. It occurred in this wise. One day, when looking over the library, he saw a large volume bound in parchment, with large red letters on the back "Biblia Sacra," Holy Bible. It was in Latin. He was struck with the title "Biblia Sacra," he wondered what kind of a book it was, he had never seen or heard of such a book before. So he opened it to see what it was. And in opening it he happened to open it at the Book of 1st Samuel, 1st chapter. Did it happen by chance, or did God in his providence open it? The first thing that attracted his attention was the beautiful and touching story of Hannah and her son Samuel. He read this touching narrative with deep interest, and it made such an impression on his mind, that he could think of nothing else. Henceforth he devoted all his spare time to the reading of this book. The Reformation lay hid in that old neglected Bible.

The Romanists pretend to ridicule the whole story of Luther's finding the Bible. Dr. Spaulding, in his review of D'Aubigne, says: "D'Aubigne professes to borrow all this fine history from Mathesius. It is a story absurd enough, in all conscience, and too clumsily contrived even for a well-digested romance. What! Are we to believe that Luther, at the age of twenty, did not know there was a Bible, until he chanced to discover one in the library at Erfurt? The thing is utterly incredible." Not at all incredible to Protestants. If this story is not true, no fact in the history of the Reformation can be established. To corroborate it, Carlstadt declares that he had been made a doctor of divinity before he had ever seen a Bible! And Mathesius says he never heard the Ten Commandments, the Creed, or the Lord's Prayer read in a Roman Catholic church, and he was twenty-five years old when he left the Papal church. This is pretty strong presumptive evidence in favor of Luther's ignorance of the Bible. The fact is, Romanism always chains the Bible or locks it up in a dead language.

But to proceed with Luther's discovery of the Bible. He opened it at 1st Samuel, and read the first, second and third chapters. Hannah, her son Samuel, his birth, and dedication to God—what a wonderful narrative, how grand, and yet how simple! He had read many thrilling legends of the saints, and many beautiful pictures drawn by the classical poets, but such a touching scene he had never read before. Cicero, Livy, Virgil, and even his beloved Platus, are thrown aside for the Bible.

The Bible fell into Luther's hands at a most favorable juncture. He was near the close of his classical course, and as his father had intended, he had commenced the study of law. But the reading of the Bible changed his views on that subject.

Towards the close of his second year in the university, he had a severe spell of sickness, brought on by too close an application to his studies, and on his convalescence he returned to his home at Mansfeld to recruit his health. How long he remained in his father's house we do not know; but about the time of his return to the university, two events occurred which had an important influence on his life. The one was the sudden death of his friend and fellow-student Alexis. Some say this young man was assassinated in Erfurt, and others that he was struck dead by lightning at Luther's side. The other was that, as Luther was returning from Magdeburg to Erfurt, when near the latter city, he was overtaken in a fearful thunder-storm, and as some think his friend Alexis was struck down and killed by his side. He was so much alarmed that then and there he made a solemn vow that if the Lord would spare his life, he would become a monk, and thus dedicate himself to God. I think it most probable that Alexis was struck by lightning.—Lutheran Observer.

PARENT'S LOVE.

In one of the cities bordering close to New York there occurred the following incident:

One day a man was seen driving a horse, who seemed determined to break from his Land. It plunged and reared and at length started to run. The driver at first wrapped the reins around his wrists in his efforts to hold the fractious animal.

"Let him go! Let him go!" cried the bystanders; "you can't hold him! Let him go! Why don't you let him go?"

The driver never heeded these cries; he held on with all his strength, and as a last resort, wound the reins around his neck.

Great efforts were made, and after a time the horse was caught, but not till the blood was gushing from the nose and mouth of the man, who strove so hard to hold him.

A crowd gathered around the poor man, and he was asked, "Why didn't you let him go? Your life is worth a hundred such horses."

"Look in the back of that wagon," said he. "Do you see that little boy? That's all the little boy we have. I could't go home to his mother without that little boy, and for him I held the horse to the danger of my own life."

Ah, children, there was the father's love displayed; rather than have his little son hurt, he ran a most fearful risk, but counted his own life as little worth if he might save his boy.

"Like as the father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him," saith the Word of God; and just as you go to your father, little one, knowing that he loves you, and is ready to grant your requests, if they are such as should be granted, so may you go to the loving, pitying, heavenly Father, and ask for help in your need. He will hear and answer if you ask for Jesus' sake.

Two of Jesus' disciples, James and John, the sons of Zebedee, were one day brought to Jesus by their mother, who said unto the Saviour, "Grant that these my two sons may sit, the one on thy right hand and the other on thy left, in thy kingdom."

Ah, here was the mother's love displayed—she asks nothing for herself, but great things for her two sons. They were her jewels, and in them was her love centred.

Prize your mother, girls and boys; no other love on earth is equal to hers! Never think lightly of father or mother; let God be first, but parents second in your love, always remembering that their love for you is like a deep mine, whose wealth is past measuring.

We are certain that God looks with abhorrance upon the ungratefnl, disobedient child, and equally certain that he views with favor the obedient and loving child.

"Cursed be he that setteth light by his father or his mother."—Deut. 27: 16.

"Children, obey your parents in all things for this is well pleasing unto the Lord.—Col. 3: 20.—Intelligencer.

BE LITTLE SUNBEAMS.

Children, you are household sunbeams; don't forget it, and when mother is tired and weary, or father comes home from his work feeling depressed, speak cheerfully to them and do what you can to help them. Very often you can help them most by not doing something, for what you would do may only make more work for them. Therefore think before you speak or act, and say to yourself, "Will this help mamma?" or, "Will this please papa?" There is something inside you that will always answer and tell you how to act. It won't take a minute, either, to decide, when you do this, and you will be repaid for waiting by the earnestness of the smile or the sincerity of the kiss which will then greet you. One thing remember always—the effect of what you do lingers after you are gone. Long after you have forgotten the smile or cheerful word which you gave your father or mother, or the little act which you did to make them happy, it is remembered by them, and after you are asleep they will talk about it and thank God for their little household sunbeam.—Sel.

TEMPERANCE.

TEMPERANCE AMONG THE GERMANS.

Thursday, Aug. 23, was German day at the Lake Bluff Temperance Convocation near this city. It is one of the most hopeful and most needed efforts in temperance reform, that the German-speaking Americans should be enlisted in the great war upon the saloon. The Lake Bluff meeting last year gave a great impetus to this movement. During the year a paper Der Bahnbrecher has been established in Chicago and lecture work has been begun. The meeting this year was presided over by Prof. H. A. Fischer of Wheaton College, and the leading speaker J. Adolph Schmitz, editor of the Bahnbrecher. He argued that a great part of the temperance work should be directed toward the foreign population, since 25 per cent. of the liquor business was in the hands of the Germans alone who form but 4 per cent. of the population of the country. In the afternoon there was a general discussion of the temperance work among the Germans. At the close a resolution was passed that they should immediately take steps to raise $1,500 to send out a German temperance lecturer in Illinois. Such a lecturer has already been provided in Wisconsin. Some $400 was subscribed on the ground for this purpose.

THE TOBACCO NUISANCE.

BY A SUFFERER FROM IT.

Some years since Mr. George William Curtis wrote a series of delightful papers entitled "Manners upon the Road." They appeared in Harper's Bazar, over a nom de plume, but their peculiar felicity of diction, and their charming beauties of thought, revealed at once the essayist's identity. I often think of them when journeying, and their title is to me suggestive. They did not specifically apply to manners on the highway or the railway, but covered the whole wide range of conduct through life, amid a variety of circumstances. But literally our manners upon the road should have consideration, and, we may say, demand reform. Both consideration and reformation must begin at home.

The man or woman who goes much abroad is regularly, constantly, a victim to the ill-manners of personified tobacco. I have almost lost patience with my fellow-men over their indecent selfishness as smokers and chewers. They travel wherever I do—on the street, or on the train—and they multiply. They puff their villianous odor into my face every day, as I walk up and down; and every day I spend upon the cars I see their filthy pools of expectoration on the floor—see women disgusted at their nastiness, and rendered uncomfortable, possibly sick, by its proximity. Now I am not unduly sensitive; and tobacco is not so offensive to me as to the average non-user of it. I rather enjoy the flavor of a good cigar—when some other man smokes it; and if this of which complaint is made were but an occasional annoyance, to myself and perhaps a few abnormally sensitive people, it might be passed by. But the thing has become so universal that we must cry out against it. The entire atmosphere seems permeated with tobacco smoke when one goes abroad where men abound; there is no escaping it altogether; and the smoke is rarely good in quality—if ever any quality be good—it is oftenest villainously bad. The public have endured it till endurance ceases to be a virtue.

The cool effrontery with which men proceed to enjoy their bad habit often amazes me. The other night I sat in a crowded car, where the heat made every one miserable, when half a dozen smokers produced their cigars, lighted them, and began vitiating the stifled atmosphere still further. Two-thirds of the car-full were ladies, but that made no difference. Those gentlemen smoked on; and notification to quit only partly checked them. They were Germans, let it be confessed, bent on enjoying "personal liberty," but I have seen hundreds of American gentlemen equally regardless of propriety and the rights of others. This is not a race matter; it is not a question of national prejudice. It is a question of manners, of common right, of good health, of personal decency, of public morals.

The popular cigarette is inimical to the welfare of our youth. I don't know or care what it is made of; the purest and best tobacco ever grown would not save it from being a public nuisance, or relieve it of its demoralizing influence upon young America. Why may not the home prohibit it so wisely and so lovingly as to make more public prohibition unnecessary? Surely, if tobacco be indulged in at home, they who set the standard of home politeness should raise that standard high enough to protect the world outside from tobacco's offensiveness. But ought the evil of tobacco to find tolerence in the home? Most assuredly not. There is nothing to commend it, nothing to justify it. Our home teaching should be opposed to it, our home example should never approve it. It is an evil only; an evil always; an evil born of bad taste, and bred in selfishness. Let it be condemned, tabooed, and forever driven out of Christian civilized homes; then it will vanish as a public torment.—Sel.

THE CHURCHES.

—Col. Geo. Clarke of the Pacific Garden Mission in this city, says that during six evenings forty-eight inquirers were present at their Gospel meetings, half of whom were converted. The attendance on these meetings has not been seriously affected by the warm weather.

—A faith mission was opened two years ago in Burhanpur, India, a city of 30,000 inhabitants with some forty villages with a radius of ten miles. The missionaries were Bro. Ward and his wife from this State. About $1,500 have been forwarded to them to aid in carrying on their work, and others in this country are anxious to join them. Most, if not all, the money forwarded is from the Free Methodist churches.

—Rev. J. W. Logue, who has been for forty consecutive years pastor of the United Presbyterian church of Northfield, Ohio, has asked the church to unite in a request for dissolution of the relation so long held because of the feebleness of age.

—At the annual breakfast of the London Tract Society, May 17, Rev. Dr. J. Murdock, of India, one of the missionary speakers, said that there are 330,000,000 idols there to its population of 250,000,000.

—The practice of setting apart one or more hens with the view to give the proceeds to the mission fund, has become very common in Europe, and has begun to prevail in Africa. One missionary writes that at a place about ten miles from Cape Town, knowing that many were poor, he suggested each family should set apart a hen for missions. The first year the proceeds of the missionary hens amounted to over twenty-five dollars. One lady always calls the eggs laid at her home on Sunday, "missionary eggs," and the proceeds always go to missions.

It has a lady director who speaks four languages. Within two months it has sold more than a hundred Bibles, Testaments, and Psalms.

—An Armenian bishop sought a license to bury one of his people, and this is a copy of the permit, given by the Moslem authorities: "To the wearer of Satan's crown and tar black clothes" (a playful description of the bishop's dress), "cast away from the gates of heaven, thou infidel teacher." Then follows the gracious permit: "One of your nation has died; you have asked permission to bury him. According to the requirement of the Koran it is not necessary to bury a Christian in the earth; but, to avoid the stench of putrefaction on the earth's surface, dig the grave deep, fill the earth upon the body and stamp it down well.—Phil. Observer.

—Dr. John Hall, speaking recently, thus eulogized Protestantism. He was dealing with the assertion that "Protestantism is a failure." "How," asks the doctor, "can that be a failure which in A. D. 1500 did not exist, and in A. D. 1883 controls populations to the extent of 408,000,000, while its rivals, the Roman and Greek churches, combined, controls 280,000,000?"

—The Woman's Prayer Union for China, with headquarters in London, now has 316 members, banded together to pray daily for the women in China, and to seek personal guidance as to how they may help them, and also to seek to interest others in the spiritual condition of the women of China. Twelve members of the Union have been led to devote their lives to missionary work, and are now in China.

—The United Presbyterian Missionaries in Egypt have passed through an experience during the past few weeks almost as trying as when Arabi Bey attempted to seize the control of government last year. Their work has been successful notwithstanding. Rev. Dr. Watson wrote from Cairo, July 28th: "We are in the midst of the judgments of the Lord. The pestilence is specialy severe in Boulac (one of our suburbs), and where we have lost by it the best men in our evangelical community—Abdel Malak, the old Egyptian soldier—and for many years an efficient colporteur in the service of our mission. Others both there and in Cairo proper, have fallen victims to the terrible malady, and whose places will henceforth be vacant in the church, in the Sabbath-school and prayer-meeting. Verily, the Lord is visiting this land with his terrible judgments—but few learn righteousness; still we notice many new faces in all of our public meetings. Thus far no one of our missionaries has been attacked. Dr. Lansing also writes from the same city: "Last Sabbath we held communion in Dweyr, which is supplied by the Licentiate Makar, and ten persons were received (of about twenty who had applied), and the place of meeting was crowded in a fearful manner, there being about 300 persons present. while their usual congregation is about fifty; and this is the state in the other places—as Zarabi and Mishta and Fama and Abutij, and others." "With us here in Cairo, there is no special excitement, but an evident increase of interest and attendance on the means of grace. The conversion of the two Muslims has evidently promoted this, and the present sad visitation is causing many searchings of the heart and confessions of past short-comings. May the Lord speedily lift the rod of judgment from this poor people and visit them in mercy. The disease in many cases acts differently from formerly. Many fall down in the streets and die in a few minutes. We have seen three thus fall under our own windows. Our trust is in our Covenant God."

—The Congregationalist says: "An audience of nearly 1,000 people gathered at the First church, Pittsfield, Mass., on Sunday evening, July 29th, to hear Deacon Kirby relate his twenty-five years' experience as a worker among the Esquimaux. He was the first missionary north of the Arctic circle, where the mercury stood sixty degrees below zero, and where it took two years to receive goods from England."

—The annual meeting of the American Board will be held in Detroit, October 2–5; preacher, Prof. Wm. M. Barbour, D. D. The National Congregational Council follows after meeting of American Board, and in Concord, N. H.; preacher, Rev. F. A. Noble, D. D. The American Missionary Association will begin its annual meeting in Brooklyn, Oct. 30; preacher, Rev. J. L. Withrow, D. D.

—The colored people of Brooklyn, New York, are endeavoring to raise money to build a church at San Domingo for their own people. Protestantism is in its infancy in the island; there is not a Protestant church in the city of San Domingo. Services are held for the colored people in a dwelling in the outskirts of the city. So many are attracted to these services that it is necessary to erect a building. The Government of San Domingo will donate a suitable lot as soon as the funds are secured for the building.

—James A. O'Connor, pastor of the Independent Catholic church of New York, gives in the New York Witness an incident of his late Western trip: "A presiding elder out West wished me to send him a converted priest to take charge of a church in his district. I said I would do so if he would set him to work to evangelize the Roman Catholics of his town. He replied that he could not do that, as he had no means of supporting him for such work, and he added, 'You must all eventually become ministers of our churches, for how otherwise will you get the means of living, the Roman Catholics will not support you?' I answered by telling him of our success in the past, and that now when I was entering on my fifth year in this work, I had greater faith in God's Providential care over us than ever. I asked him who gave St. Paul a salary, who paid John Wesley, who pays Mr. Moody, who supports the work of God everywhere, who but the Almighty God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ whose kingdom is being built up by an army of workers, and who has thousands upon thousands of stewards of his gifts that are used for his glory, and for the spread of his Gospel of salvation."

—The United Presbyterian Mission in Egypt has received an important accession in the person of Muhammed Ramsi, who was received into the church at Cairo on July 15th. He is about twenty-five years of age, belongs to the holy family of El Khuidare, is a graduate of the Government College, has spent four years at the Medical School of Old Cairo, and thirteen months in study in France. Every effort was made to delay or prevent his profession of faith in Christ. He was arrested, taken before the Cadi, and imprisoned from Friday until Monday, and plied with arguments and pleas. The audience at his baptism was very large, and after the services a number of those present, strangers as well as members of the church, crowded around him to congratulate him.

—It is reported that the demand for Bibles and Testaments for the last three months has been so great that the American Bible Society, although it publishes seven complete Bibles and testaments every minute of working time, is unable to supply it promptly.

—The Centennial Convention of the Protestant Episcopal church in the United States will convene in October for its opening services at Christ church in Philadelphia, the place where the first convention met one hundred years ago. Nearly $6,000 have been expended in restoring the church as nearly as possible to its appearance when the first convention assembled within its walls. The history of the church is interesting. It was erected in 1695, during the reign of William III., and was built partly of wood and partly of brick. In 1727 the present edifice was built, and was nine years in process of construction. In 1754 the tower and steeple were built and a chime of eight bells was hung; a portion of the money to defray the expenses were raised by lottery. Many relics of the ante-Revolutionary date have been collected by the committee of the church. There are many interesting associations connected with this church that are deserving of mention: the Continental Congress assembled here for worship on the 20th of July, 1775, the day having been set apart for general humiliation, fasting, and prayer throughout all the American provinces. Benjamin Franklin and Robert Morris were members of the vestry of the church. Bishop White was baptized in this church; his remains now rest under the chancel. The Book of Common Prayer for the American branch of the Episcopal church was ratified in this building, and in the parish library is a copy of the Prayer Book published in Oxford, with the alterations made in the handwriting of Bishop White. Among the long list of illustrious persons whose names are on the parish burial list are John Nixon, Peyton Randolph, Francis Hopkinson, Chief Justice Tighlman, Commodores Biddle and Davis. At the first general convention there were present two bishops and seventeen clergymen; now there are sixty-two bishops and over three thousand clergymen.—Christian Union.

COLONIZING JEWS.—Lord Shaftesbury, who is president of a society for colonizing Jews in Cyprus, with a view to taking possession, when permitted, of the Promised Land, says: "We guarantee £52 for support this year of each family in Cyprus, and the British government take them under their protection, and will allot to them suitable land. We ask immediate help in providing this sum for their settlement in the island. That primary duty fulfilled, we intend to continue the work in the Land of Promise, at Jerusalem and elsewhere, of helping suffering Jews to settle in honest industry."

THE

CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE

A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

It is now owned and published by the

POPISH SUPERSTITIONS IN MEXICO.

A missionary in Chihuahua, Northern Mexieo, gives a graphic description says the Independent, of the Catholic celebration of Holy Week in that city, which is widely known as "very religious." Thursday morning the priests were busy blessing loaves of bread, of crown shape, for rich and poor. In the afternoon the great church was thronged to witness a celebration of the Last Supper. A table was arranged in front of the altar, with three benches for seats. Lame, halt and blind men supposed to be street beggars, were helped by the priests' assistants to their seats. The table was piled with crown-shaped loavcs. After somc services a priest and assistants, gorgeously dressed, proceeded to wash and wipe the feet of these guests, after which the brcad was removed unbroken, and those who wcre bidden to the mock feast were led away without having so much as tasted a crumb. The church was brilliantly illuminated and kept open all night. On Friday all places of business in the city were closed, the streets were deserted of vehicles, and flags were at half mast. Few pedestrians were seen.

"In the church were ghastly ceremonies enacted. In front of the chancel was suspended an enormous black curtain like a funeral pall. Immediately before this was erected a cross, and to the cross was fastened a lean and sorrowful figure dressed only in a short white skirt, reaching from the loins to the knees. A superscription in large letters told us, what we knew too well, that men had dared to erect an image of the suffering Saviour. On either hand were companies of men with bristling spears. A sponge on a reed was borne aloft. Two garments, one white and the other colored, to be worn outside, were lifted high on frames; and one horrid white banner bore upon its face the likenesses of two or three-score red drops of blood arranged in vertical and horizontal rows, with a precision that would have seemed childish and amusing had it not been so revolting.

"Amongst the figures of weeping friends waiting at the cross, was one that wore a becoming expression and attitude, the Virgin Mother—the sole redeeming feature of the scene. But how is it possible suitably to characterize onc of the remaining images? It represents a young woman of great physical beauty, having a rounded figure, brilliant eyes and complexion, and abundant tresses of brown hair. She was brightly arrayed in a dress whose brevity of skirt disclosed a pair of dainty booted feet and ancles. The right arm was encircled with a bracelet, and the hand at its extremity held one corner of a lace pocket-handkerchief. On the head was worn something between a jaunty cap and a crown. And this was Mary Magdalene!

"In the afternoon, between four and five o'clock, with great ceremony, the figure of the crucified was taken down, clothed in rich garments, and laid in the tomb, which was merely a large casket of glass placed upon a lofty bier in one of the aisles. After the lid had been put on, it was covered with a profusion of artificial flowers, many white fleurs-de-lis, cut from the public parks, were laid about the bier; and a Roman guard of six men stationed, three on each side. These wore preposterous helmets, set upon soft felt hats and surmounted with boquets of similar artificial flowers. Above their heads were reared the sponge and blood-stained banner and a bloody spear."—Independent.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandnigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influence of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 6 cents.

THE COMING CONFLICT.

A NEW AND RAPIDLY SELLING BOOK IN OPPOSITION TO FREE-MASONRY.

We desire to call your attention to this useful work, and ask you to help us in its circulation. We want Agents to canvass every community.

By selling this book one can do much good. It is by such literature that we must expect to awaken a popular sentiment against secret societies, and overthrow them. By selling this book one can make money. Liberal terms will be allowed, and any energetic Agent can sell many copies. Masons will buy it from mere curiosity. Anti-Masons will buy it for the facts and argumenta presented. Many will buy it to send to their neighbors. Those on the fence will buy it that they may learn the truth on the subject. Those not interested in the discussion, and young people especially, will buy it for the story.

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philsdelphia.)

"It is an attack on Freemasonry with a sprinkle of Slavery thrown in to make it go down well."—A. R. Presbyterian, (S. C.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of the best class of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D., in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia, Pa.)

"A charming work fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ill.)

The book is neatly and plainly printed, handsomely bound, 352 pages, thick paper. A specimen copy sent to any one contemplating accepting an agency for $1.10.

Single copy $1.50; Per Dozen. $15.00.

ON ODDFELLOWSHIP.

Odd-fellowship Judged by Its Own Utterances; Its Doctrine and Practice Examined in the Light of God's Word. By Rev. J. H. Brockman. This is an exceedingly interesting, clear discussion of the character of Odd-fellowship, in the form of a dialogue. In cloth, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00. Paper covers, 25 cents; per dozen, $2.00. German edition, entitled "Christian and Ernst," paper covers, 50 cents each. The German edition is published by the author.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a LEAGUE WITH THE DEVIL. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Freemasonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degrees of Jephthah's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

IN BRIEF.

Colonel King has sold his ranch and cattle, near San Antonio, Texas, for $4,000,000, to an English syndicate. This is said to be the largest ranch in the world.

A man lives a few miles above Athens, Ga., who eats in one county, sleeps in another, smokes when sitting upon his piazza in a third, and has built his barn in a fourth.

A subterranean forest seven feet below the surface of the ground has been discovered in Chazy, Clinton county, N. Y. Many of the trees are in an admirable state of preservation.

Marwood, the hangman of England, has taken to drink. He has twice executed men while under the influence of liquor, and has done the work so bunglingly that he is likely to be dismissed from office.

The Chinese believe that each person has three souls. At death one of these souls is supposed to go to heaven, one remains with the body in the grave, and one comes back and lives in the ancestral tablet.

The largest ferryboat in the world is said to be the Solano, built to run on San Francisco harbor for the Central Pacific Road. She is a vessel of 3,540 tons, and of the following dimensions: Length of main deck, 494 feet 8 inches; length of hull, 406 feet 2 inches; width over all, 116 feet. The boat has four lines of rails, and, as they extend from end to end, there is sufficient accommodation for forty-eight freight cars or twenty-four passenger cars with locomotive and tender.

The heir-apparent to the throne of Japan has just returned to his native land, after two years of study and travel in Great Britain, the Continent, and America. Though but twenty years of age, he is well spoken of as a student and a young man of intelligence. It is but a few years since princes of his rank in Japan knew nothing of foreign lands and very little of their own, having been permitted to look upon the outside world only through lattices which entirely hid them from the view of the people. This change in the training of a prince is but a sign of other changes which are taking place in Japan. There is at present a crisis in that nation the like of which the world has seldom seen.

A great man not ashamed of confessing to have been in error. Ignorant people are generally positive and assuming, and some learned men are still more so. Even when they find themselves in error, they are too proud to acknowledge it. But those who are truly wise, have learned that they are also fallible; they rejoice in an opportunity of having an error corrected. The celebrated Dr. Johnson, one of the best and most learned men that were ever born in England, one night, rather late, had a dispute in conversation with a Mr. Morgan. Johnson had the wrong side, but did not give up; in short, both kept the field. Next morning, when they met in the breakfast room, Dr. Johnson with great candor accosted Mr. Morgan thus: "Sir, I have been thinking on our dispute last night; you were in the right."

—John Brown's grave at North Elba, N. Y., is close by the old, weather-beaten farm-house that was once his home. It is in a corner of the dooryard, and fenced off by a white paling, the gate of which is carefully locked. In like manner the tombstone is covered by a wooden box, chained and padlocked to the ground. When this is removed one sees a blue stone, with the record of the death of Brown, his father and three sons. At the foot of the grave stands a huge boulder, into which are deeply cut the letters, "John Brown, 1859."

DR. JOHN BULL'S

Smith's Tonic Syrup

FOR THE CURE OF

FEVER and AGUE

Or CHILLS and FEVER.

AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient.

The genuine SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP must have DR. JOHN BULL'S private stamp on each bottle. DR. JOHN BULL only has the right to manufacture and sell the original JOHN J. SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP, of Louisville, Ky. Examine well the label on each bottle. If my private stamp is not on each bottle do not purchase, or you will be deceived.

FULL OF GRAND IDEAS.

"Masonry and Mormonism are political engines with religious driving wheels. Their conductors are kings; their engineers, priests; their motive power, popular depravity combined with popular conscience, and their practical end is the luxury and power of leaders who form men's interests for eternity that they may tax and govern them in time."

The above is a sample of the vigorous and striking thoughts, the grand ideas of which the pamphlet on the Batavia Convention is full. Get this book by all means. Price, post paid, 25 cents each.

NIGHTS IN A BAR-ROOM

T. S Arthur's great temperance book, complete and illustrated. By mail, 5c each; 50c per doz. By express, $3.50 per 100.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC THE GREAT SOURCE OF CRIME.

Leaves from the diary of an old lawyer.—By Hon. A. B Richmond, author of "Court and Prison," etc. A book of intense interest, rivaling the famous "Diary of a Physician," and, in its truthful, terrible pictures of the power and crime of intemperance, excelling the well-known "Ten Nights in a Bar-room." The temperance issue of the present time is, Shall prohibition be partial or entire? Shall the branches of the death-bearing tree be pruned and trimmed, or shall the tree itself be cut down and its stump be torn up by the roots? The answer of "Leaves from the Diary" is, "Cut down the tree, tear up the roots, leave not a shoot or shred behind." It is certainly a very strong and eloquent volume Complete edition on fine, heavy paper, with colored lithograph of Sewall's stomach plates By mail, 30c each, $3 per doz. By express, $20 per 100. Abridged edition, by mail, 15c; $1.25 per doz. By express, $9 per 100.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC AND THE SOBER CITIZEN.

An able and telling work, by Rev. J H. Sherman, which brings out the effects of the liquor traffic in a new light. The following are some of the commendations of the first edition.

"The author drives the nails of conviction through and clinches them."—N Y. Christian Advocate.

"Speakers and workers in the temperance field will find valuable aid in this pamphlet. It is crowded with convincing facts "—Zion's Herald

"One of the ablest reviews of the drink curse ever issued from the press."—The Morning and Day of Reform.

"The arguments are put in telling form."—Judge Pittman.

New revised and enlarged edition. By mail, 10c each, $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100.

DRINKS FROM DRUGS.

A startling exposure of the liquor traffic, by El. Johnson. A book that cannot fail to arouse the American people to the gigantic swindle now being perpetrated. The writer was offered $10,000 by a leading brewer to keep still. Liquor not only doctored, but made entirely from drugs. Extracts from a whole library of secret books, giving receipts for making and doctoring; advertisements of essences, fac similes of labels, engravings, etc., etc. Claret, port, sherry, champagne, whisky, brandy, gin, rum, etc., all out of one barrel, and made at less than 25 cents a quart. Wine that never saw grape juice; cider that never saw apples; beer factories in place of breweries, fine cream ale without barley or brewing; whisky from arsenic; millions of gallons of liquor that pays no revenue tax. The farmer's corn and barley "all in your eye." A wholesale liquor store in a ten-foot square cellar; more French wine sold in New York City than is produced in the whole of France. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By Express, $6 per 100.

W. C. T. U. ORGANIZATION AND WORK.

A book of general information how to organize and run successfully a Woman's Christian Temperance Union. This book should be widely distributed among W. C. T. U. presidents, pastor's wives and other representative women. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100.

HOME PROTECTION.

A lawyer's view of it. By J. C. Wells, attorney-at-law. The question of female suffrage for the protection of home ably discussed from a lawyer's standpoint. A book for the times. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100.

BAND OF HOPE RECITERS.

172 pages. 164 choice recitations of poetry and prose, containing some of the choicest bits of temperance material for the platform ever uttered, accompanied by an article on elocution. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100.

GENERAL TEMPERANCE SONG BOOK.

"Temperance Songs," a Book for Adult Societies.—Eighty-three choice pieces, both words and music (old and new tune combination) choice selections from standard temperance collections; many choice new pieces. Book carefully edited by David C. Cook. Will prove just what is wanted by every temperance society Price in strong cardboard covers, by mail, 10c each; $1 per dozen; by express, $5 per 100.

TEMPERANCE ANTHEM BOOK.

Temperance Anthems.—A new idea; nothing else of the kind in existence. Will insure good music by the choir at temperance meetings. Forty-eight pages of choice anthems by ablest writers By mail, 15c each; $1.50 per doz. By express, $10 per 100.

BAND OF HOPE SONG BOOK.

Band of Hope Songs.—Fifty-seven choice pieces for juvenile temperance gatherings, Bands of Hope, etc. Old, familiar tunes, also choice new words and music. Words far in advance of anything else issued. By mail, 8c each; 75c per doz. By express, $4 per 100.

DANIEL'S BAND.

A temperance concert exercise, with parts suitable for all ages; entirely new. Songs, recitations, dialogues, etc., of a thoroughly aggressive character; sure to carry weight with the rendering of it. By mail, 5c each; 50c per dozen, By express, $2 per 100.

THE COLD WATER ARMY.

For a primary temperance concert exercise. An entirely new exercise, containing songs and recitations, dialogues, etc., suitable for primary scholars. A pleasing and telling concert on temperance. By mail, 5c each; 50c per dozen. By express, $2 per 100.

x-ford Teacher's Bible.

A Bible Concordance, Commentary etc., All in One.

The "Oxford" Teachers' Bible contains, besides the text with the celebrated Oxford references, a Cruden's Concordance with 25,000 references; Oxford Index with 2,345 words, pronouncing dictionary of proper names with meanings; Scripture atlas of twelve maps, correct to latest survey, including alphabetical list of Bible names arranged with figures and letters indicating location on maps; condensed Bible history of Old and New Testament with interval between chronology of Old Testament and chronology of the New; a complete harmony of the Gospels; etymology, geography and topography of Palestine; mountains, lakes and rivers of the Bible, with special tabular summary; birds, reptiles, insects, trees, plants, flowers, minerals, precious stones, etc.; weights, measures, time and money; obsolete and ambiguous words, and words used as symbols; Paul's voyage to Rome; Paul's missionary journey; history of Jewish sects; parables of our Lord; parables of the Old Testament; miracles of our Lord; miracles of the New Testament; prophecies concerning Christ; titles of Christ; special prayers; chart of the family of the Herods, etc., etc.

SIZES.—Our small size Bible is 4x5½ inches. Our medium size, 4½x6½. Our large size, 5x7¾.

Our small and medium sizes are most popular ones. Large size for those desiring large type Bible.

For $1.30, small size genuine Oxford Teacher: complete in every respect; same as the very best; strongly bound in morocco covers, with gilt edges; in large clear print. Book of 1,408 pages.

Postage, 9cts.

For $2.20 Same style of binding as above described, Teachers' medium size, red edges instead of gilt. Postage, 12c.

For $5.40 Same style of binding, large size, gilt edges. Postage, 20c.

For $1.60 Small size genuine Oxford Teacher, gilt edges, flexible morocco cover, circuit, or protection, leather all around. Postage, 10cts.

For $2.50 The same style of binding, medium size. Postage, 12c.

THE PERSIAN SEAL BINDING

Is very handsome and durable. It is this style of binding which is so much admired by Bible readers. Please notice particularly that these Bibles are kid lined and silk sewed. Many Bibles in this style outwardly are lined with black paper and sewed with thread in place of silk.

For $2 30 PERsian Seal. For $2 30 we furnish a small size Oxford, bound in Persian seal, full flexible; can be bent back, doubled or rolled, without injury. Divinity circuit, gilt edges, kid lined, silk sewed, with book-mark and band Postage, 10c.

For $3.30 The same style of binding, medium size. Postage, 12c.

For $5.75 The same style of binding, large size. Postage, 20c.

LEVANT MOROCCO BINDING.

The Persian Seal bindings are the best kept by most Bible dealers, and usually pass for the best teachers' Bibles made; and, to all appearance, they are so. There is, however, a better wearing binding, of which the Persian Seal is a good imitation; this is known as "Levant Morocco" In all respects the Levant morocco Bible corresponds with the Persian Seal description, except as to leather used for cover which, though looking like the Persian Seal, is stronger, and will last a lifetime.

Prices on genuine Levant Morocco bindings:

For $4.50—Small size. Postage, 10c.
For $5.50—Medium size. Postage, 12c.
For $8.00—Large size. Postage, 20cts.

Handsome Gift Bibles at Low Prices.

For 45c. Embossed morocco cover, gilt edges, gilt title on back. Very neat and durable. This is the handsomest 45c. gift Bible we have ever seen. Postage, 5c.

For 60c. Morocco cover, brass bound and plated, with handsome gilt clasp and gilt edges; two patterns; square and round corners. Exquisite lettering on side; printed in large clear type. Bibles no better are sold as high as $1 and $2. Postage, 6c.

For 70c. Similar size and style of binding to our 60-cent Bible; square corners, brass bound, with clasp and handsome tasseled book-mark; also medallion inserted on side in gold and red.

This was a new importation with the fall of 1882, and a very pretty design. It should be seen to be appreciated. (See cut.) Postage, 6c.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

—Great tides expended their force on the Northern Atlantic coast Wednesday. The beach at Long Branch was badly washed, the waves sweeping over the Jersey Southern Railroad into the Shrewsbury river. At Atlantic City stores, baths, and residences were undermined by the surf and carried away, entailing a loss of $75,000.

—An oil-tank of large dimentions exploded in the South Brooklyn Works Monday afternoon, and the flaming fluid, which ran in all directions, severely burned many persons. The works were entirely destroyed, and sparks from the blazing structure fired Daniel Gray's sulphur works, which suffeerd a loss of $25,000. The damage to the oil company is $60,000.

—A sudden gale struck the American fleet of fishermen Aug. 26, on the Great Banks of Newfoundland, just at a time when hundreds of dories were out overhauling trawls. Scores of these boats were overturned, and about eighty fishermen found watery graves.

—Tuesday afternoon the steamer Riverside blew up in the North River, at the foot of Fourteenth street, New York, and was torn to pieces. The number of passengers on board is unknown, but those killed only number six, while twenty were wounded. It is feared that when the wreck is raised many dead bodies will be found.

—Crops in Eastern New England are burning up with long-continued drought, and farmers are feeding their cows on winter hay.

—Stubblefield & Co.'s stable at Bloomington, Ill., burned at midnight Friday, and eleven valuable Norman horses were suffocated. The loss is about $20,000.

—Hope for the safety of the steamship Ludwig, sixty days out from Antwerp for Montreal, has been abandoned. There were seventy souls on board, twenty-four being passengers.

—Wednesday night's storm effected dire results on the Nova Stocian coast. Ten schooners were driven ashore, some of which were completely wrecked, while inland, structures were moved from their foundations or blown away by the hurricane.

—A treaty between France and Anam was signed Aug. 5 at Hue. It gives France a protectorate over Tonquin and Anam, and the latter country is to withdraw all its forces from Tonquin, the garrisons there to be placed on a peace footing. France agrees to make trading safe by expelling the "black flags" from Tonquin. The treaty was signed by the leader of the peace party, Heiphema, as the rightful ruler fled with his forces at the approach of the French.

—In order to suppress Jew-baiting, the Hungarian Prime Minister has decided that all persons condemned to death by martial law shall be executed within three hours.

—President Arthur and party finished sight-seeing in the Yellowstone Park Saturday and are now homeward bound. They will spend a day in this city.

—Near Frankfort, D. T., Saturday morning, the boiler attached to some farm machinely exploded, killing four men and seriously wounding five others. The body of one of the victims was blown 130 yards and broken into fragments.

—The death rate from cholera among the British troops in Egypt is now six per cent. Since the outbreak of the epidemic the total deaths in Egypt from cholera have reached 27,318.

—It is announced that the American Rapid Telegraph Company has notified their employes that all advantages accorded them during the strike have been revoked, and that hereafter they will receive the same pay as before the strike, and also be compelled to labor the same number of hours. This is the company that acceded to the demands of the operators a few days after the strike, and received for this action great praise.

—The Republican State Committee of Massachusetts has issued an address to the people on the coming campaign. It says the Governor and his followers have slandered the commonwealth, and that their purpose is simply one of spoils; and urges the defeat of a power responsible for such principles.

VOLCANIC DESTRUCTION IN JAVA.

The island of Java in the Malay peninsula is about as large as the State of Illinois but contains over 19,000,000 inhabitants, of whom over 28,000 are Europeans, as the Island is a dependency of Holland. The island contains 38 volcanoes, most of them active, and earthquakes and cruptions are frequent. Batavia, the principal city, contains 100,000 inhabitants. Dispatches from this city last week told as follows of one of the most appaling and destructive eruptions known in the history of the world, during which it is believed that 100,000 persons have perished:

Aug. 27.—Terrific detonations were heard yesterday evening from the volcanic island Krakatoa. Little alarm was felt at first, but within a few hours showers of stones began to fall at Jokjokerta, Surabaya, and Zerant. All through the night showers of red hot rocks and ashes fell, making complete darkness in all these towns. In Batavia there was an occasional fall, and it was difficult to keep the street lights burning in the European part. By the next morning all communication with Anjer was cut off, all the bridges having been destroyed by the descending rocks and ashes, and the road rendered impassable. The first eruptions were on Saturday night. On Sunday morning the disturbances had extended beneath the waters of the strait, and they were soon boiling and hissing violently, while great waves dashed upon the Java near shores, and the temperature of the sea went up nearly twenty degrees. Even as far away from the original point of disturbance as Madura the furious waves were lashed into mountains of foam as they came rolling in. The threatening rumblings gradually became more and more distinct, and by and by the Malia Meru, the largest of the volcanoes of Java, was belching forth flames at a very alarming rate. This eruption soon spread to the Sunung Guntur, the crater of which is the largest in the world, being nearly four miles in diameter, the Gunung Guntur and many other minor mountains, until more than a third of the forty-five craters of Java were either in active operation or seriously threatening it. At noon Sunday the eruptions and shocks were supposed to have reached their greatest height. But late in the afternoon and evening the violence of the disturbance suddenly increased, and the island seemed to be about to be completely buried in a mass of fire and sulphurous ashes. At the same time enormous waves began to dash with greater force upon the shores, coming in some places far up into the interior, and great chasms opened into the earth, and threatened to engulf a large proportion of the islands, people and buildings. About midnight the most frightful scene of the whole disturbance took place. Suddenly an enormous luminous cloud, similar to that which was seen over the Gunung Guntur, but much greater in extent, formed over the Kandang range of mountains, which skirt the southeast coast of the island. This cloud gradually increased in size until it formed a canopy of lurid red and whitish gray over a wide extent of territory. During this time the eruptions increased, and streams of lava poured incessantly down the sides of mountains into the valleys, sweeping everything before them. When daylight came it was seen that an enormous tract of land had disappeared, extending from Point Capucin, on the south, to Negery Pafsereang, on the north, and west to Low Point, covering an extent of territory about fifty miles square. In this were situated the villages of Negery and Negery Cabawang. Of the people inhabiting these places and the natives scattered sparsely through the forests and on the plains, none escaped a frightful death. This section of the island was not so densely populated as the other portions, and the loss of life was comparatively small, though it must have aggregated fully fifteen thousand souls. The entire range of Candang mountains, extending along the coast in a semi-circle, for about sixty-five miles, had gone out of sight. The waters of Welcome Bay, the Sunda Straits, and Pepper Bay on the east, and of the Indian Ocean on the south, had rushed in and formed a great sea of turbulent waters. The aggregate loss of life from various elements of the terrible disturbances must be fully 100,000, but the number of those who perished can never, of course, be approximated. A violent shock occurred in the island of Sumatra Monday forenoon, and it was feared that other violent disturbances might occur. Middle Island, ten miles off the Javanese coast, and half way between the extreme points of Java and Sumatra, was almost wholly engulfed in the seas. The small island of Sinkle, probably originally only a cone blown up by an eruptive paroxism, has entirely disappeared. It was uninhabited.

THE NOYES PORTABLE BOOK CASE.
Holds not only 30 to 50 volumes, but the Unabridged Dictionary, the latter either opened or closed. It is made of dark cherry or black walnut, elegantly finished, and being on casters is practically a Revolving Book Case. Lawyers, ministers, doctors and scholars have found that it fills "the long felt want," and others, with fewer books, find it an ample Book Case. It has attachments for holding large atlases and magazines, also a Reading Machine which removes that embargo on reading, the task of holding up a heavy book by the hour, and makes reading and study so easy that there is no excuse for ignorance. The "Machine" holds the book by the covers; the leaves are held open with a Leaf Holder, which, by a touch, can be removed or replaced. The book tilts to any angle and is pivoted to turn to any position. A Clamp attaches it to a table or desk. An Extension Arm connects it with the book case or your easy chair, for which purpose attachments are always provided. This elegant outfit is sold at a remarkably low price. Send for circular.

THE PUREST IS THE BEST.

In the selection of SUNDAY-SCHOOL PAPERS, the most important point to be considered is the moral tone of the subject matter. If this is of a questionable character, the papers should be shunned, no matter how large, how attractive, or how low the price. Such papers are
COSTLY AT ANY PRICE.
The country is being flooded with S. S. literature that is largely composed of what may be properly termed "RELIGIOUS FICTION," the tendency of which is to create a distaste for sound reading and foster an appetite for fiction of a more deleterious character.
The engravings of these papers are equally objectionable. In many cases a lady or girl dressed in the height of fashion is made the HEROINE OF A STORY, thus putting the highest sanction to extravagance and pride. With such instructors in our Sunday-schools we cannot expect the children to grow up with a love for sound literature and with correct ideas of Christian propriety. With a view of supplying S. S. papers, of a pure and elevating character, the publishers are issuing
FOUR MONTHLY PAPERS.
They are FREE FROM FICTION, and the cuts are chosen with great care. While they are thus carefully edited, they are not lacking in attractiveness. They are well printed on beautiful tinted paper. The children are delighted with them. The very low price at which this line of S. S. papers is issued, places them within the reach of even schools of limited means

The visit of President Arthur to this city last week was a popular ovation yet without any apparent signification in politics. After visiting the Board of Trade and some of the vast manufactories that skirt Chicago upon the south, the people were given an opportunity to shake hands with a live President without discrimination. Mr. Arthur's quiet and gentlemanly ways have done more for his popularity than could the greatest party zeal or ambitious patriotism. After the usual partizan fashion his name has been widely used in the schemes for Presidential nomination. During his visit one of our dailies procured very flattering opinions, from all sorts of people all over the country, endorsing his skill as an executive; and Washington politicians with quick but not always accurate ear report that at least four Southern States will cast their votes for him, if opportunity is given. Other Presidential prognosticators in New York after more careful review of the outlook find that Mr. Blaine yet holds first place on the list of desirable candidates whom the Republicans are likely to put in the field.

It is one of the most pardonable forms of hero-worship that has led Congress to appropriate $33,000 for an appropriate memorial for the site where George Washington was born. The place is at Wakefield, Westmoreland county, Virginia, about eighty-six miles from the capital. Wakefield is situated on the inner side of a peninsula formed by Mattox Creek, the Potomac and Pope's Creek. Upon one of the beautiful hills that project into the estuary, at a place called "Burnt House" it is ascertained by Assistant Secretary of State Davis, Washington's old home stood. All that remains above ground is an old chimney belonging to an overseer's house and a corn-field waves around. The government has purchased the place and the approach to it, and will have to build a wharf about a mile long so that steamers can have a landing place. The design adopted by the Secretary of State calls for a monument building twenty feet square and about thirty feet high. Within the foundation at least partially constructed of the old brick of Washington's early home will be interred the remains of his ancestors and relatives. A recent examination of the premises discovered at a depth of two feet eight inches the solid wall of the old house in a remarkable state of preservation, the old-fashioned brick being as good as the day they were landed there from England, now nearly two centuries since. The memorial edifice will be about one and one-half miles from the wharf, and plans contemplate the enclosure of the twenty acres, which is to be improved from year to year. It is said by old residents in the vicinity that the erection of the wharf will open to cultivation thousands of acres of the best land in northern Virginia, redeem the garden section of the State, and make sacred a spot too long neglected by the people of the country.

Frank James, the last member of the desperate robber gangs that the border warfare of the rebellion bequeathed to Missouri, was lately brought to trial, and last week acquitted of the capital crime of participating in the train robbery at Winston and the murder of the conductor. The defense was an alibi which was not proved, but what was lacking in evidence was more than supplied by the same tainted sort of public sympathy that surrounded his brother Jesse, and the two wretched youngsters who shot him down in cold blood. It has been a marked feature of this case, how uniformly the papers during the trial spoke of the guilt of the prisoner and in the same sentence proclaimed the assurance of his acquittal. The positive nature of these remarks indicates a previous understanding of the mind of the jury which only the lodge is able as a rule to supply. The evidence that the James brothers were Freemasons may not be positive, but their long career of unpunished crime is a kind of testimony that is year by year having more weight with honest people. Now that these freebooters have been disposed of it is to be sincerely hoped that some effort will be made in western Missouri to produce a healthier moral tone that shall neither cringe to such outlaws nor consider it a mark of nobility to be recognized as their tool and accomplice.

The folly of the sham battles and encampments by which the spirit of the war is kept aglow was sadly illustrated last week at Princeton, New Jersey, where the secret Grand Army lodge was holding a meeting. A sham battle was planned and ended in actual and bloody fray. If they were boys who planned and carried to such a degree their mimic war, severe parental discipline would curb their warlike tempers. It is time American Christians were raising a sentiment against such folly. That the business of war may be forever closed in our land everyone should devoutly pray, and they are unwise citizens and have the most inadequate conception of their duty to their country, who think that the horrors and judgments of war are to be made welcome by sham battles, or encampments, or by secret lodges, kept up for the purpose of garnishing these fearful scenes and supporting the war spirit among the survivors and their children.

While anti-monopoly is a popular sentiment we shall hear enough of one side of the character of men like Gould and Vanderbilt, and only at rare intervals will there be any token of a better spirit in these men whose work among the business enterprises of our country is familiarly compared to the awful career of Napoleon among the nations of Europe. Vanderbilt stopped for a day at a White Mountain hotel and leaves $3,000 quietly for the thirty students who are earning a vacation purseful as waiters. It is said that he takes pleasure in these undemonstrative gifts and has dispensed $3,000,000 in this way: Mr. Gould was testifying before the Congressional Committee on Labor last week and told of his early and severe experiences as a young man, starting without means or friends in the world. It was an interesting moment in the committee as he told of a time when his condition seemed hopeless he went alone into the woods to cry off his discouragement and to pray for a new hope. It is not uncharitable to wish that the one may have more frequent occasion for his benefactions and that the other may constantly remember the wet-eyed boy on his knees in the woods.

—The Marquis of Bath in a brochure "Observations on Bulgarian Affairs," (Macmillan, London,) writes of the useful work of the American missionaries in that country, not only in making converts—these must necessarily be few at present—but in raising the moral tone of the nation, and in promoting the regeneration of its ancient Church. "There is hardly a town in Bulgaria," he writes, "where persons are not to be found who owe to the missionaries the advantages of a superior education. The result of their teaching has permeated all Bulgarian society, and is not the least important of the causes that have rendered the people capable of wisely using the freedom of their new political situation." The Marquis notes also the earnest desire and the strenuous exertions of the Bulgarian youth for a sound and liberal education as one of the most auspicious circumstances in the social life of that people.

AN EXPERIMENT..

BY J. P. STODDARD.

Freemasonry is no longer an experiment. Its merits have been fairly tested. If we concede its claim to antiquity we may justly assert its maturity. If its character, mission and methods of work can be found out, they may be known now.

It has had friends and opponents who have not been dilatory in their researches or sparing in the expression of their opinions. The forum and the pulpit have both eulogized and denounced it, and it has been the theme of pen and press in every civilized country. It has been searched and sifted by the ablest minds of the present century. Unfriendly criticisms have roused the energies of its champions and called out their best efforts in its defense. Profound research, critical analysis and liberal culture, stimulated by formidable antagonists and inspired with ardent zeal for the mastery, have penetrated every vale of tradition, explored every cavern of history, deciphered antediluvian hieroglyphics, upturned the paving stones, rifled the tombs and robbed the subterranean vaults of cities and temples, in search of evidence of which to construct a mystic pyramid, compassing time in its base and piercing heaven with its summit.

It is in the deliberate utterances of such master minds, men of breadth, depth and culture, who have compassed seas and lands for information that we are to find out the origin, character, mission and methods of Freemasonry. Taking counsel from the ablest advocates of the order and accepting their statements, is certainly not an injustice to the society or a reflection on its members. Allowing men to state their own case, and giving them the entire benefit of their own chosen words is surely not discourteous or unkind.

Rev. Geo. Oliver, D.D., Past Deputy and Past Grand Master, and the most erudite and prolific writer on Freemasonry in England, is justly entitled to the first place as a witness. This noted author gives the result of his protracted researches in a volume entitled the "Antiquities of Freemasonry" a book kept in the lodge libraries to teach Freemasonry to Masons. On page 20 this writer says in speaking of "those who kept their first estate:" "In such pure Masonic employment were the angels engaged before the creation of the world, and in such employment will they be engaged to all eternity." Tracing the history of his beloved order he comes at length to the eventful period of the world's creation, where he divulges on page 25 the secret, that "placed in the Garden of Eden, Adam was taught that science which is now termed Masonry."

If this is true, it follows of necessity that when even chaos was not and only God and the angels were, "before the morning stars sang together and the sons of God shouted for joy" over the world's creation, the Grand Architect of the Universe opened a lodge in heaven and initiated unfallen angels into the "sublime mysteries," and exercised their untainted faculties in the pure "employments of that science which is now termed Masonry," and when Adam appeared, thousands, perhaps millions of years later in the Garden of Eden, his first lessons were in the performance of the "solemn rite of ancient craft Masonry."

The writer does not state what these solemn ceremonies were, for in so doing he would become "a vile and perjured villain," like President C. G. Finney and Elder David Bernard; and then, too, it would be foreign to the point which he is laboring to establish, viz., the identity of the lodge to which he belongs with the Eden and the heaven lodge.

Having satisfied himself of the origin of the lodge-reputable character of his "ancient brethren" the writer attempts to define the order in a single sentence: "The true definition of Masonry is, a science which includes all others, and teaches mankind their duty to God, their neighbor and themselves." This is Oliver's definition of Masonry as it is, and he affirms that it is "TRUE." Masonry must therefore be a system, and not merely an aggregation of facts and forces, jumbled together in chaotic mass, but a creature of law, reaching results through ascertained and applied agencies. It is a reality, not a myth; a fact, not a fancy; a science in very deed so broad, deep and high, "including all others," that there can be nothing beyond, beneath or above it. As omnipresent as existence, as omniscient as force, as penetrating as law, as profound as wisdom and as spotless as virtue. Like a monster cyclone sweeping round and round the world it has gathered within itself the learning, philosophy and religions of the ages, and entering the counsel of deity, wrests eternal secrets from the "Grand Lodge above," and freighted with its peerless treasure, descends from its mission among the gods to "Teach mankind their duty to God, their neighbor and themselves."

In further support of this claim refer to page 66 of this same standard work—"Masonry originated with God; like that eternal being it existed before time was, and shall exist when time shall be no more." Page 55: "Even the heavens shall pass away with a great noise and the elements shall melt with fervent heat; the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burnt up, but Masonry pure and uncontaminated with earthly abominations, shall triumph over the general and universal desolation and shall cement the host of heaven in a holy union and communion to all eternity." This testimony is clear, explicit and comprehensive. Masonry emanated from God. It existed prior to the world's creation and it now embraces every science known to God, men or devils; for it is "a science including all others." It was, is now and shall be world without end the supreme delight and blissful employment of "unfallen angels" and the emaculate sons of light who follow their Grand Master Hiram Abiff to that Utopia of Grand Lodge perfection at which, in the words of Thomas Smith Webb, the father of Masonry in America, "every good Mason hopes at last to arrive by the aid of the theological ladder, which Jacob saw in vision ascending from earth to heaven, the three principal rounds of which are denominated, Faith, Hope and Charity."

Oliver admits great obstacles in the pathway of his beloved order, but argues, that inasmuch as it is superior to, because it embraces all others, it must eventually subdue or expel every discordant element, break every bond that curbs its ambition and stand forth unchallenged, the "universal empire;" and, as Rebold says, "Giving law to all, but receiving it from none."

THE SUBLIME BROTHERHOOD.

BY W. POST.

It has often been noticed that the great majority of saloonists and rum landlords are sworn secret society men. It is pretty well understood that nearly all of them are knights etc., of some secret, revelling, drunken, midnight clan. Whatever else they disguise they do not attempt to conceal their predisposition towards and indulgence in whatever may distinguish them as candidates for worldly honors, wealth and pleasure congenial to preverted appetites and passions. But this is nothing to be astonished at.

Besides, there are honorable men, component parts of the brotherhood, who do not expose themselves to the "woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink, and makest him drunken," who assign various reasons in justification of their conjectured right to do as pleaseth them. This is not so strange and is easily to be accounted for in many instances.

Nor is it so marvelous that these men endorse such a Masonic rule as, "I do promise and swear that I will not violate the chasity of a Master Mason's wife, sister, or daughter" (see Pres. Chas. G. Finney on Freemasonry, p. 83.) on a par with, "Thou shalt not covet thy neighbors' wife" or "shalt not commit adultery" of Exodus 20, and also claim that Masonic profession being maintained their faith becomes a beam of light which will bring them to those blessed mansions where they shall be eternally happy with God, and that "sincerity and plain dealing" render them "acceptable in his sight. (Sickel's Mas. Guide, p. 79 and 94.) This is good enough religion for me, they say, and they seek for none other. All this is no mystery.

But when we see the minister of the gospel of Christ bowing down to this Dagon and swearing eternal allegiance thereto, to keep its counsels and its secrets and to defend it "murder and treason not excepted;" and when we hear men professing to be made holy say "there is nothing incompatible with holiness in Freemasonry," then we are astonished beyond power of expression.

Nor are these ministers, of all denominations, almost without repute for learning and wisdom, position and power. Nor men whose character seems questionable. Nay, they are notable men! But, alas! these are in sworn allegiance with drunkards, drunkard-makers, lewd, filthy men of corrupt conversation, murderers, adulterers, coveteous, proud, boastful, riotors revellers and abominable idolators. And all are sworn (in the oath of the Thrice Illustrious Order of the Cross) "to persecute unto death anyone who violates Masonic obligation" (see Finney on Masonry, p. 102.) To day Morgan's monument in the cemetery in Batavia testifies to the truthfulness of President Finney's declaration. Morgan's blood from beneath its pedestal crieth for vengeance.

Just think of it! Methodist clergymen in the dust, on their knees, haltered and blindfolded, from the lips of a profane creature swearing eternal fealty with drunkards and whore-mongers, to "obey all the edicts" of a Grand lodge of such characters—for the sake of what!

I blush crimson at being connected as one of the same church which permits such disgraceful things. Only a sense of duty binds me in hope that one glow worm of light added to other lights, burning yearly more brightly, many may, by the blessing of God, so expose the seething mælstrom that may discern in time and escape. Jesus called Judas "friend;" so would we, in Christ, cease from denunciation, tolerating no bitterness of spirit while our heart is bleeding because our Saviour is reproached, and truth and righteousness set at nought, in the house of his friends.

Rev. Dr. Jas. E. Latimer sublimely chaunts in concluding a printed aderess: "Be true Masons and you will be the true servants of God, then it matters not when nor where you die, you will drop away from earth but heaven will have gained a new voice to swell the chorus of the redeemed." Is such incongruity pardonable?

POWER OF SYMBOLS.

TRUE AND FALSE.

Carlyle tells us in his French Revolution that "of man's whole territorial possessions unspeakably the noblest are his symbols, divine, or divine seeming, under which he marches and fights with victorious assurance in this life battle!" And Webster defines symbol as "the sign or representation of any moral thing by the images or properties of natural things."

The importance of symbols has long been found out by the secret societies. They have appropriated so many rites, symbols and signs which have a "divine seeming" that multitudes of people have been deceived thereby, and led to believe they were really "divine." Masons sing "Hail Masonry divine," and so with other orders whose signs have been invented to build up the power of the lodge. The "divine seeming" of their rites is in fact their strength. Masonry binds its members by its "divine seeming," oaths which are in fact violations of God's Word—every one of them —(Lev. 5: 4) and of Christ's plain command regarding at least such oaths, and the "divine seeming" of Resurrection by the Hiram Abiff ceremonies and by prayers, "divine seeming" but Christless.

But through the power of symbols lodgery has attained enormous power, which endangers the foundations of political, social, and religious structures. How can their influence be accounted for? What delusion is it that has overspread our people of all others and induced them to surrender their personal freedom for the privilege of serving the secret empire? The widespread evil causes many of our best minds to recoil from all signs and symbols as altogether evil, or of very questionable character. And even those symbols which are "divine," being God-given, for his own church and people have often become too lightly esteemed. Has it not also been the case that lodgery by its imitations of church rites, true and false, has had an effect in weakening, yes, of even destroying altogether in some minds the influence of those symbols of the Gospel which have been divinely ordered to bless believers? The Gospel ordinances of baptism and the Lord's Supper infinitely eclipse every device of man and should be held sacred by every one who accepts the reconciling God in Christ, the Risen Redeemer as his Saviour, and should indeed be regarded as unspeakably the "noblest of man's whole territorial possessions."

It is ever the aim of the gilt to appear like the gold, of the spurious to appear like the genuine, of the "divine seeming" to be like the "divine." But how vast the difference! The Gospel and its Christ-given memorial symbols of life as new creatures in Christ Jesus, cannot be over-estimated, and should be most carefully guarded and watched over by every good soldier of the Cross.

If any man preach any other Gospel than that which had been preached by the Apostle, let him be anathema! The Gospel was always accompanied by it symbols whenever practicable. "Do this in remembrance of me," said our Redeemer, when he gave the symbols of his broken body and shed blood: And, when he commanded the Gospel to be preached to the whole world he gave at same time these words: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," for Jesus had risen, and henceforth would reign with all power in heaven and earth.

Can language divine more clearly convey to man the supreme importance to him of the obedience of faith, to these inestimable symbols of his Redeemer's death, burial and resurrection? But salvation through the lodge is "another Gospel," and its Christ is certainly a Christ of the inner chamber and not for the whole world. O. D. G.

THE TWENTY-FIFTH OF DECEMBER.

In an article on the "Feasts of Saturn," in the Cynosure, (March 22) it was charged that the assumption of the Roman church, that Christ was born on the 25th of December, was, and is, "an astounding falsehood." Facts which sustain that charge should then and there, have been given. While there is not a word in history, sacred or profane, to show at what time of the year, even, that great event did occur, there is positive evidence that it could not have been, even within months of December 25th.

When Christ was born, the shepherds were "watching their flocks by night," in the open fields. Now, though the cold of that land may not be, at any time, as severe as in our New England winters, yet, even there, while the heat of the days, in winter, is often considerable, the cold of the nights, from December to February, is very piercing; snow often falls, and during that time the sheep are always carefully sheltered in the "sheep cotes." Maimonides, a learned Jewish commentator, thoroughly "acquainted with all that concerns Jewish customs," tells us that the flocks are removed from the pastures when the fall rains descend. He says: "The first rain falls in the month Marchesvan, which answers to the latter part of our October, and the former part of November . . . . from whence it appears that Christ must be born before the middle of October." (Maimonides, in Misn Betza, cap. 5, sec. 7.) Kitto (Illustrated Commentary on Deut. 11: 14) says that "the first rain" is in "September or October," which fully confirms the testimony of our learned Jewish author, and shows that it was not the custom of the Jewish shepherds and is not now to watch their flocks by night, in the open fields, later than some time in October.

No "shepherds watched their flocks by night,"
In winter's frosts and snow;
No "angel of the Lord" came down,
On such a scene, below.
But summer reigned, the night was warm—
No wintry blasts, no chill, no storm—
When shepherds, watching on the plain,
Heard angels sing that glad refrain—
"Glory to God, in heaven!
On earth are peace and mercy given!"

Again, it is incredible that the decree of the Roman Emperor "that the whole world should be taxed" required that women and children, as well as men, should "go up" to their several cities for this purpose, or any other, in the depth of winter, when, in addition to the inclemency of the season, the roads, from the depth and softness of the mud in them, were, as is well known, well nigh impassible. The kindly regard always manifested by Augustus for the welfare of his people, puts even the suspicion of such an outrage out of the question.

The "Manger." In the "rural districts" of Judea, "it is common to find two sides of one room fitted up with these mangers and the remainder elevated about two feet higher, for the accommodation of the family. The mangers are built of small stones and mortar, in the shape of a box, or rather of a kneading trough, and when cleaned up and whitewashed, as they often are in summer, they do very well to lay little babes in. Indeed, our own children have slept in them, in our rude summer retreats on the mountains." (The Land and the Book Vol. 2, p. 98). Referring to the "crib," spoken of in Is. 1: 3, the author says, (p. 97): "These 'cribs' of Isaiah, are, I suppose, the mangers of the New Testament, in one of which the infant Redeemer was laid. It is so understood by the Arabs, and so translated in their Bible, and I doubt not, correctly.

"In summer." This then was the season when the "manger" was available as a cradle, or couch "to lay little babes in." With a little common sense all this is clerr enough. As it was only in that season that the cattle were away, in the pastures, it was only then that the mangers could be fitted up and become suitable receptacles for "little babes." Besides, every one must see that in the "piereing" cold of a winter's night, such a place would be entirely out of the question, as a place for either mother or child, in a case of childbirth.

Thus, despite the profound silence of all history, as to the date of the birth of Christ, we have evidence, strong, unanswerable—circumstantial though it is—that he was not born in the winter, nor within months of it. The celebration, therefore, of his birth on the 25th of December, the birthday of Bacchus, the false Messiah, the great enemy and rival of the true, and that with all the usages and all the symbols of the great Bacchic celebration, must be, not merely inappropriate, but an "offense" to "the Master," a sacrilege and a profanation. THE SPIRIT'S WORK IN REFORM.

Scriptural blessedness in experience costs separation that leads to holiness. But then the Bible speaks of gathering, if not of conventions. Yes, here is one, but not planned or premeditated, or places mentioned with select names, to deliberate upon the most effective measures to spread these doctrines. But in the church at Antioch, certain prophets and teachers as they were engaged in the ministrations to the Lord and fasted, the Holy Ghost said separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them, and when they had fasted and prayed and laid their hands upon them they sent them away—so they being sent by the Holy Ghost. Acts 13: 1–50. From such Scriptures we can learn what is needed to make holiness effective, as is desired, without conventions. It is the Holy Ghost. It is obedience to the voice of the Holy Ghost. Separation. To obey will do more good than time or money sacrificed for a convention. Separation from these unholy alliances, the unfruitful works of darkness, secret oath bound societies and worldly conformity in practices forbidden by the Word of God. Holy men with commissions, separated and sent by the Holy Ghost, will prove their mission Scriptural no matter what their church relations. They will be moved by the Holy Ghost and cry aloud and spare not and show the people their sins. Conventions are not so moved. Holy people professedly are not so moved.

What is wanted is not conventions, but separation; not churchanity but Christianity. The monster evils in the churches that hold such control, Freemasonry and fashion, will never unloose their power until men and women, full of faith and of the Holy Ghost, through praying, fasting, teaching, talking, living and crying to God enforce separation.—Vanguard.

THE GOD-SENT.—When the Lord commanded Gideon to go and save Israel from the hand of the Midianites, Gideon said, "Wherewith shall I save Israel? behold my family is poor in Manasseh, and I am the least in my father's house." And the Lord said, "Have I not sent thee? Surely I will be with thee." Here is a lesson to the humble poor in the church of Christ; to those who count themselves the least in the Father's house. They are sometimes tempted, on this ground, to beg off from doing some specified work for the Lord, as Gideon did. If all such could be persuaded to look away from and above themselves, unto him who says, "Have I not sent thee?" and go to work, how precious to them would be the promise, realized in their own experience, "Surely I will be with thee," and what defeats the Midianites would suffer!—Intelligencer.

THE MATTER of celebrating the Christmas and Easter festivals being pretty well settled as ceremonial observances in the Methodist E. church (as the Western Christian Advocate views the subject), the next advance step in ritualism will be to enter Good Friday in the list of "days." So that paper looks at the business. The word "ritualism" is of our own employing, of course; but the Advocate wants Good Friday kept by the church. So reports the Christian Statesman. Well, then, why not adopt the whole list of the saints' days, fasts, etc., of Rome, with penance thrown in? If the one is to be justified, why not the other?—Banner of Holiness.

More hearts pine away in secret anguish for the want of kindness from those who should be their comforters than from any other calamity in life.

SHALL ALL CITIZENS DISARM?

Our revolutionary fathers knew some things as well as we do, but we sometimes think that discoveries have been made since of things that they did not know. They seem to have got a little mixed on the question what would make people secure in their persons and houses. They thought that if "unreasonable searches and seizures" by governments of all kinds were strictly forbidden, and if "the right of the people to bear arms" were not infringed, everybody would be safe. In perusing their various documents under the mellow light of 107 years, we find ourselves carried back to a day in which it was the cardinal faith of every stalwart Christian that all crimes were committed by governments, and that all that was necessary to the maintenance of perfect peace was to leave the sovereign people to themselves.

If that were true then the experience of 107 years has made it extremely untrue. The idea that society is made safe in its homes and persons by allowing every brute, drunk or sober, sane or crazy, to carry around in his hip pocket the means of inflicting death, without summons or trial, on anybody he suspects or dislikes or misunderstands, is the sheerest lunacy, though it descend in regular apostolic succession, and with laying on of hands, from Ethan Allen and the Continental Congress to the young gentleman in Brooklyn who killed his young wife day before yesterday because she "dared him to," or to the young lover at Throg's Neck, who killed his invalid sister Monday and then shot himself because her insanity had become an obstacle to his marriage.

The fact is, that whatever may have been true at other times and in other countries, in our time and country there can be no security to our homes and persons until the right of brutes and fools to carry around with them the means of inflicting instant death is utterly denied, scouted, suppressed, and obliterated from the list of rights.

The argument by which pistol-wearing has been sustained has been that it brings a weak man up to the level of a strong one. The plea is singularly false in its practical application. When pistols are fired and death ensues, as in the case of these two innocent girls, we generally find that it is the strong and brutal fool who has armed himself, while those who become the victims of his brutality are unarmed. The pistols increased tenfold the inequality that otherwise existed.

We have never yet seen a gentleman, a scholar, a person of politeness or refinement, while engaged in the duties of civil life, carry a weapon. We have rarely met an innate coward, brute, gambler, rough, or "deadbeat," one who expected to carry himself through every controversy with a defiant temper, and a scourging, slanderous tongue, and to come out of it "first best" whether he was right or wrong, that did not carry a pistol. The class most unfit to carry weapons are the only men who ever carry them.

When Garfield was attacked neither he nor Blaine, nor any other decent person present, had a weapon. Decent people never wear them. Mr. Blaine's life was as completely in the hands of Guiteau as was that of Garfield, if the whimsies of the miserable brute had run in the direction of taking it. The plea that the innocent ever need these weapons for defense against the natural weapons of either assassins, burglars, or any such class is a false plea. The assassin or burglar is certain to be the only one of the two parties who will be armed.

It is a question for grave consideration, therefore, whether all our constitutions should not be amended, the right of bearing arms be abolished, and a general disarming of all persons be enforced. All half-way measures, all attempts to decide who shall have arms according to their moral characters, are supremely ridiculous.

Daily experience shows that all the cruelties practiced by the Church of Rome or the Spanish inquisition in its darkest days, or by the Protestant witch-burners and heresy-hunters, of Old and New England, did not pile up their victims as rapidly as this sacred Moloch of American democracy, the constitutional right to bear arms. It is not adapted to a compact civilization or a dense population. It is not for the best weal of a race of people, the pressure of whose nervous tension keeps the brains of one-fifth at least of them on the verge of nervous prostration or mental derangement. Instead, therefore, of having in every constitution the declaration that the "right of the people to bear arms and to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures shall be inviolate," we ought to have one declaring "The right of each man to his life being sacred and inviolable, no search of one's person, house, papers, or effects shall be deemed unreasonable which shall have for its object the general disarming of all citizens. No man who does not contemplate murder in some contingency will keep in his possession a weapon whose design is to invest its owner with the power to inflict death, rightly or wrongly, without investigation or trial, according to his unguided caprice, insanity, or malice."—Inter Ocean.

There is a growing feeling in the community that the United States government has no right to render even the specious aid of a "special tax," to violators of the prohibitory law in Kansas, Maine, Georgia, Maryland, and in fact in every locality where prohibition or no license prevails. It is regarded and always will be regarded as a sanction on the part of an authority higher than the State, whereas in truth it has no more power to protect sales made illegal by State law than so much paper signed by the king of Siam. There is need of an adjustment between State and National law in this matter. The Nation cannot afford to be the refuge of lies into which the dealer runs, and thinks he is safe.—Signal.

STRIKING THE WRONG MAN.

Some weeks ago James Gaffey, an under-keeper in the Norristown Insane Asylum, became enraged at an inmate named Fiss and struck him such a severe blow that it has resulted in death. There may be nothing new or strange in this, as it is notorious that the inmates in such institutions are often shamefully maltreated. The keeper in this case may have done on this occasion almost the same thing that had frequently been done to others. But that result shows that he he had not looked into the merits of the case before he did the dastardly deed He seemed not to have been at all aware that he was dealing with a person of distinguished relationships and connections. But when the day of burial came the body of the victim of the abuse was carried to the hearse by two members of the G. A. R. (Grand Army of the Republic), two of the O. U. A. M. (Order of United American Mechanics), two of the I. O. R. M. (Improved order of Red Men), and the funeral procession contained twenty-seven guards from the G. A. R.; eighty from the O. U. A. M.; Lodge 37 of the Knights of Pythias; Empire Council No. 133 American Legion of Honor; Leiderkranz Singing Society and the Knights of the Grand Mogul. The deceased was a member of all these orders, societies and associations. Does anybody wonder that he went crazy? No ordinary mortal could bear up long under such a load. It reminds one of the old pictures of Atlas with the world on his shoulders.

But Gaffey who struck Mr. Fiss probably did not know that he was striking one who had thousands and hundreds of thousands of associates who would be ready to avenge the wrong done to their comrade. They have at least shown their postmortem love for the deceased, and they are likely to show their postmortem vengeance on him who was so inconsiderate as to strike the wrong man. They have employed a lawyer in addition to the District attorney to prosecute the accused. It may be, however, that Gaffey is a member of some of these or other equally powerful secret orders. If so, one evil in this case may neutralize the other; though two wrongs can never make a right.—Christian Instructor.

SPEAKING TO THE POINT.

An addition was recently made to the county jail in Paterson, New Jersey, at a cost of $30,000. When it was completed, the county officers and contractor celebrated the event by a banquet in the building. There were liquors in great abundance. After a number of toasts had been drunk, the gentleman presiding, a judge, proposed "the temperance cause." It was probably done because they were getting pretty drunk. Mr. Bantram, a temperance man, was called on to respond, and did so in the following stinging speech, which some of them, perhaps, will never forget. He said:

"I thank you for this invitation, and I recognize its fitness. You have assembled to celebrate the enlargement of this jail, rendered necessary by the use of strong drink, in which you are so freely indulging this day. Down stairs the cells and corridors are crowded with criminals who have but changed places. A few years ago they were respected citizens, some of them occupying as responsible positions as those now occupied by yourselves; but they commenced as you have commenced, and they continued as many of you are continuing, and to-day they are reaping the harvest in a career of crime, and paying the penalty with a period of punishment."

At this moment another bottle was opened, and Mr. Bantram said:

"I hear the popping of corks. I listen to the merry voices, and the praises you are singing to the infernal spirit of wine; but there comes to me the refrain, from the prisoner's cell, who is shedding penitential tears over his folly, and accompanied by the still sadder wail of anguish uttered by the heart-broken wife, worse than widowed through the traffic in strong drink, which, as a judge in your courts said, 'is the great promoter of crime,' a traffic licensed by your votes, and sustained by the patronage you are this day giving it. It is with inexpressible sadness that I discover that there can be found in Passaic county so many men with hearts so hardened, feelings so calloused, and sensibilities so blunted that in a place like this, under circumstances like these, they dare raise to their lips that which depraves the citizen, and endangers the state. Thanking you, gentlemen, for this unexpected privilege, I take my seat, fully conscious that you will never again call on me under similar circumstances."—Sel.

THURLOW WEED'S PET PIGEON

Thurlow Weed had a favorite pigeon that used to perch on his shoulder and show a great deal of attachment for the venerable journalist. The other day a reporter called on Mr. Weed's daughter. After sitting a few minutes this pigeon alighted on the reporter's shoulder, and cheerily cooing peered round into his face. Suddenly the bird became dumb and flew into an adjoining room. "He has done that to every gentleman that has come into the house since father died," said Miss Weed, with a sigh. "He takes most kindly to General Bowen, who visits me occasionally, and who has been in feeble health some time and walks slowly. The bird will coo and fly to the General's shoulder, but when he sees it is not my father he will stop his cooing and find some other perch. Since the day that father's remains were carried away the affectionate creature has been seeking for his master. He flies through every room in the house and fairly haunts the library, where father spent most of the time with his pet."—Ex.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

A SECRET SOCIETY TO SEPARATE THE COLORED FROM THE WHITE RACE.

The latest development of secretism, is a society known as "The Colored National Indemnity Association," having the foregoing as its object. An agent clothed with authority, has come to this city to solicit aid from both white and colored, and (I suppose) to organize branch associations, such as he says have been organized all over the South.

I deeply sympathize with the colored people in the wrongs they endure in some parts of the South. I heartily rejoice in any feasible plan for their improvement in wealth, education, morality and social happiness; but I regard the foregoing plan as very poorly adapted to accomplish any good object but as an admirable scheme to give a few persons notoriety, and draw large sums into the treasury of an irresponsible secret order.

A late caricature represents "The Goose that Laid he Golden Eggs." The "goose" is the Irish servant girl who is fed on real and imaginary stories of the "wrongs of Ireland" and who, in return, contributes her hard earned wages to the managers of irresponsible secret societies. A part of the contents of these "golden eggs" goes to buy dynamite to blow up Parliament Houses, but mainly it swells the pockets and appeases the appetites of these human vampires, who live on the life blood of their fellow-countrymen. Now the rank and file of the colored (and white) secret societies are the same unsuspecting "geese" who will never be killed so long as they continue to lay golden eggs for the benefit of Noble Grands, Worshipful Masters, Most Puissant Sovereign Grand Commanders, etc., etc.

When the colored people shall stop trusting in societies, whether secret or open, and depend more on individual effort, industry and economy; and when they shall recognize in the church and the state the only societies that have a Divine warrant, they will have taken a long step towards independence and self-respect.

The following from the New York Times of the 29th Aug. represents the current convictions of the best friends of the colored people. I commend it to their attention:

The Colored National Indemnity Association of Arkansas," as the new organization is somewhat grandiloquently styled, has for its object the encouragement of a policy of separation. It is a pity and a shame that there should seem to be any cause for even the agitation of such a scheme as this. It is a shame that the colored race cannot find peace, safety, and a reasonable degree of prosperity in the land where it has been so long domiciled, and whose development owes so much to its illrequited labor. But policy of the white man has too often been to keep the negro poor and degraded, and then to point to his shiftlessness and ignorance as conclusive of his inability to govern himself. The remedy proposed does not promise well. No artificial separation like that contemplated would be consistent with the natural laws of society. Experiments of this sort have uniformaly proved failures. Close communities are never prosperous, and a settlement or colony that should be founded on an idea of exclusiveness would almost certainly contain in its organization the elements that would ultimately destroy its life.

A GREAT FRAUD.

Next to "Honorable" and "Benevolent" lotteries, about the meanest scheme for stealing money from the simple is by fraudulent life insurance companies. I have before me the pamphlet advertisement of "The Mutual Life and Maturity Association of Washington, D. C., incorporated May 10, 1883;" office 2314 F. street, N. W.

This association proposes to give to its members at the end of five years the sum of $1000 each, or if a member shall die at any time after one or under five years, then the heirs of such person are to receive the sum of $100 for each year of the time he was a member. He shall also be entitled to a weekly benefit of $5 after the first year for any sickness or disability, provided such disability does not exceed six weeks. Any person of sound mind and moral habits will be received without regard to age or physical condition.

The conditions on which this amount is to be paid are as follows:

Membership fee	$ 5 00
Annual dues (in advance) $3 each for five years	15 00
Monthly dues $2, for five years	120 00
Assessments on death and maturity $1 each, estimated	210 00
Total	$350 00

"Thus the probable cost to secure the guaranteed amount of $1,000 will be about $350, a profit of $650 on investment." I quote the exact language. But this is not all. If the members shall on an average be disabled one week in each year, they will receive on an average $1020 for their $350.

Let us see from whence this amount is to come. First, $350 at compound interest at 6 per cent. will yield in five years $351.06. To this must be added the amount accruing from lapsed policies before the close of the first year. Suppose one in twenty-five die (a large death-rate), and suppose he had paid in the whole $350: this would add to the available means to pay to members on maturity, the sum of $14.00 each, or total available funds, $365.06. That there could be no other legitimate source of income is evident from the fact that in all cases, except that of policies lapsing before the close of the first year, the amount paid to each and every member is more than he has paid in.

This scheme then simply proposes to give to each person who desires, the sum of $1020, less $365.06, or $654.94. But with this further understanding that the $350 and the $1020, when it is convenient for a confessedly bankrupt association to pay it. Surely the saving clause, that themember must be of a sound mind, was a happy thought.

One would suppose that a scheme so manifestly fraudulent would have received no countenance and yet it is but one of a number that has been so devised and worked as to dupe (mainly the colored people of the South) out of vast sums.

By (the about) 650 names published as members, if they are really so, there has been paid something like $227,500, and for which they have received a promise to pay in five years, more than $650,000. No business man would give one per cent. for such a contract.

That such frauds are clearly indictable and ought to be suppressed is evident, and yet they are bold, open and defiant. H. H. HINMAN.

REFORM NEWS.

THE MICHIGAN STATE WORK.

BRONSON, Mich., Sept. 6th, 1883.

At Jackson I met in the Free Methodist church yesterday a few consecrated reformers in council. Their deliberations were entirely harmonious and the conclusions reached unanimous. Brethren Day, Ross, Foote, Poole, Walters, with other like-minded were present and after resolving to make a vigorous campaign took measures to carry out their resolution in a sensible business way. Bro. Day was selected as State Agent with instruction to devote his whole time to the work, and provision made for his support. The Michigan American was continued under the management of Bros. Day, Ross and Foote as a publishing committee, and arrangements for supplying agents with the necessary reform literature inaugurated. Michigan will maintain her reputation and without doubt make rapid advances during the present year. It was a great pleasure to meet brethren Kinney, Mathews, Sister DePew and others who dropped in to cheer on the work by their presence and approval.

Of course mother Wilcox and her sons extended as they always do a hearty welcome to live working reformers, and I am personally indebted to them for their generous hospitality. I met casually several of the brethren on their way to the Wesleyan conference, which was to hold its opening session in the evening. I left at 10 P. M. and reached this little town at 12:30 this A. M. and having completed my business I am awaiting the next train to take me to my next point. J. P. STODDARD.

GOD WAS THERE.

The Free Methodists opened a camp meeting sixteen miles west of Port Huron, Mich., Aug. 22nd, and broke up on the 29th. Over half a score of ministers were present, with a royal army of saints, and of sinners not a few. Good order was maintained from first to last.

The meeting was to me one of the most precious occasions of my life. I know not that I ever saw a more marvelous presence and mighty power of God than was there manifest. Sorrow, joy, and love were developed seemingly to their utmost possibility. O! the unutterable anguish of convicted sinners! O! the rapturous joy and ineffable love of believers. Would that the blessed Lord would multiply those scenes in ten thousand times ten thousand localities. Among the hopeful conversions was a large number of children. But I took my pen to write of another matter.

Before leaving home I filled my satchel with Anti-masonic literature. Entering the camp ground, who should I find but our dear brother Webster, loaded down with all sorts of weapons against the "secret craft." We stationed ourselves each side of the track at the entrance to the ground, and for over two hours we supplied the hundreds of carriages with about half a dozen tracts and papers each, as fast as we could hand them out. Then, during the meeting, after an address exposing the abominations of Masonry, we were cleaned out of what was left to the last leaf, and more wanted. Going over the ground day by day not a pamphlet, tract or paper was found thrown away. Let the friends of reform seek these grand occasions to sow the good seed broadcast, and "God will give the increase." C. C. FOOTE.

IOWA CONVENTION.

THE SECRETARY'S REPORT.

The Iowa Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, met in annual convention in the Opera Hall in Albia, Aug. 28, 1883, 7:30 P. M. The published programme was not carried out, because of the failure of Hon. S. C. Pomeroy to be present. The convention listened to an able and effective address from President C. A. Blanchard of Wheaton, Ill., which well supplied the anticipated address of the Senator from Kansas

At 9 A. M. Wednesday, the convention met in the United Presbyterian church. Devotional exercises were conducted by Rev. C. D. Trumbull of Morning Sun, after which convention was called to order by the president, and prayer was offered by Rev. S. Smith of Ringgold. At 10:30 P. M. Rev. D. P. Rathbun, State lecturer, reported his labors during the past year. A more cheering report has not been made since the organization of the Association in the State. Amount received on field, in gospel and State work, $900. Appropriate resolutions were drafted and passed expressing gratitude for the work and success of the year, especially recognizing the hand of God as the great instrumentality giving success.

In the afternoon an interesting address was given by the president, Rev. C. D. Trumbull, on the Sabbath; who was ably followed by Rev. E. B. Graham of Omaha, the author of "In the Coils." These speeches were terse and practical, and interested the goodly number who came to hear.

At 3:45, Pres. C. A. Blanchard delivered a masterly address upon Prohibition. We doubt whether the people of Albia ever listened to a better temperance speech. If the speaker could have worn some mystic seals upon his watch-guard, said speech would have been published in the daily press from the Mississippi to the Missouri. But alas! it bears no "mark" of the "image of the beast."

A 8 P. M. Pres. McMichael of Monmouth College addressed the convention in Opera Hall; subject, "The Relation of Secrecy to the Church." Most of the thoughts brought forward in the consideration of the subject were drawn from sources not usually referred to in treating this phase of the work, hence the doctor's speech was interesting and appreciative.

Thursday morning, Aug. 30, was devoted to reports of committees, including the report of Treasurer. At 10:15 J. P. Stoddard, General Secretary of N. C. A., reported the Washington movement, its success and needs.

A vote of thanks was extended in the afternoon to Rev. C. D. Trumbull, the retiring president of the Association, for his able and efficient presidency during the past three years. "Ye Secretary" would also have appreciated such a release, but, we presume, not having proven himself worthy, was ordained to continued servitude. The convention listened to two addresses from Revs. R. C. Wylie of Hopkinton and M. A. Gault of Blanchard; subject of former, "The Nation's duty of Acknowledging God;" the latter, "The Nation's Need of Christ." The principles involved in these subjects were forcibly presented, and cordially indorsed by those present. All reforms are related, and none more intimately than the Anti-secret and National. In reality, the latter involves the principles and is the basis of all. These brethren are worthy of a hearing, and are destined to be heard.

W. H. Layton, J. M. Kent, and S. E. Starry were appointed delegates to attend the National Convention to be held at Washington, D. C. No lecturer was employed in the field, but the Executive Committee were instructed to engage some suitable person; and all workers were invited to labor in the State as opportunity should permit. The enrollment showed a large attendance, while every session evidenced an increasing interest. Anti-masonry has come to stay in Iowa, and the lodge is taking due notice thereof.

At 8 P. M., after a short address by Rev. D. P. Rathbun, the Master's degree was publicly worked by S. E. Starry. A large audience witnessed the "ancient and sublime" method by which a man is made into a Mason.

Much interest was given to the convention by the presence and labors of Rev. J. P. Stoddard and other workers both from home and abroad. We believe it is Iowa's best meeting. Let this not be said next year.

The following is the list of officers for the coming year:

President, Rev. H. Avery, College Springs.
Vice President, Rev. T. P. Robb, Linton.
Recording Sec'y., Rev. A. W. Hall, College Springs.
Cor. Sec'y., Rev. C. D. Trumbull, Morning Sun.
Treas., J. A. Laird, Esq., Wayne.

A. W. HALL, Sec'y.

FROM A VOLUNTEER COLPOTEUR.

CLEARPORT, Fairfield Co., O., Aug. 31st, 1883.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I have struck the first blow in this county for the reform, having just returned from a four days trip in the interest of N. C. A. publications. Although it was hardly what might be called a financial success, a beginning has at least been made, an entering wedge introduced that it is hoped will expand and bring forth good fruit. I conversed with a large number of persons, many of them being Masons and Odd-fellows, stating the aims and objects of the N. C. A. Only three or four had heard of the organized movement against secret societies. Nearly all non-members with whom I conversed received the news with evident satisfaction, and many expressed the wish that we would succeed in tearing down the orders. One old lady said she hoped we would succeed but feared the effort would be a failure as the societies were too firmly established to ever be uprooted. This was a common expression. I fell in with several men who had formerly had Masonic expositions destroyed for them by Masons.

In the village of Carroll one doctor purchased "Free-Masonry Illustrated" for the purpose of aggravating another doctor, the master of the lodge. In the same place a Mason after reading the Master Mason's oath explained, "The author of that book is a perjurer;" thereby acknowledging its truthfulness. In Baltimore and Basil I found only four or five men of any prominence who were not members of some order. The mayor and justice of the peace of the former place are both Masons. These towns are regular strongholds of secrecy so that there is but a poor show for anti-work. However, I managed to reconnoiter the ground so as to open the way for future work.

I wish that Bro. Stoddard and a degree worker could spend a time in this county. They will receive plenty of encouragement if they but come. I shall continue to drop books, tracts and Cynosures over the county until the people are well informed on the subject. More anon.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NOTES OF A VACATION JAUNT.

CARBONDALE, Kansas, Aug. 30, 1883.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I take my pen to give you a few notes gathered on our present journey. At Cedar Rapids, Iowa, I met Prof. Wilson of Coe College, a former student of Monmouth College. He had been a member of one of the college secret societies; did not think them so bad as some of us do, but was opposed to any secret society. I also met Rev. Mr. Thornton of West Liberty, a graduate of the same college and ex-member of a college secret society. He told me very frankly and earnestly that membership in the college secret society had made him perfectly disgusted with all secret societies.

I was informed by an old friend with whom I stopped at Council Bluffs, that that growing city was to have a large Masonic temple for which they were just breaking ground. At York, Nebraska, I was informed by a graduate of Wheaton College, now a leading member of the bar at that place, that when a new jury was drawn he went to some member of the Masonic and Odd-fellows lodge and ascertained who on the list were Masons and who Odd-fellows and when he had for a client a man who did not belong to either of these organizations he did not suffer one who did to sit on the jury, for if he did, if the suit was with a number of these organizations, the Mason or Odd-fellow was sure to hang the jury. Such facts as this need no comment. He also said that if his client was a Mason or Odd-fellow he was sure to point out as suitable jurors the members of those societies. Can any one doubt that such institutions are incompatible with the equality of citizens in a free state?

For some time, in the caboose of the freight train on which we were riding, I sat opposite a stranger, in appearance somewhat older than myself. I studied his somewhat peculiar, if not remarkable, appearance and queried if I had better address him. His seedy exterior and inane expression of countenance made me hesitate lest his mindless reply should make me sorry that I had ventured so far. At length something occurred that caused us to break silence, and in course of a brief conversation I learned, to my utter astonishment, that he was the Grand Lecturer of the State of Kansas for the Freemasons. Recovering somewhat from my surprise, I summoned all my wits to study the prodigy opposite me. On close survey I thought I discovered indications of the low cunning and intellectual caleber requisite to fit a man to relish the foolish ceremonies of the lodge. In that august presence I could easily imagine how an awful priest of Jupiter looked, or a dignified Roman augur.

He had a few weeks before been caught in a tornado at Soldier City, and, among other injuries received, had lost two of his fingers, and as he belonged to a fraternity that believe in and use relics, he had these ghastly mementoes preserved in alcohol. If this calamity had befallen him before he became of age the people of Kansas had been deprived of this great luminary, for the highest intellectual endowments, the mightiest moral powers, the most perfect physical organization, cannot compensate for the loss a of little finger as qualifications for, not only Grand Lecturer but not even the merest Entered Apprentice in Masonry. In an institution where a finger is of more worth than the loftiest manhood, there is no need of brains to teach, and I have concluded that there is an eternal fitness in things as they are in Kansas Freemasonry.

O. F. LUMRY.

AN INTERESTING INQUIRY.

The State of Vermont, which has fallen under the lead of second class, Masonic demagogues, was once considered (and justly so too) as the very pole-star of the republican galaxy. By the term republican we do not mean party republicanism, but real republicanism. The two kinds of republicanism are very wide apart. During the war of the rebellion the State should have insisted on such terms of adjustment that her citizens could be as safe in their persons, property, and reputation, in Louisiana, Texas, or Florida, as they are at home, but the Masonic leaders of the State never presented such terms, nor insisted on them in any way. They held their offices, won by Masonic favor, and maintained by Masonic arts, and had no more influence in shaping the policy of the government to a true republican standard than did the politicians of the southern county of Delaware. They showed a determination to ride, whoever drew the party-coach, whoever drove it, and however muddy were the roads. The last thing her Congressional delegation seemed to think of was the securing such solid terms of peace that Vermonters could live in the South with safety.

It would be a sadly curious and interesting inquiry to trace out the disastrous consequences of this ruinous dereliction of duty by the number of Vermonters who have lost their lives or their property in the South since the war; how many have made money by holding office there, and how few have found that the old Vermont character is welcome there. These facts are all hushed up and kept in a profound Masonic silence, while the State is forced to content herself with the smallest possible pensionary crumbs that fall from the Masonic table. Instead of having been a leading State in the counsels of the nation, it has been draggled at the tail of the Masonic lodge.

These facts are due to the people. If the people reckon upon Vermont as the "citadel of freedom," while, in fact, she is thoroughly garrisoned, dominated, and ruled by the lodge, a false quantity will enter their calculations that must lead to dangerous consequences. Vermont, like every other State, and especially Vermont, needs a reform from the lodge, under whose control it has been subjected by its leaders.

It is simply preposterous to claim any thing magnanimous, any thing grand, or any thing worthy for Vermont politics under her Masonic leadership during the last twenty-five years. It is absurd to say that it would not have been better for the South if the old Whig Anti-masonic character of Vermont had been impressed upon the Southern people as a result of the war than to have this loose, vicious, not to say contemptible politics which has been confirmed to them by the leaders of the Masonic lodge. The policy of the general government during the war was far behind the old Anti-masonic character of Vermont, and the course of the Masonic leaders of Vermont has absolutely been behind even the loose and disorderly action of the general government. Vermont has obeyed the masters of the Masonic lodge instead of maintaining the sterling qualities of her early character.

Are these facts true, or are they merely assumed by an Anti-mason? Let any candid mind, uninfluenced by Masonic shams, look into them and decide for itself. The Republican party, under the management of the lodge, has not settled the issues that were prevented by the war of the rebellion; it has only compromised with the Democracy, paying that party with offices, pensions and plunder, and receiving in return its lowest or most vicious voters. In exchange for power, it gives pensions and plunder; and with the power thus bought, it maintains the Masonic lodge instead of the Constitution of the United States.

AMERICAN.

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,
JONATHAN BLANCHARD,
OF ILLINOIS.

For Vice President,
JOHN A. CONANT,
OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

—The Republican Invincibles, the oldest and most prominent political organization in Philadelphia, Wednesday evening formally nominated Robert T. Lincoln, of Illinois, the present Secretary of War, for President in 1884.

Senator John A. Logan is again working up public sentiment in favor of his candidacy for the Presidency, by having flattering sketches of his life put in country papers by meek and obedient editors.

—It is reported that Gen. Charles Devens of Massachusetts, late Attorney General, has refused to become the Republican candidate for governor in Massachusetts. You see, Butler wants a re-election and out-ranks Devens in lodgery, so the latter like an obedient Mason refuses to compete.

—The Salvation Army in Philadelphia, it is reported, are placarding that city with posters reading: "WANTED —60,000 CHRISTIANS TO VOTE AS THEY PRAY." Let them placard every fence in the country and paint every stone till men who claim to have moral convictions shall act up to a like measure. We need 6,000,000 Christians to pray and all of them who can vote to march along the same line.

LIVE ISSUES ARE NEEDED to keep up life in any political party. The American Reformer discusses ably the divided condition of the Republican party on the temperance question—in Kansas, Iowa, and Ohio this party leads against the saloons. If these States are joined by one or two more what will be done in a national convention for this issue? Will there be a split in the Republican ranks, or will the banner be borne by a third party which shall be raised up to maintain the paramount importance of moral questions in our politics? The Reformer says:

"Lacking any other moral issue, defied by the saloon power, dominated by saloon politics, the people are determining that some party must take position for them on this question, and soon. They care little what party it is, but they insist that come some party must, to the work of this high calling, and that it be true. Now is the Republican party's opportunity. It went out of sight last fall in a whirlwind of popular disaffection; it can emerge into power again only as the champion of a great principle. At the Concord School of Philosophy, several days ago, Julian Hawthorne defined life as 'the predicament previous to death.' We think Gov. St. John is right. Any party, claiming to be the special friend of reform, and the chief exponent of great moral ideas, which now ignores the temperance issue, or gets on the wrong side of it, is in the predicament previous to death."

THE ELEVEN PLANKS.

We ask for the American platform, a careful reading. It is, to say the least of it, a fair open document, outspoken and plain. It is not a "one idea;" it covers the whole field of American politics, and makes several issues that other parties fail to present—issues that are soon to demand the attention of the American people. Among them, first, the source from whence we are to derive our moral code of laws; for the necessity of the case demands that there be some recognized code, of morality, nor can one long exist without some recognized standard of what is right and wrong among men. By a code of morals we do not mean a system of religious worship neither do we so understand the second article of the platform to mean the question of whether we shall have a Sabbath or uot, but we will shortly have to determine what kind of a one we shall have,—whether of rest and devotion, or of pleasure and licentiousness. 3d. The prohibition question is already a live issue that "will not down" until it wins the day. 4tb. The propriety of granting charters to sworn bodies of men or secret lodges in a popular government is very questionable to say the least of it. The lodge men, like the distillers, will of course strongly object to the giving up of their charters. But the great qucstion to be settled in both of these cases is, were these rights first granted them upon the principle of the greatest good to the greatest number, or were they granted upon principle of the favor of the few to the disadvantage of the many? If upon the former, a discussion of these questions will bring it out and both the lodgeites and whiskyites will be benefitted thereby, and in the future can more peaceably follow their callings; if granted upon the latter, discussion will help to discover it and enable the people to set aside that which is contrary to spirit and genius of our goernment. Any way, let us have them publicly discussed to vhe satisfaction of all parties. The Bible in schools, the setttlement of differences among nations by arbitration, and the abolition of the electoral colleges are new questions for a political platform to present, but they are all vital and important questions. While we are not a politician by profession, yet, as an American citizen we feel a deep interest in American politics and are glad to see a party coming to the frout that is not afraid to embrace and advocate a set of principles that cover more nealy the entire ground of American politics than any other political party now in the United States. Political Anti-masonry was once a great factor in American politics. Political anti-secrecy will soon be an important one in American politics. Mark the prediction. In the future we perhaps shall have more to say about the Amcrican party and platform.—Banner of Truth.

LITERARY.

Some two years ago Edwin Arnold, a London editor who had spent years in India, and had become not only a student but it was said a disciple of Buddhism, published in a poem, "The Light of Asia," the principles of that religious system. The work was very popular because, beside being well written, it introduced the literary world to an unfrequented garden of rare beauty. But other students of Buddhistic lorc laid open the fruit of this garden and showed how bitter and bad the heart covered by a fair show without. The Indian theology has little to recommend its god Gautama to those who have drank of the water of life which flows through Christ from the throne of God. Mr. Arnold has published two other works, "The Indian Song of Songs" and "Pearls of the Faith," which have been issued in the Elzevir Library. The three volumes form an Oriental Triology of which the author says: "In my 'Indian Song of Songs' I sought to transfer to English poetry a subtle and lovely Sans-krit idyl of the Hindoo theology. In my 'Light of Asia' I related the story and displayed the gentle and far-reaching doctrines of that great Hindoo prince who founded Buddhism. I have tried to present here [in "Pearls of the Faith"]..... some of the thoughts and beliefs of the noble prophet of Arabia." The reading of these poems may have some interest to one who wishes to investigate the religious systems, but in a moral point of view they are like the floral decorations about a corpse already falling to decay, their beauty covers a hideous sight and their fragrance partially overcomes the sickening odor. The volumes are sold at 25 and 30 cents respectively. John B. Alden, 18 Vesey St., New York.

The frontispiece of the September Century appears a striking portrait of Robert Burns, after a daguerreotype in the possession of Mr. Edmund Clarence Stedman, which was taken from a miniature belonging to Burns's sister. In the same number is "A Burns Pilgrimage," by H. H. (Mrs. Jackson), a very ingenuous sketch of a visit, to the places made memorable by the life of Burns, on the Sabbath. The singular part of the narrative is the fact that at every point she was met by conscientious objections to such a proceeding on the Sabbath, she proceeded in spite of all with her sight-seeing. The Scotch Masons, who yet maintain the name with little of the reality have in charge some of the Burns relics, and receive frequent favorable mention by Mrs. Jackson. An interesting article on Cape Cod, illustrated, opens the number. The finest illustrations are Beard's heads of a musk ox and cow in an entertaining article by Lieut. Schwatka, describing the habits of these Arctic animals and the method of hunting them. "Will New York be the Final World Metropolis?" is a question W. C. Conant asks and answers in the affirmative with a curious array of facts and arguments. He predicts that before another century passes New York's population "will surpass that of London, and that it will be the unrivaled center of finance and commerce, of luxury and fashion, of art and literature."

—For some years Messrs. W. J. Linton and R. H. Stoddard have been gathering the material for an elaborate collection of English poetry, which it is proposed by the editors and publishers to make more comprehensive in its scope and more accurate in its text than any similar work hitherto put forth. The whole of the past year Mr. Linton has devoted to a minute study and verification of the texts in the British Museum, and the notes appended to many well-known verses give surprising evidence of the garbled and abridged texts which have become current even in the most popular collections. Mr. R. H. Stoddard will write an introductory essay upon the period of English poetry covered by each division of the collection. The work will be published by Messrs. Charles Scribner's Sons under the general title English Verse. It will consist of a series of five volumes arranged as follows: I. Chaucer to Burns. II. Lyrics of the Nineteenth Century. III. Ballads and Romances. IV. Dramatic Selections. V. Translations. At the end of each volume brief biographical and bibliographical notes are printed.

—Bishop Fallows of this city has compiled from the various and voluminous sources of the day, a new work on abbreviations aud contractions. What, may be asked, is the need of a new book of this kind? Bishop Fallows has discovered it. Listen! He finds that the lodges are snubbed in all the others. Their mysterious hieroglyphics and cabalistic initials are considered of too little account to be mentioned—hence he comes gallantly to the rescue. Ecclesiastically he is a "Rt. Rev., A.M., D. D.," himself, and if his lodge titles were added they would fill a line or two. The great feature of the book is thus advertised: "A Dictionary of Masonic Abbreviations, Words, Phrases, etc. Abbreviations of the L. O. I., (the only collection ever made). A Classified List of Abbreviations used by the following secret and benevolent socicties, to wit: A. O. U. W.—A. I. H.—C. H.—G. A. R.—I. O. F.—K. C.—K. G. R.—K. H.—K. & L. H.—N. A. A.—K. P.—O. C. F.—O. G. C.—P. C.—P. H.—H. C.—U. O. A. T.—I. O. G. T. -I. O. O. F.—S. T.—C. S." The Bishop and his publishers have this notice as a gratuity.

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON XIII.—September 23.—The Child Samuel. 1 Samuel 3: 1-19.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Speak, Lord; for thy servant heareth.—1 Sam. 3: 9.

CIRCUMSTANCES.—The degeneracy of the people at this time was extreme. The tribes seem to have administered their affairs as independent republics, the national confederacy was weak and disunited, and the spirit of public patriotic enterprise had been worn out by constant turmoil and invasion.—Dr. F. Eadie.

"The child Samuel." At the age of 12 (according to tradition) he received his first revelation from Jehovah, the stern message of doom against his foster-father's guilty house. In later times this age was a critical point in the life of a Jewish boy. He then became a "son of the Law," and was regarded as personally responsible for obedience to it.—Cambridge Bible.

"Precious." Rather was rare. In the general decay of religion, prophetic communications from God had almost entirely ceased (comp. Amos 8:11; Ps. 74:9). We read of two prophets only in the days of the judges (Judg. 4:4; 6:8).—Cambridge Bible.

"No open vision." Rather, there was no vision published abroad. The word is used in 2. Chron. 31:5 of the publication of a decree. There was no publicly acknowledged prophet, whose "word came to all Israel."—Peloubet.

"The lamp of God." The seven-branched golden candlestick, now mentioned for the last time, stood on the south side of the holy place, opposite the table of shewbread (Exod. 25:31-37). It was lighted every evening (Exod. 27:20, 21; 30:7, 8), and was extinguished in the morning.—A. F. Kirkpatrick.

"He ran unto Eli. Note Samuel's alacrity to serve the aged priest, his spiritual father. Unacquainted with the visions of the Almighty, he took that to be only Eli's call, which was really the call of God. Such mistakes we make oftener than we think. God calls us by his word, and we take it to be only the call of the minister; calls by his providences, and we look only at the instrumeuts. His voice cries, and the impressions of it are soon lost; sinners lie down again and their convictions come to nothing, but here and there a man understands it to be his voice.—Henry. In Samuel we observe a quick attention and unwearied diligence; he hears aud runs at every call; he stays not to be twice called before he goes. He murmurs not, he argues not, he complains not, he delays not; at every call he rises from his bed and runs. It is to such a child as this our Lord requires us to be like, for of such is the kingdom of God.—Wogan.

"And the Lord came, and stood." The Hebrew is emphatic, presented himself. A personal presence, not a mere voice or impression upon Samuel's mind, is thus distinctly indicated (comp. Gen. 18:17, 20, 21, 33; Judg. 6:14; Rev. 1:1; 22:16).—Cook.

"Announcement of the Doom of Eli's House." Vers. 11-14. The message which God brought was for Eli, whom, on account of his sinful negligence, God would not favor with a persoual interview. His sin is specified in verse 13; and the sins of his sons, whom he failed to restrain, in chapter 2:12-17, 22-25. The dreadful predictions against the house of Eli were in part fulfilled in the death of his two wretched sons, followed by his own death (chap. 4:1-18), and in the deposition of Abiathar, his descendant, from the office of bigh priest in the time of Solomon (1 Kings 2:27). His family was never reinstated in the office. The message of God to Eli was very severe; but its severity was not so great as the sin which it rebuked; and this sin of Eli was the greater that God had already warned him against it (ver. 13; chap. 2:27-36), but in vain. Eli, as father, should have brought up his sons strictly. As at once high priest and judge, he should have deposed them from office and punished their iniquities with decisive penalties. This would have been kindness to his sons, perhaps leading to the salvation of their souls, and in any event, keeping them from the terrible fate which befell them. It would have been kindness to Israel whom they corrupted. It would have been fidelity to God and duty. Eli was a pious, but weak man; and in such circumstances as his, weakness is sin. His piety shines conspicuously in his words when he heard the dreadful sentence upon his house (ver. 18).—Johnson.

"For the iniquity which he knoweth." The Vulgate, followed by Luther, renders "for his iniquity because he knew that his sons dealt shamefully:" describing the judgment as inflicted upon Eli for his own sin in neglecting his duty as father (Deut. 21:18), high priest (Deut. 17:12), and judge, and failing to restrain the misconduct of his sons. But the rendering of the E. V., which makes iniquity of Eli's sons the ground of judgment, is possible.—Cambridge Bible. Eli's guilt becomes so much the greater from the fact that it was known to him how shamefully his sons behaved, and he did nothing to remove this abomination from his house and from his sanctuary.—Calvin.

"Samuel feared to shew Eli the vision.". As this is the first circumstance that throws light upon the character of one who was destined to become a great man in Israel, it behooves us to regard it well. Most lads of his age evince much eagerness in communicating anything surprising, without much regard to the paiu it may be calculated to inflict. Samuel kuew that he had been highly honored by a special communication from God. Yet his young heart was not elated nor his tongue impatient. With Samuel there was one consideration that overruled every other. The secret concerned his venerable lord, who had been a father to him, and could not fail to afflict his spirit. Therefore, with a pious discretion far beyond his years and altogether worthy of manhood, he proposed to keep it all to himself.—Kitto.

"It is the Lord." (He is Jehovah.) For the depth of meaning involved in this confession, see Exod. 34:5-7. Eli, with all his faults, was still at heart faithful to God. He submits without a murmur to the divine sentence, leaving himself and his house in the hands of God. But it is the passive resignatiou of a weak character. Though he submits himself patiently to the will of God, he would not rouse himself to do it.

BAND OF HOPE BIBLE LESSON.

UNNECESSARY SABBATH WORK PROHIBITED.

22. And it came to pass that on the sixth day they gathered twice as much bread, two omers for one man; and all the rulers of the congregation eame and told Moses.
23. And he said unto them, This is that which the Lord hath said, To-morrow is the rest of the holy Sabbath unto the Lord; take that which ye will bake to-day, and seethe that ye will seethe; and that which remaineth over lay up for you to be kept until the morning.
24. And they laid it up until the morning as Moses bade, and it did not stink, neither was there any worm therein.
25. And Moses said, Eat that to-day; for to-day is a Sabbath unto the Lord; to-day ye shall not find it in the field.
26. Six days ye shall gather it; but on the seveuth day which is the Sabbath, in it there shall be none. Ex. 16:22-26.
2. Six days shall work be done, but on the seventh day there shall be to you an holy day, a Sabbath of rest to the Lord; whosoever doeth work therein shall be put to death.
3. Ye shall kindle no fire throughout your habitations upon the Sabbath day. Ex. 35:2, 3.
12. Six days thou shalt do thy work, and on the seventh day thou shalt rest; that thine ox and thine ass may rest, and the son of thy handmaid and the stranger may be refreshed. Ex. 23:12.

GOLDEN TEXT. Six days thou shalt work, and on the seventh day thou shalt rest; in earing time and harvest thou shalt rest. Ex. 34:21.

CENTRAL TRUTH. No gain but loss comes of breaking the Sabbath.

1. Work that can be done on Saturday should not be left until Sunday. It is right to have our meals as usual on the Sabbath, but extra cooking can be avoided by preparing the dinner the day before.

2. There are certain branches of business which justify their use of holy time on the plea that it is necessary.

3. In nine cases out of ten it will be found that no public or individual interest would really suffer by keeping God's day holy.

4. No one thought of Sunday papers twenty years ago, but there was really just as much necessity for them then as there is now. They originated not in any real need of the public but in the greed of the publishers.

5. This is true of traveling on the Lord's Day. Cases of necessity are very few, but railroad companies and steamboat lines want to make all the money they can.

6. Some approve of Sunday excursions, because they say working people have no other time for recreation. They do not stop to reflect on the number of employes obliged to lose their Suudays by this means, or the fact after six days of hard work rest is needed rather than fatiguing amusements. Some advocate the plan of manufacturers giving up half of Saturday to their work people for purposes of recreation, and in a few cases it has been tried with success. This is much better thau robbing God of his day under pretence of giving it to the poor.

7. The most unnecessary business of all is liquor selling. Intemperance always increases in proportion as God's Day is disregarded.

8. The "stranger" means a foreigner, a heathen. There were many such among the Jews. We have no right to allow foreigners who come to our shores to drive the Bible from our schools and break down our Sunday laws as some of them are trying to do.

9. Earing time and harvest were the busiest seasons of the year. But our busiest season is the time we need the Sabbath most. No one ever kept the Sabbath holy who did not prosper better for it in the long rnn.

PRACTICAL TRUTHS.

Greed of gain causes much unnecessary Sabbath work.

Sunday is the working man's best friend.

We shall prosper better all the other days of the week by keeping the Sabbath holy.

LESSON TALK.

In the city of Bath during the last century there lived a barber named William Reed, who was in the habit of following his ordinary occupation on the Sabbath day. One morning he happened to drop in at a place of worship just as the minister was giving out his text, Remember the Sabbath Day to keep it holy. The words of the preacher pierced his conscience. He resolved to give up shaving customers on Sunday, though he plainly foresaw that his best ones would leave him if he did so. Such was the case. He was finally obliged to give up his fashionable shop and take one in a cellar in quite another part of the city. One Saturday evening a man came in who desired to be shaved, but the barber was now reduced to such extreme poverty that he was obliged to borrow half a penny of the stranger in order to bny a candle, as it was not light enough to see to shave him with safety. This aronsed the latter's curiosity, who inqnired into his history. In the course of the conversation, the stranger who was an attorney, discovered that the poor barber was heir to a large fortune left by an nncle who had died in the Indies. The attorney to whom the bnsiness of finding the heir had been committed had advertised for him in vain. And thus God made use of the very poverty to which his Sabbath keeping had redneed this poor barber to bring him at last into wealth and prosperity. Had he not been too poor to bny a candle he might forever remained unknown and the fortune gone to other hands. No one can serve God and be the loser. He may lose property and friends; bnt God's approval and heaven at the end, far outweighs every earthly good.

LESSON HYMN.

"Blest day of God! most calm, most bright,
The first, the best of days,"

THE BATAVIA CONVENTION MINUTES.

A correspondent writing of the grand addresses in this pamphlet says:

"Let me call particnlar attention to the address of our noble banner-bearer, the candidate for the suffrages of the nation, under the title "Christian politics." This admirable and timely paper is one which will open blind eyes to the canses of the war and future dangers and ought not to be merely read and shelved. It is like LIVE SEED; Let every reader get and sow it abnndantly, and scatter it abroad through every State, and for every year, until victory shall crown our efforts to place a representative of our principles in the Presidential chair of he United States! Print and reprint and circulate in tens of thousands or millions! Our people are intoxicated with national prosperity, and are disregarding "the higher law." In every age the multitnde is led more by the senses than by the unseen, but the Ruler of the nniverse brings to naught things that are by the things that are not! The things that are right and pnre are eternal, and in the grand war must finally overcome the cunning and craft of every system like Freemasonry

IT WILL PAY TO READ IT.

The speech of Hon. S. C. Pomeroy in Farwell Hall is in pamphlet form. It is a clear, practical discussion of the living questions of the hour, presenting in brief the claims of God to recognition in civil government, reasons for prohibition, and the abolition of the entire lodge system. It is a campaign document that should be not only read but studied by every voter in America.

From the comments that have been sent us since it appeared in the columns of the Cynosure we give the following: "It would do credit to the head and heart of any Christian statesman. How different when compared with the unmeaning twaddle of the mere politician of to-day! How empty the latter; how inspiring and full of hope the former!"

"Senator Pomeroy's speech in Chicago is the grandest thing I have read for many a day."

Let it be widely circulated early in the campaign of 1884.

Single copy 5 cents; per 100, $3.00; per 1,000, $20.00. Send to the N. C. A 221 W. Madison St., Chicago.

HOLDEN WITH CORDS.

From "The Free Methodist."

"Holden with Cords, or the Power of the Secret Empire." Price, postpaid, andsomely bonnd in cloth, $1.00; paper overs, 50 cents.

There is no important history extant but has connected with it numerous other histories of which was the initial point or the dominating influence. The abdnction and murder of Morgan set ten thousand secret springs in motion as the surrender of the charters of so many lodges at that time, and the severing of their connection with the order of some forty thousand of its members indicated. The story is one of these histories, and is a collection of facts woven into a story. It cannot fail to be read with interest. Address National Christian Association, 221 West Madison St., Chicago.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 13, 1883.

REFUGES OF LIES.—The Masons hate the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and dread the influence of Miss F. E. and Mrs. M. A. Willard. They are falsely representing these women to be secretists. So they misrepresent Washington.

GOV. SHERMAN of Iowa, a 33° Mason, "runs with the hare and barks with the hound;" pretends prohibition and remits the fines of convicted liquor-sellers.

WE dislike to censure the Pacific. When, as an invalid, we visited California, it gazetted us wherever we went, and treated us with distinguished courtesy, though well knowing our abhorrence of the lodge which is semi-omnipotent on that coast. At first the Pacific hailed the Knight Templars' conclave with a half-suppressed sneer; but, borne along by the money-lavishing multitudes who "gaped and rubbed the elbow" at their noisy revels and religious shams, the Puritan organ utters its modicum of praise to the drinkers from human skulls, in Satan's libation, thus: "We are honored by this notable gathering, and are benefitted by the high tone and religious fervor generally manifested." But we are reminded by it of the good Michiah's echo of the prophets of the idolatrous Ahab, "Go and prosper."

THE PROHIBITIONISTS of California are moving strong to organize township and county clubs throughout the State. Their central committee have issued circulars, the forms for a constitution and order of business, and they are full of courage and hope. They will be betrayed by their secret wing, but the agitation will do good even with that drawback; and when the holy cause of temperance has shaken off the secret uniform of Satan, as the Republican party did the Know-Nothings, it will prevail. Their Secretary is Rev. Geo. Morris, West End, Alameda, California.

LIFE OF THURLOW WEED.

This great book, written by Mr. Weed himself, and edited by his daughter Harriet, appears in its first volume, a large octavo, of 657 pages. It is sold by subscription, and it is destined to have a very large sale.

The history of which we are most ignorant is that of the age last preceding our own. This book covers that age, and young men, just entering life, will find in it a storehouse of information which will give them the knowledge which their fathers lived a lifetime to gain.

Mr. Weed was not an office-holder, but he passed a long life in the midst of office-holders; and he steadied the hands which guided the State. He was the adjutant general of American politics, and the only citizen living without civil honors whose remains were ever carried to the grave by the solemn music of cannon, and whose last sickness and death were gazetted by the whole newspaper press as if he had been a President or a king.

The hatred of the all-powerful, universal lodge, whose silent wand can suppress almost all speech and intelligence, could not repress or thwart the desire of the American people to read the letters, and learn views and ideas of Mr. Weed. Thousands will learn his history by heart. He saw the first steamboat, and the last debtors prison. W. H. Seward was his bosom friend, and President Lincoln sent for him to Washington to listen to his counsel, and sent him to England, to avert a double war, at once with England and the rebellion. His last years, and almost his last months, were occupied by visits from Gen. Cameron of Pennyslvania and men of like stamp and station, to state to him their embarrassments and listen to his advice. Webster, DeWitt Clinton, John C. Spencer, Horace Greeley, Monroe, VanBuren, J. Q. Adams, Crawford, Clay; all the Anti-masonic and Republican leaders, as Stevens, Granger, Fillmore, Chase, and Charles Francis Adams, with a host of others, including almost every name familiar to the public, local or general—all were well known to Mr. Weed. And yet, when the light of the next world was breaking through the cloud just before him, and falling on his pathway, he found time to dictate a letter of twenty-four foolscap pages to our Batavia Convention, which erected the monument to William Morgan, and, in his auto-biography, he has given eighty close printed pages to that portion of American history, the Anti-masonic, which no other mind understood, and no hand could have written like his. And yet, precisely that portion of our history opens the door of our country's destiny, and lets in light upon the dark recesses of its future. Such is the book now opening to American readers the life of "The American Warwick."

THE ORGAN CONTROVERSY.

Presbyterianism existed and did great good in the United States a century before it had a General Assembly. The Synod of New York and Philadelphia in 1788 held and published that "God alone is Lord of the conscience, and hath left it free from the doctrine and commandments of men," not only in "matters of faith or worship," but church government as well, "observing in all cases, the rules contained in Word of God."

Next year (1789) their General Assembly met for the first time. A synod had been previously formed in 1716. It quarrelled, separated into "old side" and "new side," and in 1741 separated and continued apart seventeen years. The quarrel arose from the Whitefield revivals. They reunited in 1758, and formed a General Assembly, as a "bond of union;" but it proved an occasion of disunion. They quarrelled—separated again—into Old and New School, 1837–8, on slavery, and continued apart thirty-two years; reunited when slavery was fallen, and, excepting the church South, are now one, and are wooing the Southern church to unite with them.

The United Presbyterian Assembly is young and represents a purer body. This is now in trouble over the question of instrumental music in God's worship. By the Romish apostacy sound was substituted for sense. God's children hated the piping of organs and instruments which kept them from hearing the worship, by the noise they made.

An English fox-hunting squire took his guest into the woods promising to give him some "heavenly music." He unleashed his pack who made the welkin ring after the fox. "Don't you hear it! the heavenly music!" cried the squire. His guest, somewhat chagrined, replied, "Really, sir, those devilish dogs make such a noise I can't hear music or anything else." So many good men deem of organs. Other good men contend with Luther, that music, even instrumental, is intolerable to demons; and, never would have been commanded if sinful in itself. The United Presbyterian General Assembly have voted to leave organs to the taste and discretion of churches and sessions; and five hundred good men have held a convention in Allegheny, Pa., and, as they had a right, passed strong resolutions against the use of instruments.

"Like David's harp of solemn sound"

The keen Scotch wit of the Interior leads the editor to scathe the anti-organ convention as a body of Sauls casting javalins at David for playing on harps. Would God Bro. Gray was as sharp on Freemasons who rule his churches, while their lodges reject Christ and organize deism. But

"Wit, undistinguishing, is apt to strike
The guilty and not guilty both alike."

And wit is a marked characteristic of the Interior editor.

Now the Cynosure will not take sides in this organ fight, for many reasons:

1. Both sides are good men. 2. The question belongs to a denomination and the Cynosure is undenominational. 3. We would rather sit under the loudest "tinkling cymbals" or "organs," than commune with brethren who bow in the temples of Rimmon, "fellowship unfruitful works of darkness," and "drink the cup of devils" in wine from human skulls with Knight Templars. Witness now,

A CASE IN POINT.

We have just received a letter, dated Sept. 3rd inst., from a good United Presbyterian minister who has been impaled and driven from his pulpit on the organ question, professedly, but really because he backed Rev. Warren Taylor, Roxabell, Ohio, against the lodge-sorcerer, Rob. Morris, and because he insisted that the Masons who have "crept into" United Presbyterian churches should be cast out.

When Satan attacks churches, he "looks one way and rows another." He ever tenders a false issue, not the real one. He hated Whitefield, Witherspoon, Edwards and the Tennents, and he split the Presbyterian church on the Whitefield revival by attacking petty extravagances. So now he has got up this organ fight to cover Masonry in a few of the United Presbyterian churches. So, when driven out by the fall of 1500 lodges, and maddened and made savage by the Finney revivals which followed, the demons went South and organized the war; made a terrible splutter about "anxious seats," "new measures," etc.; rent the great and mighty Presbyterian church, to screen the lodge and slavery from discussion, and hid Masons and slaveholders as Rachel hid Laban's gods in her tent. Let us not be "ignorant of his devices" (Greek, methods). By splitting the great church-organizations which might easily have throttled slavery, he buried a half million of Americans. Let us not be fooled a second time.

AN ORIGINAL AND EARNEST LETTER.

COULTERVILLE, ILL.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—In your Aug. 20th issue we have a question asked and something like an answer given. The question is: "Is the Lord Jesus Christ, as Mediator, Ruler of the nations?" and the answer, if we understand it, is that he is not, and that there is no tinge of this idea contained in the American platform. Now if this is the case and the question is correctly stated and the answer correctly given, we have no more sympathy with it than with the other anti-Christian systems of civil governments of the present age: and if this is so, we have no author of, or authority for civil government, or for anything else; for with God, as essentially considered, we have nothing to do; the only way to the Father is through the Son. If the above is the true idea of the Cynosure, you may, when my time is up, stop sending it to me. I have always called it one of my best papers; but this one fly in the ointment makes the whole thing to stink. I hope I am mistaken. Please publish this and the answer. Yours, and for you, if you are for Christ,

JOHN G. MILLER.

ANSWER.

The understanding of the writer is not "the true idea of the Cynosure," whose true idea is well stated by Bro. Miller above: "With God, essentially [or directly] we have nothing to do. The only way to the Father is through the Son." This is the true idea; and, "By him (Christ) all things consist," governments included.

The Fifth-Monarchy men of Charles II. and Cromwell's time sallied forth crying, "No king but Christ!" and called on King and Parliament to resign; as if we should demand the same of President Arthur and Congress. There is no tinge of THAT in the American platform.

THE ILLINOIS STATE MEETING.—The Illinois State Convention at Tonica last fall provided for the next meeting of the State Association to be held in Sparta, Randolph county, some fifty miles southeast of St. Louis on the narrow guage Cairo and St. Louis railway. The time was left for the decision of the executive committee of which Rev. Joseph Travis is chairman. At a consultation of the committee last week it was agreed that September 26th, 27th and 28th would be the best time for this meeting, beginning Wednesday evening, Sept. 26. This may therefore be considered the time of this convention. All friends in the central and southern part of the State should put themselves in readiness to be present.

—The N. C. A. General Agent says he recently met a gentleman on the cars from Columbus, N. Y., who was a man of convictions, when approached on the subject of reform he said, "we have a population of eleven hundred and have not had a saloon or lodge in our town for fifteen years." It was significant that an observing man had associated these two institutions together. This will be more and more the case as the lodge and its influence and work become known. The night lodge is the way of direct approach to the dram-bar through which thousands pass to shame and everlasting disgrace.

—The meeting of the N. C. A. Directors on Monday of last week resulted only in a consultation because a quorum was not present. The situation of the legal contest, in which the Association is interested as one of the defendants in a case where a considerable sum was left to be paid by trustee, was with the Washington work the principal business discussed. The secretary of the Board was requested to write to the American Board calling respectful attention to the case of Bro. A. D. Zaraphonithes, a member of the N. C. A., and his Smyrna school, with which the readers of the Cynosure are already familiar through Mrs. Zaraphonithes' letter.

—Mrs. Jackson, in her sketch of a visit to the home of Robert Burns, speaks touchingly of the faithful and forbearing wife of the much-praised Scotch poet. The life of Burns in respect to his gay and heartless treatment of some of the females of his acquaintance is a striking example of the readiness of men to excuse sin in men of prominent character. Mrs Jackson says: "If there be a touching picture in all the long list of faithful and ill used women, it is that of 'bonnie Jean'—the unwedded mother of children, the forgiving wife of a husband who betrayed others as he had betrayed her—when she took into her arms and nursed and cared for her husband's child, born of an outcast woman, and bravely answered all curious questioners with, 'It's a neebor's bairn I'm bringin' up.' She wrought for herself a place and an esteem of which her honest and loving humility little dreamed."

—The Good Templar lodges of New York held lately a State meeting at Syracuse, and there took such action respecting the decoying children into their secret places that the Wesleyan cries out against them earnestly. A few years ago when the Illinois lodges of this order began to draw in the children, the Cynosure raised a warning against this invasion of the home circle. The Wesleyan realizes also how vicious this action may be in the end, and very properly claims that the Good Templars can carry out their plot only by infringement of law, thus:

"It is disgustingly illegal enough one would think to take children of fourteen years, as now, and put a guard between them and their parents, without seeking to shut away those of much less matured and responsible years. Such an isolation of infants, and invasion of parental relations and authority as is assumed in this order, is antagonistic to common law as well as the family relation. We have personally known of cases where minors have been initiated, and when the father proposed to go where they had taken the child without fee or initiation, he was threatened with violence if he dared approach the invincible O. G., whoever that dangerous personage might be. The fact is, there is no law in a civilized land that can justify the placing of a guard between a parent and a child on any plea of secrecy. Stealing and secreting children from parents is yet to be legalized, if ever. We care not what the professed purpose may be, the fact of putting a tyler between a parent and a minor is a travesty of all rights, civil or domestic. Away with this whole closeting business! Away with such antagonisms to the nature of every good enterprise! Away with such silly pomp of titles!"

THE CYNOSURE FOR THE SOUTH.

TO THE READERS OF THE CYNOSURE.—The fund for sending the Cynosure to colored ministers in the South is exhausted. There are many of these excellent Christian brethren who are unable to pay for the paper and yet they and their congregations would be greatly benefitted by reading it. I know of no work of practical benevolence that will yield better results.

Just now two poor widows who are excellent Christians and deeply interested in our reform apply to me to have our paper sent to them for a year. I am having it sent to several at my own expense. Who will respond?

Your brother, H. H. HINMAN.

TO EVERY READER.

Vacation season is past, the harvest is gathered, the great industries of city and country are settling down to their wonted channels, and the time has come to gather up a list of readers for your paper that shall be worthy the cause it champions, and an honor to the veteran corps who gather them in. Your neighbor needs the Cynosure for the long evenings that are at hand. He wants it for himself and family, but probably does not know its worth or his needs, and will not until you call his atttention to it. It's a grand opportunity you have to do a kindness to your neighbor and held on the work. Will you improve it?

We have talked of ten thousand subscribers but have reached only about one half that number. Suppose we reverse the order and make the list ten thousand, and then talk about it. I think we should enjoy the change, and I propose that we go to work in dead earnest and make it. We take little risk, for if the change proves unsatisfactory we can fall back on the old list, or try somethiug else. Since we are joint owners, and every man and woman who takes the paper is an agent, it would be impertinent for me even to suggest that you could not, with 5,000 agents in the field, double your business, and quadruple its influence before January, 1884. If you approve the change you have only to add the "will and the work" to test its utiliiy.

Suppose we put it in this way, and take a popular expresion by ballots. Every new subscriber you send with the money shall count one vote in favor of 10,000. The sender remitting $1.60 and retaining a commission of .40 on each subscription.

We will send you the nccessary blank subscription papers, etc., when requested. Report progress from time to time and make a final count Jan. 1st, 1884. If the measure carries, and 10,000 subscribers are on the list, the person casting the greatest number of votes shall receive Webster's Unabridged Dictionary as a present. The second an Anti-masonic Library. The third a copy of "In the Coils," and the fourth, "Holden with Cords."

I hope for your sake and for the sake of the cause this plan will meet your approval, and that you will open the polls at once and induce everybody you can to enter heartily into the campaign, and urge them to "VOTE EARLY AND VOTE OFTEN," since there is very much depending on the final count. J. P. STODDARD.

—A private letter from Elder Barlow since his return from New York contains some passages of public interest. "Well, I have had my eyes and ears open while away and have noted the signs of the times. I have read the Cynosure and New England American, to say nothing of other papers—I have talked some and heard others talk—and I am convinced that we are not laboring in vain, Faithful work is telling for the right. To God be all the glory. I am also convinced that our work grows on us. Eastern New York and New England are among the hardest parts of our great field and if labor in our line is not put forth soon we shall find it difficult to break up the fallow ground."

—"I am satisfied that there are localities where a strong vote might be had at once, if but the right man could be found to take the lead in organizing the American party. The masses are getting into position for a change. The old party ties are felt to be too stingent, and results do not satisfy."

—Brother H. H. Davis sends an interesting and encouraging letter from Fitchburg. "I hope to see the day when a man will be ashamed to own himself a member of any secret society." That is surely coming.

—The New Hampshire reformers, led by Prof. S. C. Kimball, are negotiating to secure the services of brother A. F. Spaulding in that State for a month or two. This is right, a little liberality by friends will greatly aid the cause there and Mr. Spaulding can be very serviceable if he only has a fair chance. It is hoped friends in the State will rightly appreciate this opportunity and respond promptly and liberally, that the work may begin immediately.

LOCAL POLITICS.

A GOOD WAY TO BEGIN A REVOLUTION.

WORCESTER, Mass., Sept. 3, 1883.

A new kind of work was lately undertaken in Windham county, Vt., by the request and at the expense of Bro. J. E. Gates. He planned to have a house to house visitation of his town for ascertaining how many of the legal voters were secretists. The work was undertaken and successfully prosecuted by O. C. Bailey. He took papers, books and tracts, and tramped over the hills and through the valleys, inquiring at every house how many voters there were and whether any of them were members of secret orders. Of course such an inquiry awakened some curiosity and in many cases afforded an excellent opportunity to explain our work and awaken an interest in the movement.

In some cases his inquiries would be answered with the assurance that they were not members of any secret society, while further questioning would develop the fact that they had been either grangers or Good Templars, but as both of those orders were extinct in their town they no longer regarded themselves as members. He, however, counted all such persons as secretists. There are 219 voters in the town, only 45 of whom have ever been members of any secret orders.

The effect of having once been a granger or Good Templar he found to be quite different with different persons. Some men would say they saw nothing bad in these orders and therefore they concluded other secret orders were harmless, while others were disgusted and naturally concluded that all secret orders are frauds.

If other men in other towns would authorize the doing of the same kind of work it would not only furnish them reliable statistics to base their action on but they would also have a full list of the voters to whom they could send tracts and papers, thus flooding their town with facts which will undermine the lodges. Some men jump at the conclusion that their neighbors will not read, even if they are furnished with papers. This does not accord with our experience. If reading matter is placed before the people more or less of it will be read and the reading is doing a sure work for reform.

Besides the canvassing of the one town mentioned above Bro. O. C. Bailey visited in a similar manner in other parts of the county, preached five times in three Sabbaths, circulated a large number of pamphlets and tracts, conversed with hundreds of people and otherwise stirred the waters for reform.

The Massachusetts Republicans have commenced their campaign early and are determined to make one issue, i. e., Butlerism. They are confident of success this time and are anxious that Butler himself should head the Democratic ticket to give them the opportunity of defeating him. As far as we can learn the candidate most likely to be nominated by the Republicans is a Freemason and doubtless this is regarded as in his favor. It is thought that he is both a Freemason and a license man. I have not verified either of these statements but it is what could be expected under the circumstances.

Notwithstanding the election of a good mayor last year, the ring of secretists have ruled the city hall in Worcester and many good people are disheartened. If this state of things should result in arousing the people to a more radical cure we shall not have suffered in vain. The mayor himself is not a secretist, but he was not well informed of the plottings of these orders and made the fatal blunder of selecting a Mason and Odd-fellow for city marshal. Everybody saw the blunder but himself. This reinstated the old ring and the administration is in disgrace. We are sorry for the mayor, but more sorry for an outraged public. E. D. BAILEY.

RELIGION AND THE STATE.—A city ordinance of San Jose, Cal., makes it unlawful for any person within the limits of the cemetery, "to explode fire-crackers, bombs, or anything of an explosive character; to burn paper, light tapers, or to kindle fires." Ignorant of the law or disregarding it, Ah Chung and a number of other Celestials recently burned tapers and pieces of paper, as a part of their peculiar ceremonies over the graves of their compatriots. Ah Chung was tried and convicted in a police court, but appealed, setting up the defense that the State Constitution guarantees "the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference." But Judge Belden relying upon the next sentence of the Constitution, which declares that religious liberty "shall not be construed to excuse acts of licentiousness, or justify practices inconsistent with the peace or safety of the State," has affirmed the judgment of the lower court.

—Bro. J. P. Stoddard, taking advantage of excursion rates, started for Washington, D. C., on a brief but urgent errand. He expected to reach that city Tuesday evening, and to return in about two weeks.

In the lodge room: Most Supremely Utter Grand Khedive—"The Entirely Supreme Grand Navigator will proceed, according to the ritual of our Intensely Obsolete Order, to inform the Intensely Sublime Grand Usher that the conclave is assembled for the purpose of initiating novices in the dread myteries of our work." Entirely Supreme Grand Navigator to the Intensely Sublime Grand Usher in the ante room—"Come on, Jim, with the kids. They are ready for you in there."—Boston Transcript.

—It seems strange to us that a minister of the gospel can go through the profane farce of Masonic initiation taking the barbarous death-penalty obligations which bind him in closest association of secrecy and even "defense" to all kinds of villainy, and ever after hold up his head among men. No one with sensibilities susceptible of disgust from the ridiculous and the profane ever went through the initiatory ceremony without feeling that he had forfeited his self-respect. The whole business is too base for common barbarians. God save the gospel from a professed ministry sunken to such levels.—Wesleyan.

MR. MOODY'S WEALTH.

Dr. M. M. Parkhurst, formerly pastor of the First Methodist church of this city claims, says the Inter Ocean, to be fully informed regarding the financial affairs of Mr. Moody, the evangelist, and he states very positively that neither Moody nor Sankey have made any money in their evangelistic work in the last ten years. When they left this country, in 1873, for their first trip to Europe, Mr. Moody had not enough money to pay his expenses, yet he had promised to pay Mr. Sankey $125 a month for his services for a year. Mr. Moody believed that he ought to go, and had faith that the means would be provided. Just before he started John V. Farwell, gave him a check for $500, which paid their way Mr. Moody was offered money abroad, and several times presents were made, but he refused all, saying he had determined not to work for money and to return to America as poor as he had left it. One present of £700 the people of Glasgow urged him to accept, saying they had collected it and could not return it to the subscribers. He had them send it to Chicago, and pay off the debts of Major Whittle, so as to enable him to give up his business and devote his time and talents to evangelistic work. The hymn-book arranged by the evangelists brought a profit of about $400,000, but while this was theirs, Mr. Moody would not accept a penny, and the fund was placed in the hands of William E. Dodge, of New York; John V. Farwell; of Chicago, and George H. Stuart of Philadelphia, to be applied to charitable purposes. These men devoted $50,000 of the money to clearing off the debt on the Chicago Avenue Church in this city, and gave $100,000 to the Chicago Young Men's Christian Association. Large amounts were given to other Young Men's Christian Associations in the country, and neither Moody or Sankey ever received a cent. As to Mr. Moody's fine house and farm at Northfield, Dr. Parkhurst says the property is worth about $3,000 and the farm was owned by his mother. While Mr. Moody was away his friends built a new house at a cost of about $2,000, and he even refused to live in this until he was told that he could go where he pleased, but his family should live in the new house.

Another gentleman who also knows something of Mr. Moody's affairs says that the evangelist is in comfortable circumstances as he ought to be. His Northfield property is quite valuable.

THE HOME.

GOD'S HUSBANDMAN.

Poor struggling heart, resist no more,
Dread not the grave's cold gloom,
Nor thus complain that life's fair light
Is darkened in the tomb.

The humble grain unless it die
Shall still abide alone,
But life her riches steals from death,
When thou the wheat hath sown.

Out of the shrivelled seeds there springs
A plant of noble birth,
Won to the light of softer clime
From damp and mold of earth.

Oh Death! I thought thee rude and fierce,
To hide me from my joy,
But, lo, thou art God's husbandman,
He doth thy hand employ!

Early and late thou sowest the seed,
O'er which sad mourners weep—
Thou shalt not dare to claim the wealth,
When God his fields shall reap.

Thou shalt no more my steps attend,
After this service kind,
When thou hast sown the seeds whose germ
No power of thine can bind.

God's smile hath warmed my waiting grave—
O Death, my wheat cast in,
And let it die—for richer life
The dying seed shall win!

DAILY BREAD IN HARD TIMES.

"It's dreadful to live this way! I do wonder why God doesn't answer your prayers and send you some work," said Mrs. Wilson.

"Are you hungry, wife? I'm sure I thought we had a very good breakfast," responded John Wilson.

"But we've nothing for dinner!"

"But it isn't dinner time yet, my wife."

"Well, I must confess, I'd like to know what we are to have just a little while before dinner time."

"God has said our bread and water shall be sure, but he has not promised that we shall know before hand where its coming from."

"Father," said little Maggie, "do you s'pose God knows what time we have dinner?"

"Yes, my dear child, I suppose he knows exactly that. I've done my best to get work, and I'll go out now and look about; you go to school, and don't be the least mite afraid, Maggie, there'll be some dinner."

"But we're out of soap and starch," said mother.

"As for starch, you couldn't use it if you had it. I'm sure I had soap when I washed my hands this morning," said John.

"Yes, a little bit. But it's not enough to do the washing."

"But the washing will not come till next Monday. As for the starch, it isn't one of the necessities of life."

"If I had some potatoes I could make some," said Mrs. Wilson, musingly.

"Well, I am going out now to try and find some work. You just cast your burden on the Lord, mother, and go about your housework just as if you knew what was coming next, and don't go and take the burden right up again. That's the trouble with you. You can't trust the Lord to take as good care of it as you think you would, and so you take it again, and go around groaning under the burden."

"Well, I do wonder he lets such troubles come. Here you have been out of work these three months with only an occasional day's work, and you've been a faithful, conscientious Christian ever since I knew you."

"I've been an unfaithful, unprofitable servant, and that's true, mother, whatever you may think of me," replied John Wilson, humbly. "God is trying our faith now. After he's provided for us so long, what will he think of us if we distrust him now, before ever it has touched us!"

John Wilson went away to seek work, and spent the forenoon seeking vainly. God saw that here was a diamond worth polishing. He subjected his servant's faith to strain, but it bore the test. I will not say that no questioning of painful thoughts disturbed the man as he walked homeward at noon. Four eager, hungry little children, just home from school to find the table unspread, and no dinner ready for them; an aged and infirm parent, from whom he had concealed as far as possible all his difficulties and perplexities, lest he should feel himself a burden in his old age, awakened to a realization that there was not enough for him and them—these were not pleasant pictures to contemplate, and all through the long, weary forenoon Satan had been holding them up to the view, and it was only by clinging to the rope that is thrown to them, that he was kept from utter despondency.

"Thou knowest, O Lord, that I've done my best to support my family. My abilities are small, but I've done my best. Now, Lord, I'm waiting to see thy salvation. Appear for me! Let me not be put to shame.

"Increase my faith, increase my hope,
Or soon my strength will fail."

So he prayed in his own simple fashion as he walked along.

It was all true as he said. His abilities were not great. Some frivolous young people smiled at the phraseology of his prayers. But there were educated men and earnest women who were helped and strengthened by those very prayers. Religion had raised this man above mediocrity to whom nature had been niggardly.

He drew near to his own door with something of shrinking and dread. But the children rushed out to meet him with joyous shouts.

"Come right in, father; quick! We've got a splendid dinner all ready! We've been waiting for you, and we're fearfully hungry."

The tired steps quickened, and strongly drawn lines in the weary face softened to a look of cheerful questioning, such as was oftenest seen there. He came in and stood beside his wife who was leaning over the fire, dipping soup out of the big pot with a ladle.

"How is this, mother?" said he.

"Why, father, Mr. Giddings has been over from Bristol. He came just after you went out, and says a mistake was made in your account last August which he has just found out by accident; he owed you fifteen shillings more and he paid it to me. So I—"

"I don't think it was by accident, though," said John Wilson, interrupting her.

"Well, I thought as we had nothing for dinner I'd better buy some meat and—"

"Do you think it was accident that sent us that money to-day, mother?" persisted the grateful man.

"No, I don't think so," said his wife humbly; "I think it was Providence. And I am thankful, I'm sure. I did try to trust, but I'll try harder next time. You have not heard the whole though. Mr. Giddings wants you next Monday for all the week, and he thinks for all summer."

The grace at table was a long one, full of thanks and praise, but not even the youngest child was impatient at its length.—British Workman.

CONVERTED BY A TELEGRAM.

A young telegraph operator in an English provincial town was anxious about his soul, but he could not have guessed that a message would reach him as it did. He had been sleepless all night, thinking of his need of a Saviour, and in the morning he went to his work with his heart uttering the publican's prayer. The sunny weather, and the beauty of summer scenery did not engage him now, for he was longing after that peace of God which the Christian feels.

Absorbed with this desire he continued to pray, "God be merciful to me a sinner," and was constantly repeating the words, when the click of the signal told him his office was called. He took his place at the instrument, and quickly with unusual motion spelled the message from "Herbert," at Windemere, to J. B., at Wakeworth: "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sins of the world." "In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace."

Such a telegram as that the young man had never known to pass over the wires before. It was sent to a servant girl, who in her distress of mind, had written to her brother "Herbert," but proved a double benediction, for it came to the operator as a direct reply from heaven to his prayer. He accepted it as such, and his faith saw, and rested in the Lamb of God.

Meanwhile the golden telegram went to its destination, and brought peace to the anxious soul of the poor servant girl. It saved two instead of one. And those words are living words still, and as potent to bless, and not only two, but ten thousand times ten thousand.—Chesterton Tribune.

A PLEA FOR YOUR WIFE.

Do you know the secret anxieties and sufferings of your wife? If you do not, you should. For years she has toiled indoors. She has cooked, and washed, and sewed, and dusted, and swept, and waited and watched for the small pittance you have doled out to her. That pittance has not been simply a contemptible trifle in money, but a more contemptible trifle of genuine outspoken sympathy and tenderness. You are buffeted and crowded in the business places of life. You have learned, amid hard usage, to grow sturdy and muscular. You are accustomed every day to dealing with things which require from you the voice of authority and decision. In all this there is nothing to cultivate tenderness of feeling, of tone or of manner. When you come into your house you meet a timid, retiring woman, who has been shut in all the long hours, struggling against despondency. She has waited for you. The tears are already in her eyes. If the husband cannot sympathize, who will? Now, can you not drop your gruff manner and voice for the few moments you must spend at home, and be tender, gentle and confiding? Why do you not sit down and draw your wife to you, as you did when you sought her in that home which you robbed her of, but never replaced? It is not enough that you mean all this. She sees your look and manner, and hears your voice. If these are gentle, and tender and wooing, she will open her heart to you; but if otherwise, she will repress the tear for the moment, but it will flow when you are gone.

The world is full of unspoken bitterness—all because men take things for granted. Of course the wife can have money if she will ask for it. Of course she will find sympathy if she will bring her burdens and unravel them. Of course she is loved, and thought of, and planned for. All this is not enough; but thousands never find it out until the black horse and the hearse convey the tired and worn-out body of the long-waiting one to the only rest she has ever had.—Polaris.

ABOUT THE HOUSE.

A SUGGESTION TO HOUSEKEEPERS.—"No one knows until they have tried it," says an experienced housewife, "how much they may change the aspect of things about the house by using a little varnish. On a sunshiny day take the old chairs and table out on the porch or by the open door, and after thoroughly wiping and dusting them off with a damp cloth, apply a thin coat of varnish, and so cover up scratches and marred spots of all kinds. It will dry in a very short time, and you will be surprised to see how much good you have done. A flannel cloth, a very little linseed oil, is good to rub furniture with, but the greatest care must be exercised to prevent any oil being left on the wood to attract dust. It must be rubbed until you would not know, except by the improved appearance, that any oil had been used."

MUCILAGE FOR ENVELOPES.—Take a quarter of a pound of gum arabic, dissolve it in one pint of boiling water; add a piece of borax as large as a walnut; when thoroughly mingled with the water—which can be done by frequent stirrings—bottle in a large-mouthed bottle; through the cork pass a hen's feather, and you will have a pint of mucilage as good as the best; shake the bottle occasionally for three or four days after it is corked. If the weather is hot, a tablespoonful of alcohol will prevent all mould.

SORE LIPS.—Dr. J. H. Hanaford says in the Golden Rule: "In some, if not in most cases, of dry, cracked and sore lips, one of the most prominent causes will be found in the free use of salt, producing more canker, as it seems to me, than any other article—its abuse, not its moderate use. The lips may be wet with glycerine to keep them protected from the air, occasionally using alum and water, washing the mouth and gargling the throat with the same, using less salt. A very safe cure for the canker, in addition to the disuse of salt, in excess, is found in the moderate use of hydrastic (golden seal), taken in water, three times each day a teaspoonful, only strong enough to be pleasantly bitter."

A HOME-MADE HAMMOCK.—The newest imported hammocks are from China, and are very light and a great improvement on those in ordinary use. They are slung from cords, but at each end have a light bar of wood, which keeps them in shape. They are netted in soft hemp, in what is termed "trebled diamond netting," and may easily be made at home. The following is the manner of netting: Three rows plain over the mesh; fourth row, work the first stitch by putting the hemp twice around the mesh, then three plain stitches, work alternate, double and three plain stitches; fifth row, net one plain stitch in the long loop, make a long or double stitch, net two plain stitches, repeat; sixth row, net two plain or short loops, then a long or double loop, net one plain or short, repeat; seventh row, net three plain stitches, and make a double or long loop.—American Queen.

INK that has not faded in the least on a manuscript two hundred years old was made by the following recipe: Rainwater, one pint; galls, bruised, one and a half ounce; green copperas, six drams; gum arabic, ten drams. The galls must be coarsely powdered and put into a bottle, and the other ingredients and water added. The bottle, securely stoppered, is placed in the light (sun, if possible), and its contents are stirred occasionally until the gum and copperas are dissolved, after which it is enough to shake the bottle daily, and in the course of a month or six weeks the ink will be fit for use. There may be added ten drops of carbolic acid to the contents of the bottle, as it effectually prevents the formation and growth of mold, without any detriment to the quality of the ink.

CLEANING MIXTURE.—Good to clean coat collars, and to take out grease from floors or carpets, and to clean paint or white walls (calsomined): Take half a bar of washing soap, and a lump of saltpeter and sal soda, each as large as a walnut, add two quarts of boiling soft water, stir well, and let stand till cool, then add three ounces of ammonia (spirits of hartshorn), bottle and cork tight. Will keep good a year, and is the best thing I know of to remove grease, and is always handy. It is best to bottle when lukewarm, and add the ammonia at any time. Keep tightly corked.

CHILDREN'S CORNER.

WATCH YOUR WORDS.

Keep a watch on your words, my darling,
For words are wonderful things;
They are sweet, like the bees' fresh honey—
Like the bees, they have terrible stings;
They can bless like the warm, glad sunshine,
And brighten a lonely life;
They can cut, in the strife of anger,
Like an open, two-edged knife.

Let them pass through your lips unchallenged
If their errand is true and kind—
If they come to support the weary,
To comfort and help the blind;
If a bitter, revengeful spirit
Prompt the words, let them be unsaid;
They may flash through a brain like lightning,
Or fall on a heart like lead.

Keep them back, if they're cold and cruel,
Under bar and lock and seal;
The wounds they make, my darlings,
Are always slow to heal.
May peace guard your lips, and ever,
From the time of your early youth,
May the words that you daily utter
Be the words of beautiful truth.

A BOY'S CONFESSION.

Walter P. Barrows, a Willimantic (Conn.) boy, had his hand terribly crushed while coupling cars "for fun." He has published the following in the Willimantic Journal:

"My story is short and simple, but the experience has been dear enough to me. In some respects I was like Robinson Crusoe; and all who have read his life know all about his disobedience. His great desire was for the water, while mine was for the cars. I was a messenger in the Western Union Telegraph Office; and every spare moment I had it was my delight to spend in twisting brakes on the cars. Very often I would go without my dinner to enjoy myself in this way. Oh, how many times I have wished I was a man, and then how quickly I would be a railroad-man! But, suddenly, my hopes are blasted forever; for now I have but one hand to earn a living with, the other hand having been caught and crushed between the cars, so that it had to be cut off at the wrist. Poor hand! I wish I had it back. And it all came about through not minding my mother. How many times she said: 'Walter, keep away from the cars, for you will be crippled for life if you don't get killed.' If I had only heeded her warning I should have two good hands to-day, but now it is too late. I hope all the boys will read this, and profit by my sad fate; and I would say to them, 'Always mind the good advice of a good mother.'"

IN ANGER.

They were playing on the veranda together that morning, Ralph and his sister May.

Something she had said to him angered him. He raised his hand in an outbust of stormy passion and struck her.

She staggered against a pillar and tried to catch hold of it, but she lost her balance and fell upon the steps, crying as she did so—

"I didn't mean to make you mad, Ralph."

He was glad, rather than sorry, to see her fall, in the fierce heat of his anger. But when he saw that she did not stir or try to get up from the steps upon which she had fallen, he began to be frightened.

"Are you hurt?" he asked.

She did not answer.

He ran down to her and lifted her up. The blood was running in a little red stream from a cut in the side of her head. She was insensible.

He carried her into the house, and told his mother that they had been playing on the veranda, and May had fallen on the steps.

At first they were not much alarmed about the little girl. But that afternoon she seemed to be delirious, and the doctor was sent for.

He looked grave when he turned away from the bed in which she lay.

"I think she is threatened with brain fever," he said. "The wound is more severe than it looks to be."

Ralph didn't understand much about the nature of brain fever, but the doctor's words and looks alarmed him.

"O mother, it was all my fault!" he said, hiding his head in her lap. "I got angry and struck her and she fell. She'll die, I know she will, and they's hang me for killing her!"

The next day May was worse. She kept saying over and over—

"I didn't mean to make you mad, Ralph; I'm sorry."

When Ralph heard her saying that, he was cut to the heart with remorse.

"Oh, I wish I could be in her place," he told his mother. "Poor little May! I know, now, she didn't mean to make me angry, but I didn't stop to think of it then. If God'll only let her get well, I'll never speak a cross word to her, or be unkind again, if I can help it."

"I pray he may spare her to us," his mother said, gravely. "If he does, or does not, it will be to you a lesson that I trust you may never forget."

For some days May lingered at the gate of death. Many times every day Ralph crept to her bedside to see if she was in her right mind, that he might ask her forgiveness. When he called her name she would say, "I didn't mean to make you mad, brother. I'm sorry, sorry." Then Ralph would burst into tears and go away by himself to ask the good God to let her live.

And his prayer was answered. One day the doctor told them that all danger was over. Ralph went to the bedside, and mingled joy and sorrow filled his heart when she held out her thin little hand to him with a wan smile on her face.

"O May, forgive me," he said, and began to cry. "If you only knew how sorry I am."

May put her arms about his neck and whispered—

"I'm sorry I was cross, Ralph. We'll try not to make each other angry any more, won't we?"

Ralph has never forgotten his lesson. It has made a gentler, better boy of him.—Zion's Herald.

AN ANGRY TREE.—A singular species of accacia is growing at Virginia, Nev., which shows all the characteristics of a sensitive plant. It is about eight feet high, and growing rapidly. When the sun sets its leaves fold together, and the ends of the twigs coil up like a pigtail, and if the latter are handled there is evident uneasiness throughout the plant. Its highest state of agitation was reached when the tree was removed from the pot in which it was matured into a larger one. To use the gardner's expression, it became very mad. It had scarcely been placed in its new quarters before the leaves began to stand up in all directions, like the hair on the tail of an angry cat, and soon the whole plant was in a quiver. At the same time it gave a most sickening and pungent odor, resembling that of a rattlesnake when teased. The smell so filled the house that it was necessary to open the doors and windows, and it was a full hour before the plant calmed down, and folded its leaves in peace.—Sel.

TEMPERANCE.

WHAT WAS SEEN IN A BAR-ROOM.

It is not often that my lines fall in such a place as a bar-room. It happened last week on this wise: Being suddenly summoned to a suburban village, some twenty-five miles out of town, I was obliged to wait an hour at the station before the returning train would arrive. Being a-hungered, I went to the adjoining tavern to get something to eat, as there was nothing to be had elsewhere.

The establishment was not large, but was clean and comfortable. The dining-room opened out of the bar-room, but having no fire in it was not available, and neat tables were placed near the stove in the bar-room. The house was kept by an English-woman, who stood behind the bar with her bare arms folded, while she waited orders. I asked for coffee and rolls, and while she was providing them I surveyed the scene. The bar was plentifully supplied with liquors in handsome array, with variously colored glasses, and the printed license to sell was posted in the midst. Above this display were numerous inscriptions in neat frames, a few of them I remember. One was: "God Bless Our Home." Another read: "God Bless the Old Folks at Home.' And, filled with surprise at finding such incongruous mottoes in such a place, I read again: "As thy days so shall thy strength be." There were others which I do not now recollect. My lunch arrived, and while I was eating it, a young man entered, and was welcomed by the landlady as a customer. He stepped to the bar and asked for whisky. She set the decanter before him, and he poured out a glass and asked her to join him. She took a bottle of some other liquor, and, pouring out a dram, clinked her glass against his, and they drank together to each other's health. He took a seat by the stove, and she soon came out from the bar and sat near him, beginning the conversation by telling him of what a time she had last evening with a lot of men who came in for supper. They had chickens and oysters and drink, and spent their money freely, "got high," and one of them rolled on the floor. She had to telephone for an officer to come and get the drunken fellows out. She said she was doing a good business, getting ahead well. The young man seemed to be interested in her report of prosperity, and with large oaths frequently expressed his satisfaction. Just then the baker came in with the day's supply of bread, and had a long chat and chaff with the voluble bar-woman. Her free and easy way reminded me of bar-maids I had seen in England; but rarely having any occasion to enter such a place as this, I was not aware that the class had been transplanted into our soil.

Certainly this was the first time that I ever saw in any country pious prayers and Bible promises done in big letters, and hung up in frames over shelves filled with intoxicating liquors, to be sold to profane and rowdy customers. And it seemed to me that as this was a new chapter in my experience, it was also a new phase of human life altogether. And as I came down the road to the city, the bar and bar-woman, the pious texts and the drinks made a curious medley in my mind while I fell away into an afternoon dose. Did this woman adorn her bar with these printed prayers in the belief that her business would be blessed thereby? Was it an intimation that the house in which she ministered to the base appetites of men was under the protection of him who is too holy to regard sin with any degree of favor? She was not a hypocrite, I felt quite sure, for she was ready to drink with her customers, and to manifest pleasure in the badinage which they indulged in while they took their drams. Rather it seemed to me that she had no conscience or concern about it; but having been brought up in a Christian land, she had adopted the thought and habit of others, not pausing to reason about the inconsistency of keeping a house for the making of drunkards and asking God to bless her ruinous trade. I had heard her say, when speaking of a man who had been in: "He was pretty drunk, and wanted me to trust him for another drink; but I told him, No. I couldn't trust him, but I would give him a drink, if he would clear out, and so I got rid of him." What a conscience, and what a calling!

And there may be a lower and meaner business than this among the trades and traffics of the world we live in. But I do not know what the other one is. No other business in the world is attended by so large an amount of sin and misery. There is no traffic that is so utterly without apology, justification or excuse. It does no good to anybody, and certainly does an immense amount of evil. The customers to whom the rumseller ministers are debased, and more so the more they trade, and so it comes to pass that the larger the business done the more evil is wrought. This bar-woman said she took in thirty dollars as the fruit of last evening's carouse. That she thought was doing well. There was probably half a dozen men; men of families, who spent five dollars each, and went home drunk. Follow them there. No ink is red enough to describe the scenes in the drunkard's house.

And such a mill is run in every village, near every railway station, in the midst of Christian churches, and school-houses and intelligent citizens, in a State where laws are made and executed for the protection of the people! And in each of these mills is hung up in full view a License from the State, by which it is made the right of a woman to deal out this ruinous stuff! The State allows it, takes pay for allowing it, itself sells the authority by which the citizen is authorized to poison his neighbors and fill the community with vice, poverty and misery. It is wrong to license such a traffic. It is not only right, but it is also expedient and a duty, to forbid it. It is the highest absurdity for a government of the people, existing for the good of the people, to enact laws by which ten thousand men in New York may be licensed to traffic in that which makes it necessary also for the same government to support prisons and poor-houses, hospitals and asylums, at a cost of uncounted millions of dollars raised by taxing the same people! And this is a self-government.

Man's worst enemy is man. He puts into his mouth not a pistol to blow his brains out: that were a short and simple mode of doing the naughty business; he puts into his mouth a liquid that drowns his reason, conscience, self-respect, capacity for business, love for his family, regard for his reputation, and finally reduces him to the lowest level on which humanity crawls. He may be a gentleman when he begins his downward course. Or he may have never been called by that pleasing name. It is all one with the tempter and the tempted. He drinks and is damned. His hell begins in the bar-room. His worm never dies. That fire is never quenched. Is there no balm in Gilead? Is there no power in a great, intelligent Christian State, to take this gigantic vice by the throat, and throttle it in the midst of its squalor and shame?

I am not one who believes this thing ought to be left to cure itself. It never did and never will. They who are not in its toils and fangs ought to make it hard for others to be destroyed.—"Irenæus," in New York Observer.

A notable feature of the high license campaign in Illinois is the spread of license sentiment thereby. Towns which have had prohibition for years have this year voted for high license because of the revenue temptation. One little hamlet under township organization, with only two or three hundred inhabitants and no saloons, actually went to work to incorporate in order to secure the benefits of high license. In order to incorporate and secure the requisite number of inhabitants, the license schemers secured articles of incorporation for the spaces of three miles each side of the little settlement, thus taking in honest farmers into their toils and making their homes the lawful prey of the saloons. How different is this year's work from that of the elections following our first home protection campaign when out of 832 towns voting on the license question 645 voted for prohibition. Look on this picture and then on that!—Union Signal.

—The Catholic Total Abstinence Union of America have held their annual convention at Brooklyn during the last week. There are six hundred and twenty-seven Total Abstinence Societies connected with the Union, with a membership of over thirty-six thousand. Great enthusiasm was manifested during the convention; many of the most earnest and practical speakers were men under thirty years of age.

THE CHURCHES.

—Mr. A. T. Hemingway, who has served the Y. M. C. A. of this city for six years as General Secretary has been compelled to resign on account of continued ill health.

—Pres. C. A. Blanchard of Wheaton, is engaged to lead the Chicago Sabbath-school teachers Saturday noon meeting in lower Farwell Hall during the present month.

—The Christian convention to be held in this city during Mr. Moody's visit next week promises to be an occasion of much religious interest. Many from abroad have signified their purpose to attend. The meetings will be held on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday. Mr. Moody is expected to preach in his old church, Chicago Avenue, Sabbath morning and evening.

—Rev. J. K. Billheimer, United Brethren missionary treasurer, sailed for England last Saturday, to spend some months in the interest of our African missionary work.

—Mr. Spurgeon is a Puritan preacher of the old style. The subject of his sermon on July 5th was said to have been "Unsavory Meats, or Salt for the White of an Egg."

—A congregation of 25 members was organized by Rev. D. C. Wilson, at Rock Valley, Iowa, on the 18th ult. Rev. J. W. Graham is called to become its pastor.

—The First Presbyterian Church was destroyed by fire this evening from sparks blown northward from a burning barn in the rear of the Southern Hotel. This was the largest and most elegant church edifice in this city, and cost about $75,000; insured for $23,000. It was completed in 1866, and contained the city clock and a $6,000 organ.

— Dr. E. P. Goodwin of the First Congregational Church, Chicago, having just returned from a long sojourn in California, spoke last week in his church on the religious aspects of Mormonism. He said, the "Latter Day Saints," as they styled themselves, accepted the Old and New Testaments, but were always prepared for a new revelation, of which their "Doctrine of Covenants" was an example. They agreed with orthodox Christians as to the characteristics and attributes of God, but regarded him as a human being. They regarded Adam's fall as a boon to the human race, not as a misfortune. He fell that the race might be. Their doctrine of atonement was like ours; salvation was obtained through repentance, faith, and baptism. The government of the church was a most remarkable one. There were two lines of priesthood each subdivided and occupying seats in the sanctuary, the elevation of which denoted their rank. It was an iron system, holding men with a grasp more powerful than the papacy. An explanation was given of the blood atonement, which meant that no gentile could enter heaven's gate without committing suicide or employing a second party to do the deed.

—Mr. Vanderbilt's oldest son, Cornelius, it is said, sustains the branch of the Young Men's Christian Association at the Grand Central Depot, and personally conducts its religious services twice a week. He is also superintendent of the Sabbath school.

—A German Lutheran Theological Seminary, to be known as Concordia College, intended to be the highest institution of learning in the Lutheran church, was dedicated with very imposing ceremonies, on the Sabbath at St. Louis. Excursions came from all directions, and fully 10,000 people were present. The synods of Missouri, Iowa, and other States were especially represented, but prominent clergymen are here from Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Missouri, Pennsylvania, and Louisiana. The services were almost entirely in German, and on Monday they continued in Latin.

—The corner-stone of the Grace English Lutheran church, at the corner of Franklin street and Chicago avenue, Chicago, was laid on Sabbath afternoon with appropriate ceremony in the presence of a large assemblage. The Rev. D. Fawcett, of Grace Methodist Episcopal church, read the Scripture lesson. Rev. Dr. Arthur Little, of the New England Congregational church, followed with prayer. The discourse of the day was delivered by Professor S. A. Ort, D. D., of the Wittenberg University, Springfield, Ohio. Short addresses were then delivered in Swedish, by the Rev. C. A. Evald, of Emmanuel's church; in Norwegian by the Rev. J. L. Torgersen, of Bethany church, and in German by the Rev. J. D. Severinghaus. of St. Mark's church.

—Rev. John Kemp of Dayton, Ohio, has from the first been one of the steadfast promoters of Anti-masonic reform in the United Brethren church. He reached his seventieth birthday on the 30th ult., and the occasion was observed by his friends in a pleasant gathering at his home, where Prof. L. Davis expressed the gratitude of all that the days of Bro. Kemp had been so prolonged. In his earlier days he was noted as a revivalist; and he baptized such numbers by immersion that for a time he was known in some localities as "John the Baptist."

—The United Presbyterian church of Wooster, Ohio, celebrated the sixty-seventh anniversary of its organization on the 22d and 23d days of August by a reunion of the former pastors, elders and members of the church, and with exercises appropriate to the occasion. Addresses were made by Rev. Dr. D. A. Wallace, Hon. John Bruce, Judge of the U. S. Court for the District of Alabama, Prof. James Wallace, Prof. E. F. Reid and others.

—Mr. Von Schlumbach, in an address at the central noon meeting of the Y. M. C. A. of London, said recently that the reports of German skepticism had been overdrawn. There was, no doubt, much indifference among the masses of the people. When he went to Berlin he was greatly helped by one of the pastors there. They were able to open little meetings in lager-beer rooms and other places. He thanked God he could report many cases of thieves and notorious sinners who had been regenerated, and were leading a new life. He did not hold after-meetings, but his house was an after-meeting the whole day long. Eternity alone could reveal the tale of what it was his privilege to know in that way of the saving power of God. Every night, towards the close of the work, they had audiences of 1,500 or 1,800, and many seeking the Lord. The meetings were still going on with good success.

—H. R. Holsinger of the Brethren's Evangelist, Ashland, Ohio, is about to go to California to attend a Dunkard meeting at Lathrop and look after the interests of the "progressive" branch of that sect on the Pacific coast.

—Captain Bundy, of the Gospel Ship Good Tidings, now on the Western lakes, writes Mr J. B. Hobbs, president of the Chicago Board of Trade, who is deeply interested in this phase of evangelistic work, that Beaver Island, near Mackinaw, is delivered from the curse of the saloons. Not a drunken man or woman to be seen on this large island. A promising Sunday school has been started by Captain Bundy in one of the villages' and he has been instrumental in saving many souls at another. The islands are yet to rejoice with us in the great deliverance.

—On a Sabbath evening in August the two Presbyterian churches in Saratoga, N. Y. were served by colored preachers, while three other colored men conducted the other portions of the service. This as an appropriate sequel to the days not long ago when negro slaves were brought as body servants to Saratoga.

—Says the New York Independent: The utter and total collapse of the Protestant church of Geneva is one of the saddest of ecclesiastical events. A new consistory was elected a few Sundays ago. Every Swiss citizen who claimed to be a Protestant had the liberty of voting, and the wildly liberal ticket was elected for the third time since 1874. The conservatives charged that their opponents were Materialists, and the latter accepted the name readily. Their organ, the Genevois, said that now most people, happily, troubled themselves very little about what is called the salvation of the soul; that men of well-balanced minds rather give their thought to making the best of this world; that faith has had its time, and religious belief is fast disappearing. Every minister elected in the Church of Geneva since 1874 is either an avowed agnostic or a declared opponent of Christianity. A few old believing ministers remain, especially in the country parishes, but the church looks blacker than without them. They do not relieve, but intensify the darkness, and can do no more than show a warfare of belief, which leads the masses to call it all nonsense and superstition. A little healthy persecution would do good.

—The Friends' Missions in Mexico are rejoicing in the approach of railway lines built by the Gould-Grant company, which will connect several of their stations, and overcome the great difficulty of traveling. Private enterprise of liberal Friends is providing for meeting houses at one or two points.

—An American gentleman in confidential relation with the leading men of Tokio, says that, were the restrictions on missionary work wholly removed, Japan would be a Christian nation in twenty years, and the best classes of people would be converted first. The liberal party is affirmed by its leader to feel no antagonism to Christianity, and to be ready, should it attain power, to aid and protect the church. The third conference of native Christians has been held in Tokio with delegates present from all parts of Japan.

—A correspondent says that image worship continues to be a very prominent feature of the Greek church, as that church appears among the Russians. If you ask Russian theologians about the nature of image worship he says they are apt to treat you to an elaborate discussion of absolute and relative worship classing image worship in the latter category. But the peasantry at large, and the great majority of Russian monks and nuns, do not know anything about this fine theological point. They worship the holy images to the full range of their religious zeal and piety, and that is enough for them. In every house of Christian Russians, in every room, in the "first corner," you will find images, and those of God's mother, of Christ, of St. Nicholas and of St. George are most often found.

—Mr. Moody's schools at Northfield, Conn., occupy four buildings, well furnished, which have cost about $80,000. The grounds include 150 acres extending along the banks of the Connecticut, and from the buildings one of the grandest views of the valley is afforded. Mr. Moody is now endeavoring to obtain a permanent endowment. A Boston friend has given him $50,000 toward that end, and several scholarships have been founded recently. More applicants were turned away last year than were admitted, because there was no room for them. Recently a case of curiosities was received from Europe, in which were bricks from Babylon, figures representing the castes in India, bells used in heathen worship, etc.

—The Watchman remarks that the "burning of a Bible in Mexico recently, proved about as effectual in stopping the spread of the truth as did the burning of Jeremiah's roll. In a certain town an agent of the American Bible society was engaged in selling copies of the Scriptures on the street, when a priest came forward, bought one, and burned it in the presence of the crowd. Before the blaze had died out, more than a dozen copies were purchased by others to carry home to read."

—A native Kaffer evangelist, Mr. William Koyi, from Lovedale, has been joined by Mr. Sutherland as teacher at the New Presbyterian Mission on the Mombera Uplands, Livingstonia, some forty miles northwest of Bandawe, on the west shore of Lake Nyassa. The chief having given permission to preach, there were congregations of 1,500 in his cattle kraal. Schools will soon follow, and a good work among a once-dreaded Zulu tribe is anticipated.

—The Rev. Mr. Lewis, of Napa, California, has been spending a few months in the South Sea Islands. At Tahiti, where there are from fifteen to eighteen hundred Chinese, working on plantations, etc., he was told of a Chinaman named Lee Ah Fat, who is doing noble work for the Master down there. This Lee Ah Fat is a whole Bible Society in himself. He earns $25 a month on a plantation, and every month he comes into the port, five miles from where he works, and buys $20 worth of Bibles, and then goes back and distributes them among the Chinese. While Mr. Lewis was there, one month he earned by extra work $5 more, and then he came into town and bought $25 worth of Bibles, that time (Chinese Bibles). Bibles in the Chinese language are very expensive there, as they are brought from Europe or America.

THE

CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE

A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

It is now owned and published by the

IN BRIEF.

It is said 500,000 cattle graze on the Wyoming ranges, valued at $13,000,000.

The daughter of an earl stopped dancing with the Prince of Walcs, and openly refused to go on, because he was holding her too closely, and otherwise misbehaving himself, in a large ball-room. She left him in the middle of the floor, and asked an acquaintanee to take her to her mother.

The executive committee in charge of the estatc of the late Arehbishop Purcell, of Cincinnati, have resolved to raffle off his span of fine horses and earriage at fifty cents a ticket, and sell all the tickets they ean—a questionable way to dispose of an archbishop's estate.

A recent report of the actuary of an English Life Insurance Company shows by statistics that the average duration of life has been increased, and instead of being thirty-three years, as has always been considered the standard, it is now nearer forty years. This is good news and ought to make an improvement in the stock market.

A Los Angeles rancher has raised a pumpkin so largc that his two children use a half each for a cradle. This may seem vcry wonderful in the rural districts, but in this city three or four full-grown policemen have been found asleep on a single beat.—San Francisco Post.

MOHAMMEDAN'S HOLY WATER.—An analysis of the water of the holy well of Mecca shows that it eontains 579 grains of solid matter per gallon. It is sewage seven times worse than London sewage, and its eharaeter sufficiently accounts for the eholera that is so apt to originate among the Mussulman pilgrims.

Henry Packer, of Hartford, Conn., employed by the trainer of elephants with Barnum's show, was killed by the elephant Queen at Cincinnati. He had not provoked the animal in any way, but was at work, preparatory to the morning parade, when the monster suddenly pinioned him with her great body against the sidc of a tableau car, and remorselessly erushed the life out of him. The pressure was so violent that the ear was thrown over, and thus the poor fellow was released. The trainer says it is only a proof of the sly, malicious eunning of thesc beasts. He thinks she saw an opportunity to do an injury to Paeker, and embraced it. The wounded man was taken to the hospital in a patrol wagon, and he died in a few hours.

There can be no doubt that of all the humbug practiced in the world, there is none which, on the whole, is attended with more ruinous consequenees, than the deceptions to which parents constantly have reeourse, and that with a perfectly easy eonscienee, to evade the troublesome curiosity of ehildren. "I am convinced," says M. Dumas, "that the greatest revolutionaries in the world of ideas, those who have most horrified mankind, who have eaused the shedding of the most blood and the most tears, have been children to whose first questions men have not replied as they ought to have replied."—Independent.

A short time ago the Emperor Franz Joseph and the King of Saxony were out shooting together. Night came on, and the royal sportsmen, finding themselves at a considerable distance from the Residenz, hailed a passing wagon driven by a stolid looking peasant, and got in. When they came to their journey's end, the Emperor slipped a few florins into the peasant's hand, and said, smiling: "Do you know whom you have been driving?" "No." "You have been driving the Emperor of Austria and the King of Saxony." The peasant, who was convinced that he was being hoaxed, replied with a chuckle: "And do you know who I am?" "No." "Well I am the Shah of Hersia." And he whipped up his horse and departed.

In calling attention to the advertisement of D. Needham's Sons, I feel conscious of doing a favor to the afflicted and an act of justice to men worthy of their confidence. It is not to be presumed that preparations of Red Clover will cure every chronic case of dyspepsia, eatarrh, rheumatism, etc., but among my personal friends a number have assured me that they have derived great benefit from its use. It has been tested for eighteen years with steadily increasing favor unil it has won a plaee among the safe, simple and efficient remedies for diseases of a very painful and obstinate character. Read the brief advertisement in this issue and if you arc suffering from any of the ills mentioned write to the proprietors for information, with whom I am personally aequainted and am warranted in saying that your request will receive proper and prompt attention. SERMONS AND ADDRESSES.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. W. P. M'Nary, pastor United Presbyterian Church, Bloomington, Ind. This is a very clear, thorough, candid and remarkably concise Scriptural argument on the character of Freemasonry. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Prest. J. Blanchard, before the Pittsburgh Convention. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Prest. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Sermon on Secretism, by Rev. R. Theo. Cross, pastor Congregational Church, Hamilton, N. Y. This is a very clear array of the objections to Masonry that are apparent to all. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Sermon on Odd-fellowship and Other Secret Societies, by Rev. J. Sarver, pastor Evangelical Lutheran church, Leechburg, Pa. This is a very clear argument against secretism of all forms and the duty to disfellowship Odd-fellows, Freemasons, Knights of Pythias and Grangers is clearly shown by their confessed character as found in their own publications. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Secret Societies. A discussion of their character and claims, by Rev. David McDill, Prest. J. Blanchard and Rev. Edward Beecher. In cloth, 35c. per doz. $3.25. Paper cover. 15c. Per doz. $1.25.

Discussion on Secret Societies. By Elder M. S. Newcomer and Elder G. W. Wilson, a Royal Arch Mason. This discussion was first published in a series of articles in the Church Advocate. 25 cents each; per doz $2.00.

Prest. H. H. George on Secret Societies. A powerful address, showing clearly the duty of Christian churches to disfellowship secret societies. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

FARM NOTES.

ABOUT APPLES.—The buyers all want red apples. They say they sell the best. This fancy for color has given Baldwins a boom, as they are red and handle and ship well. There is another advantage for the fruit—the tree is hardy and a constant bearer. I do hot like the apple to eat, but on account of its market value and the hardiness of the tree and strong bearing propensity, in an orchard of 100 trees I would plant seventy-five Baldwins. Too many varieties of fruit are a nuisance. They make an endless amount of work, and many kinds, while they have a value for home use, are unsuited for keeping or shipping. They do not pay. The Esopus Spitzenburgh, is the daintiest flavored apple that grows. My mother would have no other for her mince pies and company apple sauce—this had to be extra nice, you know—but since the country has become so open, exposed to the cold winds, the trees winter-kill. The Spitzenburgh wants protection and a virgin soil. The latter requirement can be made up in part by the use of ashes, and the former by planting wind-breaks of evergreens, I treated a stunted Fameuse apple tree twenty years ago with a wheelbarrow load of leached ashes, and that tree shows the benefit of it to this day. Somehow, we all like the kind of apples we used to eat when we were young, and so Rhode Island Greenings and Gilliflowers still have a place in our hearts and my orchard. They bring to mind the times when neighbors used to "come over and spend the evening"—those old-fashioned, informal visits, in which apples filled an important part of the social cheer. They used to keep company with the doughnuts when we were young.

OILING FARM IMPLEMENTS.—A small proportion of kerosene added to castor oil, and thoroughly shaken, makes it less liable to gum when applied to axletrees, mowers, and other farm implements.

The New England Farmer gives the following simple plan for utilizing kitchen heat for evaporating apples: "Make a frame 24x40 inches out of laths; put a piece across the center to strengthen; stretch over the top strong cord once in six inches, and over this nail common screen cloth; hang over the cook-stove, high enough to walk under. This frame will hold a large milkpan-full of sliced apples, and will make one and a half pounds of dried apples in one day. The apple is the best if sliced thin and put up in the morning over a hot fire. You would be surprised to see how quick the paper bags get filled with nice light-colored apples."

THE PRESERVING OF EGGS.—According to a German paper, linseed oil is the very best substance with which to coat eggs to render the shells impervious to air. The experiment was as follows: Ten eggs were coated with linseed oil, ten with poppy-seed oil and ten others were left uncovered, the weights all being ascertained. The thirty eggs were laid on sand, taking the precaution that no eggs touched one another. After from three to six months they were re-weighed and opened, with the following results: The unprotected eggs had, after three months, lost eleven per cent. in weight, and after six months eighteen per cent. On opening them they were found only half full and quite spoiled. Those covered with poppy-seed oil had lost in three months three per cent., and in six months four and one-half per cent.; on opening them they were found full and and without bad smell. Those covered with linseed oil had lost. after three months, two per cent.; after six months, three per cent.; on being opened they were found full and smelling perfectly fresh and sweet.

CLEANNESS OF SINKS.—One of the most prolific causes of defilement and offensive odors in kitchen sinks and their outlets is the presence of decaying grease. This comes from the emptyings of kettles in which meat has been cooked, in the dish water, and in the soap. The grease lodges in every crevice and catches at every obstruction. A remedy may be found in the use of the common alkalies instead of soap, aqua ammonia in washing clothes, and borax in washing lawns and laces, and washing soda in cleaning dishes. These alkalies prevent a solid soap forming in the sink and its pipes, and neutralizes all effects of decomposing fat.

DR. JOHN BULL'S

Smith's Tonic Syrup

FOR THE CURE OF

FEVER and AGUE

Or CHILLS and FEVER.

AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to oure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient.

The genuine SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP must have DR. JOHN BULL'S private stamp on each bottle. DR. JOHN BULL only has the right to manufacture and sell the original JOHN J. SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP, of Louisville, Ky. Examine well the label on each bottle. If my private stamp is not on each bottle do not purchase, or you will be deceived.

FULL OF GRAND IDEAS.

"Masonry and Mormonism are political engines with religious driving wheels. Their conductors are kings; their engineers, priests; their motive power, popular depravity combined with popular conscience, and their practical end is the luxury and power of leaders who form men's interests for eternity that they may tax and govern them in time."

The above is a sample of the vigorous and striking thoughts, the grand ideas of which the pamphlet on the Batavia Convention is full. Get this book by all means. Price, post paid, 25 cents each.

NIGHTS IN A BAR-ROOM

T. S. Arthur's great temperance book, complete and illustrated. By mail, 5c each; 50c per doz. By express, $3.50 per 100.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC THE GREAT SOURCE OF CRIME.

Leaves from the diary of an old lawyer.—By Hon. A. B. Richmond, author of "Court and Prison," etc. A book of intense interest, rivaling the famous "Diary of a Physician," and, in its truthful, terrible pictures of the power and crime of intemperance, excelling the well-known "Ten Nights in a Bar-room." The temperance issue of the present time is, Shall prohibition be partial or entire? Shall the branches of the death-bearing tree be pruned and trimmed, or shall the tree itself be cut down and its stump be torn up by the roots? The answer of "Leaves from the Diary" is, "Cut down the tree, tear up the roots, leave not a shoot or shred behind." It is certainly a very strong and eloquent volume. Complete edition on fine, heavy paper, with colored lithograph of Sewall's stomach plates. By mail, 30c each, $3 per doz. By express, $20 per 100. Abridged edition, by mail, 15c; $1.25 per doz. By express, $9 per 100.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC AND THE SOBER CITIZEN.

An able and telling work, by Rev. J. H. Sherman, which brings out the effects of the liquor traffic in a new light. The following are some of the commendations of the first edition.

"The author drives the nails of conviction through and clinches them."—N. Y. Christian Advocate.

"Speakers and workers in the temperance field will find valuable aid in this pamphlet. It is crowded with convincing facts."—Zion's Herald

"One of the ablest reviews of the drink curse ever issued from the press."—The Morning and Day of Reform.

"The arguments are put in telling form."—Judge Pittman.

New revised and enlarged edition. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100.

DRINKS FROM DRUGS.

A startling exposure of the liquor traffic, by El. Johnson. A book that cannot fail to arouse the American people to the gigantic swindle now being perpetrated. The writer was offered $10,000 by a leading brewer to keep still. Liquor not only doctored, but made entirely from drugs. Extracts from a whole library of secret books, giving receipts for making and doctoring; advertisements of essences, fac-similies of labels, engravings, etc. etc. Claret, port, sherry, champagne, whisky, brandy, gin, rum, etc., all out of one barrel, and made at less than 25 cents a quart. Wine that never saw grape juice; cider that never saw apples; beer factories in place of breweries, fine cream ale without barley or brewing; whisky from arsenic; millions of gallons of liquor that pays no revenue tax. The farmer's corn and barley "all in your eye." A wholesale liquor store in a ten-foot square cellar; more French wine sold in New York City than is produced in the whole of France. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By Express, $6 per 100.

W. C. T. U. ORGANIZATION AND WORK.

A book of general information on how to organize and run successfully a Woman's Christian Temperance Union. This book should be widely distributed among W. C. T. U. presidents, pastor's wives and other representative women. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100.

HOME PROTECTION.

A lawyer's view of it. By J. C. Wells, attorney-at-law. The question of female suffrage for the protection of home ably discussed from a lawyer's standpoint. A book for the times. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100.

BAND OF HOPE RECITERS.

172 pages. 164 choice recitations of poetry and prose, containing some of the choicest bits of temperance material for the platform ever uttered, accompanied by an article on elocution. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100.

GENERAL TEMPERANCE SONG BOOK.

"Temperance Songs," a Book for Adult Societies.—Eighty-three choice pieces, both words and music (old and new tune combination) choice selections from standard temperance collections, many choice new pieces. Book carefully edited by David C. Cook. Will prove just what is wanted by every temperance society. Price in strong cardboard covers, by mail, 10c each; $1 per dozen; by express, $5 per 100.

TEMPERANCE ANTHEM BOOK.

Temperance Anthems.—A new idea; nothing else of the kind in existence. Will insure good music by the choir at temperance meetings. Forty-eight pages of choice anthems by ablest writers. By mail, 15c each; $1.50 per doz. By express, $10 per 100.

BAND OF HOPE SONG BOOK.

Band of Hope Songs.—Fifty-seven choice pieces for juvenile temperance gatherings, Bands of Hope, etc. Old, familiar tunes, also choice new words and music. Words far in advance of anything else issued. By mail, 8c each; 75c per doz. By express, $4 per 100.

DANIEL'S BAND.

A temperance concert exercise, with parts suitable for all ages; entirely new. Songs, recitations, dialogues, etc., of a thoroughly aggressive character; sure to carry weight with the rendering of it. By mail, 5c each; 50c per dozen. By express, $2 per 100.

THE COLD WATER ARMY.

For a primary temperance concert exercise. An entirely new exercise, containing songs and recitations, dialogues, etc., suitable for primary scholars. A pleasing and telling concert on temperance. By mail, 5c each; 50c per dozen. By express, $2 per 100.

x-ford Teacher's Bible.

A Bible Concordance, Commentary etc., All in One.

The "Oxford" Teachers' Bible contains, besides the text with the celebrated Oxford references, a Cruden's Concordance with 25,000 references; Oxford Index with 2,345 words, pronouncing dictionary of proper names with meanings; Scripture atlas of twelve maps, correct to latest survey, including alphabetical list of Bible names arranged with figures and letters indicating location on maps; condensed Bible history of Old and New Testament with interval between chronology of Old Testament and chronology of the New; a complete harmony of the Gospels; etymology, geography and topography of Palestine; mountains, lakes and rivers of the Bible, with special tabular summary; birds, reptiles, insects, trees, plants, flowers, minerals, precious stones, etc.; weights, measures, time and money; obsolete and ambiguous words, and words used as symbols; Paul's voyage to Rome; Paul's missionary journey; history of Jewish sects; parables of our Lord; parables of the Old Testament; miracles of our Lord; miracles of the New Testament; prophecies concerning Christ; titles of Christ; special prayers; chart of the family of the Herods, etc., etc.

SIZES.—Our small size Bible is 4x5½ inches. Our medium size, 4½x6½. Our large size, 5x7¾.

Our small and medium sizes are most popular ones. Large size for those desiring large type Bible.

For $1.30, small size genuine Oxford Teacher; complete in every respect; same as the very best; strongly bound in morocco covers, with gilt edges; in large, clear print. Book of 1,408 pages.

Postage, 9cts.

For $2.20 Same style of binding as above described, Teachers' medium size, red edges instead of gilt. Postage, 12c.

For $5.40 Same style of binding, large size, gilt edges. Postage, 20c.

For $1.60 Small size genuine Oxford Teacher, gilt edges, flexible morocco cover, circuit, or protection, leather all around. Postage, 10cts.

For $2.50 The same style of binding, medium size. Postage, 12c.

THE PERSIAN SEAL BINDING

Is very handsome and durable. It is this style of binding which is so much admired by Bible readers. Please notice particularly that these Bibles are kid lined and silk sewed. Many Bibles in this style outwardly are lined with black paper and sewed with thread in place of silk.

For $2.30 we furnish a small size Oxford, bound in Persian seal, full flexible; can be bent back, doubled or rolled, without injury. Divinity circuit, gilt edges, kid lined, silk sewed, with book-mark and band. Postage, 10c.

For $3.30 The same style of binding, medium size. Postage, 12c.

For $5.75 The same style of binding, large size. Postage, 20c.

LEVANT MOROCCO BINDING.

The Persian Seal bindings are the best kept by most Bible dealers, and usually pass for the best teachers' Bibles made; and, to all appearance, they are so. There is, however, a better wearing binding of which the Persian Seal is a good imitation; this is known as "Levant Morocco." In all respects the Levant morocco Bible corresponds with the Persian Seal description, except as to leather used for cover which, though looking like the Persian Seal, is stronger, and will last a lifetime.

Prices on genuine Levant Morocco bindings:

For $4.50—Small size. Postage, 10c.
For $5.50—Medium size. Postage, 12c.
For $8.00—Large size. Postage, 20cts.

Handsome Gift Bibles at Low Prices.

For 45c. Embossed morocco cover, gilt edges, gilt title on back. Very neat and durable. This is the handsomest 45c. gift Bible we have ever seen. Postage, 5c.

For 60c. Morocco cover, brass bound and plated, with handsome gilt clasp and gilt edges; two patterns; square and round corners. Exquisite lettering on side; printed in large clear type. Bibles no better are sold as high as $1 and $2. Postage, 6c.

For 70c. Similar size and style of binding to our 60-cent Bible; square corners, brass bound, with clasp and handsome tasseled hook-mark; also medallion inserted on side in gold and red.

This was a new importation with the fall of 1882, and a very pretty design. It should be seen to be appreciated. (See cut.) Postage, 6c.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

—The Massachusetts Supreme Court decided Thursday that Bates College, of Lewiston, Me., is not entitled to the $100,000 bequeathed to it canditionally by the late Benjamin Bates, of Boston. The will contained the condition that another $100,000 should be raised within five years, which the heirs proved, to the satisfaction of the court, had not been done.

—Several wrecks occurred Thursday on the coast of Newfoundland. The French bark Kermalo, fish ladcn, went down with all hands in the River Girond. The steamer Canima foundered in St. Mary's Bay, but the crew and passengers escaped. News from the banks is to the effect that several craft have been damaged, and twenty-one more cases of loss of life are reported.

—A preliminary move was made at Ithaca, N. Y., Thursday, by Professor Willard Fiske, to annul the will of his wife, Jennie McGraw Fiske, which bequeathed $1,500,000 to Cornell University.

—The North Pacific excursion party were given fitting receptions Monday at St. Paul and Minneapolis, both cities being arrayed in a wealth of decorations. At Minneapolis machinery in wagons was kept working during the entire route, grinding wheat, sawing logs, and planing lumber. President Arthur and party joined the tourists at the latter city, and were welcomed with unbounded enthusiasm.

—Fire in Henry Dieman & Co.'s raghouse in Walnut street, Cincinnati, Monday afternoon, quickly spread to the Times-Star building on the south, the three upper stories of which and the whole rag establishment being soon consumed. Several were injured and n.ne killed or burned to death. The total loss is about $115,000.

—Near Waldron's Station, Ohio, Thursday morning, one section of a freight train dashed into the preceding one, twelve or fifteen of the cars falling through a trestle. Two brakemen were killed.

—A boat modeled after the old Maid of the Mist successfully passed through the Niagara rapids Thursday, though minus a crew. Forty thousand persons witnessed the experiment.

—Among 200 persons arrested for brigandage in the province of Girzenti, Italy, are a priest, many land-owners, and some members of the Communat Councils.

—Fierce attacks were made upon the Jews at Szigetvar, Hungary, Sunday night, in which a large amount of property was destroyed. One person was killed and four injured.

—While a number of people were waiting for a train at Steglitz, Germany, Sunday evening an express dashed into their midst, killing thirty-nine persons. The corpses were mutilated in a shocking manner.

—The first severe frosts of the season were experienced on Saturday and Sunday nights throughout a considerable portion of the northwest. In some parts of Iowa and northern Illinois the injury to the corn crop is estimated to be very great.

—The North Pacific excursion party formally laid the "last rail" on that railway on Saturday. The rail was attached to a Western Union wire running into the branch office at No. 8. Broad street, New York, and while President Villard was driving the golden spike the blows of his silver sledge-hammer were repeated in this city on the telegraph instrument. General officers of the road gathered round the instrument listening to the strokes that told of the completion of a great National highway.

—A man boarded a train Sunday night at Ogden, Utah, covered the eight passengers and two employes with his revolver, took their money and watches, and disappeared in the darkness.

—The foreign exhibition at Boston was opened with great ceremony Monday, many persons of foreign nationality being present besides the members of the State and city governments.

—Forest, brush, and meadow fires are blazing fiercely in Worcester, Norfolk, and Middlesex counties, Mass., doing great damage, and in some instances are beyond control. In the Hackensack Valley and Long Island, N. Y., wood fires are also raging.

—An out-building of the Long Beach Hotel, near Hunter's Point, L. I., burned early Friday morning. In it the musicians had sleeping rooms, one of them being consumed by the flames, and the others narrowly escaping suffocation.

—Frank James was acquitted at Gallatin Thursday afternoon of the murder of Frank McMillan and participation in the Winston train robbery. Yells and cheers greeted the verdict of the jury, and the entire town shouted itself hoarse for an hour afterward.

—Dusseldorf, in Germany, and the island of Ischia, were disturbed by earthquake shocks Tuesday. No damage resulted.

—Count de Chambord bequeathed 500,000 francs to the Roman Propaganda, 100,000 francs to the poor of Paris, and 150,000 to the convent at Goritz.

—At Le Puy, France, Wednesday, a large concourse attended the ceremonies of the unveiling of a statue to Lafayette. Messrs. Morton and Sargent, Ministers to France and Germany, were among the distinguished persons present.

—No Chinese troops have yet entered Tonquin, but they are massing on the frontier. France is preparing for a naval demonstration in the vicinity of Canton, and is getting ready large numbers of reenforcements. A high Chinese official says if France does not settle the Hue treaty question with the Marquis Tseng war is inevitable.

—An article printed in the Paris Intransigeant by Henri Rochefort, abusing King Humbert, has aroused great indignation throughout Italy. The article accused the king of having pocketed money subscribed by the French for the Ischia sufferers, while he, at the same time, was urging Germany to annihilate France. An Italian officer waited upon Rochefort and demanded satisfaction for the insult added to his king, but Rochefort refused to grant him a hostile meeting.

—The Governor of the Dutch East Indies telegraphs that the town of Telokbelong was probably totally destroyed by the recent volcanic eruption. The district in which that town is situated is entirely inaccessible, as all round it is obliterated. There is nothing from Lamplong, on the southern coast of Sumatra. Some of the lighthouses in the Straits are standing, but the lights are extinct. The report of the destruction of Tjeringine by the tidal wave and the drowning of 10,000 people there is confirmed.

FINNEY ON MASONRY.

The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Pres. Charles G. Finney of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75c; per dozen $7.50. Paper cover 35c; per dozen, $3.50.
No Christian's library is complete without it. Send for a copy in cloth and get a catalogue of books and tracts sold by the NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION. 221 W. MADISON ST. CHICAGO.

THE BROKEN SEAL;

Or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene.
One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50.
This deeply interesting narative shows what Masonry has done and is capable of doing in the Courts, and how bad men control the good men in the lodge and protect their own members when guilty of great crimes. For sale at 221 W. MADISON ST., CHICAGO, by THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

"THE WHOLE IS BETTER THAN A PART," AND YOU HAVE IT HERE IN A "NUT-SHELL."
SECRET SOCIETIES ILLUSTRATED.
Containing the signs, grips, passwords, emblems, etc. of Freemasonry (Blue Lodge and to the fourteenth degree of the York rite). Adoptive Masonry, Revised Odd-fellowship, Good Templarism, the Temple of Honor, the United Sons of Industry, Knights of Pythias and the Grange, with affidavits, etc. Over 250 cuts, 99 pages, paper cover. Price, 25 cents; $2.00 per dozen.

THE NOYES PORTABLE BOOK CASE.
Holds not only 30 to 50 volumes, but the Unabridged Dictionary, the latter either opened or closed. It is made of dark cherry or black walnut, elegantly finished, and being on casters is practically a Revolving Book Case. Lawyers, ministers, doctors and scholars have found that it fills "the long felt want," and others, with fewer books, find it an ample Book Case. It has attachments for holding large atlases and magazines, also a Reading Machine which removes that embargo on reading, the task of holding up a heavy book by the hour, and makes reading and study so easy that there is no excuse for ignorance. The "Machine" holds the book by the covers; the leaves are held open with a Leaf Holder, which, by a touch, can be removed or replaced. The book tilts to any angle and is pivoted to turn to any position. A Clamp attaches it to a table or desk. An Extension Arm connects it with the book case or your easy chair, for which purpose attachments are always provided. This elegant outfit is sold at a remarkably low price. Send for circular.

THE PUREST IS THE BEST.

In the selection of SUNDAY-SCHOOL PAPERS, the most important point to be considered is the moral tone of the subject matter. If this is of a questionable character, the papers should be shunned, no matter how large, how attractive, or how low the price. Such papers are
COSTLY AT ANY PRICE.
The country is being flooded with S. S. literature that is largely composed of what may be properly termed "RELIGIOUS FICTION," the tendency of which is to create a distaste for sound reading and foster an appetite for fiction of a more deleterious character.
The engravings of these papers are equally objectionable. In many cases a lady or girl dressed in the height of fashion is made the HEROINE OF A STORY, thus putting the highest sanction to extravagance and pride. With such instructors in our Sunday-schools we cannot expect the children to grow up with a love for sound literature and with correct ideas of Christian propriety. With a view of supplying S. S. papers, of a pure and elevating character, the publishers are issuing
FOUR MONTHLY PAPERS.
They are FREE FROM FICTION, and the cuts are chosen with great care. While they are thus carefully edited, they are not lacking in attractiveness. They are well printed on beautiful tinted paper. The children are delighted with them. The very low price at which this line of S. S. papers is issued, places them within the reach of even schools of limited means

The uniformity with which a secret society turns up every time the cause of a row or a war is searched out ought before long to receive some attention from our political philosophers. The riots directed against the Jews in Hungary and Croatia the Austrian police are just finding out have been instigated or directed by secret societies; and several officers of the orders have been arrested. So too in China, now that a foreign war is agitating that cumbrous empire, directly a secret society—the "White Lily," a choice and characteristic misnomer, like all the rest of the lodge tribe—which has some objection to the reigning dynasty, has begun stirring up insurrection and war in some of the provinces.

Martin Luther was born November 10, 1483. The whole Protestant world is uniting in the memorial services which that branch of the church calling itself by the name of the great reformer is holding throughout this 400 year. Most of the Lutheran churches of the United States are holding about this time a Luther jubilee; while in Germany almost every prominent event of his life is marked by a great religious festival. The city of Erfurt, on the 8th and 9th of August, celebrated the entrance of Luther as a student into the University of that town with a great historical procession augmented by 1,000 students and 300 singers from Berlin and Wiemar. Thursday, September 12th, a yet greater festival was held at Wittenberg, where Oct. 31, 1517, Luther nailed his immortal theses upon the church door. Delegations from England, Scotland and Ireland, Hungary, Austria and France were present, and a multitude numbered at 50,000 filled the little city. Crown Prince Frederick William with a number of the German nobility led in the various exercises of the day, among which was the opening of Luther Hall. At Berlin a monument to the reformer is being erected in charge of a committee of which Field Marshal Von Moltke is a member. The city council of Berlin will devote, it is reported, $2,000 to the publication and distribution of a small life of Luther among evangelical families in the city. The sum of $6,250 will be spent in circulating other Luther literature, and $37,500 will be devoted to the erection of a home for the daughters of Evangelical clergymen and schoolmasters. The city has made a free grant of land on which the home is to be built.

In 1874 a reunion of the old Abolitionists was held in Chicago through the efforts of the late Z. Eastman, the successor of Benjamin Lundy as editor of the Western organ of that great movement. It is announced that on the 2nd of October next a reunion of all Abolitionists now living, and the relatives of the dead, will be held in New York to commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of the formation of the City Anti-slavery Society in 1833, and of the great riot which was raised to overthrow it. From a member of this society proceeded an address in 1838 advocating anti-slavery voting, which bore fruit in the nomination of James G. Birney for President in 1840.

The well-remembered apathy of the French people during the British campaign in Egypt and the withdrawal of their forces from participation in that conflict, may cause surprise that the aggressions upon Madagascar and Anam are continued with a bold hand. This week reports show that the peaceful temper of the people has again prevailed over the plots of the politicians who for the time are at the head of affairs. It is believed that should the present ministry insist on war with China, or should they be unable to prevent a war, they would be forced to resign. The French people have had enough of wars for a century. Napoleon drained the nation of its men and money until he left it for St. Helena like a skeleton. His latest successor followed in the same steps as fast and as far as his weak ambition could carry him. To pay the immense indemnity to Germany the whole nation impoverished itself with enthusiasm. There is hope that the repeated lessons have not been lost upon the most warlike of the European nations; and that the popular sentiment will cut short the ambition of its cabinets.

What do the French want in Tonquin? is a question answered in more ways than one. An old treaty with China, by which, substantial aid having been given by the French to one of the emperors, the Tonquin district was ceded in return, is one answer. This treaty was made in 1787 and is much like an outlawed street-railway charter—a fine document to get up a fight over. Another is that Tonquin is represented as a fine country—a land of "milk and honey" and nobody making good use of its resources. The Figaro, a leading French journal, says the land is worth the trouble of occupying it; that it is one of the richest countries in the world with gold mines rivaling California and Australia. The natives use that metal for exchange; the females of the Muongs of the Black river, on their way to and from market, gamble with thousands of francs worth of it, without caring whether they win or lose. The mines of Talan, near Yuenkiang, on the Red river, were visited by the Commission of the Meikong, who found gold there in bars as well as dust. Still higher, near the source of the Red river, the precious metal is obtained in large quantities. Silver also is not rare, and copper is found everywhere, all the domestic utensils of the people being made of this metal. The tin mines are not worked for want of capital, although those worked near Mong-tsze, in Yunnan, near the Red river, are the most valuable known to exist. Zinc, lead, iron and bismuth are also known. The coal mines, however, are the most important of all. With cupidity and ambition as the ruling motives for this Oriental war, which from last week's news is becoming more bloody, it ought to be impossible for the French to succeed in their enterprise.

—One who claims to have been a member of the Grand Army of the Republic having written to the American Wesleyan, that that order had no oath in its initiaition, Bro. Wardner replies: "Two responsible men almost in hailing distance of where we are writing were talking about the said G. A. R., and one of them said to the other, 'I would not take another such an oath as we did when we joined for my right arm.' Perhaps he joined with it the horrible fact that they were required to kneel over a coffin while taking the oath. The coffin business is said to have been since dispensed with in administering the oath. They swear the candidate most unmercifully in Syracuse, the declaration of the correspondent to the contrary notwithstanding."

THE GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC.

SOME REASONS WHY A LOYAL SOLDIER SHOULD NOT JOIN THE GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC.

[Paper read before the Birmingham, Ia., Christian Association.]

1. The war is over.

There was a necessity during the continuance of the conflict that men should be mustered into the service and shoulder the musket. There was a war and the nation was in peril. The State could and did prescribe an oath to be taken, but no one was called on to take that oath without knowing what it was. And wherever there were conscientious scruples, the oath was modified. In the service a countersign was used, and yet it is doubtful if it was of any value. The enemy generally found out ours, and our own men twisted it beyond all recognition.

2. The object of the war is attained.

The Union has been preserved. For years there was a discussion of the relative powers of the States and the Nation; then the appeal to arms; then the decision.

3. Slavery is no more.

There may be much that is as bad or worse than slavery, but the general government no longer extends its protecting ægis over the master to encourage him in deeds of cruelty. Why then do we need the Grand Army? It is not organized to combat any existing evils.

4. Avowed objects.

(1) To preserve fraternal feelings among those who have been brothers in arms. (2) To assist the families of deceased soldiers, sailors and marines, and to educate their children. (3) To aid returned soldiers, sailors and marines in obtaining honorable employment, and to secure for them their proper position in the community. (4) To choose for our rulers honest and loyal men, pledged to secure to the nation in peace that for which we fought in war. (Page 15 of the ritual.)

WHAT ARE THE FACTS?

They have a wall of secrecy around them to guard against those outside. Against whom do they guard? We are not encamped on Southern battlefields with foes about us. There is not a hostile camp anywhere. It is like Don Quixote fighting the windmills. We are asked to join an association secret and oath-bound and against whom? Certainly not against the South or rebels, for we are not within reach of them, or they of us. But practically, here in the Northern States, it is against the younger portion of the community whose age debarred them from entering the service, against loyal soldiers, some as loyal and brave as any in the service, because they do not see fit to throw away their manhood and submit to the degrading ceremonials of initiation. They erect the barrier of a senseless and wicked oath against many of us who struggled on the battlefield and suffered in hospital and prison. Unless we submit to this unknown, irresponsible power and degrade ourselves by passing through their senseless and repulsive initiation, we are cut off from fraternal relations. Is that carrying out their avowed object?

5. The real object.

This is to enable some unscrupulous politicians to foist themselves into places of honor and profit for which they are not at all fitted.

Where did it originate? In Washington D. C., the home of the sutler and bounty broker, the source of much of our political corruption, the place where was hatched the Credit Mobilier and other fat jobs, the Star-route robbery and other recent frauds.

When did it originate? In 1868, when the results of the war had been attained. Perhaps those who started it had never smelt powder, perhaps played the shyster and poltroon while brave men were fighting. These try to catch the brave and loyal soldiers and to make them tributary to their own ambitious designs.

6. It was by the aid of secret, irresponsible organizations in the Southern States that many of them were hurried into secession. When the people there had a chance to vote on the question they voted to stay in the Union. But these secret organizations thwarted the will of the people. Men who were sent to conventions pledged to vote for the Union, were by some treasonable, secret influence induced or compelled to vote for secession.

7. The wiles and tricks of those who loved Masonry more than country lost us many a battle, destroyed a multitude of loyal lives, prolonged the war, and saved Jeff Davis and his fellow conspirators from a richly deserved fate. And now, shall we allow the hood-wink of this progeny of Masonry to blind our eyes and rob us of our liberty?

What are the struggles of our race for liberty but struggles against secret, irresponsible, unjust power? Thus was Europe cursed for centuries by the secret power of the Inquisition. In England our revolutionary war really began in the 17th century in the opposition to the secret decrees of the Star Chamber, and Charles I. was beheaded because the men in Parliament then were not to be cheated or cajoled by any such secret machinations as lately robbed the gallows of traitors.

All the recent secret organizations were gotten up by Masons, high in the order, and they rule them in the interest of the parent order. Gen. Albert Pike, who led 5,000 yelling savages at the battle of Pea Ridge to kill and scalp our loyal soldiers, is the highest officer of the Masonic order. Whatever inures to the benefit of that order adds to his honor and prestige, and the Grand Army of the Republic and all of the lesser secret orders are so many satellites to the great luminary Masonry.

The avowed object is to aid loyal soldiers, its real effect is to aid and support Masonry and keep up the honors of Gen. Albert Pike and of every other Mason of a high degree.

8. There is required a "promise of implicit obedience to the encampment of which you may be a member and to the lawful rules and orders of the Grand Encampment to which it is subordinate.

Join if you will, but do not profess to do it to aid the loyal soldier, or to guard against the enemies of the Republic; not while Masons govern it for the sole use and benefit of themselves as Masons; for all the honors that go to Masonry only add to the honor and influence of Albert Pike.

A LOYAL SOLDIER.

MASONIC TRIPLE TRIANGLE.

In this we fancy we see a triune demon composed of tobacco, whisky and lodgery and ranging in character in the order mentioned; the last being the climax. Tobacco with its charming names: "Honey Dew," "Sweet Clover," "Lady Twist," "Happy Thought" and the "Solace," comes to us as badness always does, with sweet names. The tobacco spirit needs trying. See Pres. C. A. Blanchard's sermon in Cynosure, Jan. 4th. God bless the author! This charmer, tobacco, injures all it touches, as all bad agents must. This fact is known and affirmed by all candid and competent authority. No part of the man escapes its enervating sting, from the grossest to the most delicate power and faculty of our exquisite being. It blunts the moral sense as palsy does the body. It weakens the mind as well as the body and greatly shortens human life. Nobody can afford such human devastation—society cannot, the church cannot, the state cannot. Germany took action against tobacco. It weakened her armies by making her soldiers timid and weak.

I said it injures all it touches. Why, the very ground, the fertile soils, the fruitful fields, by the ten thousand acres grow sick and get a sort of narcotic consumption, and literally die out in their productive capacity. Ride over (for it is too far to walk) the miles of murdered lands—bled to death by the most poisonous of plants, in Virginia, and stop with open eyes and read from a thousand fields the sad epitaph: "Died of tobacco consumption." Then echoing from as many graveyards the same sad story. Why will our otherwise noble men do such "despite to the spirit" of their manhood? Why ministers, class-leaders and deacons lead the rising generation to imbecility, immorality and premature graves by bad example? "It is a lamentation and shall be for a lamentation." O brethren we must "cry aloud and spare not" till this dreadful habit is made unpopular and counted with the great evils now blighting the race. More than a quarter of a billion of dollars annually spent to dwarf our nation! But the waste of manhood in its gravest sense, outweighs all else a thousand times. That we have precious and very dear friends pining under the tobacco pestilence only intensifies our opposition to it. Why should it not?

The next agent in this dire triad of the nether world, is "Prince Alcohol." Perhaps he is now less dangerous than the third person in this bad trio, the Lodge. He is less popular and more thoroughly known. The religious world agree that he is an enemy, and are dealing him deserved and heavy blows. Few stop to consider that tobacco is a potent auxiliary to the liquor pest, and less that both combine in making up the triple triangle, the crowning jewel of the lodge. A lodge without tobacco and liquors would be very much like an engine minus fuel and water. The lodge must have its "fulminating powder," its "strong powder"—that is "beer, ale, etc.," and its "spiritous liquors," then "charge" and "fire;" that is "fill the glass" and "drink," in order to be orthodox Masons of the A. A. Scottish Rite. (See Masonic Glossary, p. 582, "Scottish Rite Masonry." This you see is "high-toned" Masonry taken by our D.D.'s and other wise men in church and State. When these careworn dignitaries, pressed down by hard work in the lodge, go from labor to refreshment, cords of demijohns and cigars are in demand to solace the tired brethren. With these Masonic cartridges they "charge" and "fire" till some of them discharge in the most Masonic style. Think of the Triennial Conclave in Chicago in 1880 and the pails of "sour mash." Does not this kind of a triangle form a fine jewel for the church? Brother Morris would advise as many of the craft to get into the churches as can be conscientiously taken in, to help adorn the church. Read carefully the following "Ode to Masonry" on page 288, "Scottish Rite Masonry."

"'Twas thou, blest Masonry, that brought
The CHOICEST gifts to man;
And thou it was the lesson taught
E'er since the world began,
That charity can soothe each pain
Relieve mankind from woe;
That Masonry hath power to gain
A paradise below."

If Masonry can gain a paradise below and the "Grand Lodge above" what need of the church?

Ans. It is the church that needs Masonry (?) So aet our peaceful divines! TEETOTALER.

THE EXTENT TO WHICH WE MUST GLORIFY GOD.

BY ELDER A. SIMS.

According to the theory and practice of some persons, religion is only intended to enter in to the great affairs of life. But so far from this being the case, the Apostle teaches that in everything we do—great and small—temporal and spiritual—whether it is so small a thing as eating and drinking, we are to aim not at our own comfort and self-gratification, but at God's glory. No action is to be performed, no work to be engaged in, no step in life to be taken, unless we are influenced by a supreme and sincere desire that God may be glorified. There is no event of our every-day life, however trivial, into which religion should not enter, and in the performance of which, the glory of Jehovah is not concerned. Talk to some professing Christians about the duty of serving God always, and with an air of self-satisfaction and innocence, they will tell you, that they have not time to perform many religious duties; just as if there were only some particular actions that could, or ought to be done religiously.

Now this is a most serious and lamentable delusion. The Bible nowhere teaches, that under any circumstances, is this religious and ruling motive to be separate from anything we do. We are to plow and sow and sell our goods with the same singleness of view to the glory of God, that we go to church on the Sabbath, or pray in our families and read the Bible. Mental or physical work done from this motive, can as truly be said to be religious in the sight of the Lord, as praying or attending the means of grace. What cannot be done from this motive, is not to be done at all; no matter whether it respects our occupation, dress, eating, drinking or anything else. The great and first question to be asked, before deciding on anything, is not, "Will it be advantageous to my interests, secure me the favor of men and help me along in life?" but, "Will it please my Lord and conduce to his glory?" If, after the consideration of this question, and much prayer, we see that it would be acceptable to God, our path is clear, but not otherwise. If this principle were carried out, how much, of what is now popular among the great mass of professors, would have to be given up? How speedily would the puffing and blowing, spitting and chewing of tobacco-using professors be given up? How soon would superfluous ornaments in dress be abandoned; and the various popular trimmings and fixings be substituted by the adornment of good works? What a revolution would take place in the methods of supporting God's cause? The unseemly church sprees would give place to the freewill offerings of consecrated souls! What a blessed change would take place in the general conversation of professing Christians! And light, frothy discourse, foolish talking and jesting would be renounced for sound speech and edifying words! How soon would idle pastimes be set aside, and the time spent in such employment as will stand the fires of the judgment day! It is sadly too true, however, that many of the professed children of God, instead of first consulting the Lord, are influenced mainly by considerations of temporal advantage. The question with them is not what God will think about certain actions, but how they will look, and what people will say of them! But what is the end of all such conduct? Why, facts of history and the testimony of the Bible unite in saying, that the end thereof is disaster, shame and sorrow. Look at the career of Lot after he had separated from Abraham. Because the country near to Sodom was well watered and suitable for his flocks, he chose that place, apparently not caring for the notorious wickedness that prevailed there. But what was the result of this choice? Did he not lose all his property there and some of the members of his family? Oh, we may think to benefit ourselves in some instances, by pursuing a course that is not conducive to the glory of God; but we shall be miserably disappointed. "There is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death." Prov. 16: 25. Temporal appearances may seem at times to be unfavorable to the adoption of the right path, but no earthly loss, however great, must deter us in this matter. Not acting from the principle here laid down, explains why there is so much darkness on the souls of so many Christians. Christ says: "If, therefore, thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light. But if thine eye be evil, thy whole body shall be full of darkness." Matt. 6: 22, 23.

SHORT SERMON.

TEXT: It is a shame to speak of the things that are done of them in secret.

MY BRETHREN:—No one can reasonably doubt that Oliver Cromwell was an orthodox preacher of the Word. The IRONSIDES was one of his sermons, which will have to be preached again if Freemasonry persists in its abominable work. But the preacher of that sermon of the present day might not perhaps be so ready to decline the crown as was Oliver Cromwell.

In his address to his last Parliament he used the following words, "Make it a shame to see men bold in sin and profaneness, and God will bless you. You will be a blessing to the nation; and by this will be more repairers of breaches than by any thing in the world."

My friends, so long as Freemasons are permitted to boast of their shame, which is undermining and breaching the foundations of our republican institutions; so long as our clergymen fail to hold up their shame for the deprecation of Christian society, our nation cannot be blest. The breaches made by civil war cannot be repaired. It is impossible that a stable peace can be established on a Masonic basis. A cessation of war brought about by connivance between the Masonic and Ku-klux lodges, cannot prove a lasting peace. God can never bless such a shameless institution as Freemasonry, nor approve the work that is done of its members in secret.

My friends, Freemasonry is an infidel sneer under the guise of religion. The honors which it offers to Christ are a crown of thorns, a royal mantle of purple, and a sceptre of reed. It bends the knee and cries, All hail! in mockery, while preparing to drive nails into the feet and hands of its victims. A people who can bring themselves to think that Freemasonry is "good enough a religion for them," are no more fit for maintaining republican government than the Hindoo worshippers of monkeys would be.

My friends, if there is no serious end or purpose in life; if the most solemn interests of humanity are a mere jest; if man is really no higher than the professional buffoon; if there is no difference between a joke and a prayer; if an organized lie is better than the truth, in short, if God can be mocked and mankind disgraced with safety to human happiness, then join the lodge and become devoted Freemasons.

My friends, you cannot safely be jokers in politics any more than in religion. You must be serious, earnest, truthful, God-fearing men, and utter despisers of the Masonic lodge in order to enjoy the blessings of free government and personal liberty. If you vote for a Freemason for President, then you vote for Freemasonry; and if you vote for that, you glory in your own and the nation's shame. It is an accursed thing which political cunning has hidden under its tent, and thinks to escape the eyes of God and men. But if you would save your own moral dignity and that of the nation, you must rise in your moral strength; sift out the criminals by your elections, and ballot them to death.

SO MOTE IT BE.

Let the covetous man remember that of all the things he can grasp and hold with his greedy hands, he can take nothing along when he leaves this world.

"I have had many things in my hands," says Luther, "and I have lost them all; but whatever I have been able to place in God's hand I still possess." Lesson: "God's hand is the only safe treasury."

IN MEEKNESS INSTRUCTING THOSE THAT OPPOSE THEMSELVES.

The world, taught by the evangel of our Master, is not slow nor unwilling to relieve suffering, as far as it can be relieved, and to help men bear it, as far as humanity can be helped; but it wants to know that the sufferer has not brought it on himself, and that its charities will not be used to feed the fires that have already consumed the fair endowment of God. Somehow we have more sympathy with a fellow mortal who abuses some one else than we have with one who abuses himself. A man who lies on himself is held up to be a worse man than one who slanders his neighbor. A man who lives the life and cherishes the spirit of a miser is not quite so highly respected as a thief. Suicide is the worst form of murder. I suppose it is because self-love lies at the basis of and is the measure of all that the law requires in regard to our brother. Love your neighbor as you love yourself. If the fountain is so corrupted that a man will hate himself, the stream will be polluted so much that he will also hate everybody else.

By those who "oppose themselves" we understand those who stand out against the truth, either from ignorance or prejudice, or passion. These persons are to be taught, instructed, and instructed with all meekness and gentleness, in the hope that they will repent and acknowledge the truth.

We are very apt to consider opposition to the truth as personal—as opposition to us. It is not. It does not affect me in the least. If a man deny revelation or deny his own existence, it does not invalidate my faith or dethrone my reason. The man who sins against wisdom wrongs his own soul. The man who hates wisdom loves death. But he cannot wrong my soul. Nor is his opposition to truth to be construed into personal opposition to me.

It is always unfortunate when any one handles the truth in such a way as to awaken resentment or to excite feelings of bitterness. Many a good cause has suffered more by the injudicious advocacy of its friends than it has by the violent opposition of its enemies. Some rash advocate will slash away, like Peter did, at at the ears of opposers, in place of aiming directly at their hearts. Some people will clutch a principle as a vulture does a dove, and hold it, not from love, but from passion. We must learn to love the truth for its own sake, and love the souls of those who oppose it. How often it happens that the cause of error gains a foothold by the peculiar gentleness of those who maintain it! In music it is possible to have sweetness of voice, cadence that fall away as gently as the evening light; swelling transports that rush on like the sweeping billows of the tempest; monotones full of suggestion of rest as the rain on the roof which lulled us to the sleep of happy childhood; bright staccato that arrest the mind like the dashes of hail against the window pane; smooth legsto that glide away with the mellow charms of silver bells. Yet amidt all these glories of variety and beauty there lurke the evils of falsehood and unrest, because the sentiment is false. But over there, making jarring discord and offending every sense, you may hear the song of truth rendered so unattractively that no one stops to listen, no one waits to hear, no one cares to remain.

When God would have his servant sing very sweetly he touched his lips with a coal from the altar. Many truths have been unheeded because unwisely presented. Many lies have been believed because the actor has performed his part so well.

Let the teacher of truth always remember that no matter how earnestly error may be cherished and contended for it will always be hurtful to him who cherishes it. He, therefore, is an object of pity as much as of blame. Standing in the field one day a man imagined that he heard a voice telling him where great treasures of wealth might be found. He began the work and is digging away, day after day, in a hopeless endeavor, but feeling sure that he will find. The hard earnings of many years have been wasted already in his vain endeavors. You say he is insane. Let us not be hash in judging. What shall we call those who waste their whole lives in a delusion—spend time, money, energy, bend every power of soul and body to secure an object that cannot be found in the way of their endeavors? One man wastes an estate—a thousand lose their souls. Where is the profit? What possible advantage in opposing the truth? A creature's unbelief will not make the word of God false. A creature's laugh will not avert judgment. A creature's opposition to the eternal truth of God will not change it in the least. The soul is only opposing itself.

The spirit of truth is immortal. She goes forth clad in the beautiful armor of light, and is serene when dangers press thickest about her pathway. She holds converse with the humblest believer, and lights up with the pure atmosphere of heaven all who love her. It is vain that men close their ears to her prophecy or lift up the sword against her person. They that hearken to her warning are wise, and they that fight against her fight against God. One is cruel to himself and to all who come within the scope of his influence who cherishes a falsehood. Believe me, there is no form of error that is not baneful, evil in itself and in its influence.

Evidently the soul is opposing itself. How then shall I instruct it? The word directs me to do it meekly. The condition of the enemy of truth demands this.

The exhibition of harshness is altogether unseemly in a Christian who has before him the perfect model in the teachings of Jesus. Tenderly, pleadingly, authoritatively did he teach. But in him the prophetic words were fulfilled: "He shall not cry nor lift up, nor cause his voice to be heard in the streets; the bruised reed he shall not break, the smoking flax he shall not quench." It is always sad when one pleading in the name of truth, serene as the firmanent and majestic as the heavens above it, gives way to violence, or plays the trick of the arrogant dictator. The work we do should never belie our profession. The way we do it should never conflict with our profession. Better be mute than teach with impatience. Better let error go unreproved than reprove in such a way as belies your own profession of the truth. This way is the wise one. You are not very likely to convince a man that he is wrong and you are right if you make him angry. "I will make you," said Jesus, "fishers of men." A man, to have sucess, must take a delicate line and slender rod and little hook, and go up noiselessly to the water's edge and drop in the hook gently, and then wait patiently. Some people act as though they had a fence rail for a rod, and a cable for a line, and a ship's anchor for a hook, bated with an alligator, and make the waters boil in their fury. Men are never convinced by harshness—the truth does not need it. You can break the body on the wheel, crush or bruise it by force, but the instruction of meekness alone will win the soul from error.

Not only this, but we must not assume an air of haughtiness and superiority. Political parties are vigorously protesting against political masters. The unconverted world has been protesting for centuries against the same spirit in religion. I need not sit down beside a man and say, "I am going to try to convert you; I am a good deal holier and wiser and better than you. If you are saved at all it must be by a miracle. You are wrong here, and here, and here." You set the man at once in opposition to you. He has been opposing himself. Now it is a kind of relief to oppose you. You have held up your superiority in place of God's truth—your righteousness in place of the righteousness of Christ, and the adversary has the better of you every time. Paul did not say, "I am by nature far better than you," but he appeals to men because of the greatness of the love of Christ—a love which rescued even the chief of sinners. Albert Barnes says: "Win his heart first, then modestly and kindly show him what the truth is, with as unassuming a spirit as possible."—Rev. W. T. Meloy, D. D., in the Evangelical Repository.

LIBERTY.

"Strange," said a Teuton friend to us the other day, "that in this boasted land of liberty I cannot drink what I please and sell what I please!" But it is not strange, for the very moment such conduct is allowed unrestrained liberty ceases in the land. Civil liberty is defined by Webster to be natural liberty so abridged and restrained as to secure the interest of the society, State and nation. But if the saloon-keeper is allowed to sell as he pleases, then drunkards are manufactured and the welfare of families and friends is interfered with, and the State and the nation injured. Parents are robbed of a son, the family of a husband and a father, and the State of a citizen, and gain in return a useless, dependent, vicious criminal, both costly and dangerous to the State. On this subject Canon Farrar well says:

"It is a monstrous thing to mix up the idea of liberty with unrestricted license. There was nothing common in the idea of freedom and the unrestricted liberty of getting drunk. When they knew the vast evils which arose from the drinking habits of masses, and the terrible results which they saw exhibited on every hand, they claimed the right in the name of common justice, in the name of common sense, and in the name of morality to interfere by legislation to remove the cause of this terrible misery. Do let them get rid of that terrible reproach which clings to them, that drink was the cause of a great part of the crime in this country." He urged them to take to heart the words of Thomas Carlyle, who said "that a good man be free, as we call it, and be permitted to unfold himself in works of boldness and goodness, is surely a blessing to him, immense and indispensible to him and to those about him. But that a bad man be free, be permitted to unfold himself in his particular way, is, contrariwise, the fatalest curse you could inflict upon him—a curse and nothing else to him and to all his neighbors. Thus the very heavens call upon you to persuade, to compel him into something of well-doing."—Christian Press.

"FEAR HATH TORMENT," saith the Apostle. Some Christians are paralyzed for life by the mono-mania of fear. They fear to pray in public. They fear to be singular for right. They are afraid to give to the Lord's cause lest they come to want. They fear to rebuke a brother for his fault. They fear to confess Christ before men. They are afraid to leave an old church or party that has left the truth. They are afraid to espouse a good cause where it is not popular. They fear shadows and fail to secure the substance. They are like the invalid afflicted with the delusion that he was made of brittle clay and if struck would snap into fragments. He was cured by a friend deliberately upsetting him from his carriage, when he arose from the ground sound in mind as well as body. The cure for a foolish fear is faith and a forced obedience of duty. Just as there is one cure for selfishness—self-sacrifice; as there is one cure for spiritual laziness—work, there is one cure for timidity and that is to plunge into a disagreeable duty before the ague shiver has time to come on. Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might.—Sandy Lake News.

ROMANISM AND MASONRY OFFICIALLY STATED.

The Toronto Mail of the 3d ult. contains a report of the trial which took place in Montreal at about that date in which an unsuccessful political candidate sued a Montrial paper for libel, in publishing that he was a Freemason. The testimony of Father Gibaud, of St. Sulpice Seminary, at one time professor of theology, whose opinion has great weight in reference to the attitude of the Romish church towards Freemasonry, is worth a critical examination.

During the late Dominion elections La Minerve intimated that certain of the liberal candidates were Freemasons, a statement always sufficient to alienate votes in this province. A. E. Poirier, an advocate here, the unsuecessful candidate for Terrebonne, feeling himself aggrieved, instituted an action for libel, which is now being heard before the Police Magistrate.

Father Antoine Gibaud, of St. Sulpice Seminary, late Professor of Theology and one of the best authorities on this subject, testified at follows:

Q. What is the doctrine of the Roman Catholic church on the subject of Freemasons or other secret societies, and what is the punishment given by the church to Catholics belonging to them?

A. The church understands by secret societies condemned by her, those whose members are bound by an oath, and those who have an evil motive in view, that is to say, those who are hostile to the church, the government, and society. She condemns also those secret societies in which a compulsory promise or oath is made to execute all orders given by the heads of the society. All Catholics are forbidden to belong to any of these societies under pain of the most severe punishment. The penalties are these:—His Holiness Pope Pius IX., in his apostolic decree of the 12th October, 1869, which is to Catholics the most authentic and, at the same time, the most recent order of the church, included among those who would be subject to excommunication by the sole fact, those who join the Masonic fraternity or the Carbonari, or any such societies, but it was not Pius IX., however, properly speaking, who first excommunicated Freemasons. The same was done by his predecessors, Clement XII., Pius VII., and Leo XII. All that Pius IX. did was to renew and confirm the order. The church in this province had the same punishment against secret societies in general and Freemasons in particular. In fact a Roman Catholic Freemason is excommunicated, and those excommunicated are among the number of those in which absolution is reserved to the Pope. According to Monsieur De Segar they have no part in the church; have no right to take part in Mass or other services of the Catholic church; cannot receive the sacraments, and if they remain in this state they have no right to be buried in consecrated ground.

Q. Do you consider that the fact of being a Freemason is of a nature to discredit a Roman Catholic in the church, as he is in the opinion of Roman Catholics? A. I would here distinguish a Roman Catholic worthy of the name. I believe that the sole fact of belonging to the Freemasons would be sufficient to discredit all Roman Catholics among such, but among Catholics who are only Catholics in name, I believe that the feeling is very different relative to the esteem in which they hold a Roman Catholic Freemason.

Cross-examined:—Q. Would you include among secret societies prohibited by the church those which bear the name of Freemasons, but have only a philanthropic motive, and do not take any oath or make any engagement such as before enumerated?

A. No, not exactly; but I would consider such a society very suspicious on account of its name and the vagueness of its aim.—Toronto Mail, Aug. 3.

THE CONCLAVE OF 1883.

FUSS AND FEATHERS.

[From a letter from Rev. J. W. McFarland, San Francisco, in the United Presbyterian.]

What I was going to write about was the assembling in this city last week of the great triennial conclave of Knights Templar. Their coming was a great public event that has beeu talked of in the papers for the last three or four months, and now that it is over a little account of it may not be uninteresting to your eastern readers. Last Monday week they began to pour into the city by thousands, from almost every city in the United States, until by the middle of the week it was supposed that there were in San Francisco not less than fifty thousand of them and their friends and others who came to see their parade. The city had made great preparations to receive them in a grand and hospitable style. Thousands of dollars had been raised to provide for them the most sumptuous free lunches in public halls; other thousands upon thousands were spent decorating the principal streets and building splendid arches over them. These were all covered over with "Welcome, Sir Knights," and mottoes of the craft such as, "In hoc signo vinces," in large letters of gold, aud "Rex Regum; Dominus Dominorum," "Magna est Veritas et Prevalebit." Everywhere the red cross and other emblems of the order were to be seen. In every window of dwellings, stores and shops, wagons, gin mills, street cars—everything seemed to be veiled or daubed over with these flags or emblems of the order. A Jew, an undertaker, had stuck on the coffin in his show window, "Welcome, Sir Knights." I don't know whether he meant this as a big dry joke or not. The Jew and the knight of the cross being implacable enemies, the welcome was appropriately placed; but most likely it was placed there like most of the others, merely with an eye to business.

They made two graud parades—the first had iu it none but their own order; thc second (to lay the fouudatiou of the Garfield monument) included Freemasons and military companies. A man must be a Master Mason before he can become a Knight Templar. Knights Templar are therefore merely the upper crust of the Freemasons. Garfield was both, and if he had not been, although he was a good man and a man of much ability, he never would have been President. Masons say that no ouc of their number ever asks any one to join their society. But I know I have been asked and insisted upon by Masons to join their order, and the motive preseuted has always beeu that it would help me iuto this or that position. I have always rcplied to such inducements by repeating Rev. "Jim" Doolan's tcxt. He had been a slave, and could neither read nor write. My father often gave him work. One evening he wanted to quit early, "for," said he, "I hab a 'pintment to preach dis ebeuing at airly candle-light in de same place whar I preach de last' time." At "airly candle-light" I was there to hear him. There was a good audience. He took up a book—I don't know, and neither did he, whether it was a Bible or Robinson's Algebra. From the size or shape of it he doubtless thought it was a Bible, and maybe it was. "Now," said he, "my brederen, I can't tell de zackt spot whar my text am located, but it's somewhar in de lids of dis holy book; aud it's in dese words: Let ebery tub stan' on its own bottom"—a very good text, whether in the Bible or not. If Mr. Garfield had stood on his own bottom he would probably to-day have been only plain Mr. Garfield, as he was twenty years ago, when he came down occasionally to Wooster and preached in the little old Christian church on the corner, half a block from where I lived. He was then regarded as a good man and a good preacher—nothing more. To day, being a dead Knight Templar, he is almost worshiped as a god, and costly monumeuts are raised to perpetuate his momory.

The Knights and the Masons and the military were all in the parade on the day on which they laid the cornerstone of the Garfield monument. I will not describe the tomfoolery of the ceremonies, for if I were to do so in the ludicrous light in which they appeared to me you would not publish it.

The other parade, exclusively of the Knights, was the finest I ever saw, simply as a parade of splendid pomp and pageautry. It far surpassed the great parade of soldiers in Washington City at the close of the war. In this there were no dusty, weather-worn flags, torn with shot and shell; no scarred and haggard-looking battalions, that had so often marched to battle and death. This was a differeut affair, intended only as a gilded show. The most of them were fine, intelligent-looking men. The silk aud velvet uniforms, trimmed with silver and gold, were gorgeous; the flags and emblems were magnificent; the music and the marching were splendid. The St. Bernards of Chicago paid Lyon & Healy's Chicago Band four thousaud dollars and all expenses to come with them. It would be hard to find a company of better musiciaus, and they seemed to be well aware of that fact. Their drum-major, with his head-gear so fearfully and wonderfully made—whew! what strutting airs, as he led the band along the line of march! If the angel Gabriel, when he comes to blow that trumpet-blast that is to wake the dead and start the world on its parade before the judgment seat, should put on so much turkey-gobbler style he'd frighten all the timid saints away from paradise and start a panic in the crowd before the throne. But what would matter that when things of such vast moment as a "Conclave" show arc hanging in the balance! All praise, then, to him who doth so greatly strut and spread himself upon so great occasion! O earth and heaven and time, the past, the present and to come, bring all your windy honors into one big bugle-blast and blow it loud and long, to tell the adoring music-loving universe the greatness of this representative of Lyon & Healy's Band! (This puff isn't paid for.) The prizes for the best drilled commanderies were most beautiful, artistic and costly. The first an urn of gold and silver, and gold and silver quartz, and precious stones, the whole beautifully designed and elaborately wrought, costing three thousand dollars. The others were very fine, but not so costly. The St. Bernard Com mandery, of Chicago, came in great state in private palace cars, with Lyon & Healy's Band to set them off; and when the DeMollays of Louisville took the first prize, and the Rapers of Indianapolis the second, leaving the great St. Bernard's the third, they were quite crestfallen.

The speeches in answer to banquet toasts and the set addresses were of varied character, some very good and some not; some parts of them, especially where they indulged in unmeasured eulogy of Masonry and Knight Templarism, and traced their origin back to Solomon, when he was building the temple, were to an outsider about as tough and hard to swallow as the average California beef steak. If you were here, and your butcher would tell you that that fine tenderloin steak was really cut from the neck of one of the bulls of Bashan that bellowed and pawed the dust and fought like a valiant knight in the days of Solomon and the temple; or, if he would tell you that that "rib" roast was cut from the honest shoulder of one of the oxen that helped to pull the ark of the covenant through the desert to the promised land, when you would come to tackle them with your teeth you would say, Surely that butcher did tell the truth, and "magna est voritas" ought to be placed in letters of gold above his stall. But when these expounders and defenders of Masonry and Knight Templarism tell you that Solomon was a Master Mason, and other such stories as that, you feel that they have taxed you credulity much worse than your butcher would.

There was one part of the great show with which I was especially pleased. On Sabbath day as many of the Templars as could be packed into the vast pavilion were marched in, with all their gilded uniforms and glittering swords, to hear a sermon from one of the chaplains, or Graud Prelates, Bishop Kip, I believe. All seated, the big boss of all the commanderies arose with much solemuity of manner and said, "Templars, pray," and at the word all, like one piece of machinery, knelt down, crossed their swords, bowed their heads, and listened while the bishop read a really orthodox prayer, one in which God as the personal ruler of the universe, and Jesus as the Christ of God, the divine Saviour, were distinctly and definitely acknowledged. Now, there were among that kneeling multitude many infidels of every creed and type—the Tyndall and Huxley and Darwiuite, the pantheist, the spiritualist and the bald blasphemer, like Ingersoll, who don't believe in anything, only iu his own wisdom and importance. But Templarism had "the bulge" on them. They were compelled to pray—to make a public confession of faith in a personal God and a divine Saviour, for, at the close of the prayer, they all had to respond, "So mote it be." When Dennis was asked if his wife were resigned to her death, he said, "Faith, sur, she had to be." So with these fellows, they had to believe in God and prayer for once in their lives.

I have spoken of the "big boss"—Benj. Dean, of Boston—who came with as great pomp and show, in his special train, as if he had been the high Tycoon, or the Czar of Russia. I tried to get all his titles; first asked an intelligent Ohio man—a high-up man in one of the commanderies. He said he didn't know; that besides the separate titles of all the thirty-three degrees of Masonry, he had the additional ones of the Templar. Then I asked a spectacled man from Boston. He was highly adorned with badges and paraphernalia. From the way he first opened his mouth, I saw that he was an evolutiouist. He said with great politeness: "I am sorry that I cannot tell you without referring to the records. Even the one by which he is generally addressed, I cannot give you definitely. It is either Very Eminent or Most Eminent Master Sir Benjamin Dean. Whether it is very or most I have no absolute knowledge, although I have a strong conviction that it is 'most.'" It seemed to me that if he had had on another pair of glasses and about two more swords he might have mustered up some of the titles of his great chief. He might then have been able to go into the "thingness of the is" respecting the origin of the Knights—whether they might not have been evolved from the spur of a rooster or the tail of a peacock, rather than from such a groveling thing as a lizzard or a toad. Then I asked one of the De Mollays of Louisville. He posed with great dignity, as if he thought he was going to be interviewed by some such august personage as the reporter of the Weekly Mendocino Bullwhacker. Taking a cigar out of his mouth and holding it between two diamond-ringed fingers, he said: "——if I know whether I can or not, he's got so many of them. 'Sir,' 'Most Eminent Master,' 'Captain General,' 'Generalissimo,' and 'Commander in Chief of all thc Commanderies in the United States.' These are the principal heft of his titles as a Templar." He looked as if he thought I was making light of so grave a subject; and thanking him for the information given, I left, wondering at the greatness of this great Poo Gee Phontigen and most exalted Bang-a-bundus Bundorum. To this string of heavy titles there ought to be attached the little "esquire," as a sort of whip-cracker, so to speak.

Titles are not to be ridiculed nor despised. They are as harmless as poodle dogs, and in many ways they are useful. They help to preserve the equilibrium of society, and in many instances they are the heavy end of the concern and most important part of it. Where the titles are the heavy end, they balance up the other end and keep it from sinking into nothingness and oblivion. Many a man without his title would be but the shadow of weakness; with it he has the strength and noise of "Jupiter Tonans." You wouldn't lend that dead-beat, simply as Dick Dodler, 5 cents; but as "colonel" or "general" Dick Dodler, you would be almost anxious to lend him $5.00. Many a minister without his D. D. would be voted a very "weak brother;" but the two D's help him more than two sticking plasters, and transform his dullest trash into profundity and eloquence.

Well, the great conclave, with all its titled Knights, its pomp and pageantry, its grand parade, is already a thing of the past, and the costly decorations of last week are this week the harvest of the rag-gatherer; and this, after all, is about the measure and the substance of this world's glory.

KNIGHT TEMPLAR DRUNKENNESS.

[From the Pacific Missionary Advocate.]

The mental diet of Californians for the last mouth has had a sameness that is becoming disgusting to a healthy appetitite. It has been Knight Templars for breakfast, Knight Templars for dinner, and Knight Templars for supper. Knight Templars have been welcomed, thrice welcomed, petted, lauded, feasted, toasted, looked at in all their pomp and glitter, smiled upon, showered with bouquets, carried about to behold Californian wonders, published to the world as marvels of manliness, intelligence and morality—the very people fit to lay the corner-stone, not only of monuments to the memory of honored and lamented statesmen, but of universities, and of Christian churches dedicated to the servicc of God. We are led to inquire, what recompense are these shores to receive for all these honors bestowed? A financial harvest for San Francisco to be sure; but are we so blinded by the God of wealth as to look not beyond a small pile of yellow dust? What influence for morality, for purity and for religion will be left behind and felt on this wicked coast? When ex-governor Perkins forbade all members of the California Commandery, to enter any saloon to drink during the Conclave, we ventured to hope that the temperance cause was to be strengthed by the visit of these Sir Knights. How obtuse we were! Why did we not see that this very prohibition was an open acknowledgment of the failure of Knight Templarism as to moral reform. Here is an order of men whose every outward insignia declares them to be by profession Christian(?) soldiers warring against the flesh. If they are successful soldiers, or in other words, if their rites and ceremonies and vows and discipline are not a complete failure—a mere form without power or heart—how can fleshly appetites survive their lodge influence? Why then the necessity of forbidding members to visit drinking saloons? Has not Christian Knight Templarism taught all its members this much in the secret sanctuary? What would be thought if the village pastor, in accompanying his Christian flock to a Sabbath School Convention, or to a Synod, or to au annual conference should forbid his members from driuking whiskey, playing cards, swearing or gambling during the convention? All these things are taken out of a man when he first finds Christ, and the world knows it and does not expect to see either thc love or practice of these things in a Christian, and the Christian pastor feels no occasion to prohibit these things to his followers. To do so would be to acknowledge the failure of the religion they profess, If Knight Templarism is such a power for morality, why the necessity of forbidding saloon drinking? But there was a necessity. California was giveu to wine and strong drink sufficiently before the visit of the Knight Templars, but it will never cease to feel the impetus given to tippling and intemperance by practices of this man-honored order. See commandery visiting commandery and quaffing the sparkliug champagne to each other's health and prosperity! See an excursion exclusively of Knight Templars consuming forty gallons of milk and five hundred gallons of wine!! These are the men held up to our youth as models of morality, intelligence and manliness, yea, as Christian (?) soldiers bearing on their breast the emblem of redemption! These boys and young men have been impressed by the pomp and glitter, music and disciplined tread of street displays that it is a fine thing to be a Knight; These Christian(?) Knights drink gallons of wine, hence this wiue drinkiug cannot be very bad or dangerous after all. If after this example there are not ten young men that quaff the social glass—the first step downward, downward, dowuward,—where there was but one before, then thanks to a sin-restraining God, working through His church and people in a holy war against intemperance. The Knights have left us a little of their gold, but they have streugthened the drinking habits of the people, the certain and fruitful source of every sin and crime, and the foreruuuer of every people's degradation aud downfall. If with the departure from our shores of these wine-drinking Templars, the increase of moral taint in our atmosphere brought by them could also be withdrawn, we would gladly, were it in our power, return to them their expended gold.

Dr. Cullimore, Physician to the Northwest London Hospital, reports a case of hydrophobia successfully cured by aconite, administered as follows: One miuim of tincture of aconite, six grains of bromide of potassium, six minims of tincture of cinchona, to one-half an ounce, giveu every half hour for twelve doses, then three times per day. The diet consisted of milk thickened with arrow-root and beef.

THE CYNOSURE.

Just before her 88th birthday, Mrs. Irene Stoddard, mother of the N. C. A. Secretary, composed the following lines upon the name of our paper, which for vigor of thought and grace of diction may well compare with the work of a more youthful and glowing fancy. It is a pleasure to know that while her mental faculties are so undimmed, her eye also is clear and her step firm, while her heart is aglow with zeal for the Master's cause against his wily lodge foe.

ACROSTIC, MARCH 31, 1883.

Called by the Shepherd, they who know his voice
Have left vain sports to follow him from choice;
Refused to walk in paths that lead astray,
Inspired by him to take the narrow way,
Sustained by grace such conflicts to endure
That human minds unaided ne'er secure.
It is important then in every strait,
As Jesus taught, that all should watch and wait,
Nor fail to strive till entered at the gate.

Can wisdom's voice now crying in our street
Yet faint responses from her hearers meet?
Nor yet our nation learn that virtue's price
Outshines her gold for counteracting vice,
Secures a confidence from lands afar,
Unites its friends and stays the tide of war?
Rubies with virtue never can compare
Exalting minds and nations everywhere.

IRENE STODDARD.

A LETTER FROM EX-SENATOR POMEROY

To the Editor, Sept. 12th, says:

"I am nearly done with this rambling, and shall settle down to work again. I have been to Denver and 200 miles west of there, on the Ute Mts., from their deep gorges to their snowy tops; looked in the bronze faces of a thousand miners; seen the produets of the bottomless mines and boundless prairies. Returning, I have bathed in the Atlantic, and fished in the brooks of my dear native Southampton, Mass., where after all my heart ever turns. I there, visited the graves of my fathers; and her, whose young life mingled with mine. I there spent a Sabbath where I first professed Christ, andaddressed the Sabbath school which I superintendedwhen it numbered 300, instead of 80 or 85. But the great congregation was in the cemetery.

"Right gladly would I have been with you at Iowa, and, indeed everywhere else. But neeessity has kept me grinding at the wheel of business.

"The stupendous events of the last twenty-two years have led people to look for other changes; and every where there is running to and fro, to forecast the future, and what those changes shall be. None of us should wish to die without our share in their good work.

"I meet people everywhere, longing to 'retire,' and do nothing but please themselves; and the less they have accomplished, the more tired they seem to be. If he that sitteth in the heavens, had our resentments he would retire the whole lot, in favor of those servants who work while the day lasts.

"I find, since I have been looking them up, more secret societies than I had supposed existed: allowing their existenee to the supposed good things of Masonry. I to-day found a Presbyterian minister who had joined them. In my horror, I asked him if Christ was dead; or his religion had run so low that he was compelled to resort to a substitute. It is terrible that Christian ministers will countenance and support what dishonors Christ and demoralizes the church! But while many join to try them, multitudes drop them. I hear hundreds say, 'I got sick of them.' I shall never open their door again. 'I paid up and quit.

"A poor widow called yesterday to see if I could get her a place where she could earn bread for herself and child. I asked, where are the Masons? They made a show of the burial of your husband.' 'Yes,' she said, and that was the last of them. I applied to them for aid, and was told they were out of funds.' They had a little before spent $800 entertaiuing Knight Templars from New York; and the bills were over half for wine and cigars; 80–100 of all their funds, go, as shown by treasurer books, foi sueh entertainments. I hope to greet you soon in Washington." Yours truly and ever."

This eloquent and noble letter explains Mr. Pomeroy's absence from the Iowa Convention.

—I HEARTILY ENDORSE the Anti-masonic platform as set forth in the paper, and every plank is in its proper place. This government's greatest danger is a combination of all the secret societies now existing in the United States. If the Masonic priests as a whole would renounce, forsake, expose and reveal the secrets of the order to the world the devil's kingdom would soon tumble to the shades and Christ's kingdom would be built up on the ruins thereof. AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,

JONATHAN BLANCHARD,

OF ILLINOIS.

For Vice President,

JOHN A. CONANT,

OF CONNECTIOUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperanee question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the eivil equality secured to all American citizens by artieles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

INFERIOR MEN IN OFFICE A CURSE TO THE NATION.

Massachusetts is about to elect a governor, and he must needs be an inferior man, because the State is morally paralyzed by Freemasonry, and could not have a firstclass man if it would, except by accident. Gen. Butler, the Democrat, is a high Mason, and the Republicans will have to select a Mason for their candidate in order to defeat him. Hence, the man who will be elected governor must inevitably be a Freemason. But no Freemason can possibly be a firstclass man; therefore, the next governor of Massachusetts must be an inferior man.

This same mode of reasoning may be applied with equal force to the next Presidential election. The country is brought into such a feeble moral condition through the agency of the lodge that it cannot have a real statesman for President. If it does not have Gen. Butler for that office, it is likely to have some "little giant" or big dwarf from the lodge—a Logan, a Sickles, or timber of that sort to fill it.

If therefore, we aim to avoid the calamity of having inferior men in office, we must strive to oppose and defeat the Masonic lodge. Men who teach the wicked jokes and frivolities of Freemasonry are not fit to be intrusted with the management of that mighty concern of the human race which lies involved in our republican government. Freemasonry is a wrong done to faith, sincerity, truth, honor and all the nobler attributes that adorn and elevate the character of man. Morally speaking it is a deliberate sin against the Holy Spirit; for every man fit to be a leader of the people must know that the teachings of the lodge are tricky, false and corrupt, designed to deceive. It is an engine for securing selfish, scheming purposes at the public expense.

The politician who performs his magic tricks of successful office-getting only in the darkness and secrecy of the lodge, is, like the spiritualistic medium in his cabinet, the very last person in the world to whom a republican people should resort for counsel and guidance. A great, free, and generous people should call for the services of great, free, and generous men, men who act openly and above board, and never resort to the dark and devious ways of Masonic tricksters. The republic demands the services of firstclass men, but it can never have such men until the lodge is first voted out of existence.

We of the American party are making an effort to accomplish that end. No true American will ever vote for a Freemason any more than he would honor the memory of Brigham Young, or act the base part of familiar to a "Holy Inquisitor." He considers his vote as a moral agent which he is not permitted to use to sustain parties so corrupt as those which are now in the ascendant. He believes that the revolution now needed is a moral revolution and not merely a political one, and that to give his vote for either a Republican or Democratic candidate for office would make him a participator in crime rather than a vindicator of the nation's honor and interests. He cannot be frightened by the frowns nor lured by the offices of the lodge into giving his vote for the one party for fear that the other should prevail, when he knows that the greatest danger to the country is to be feared from either party coming into power. No American citizen should ever allow himself to be frightened into voting for a Republican by the cry that unless he does so a democrat may be elected; because, simply, no Democrat, bad as he may be, can be worse than a Republican. The very name has become identified with inferiority and plunder.

The character given to our politics by the leadership of the lodge is intensely partisan, intensely un-American and intensely devoted to a still-hunt search after inferior men for filling our offices. It substitutes craft in the place of principle; keeps the counsels of the nation forever below the level of moral interests, and entangles the political views and aims of men in a low, sordid maze of minor issues. It may cry peace! peace! but there can never be a stable peace where political interests are controlled by Masonic arts. The lodge does not, and cannot, possess that dignity of character which is essential to subordinate sectional and party differences to the common good of all. No men, whether of inferior or superior merit can ever have any real abiding faith in the work done by the Masonic lodge. Its narrow, selfish principles are too abhornent to the higher and nobler aims of Christian society ever to awaken any confidence in the bosoms of either the high or low.

The immense pension list which the Masonic lodge has unnecessarily and corruptly imposed upon the labor and resources of the nation, is a bonus offered to the military spirit. War is made an object of itself, where such large pensions can be so easily got. It would cost the nation probably more than a billion of dollars to buy itself free from its enormous unrepublican pension-list. The Republican party, under the lead of the lodge, has compounded with treason, and is consequently forced to buy peace and devotion for the country with money instead of exacting them on the terms of patriotism, justice and truth. The curse of slavery which the Republican party was commissioned to remove has left a blight upon only half the country, while the deeper curse of Freemasonry which that party is inflicting upon all our affairs, if not timely removed, leave a worse blight still upon the whole nation.

The war of the Rebellion has left the Republican party in the attitude of an army broken up and scattered in the pursuit of plunder. There is but one way to serve the interests of the country, and that is to rally around the standards of the Americans. OLD SOLDIER.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE IONIA, MICH., Y. M. C. A.

IONIA, Mich., Sept. 13th, 1883.

Mr Editor,

DEAR SIR:—In the August number of the Christian Cynosure you published an article written by S. B. Shaw, entitled "False to their Trust;" and with your consent I would like to correct the false impression made upon the minds of the readers of your paper.

I well remember the day Mr. Shaw called at the room, also the conversation which took place between us. Upon entering our room he called for the Christian Cynosure. I told him we did not have it; he said we ought to take it. My reply was, "There are a large number of good papers that we would like, and certainly should have them if our present income would permit." I then called his attention to the Christian Weekly, Christian Herald, and other religious papers which we have on file. During the conversation I made this remark: "We now had more religious papers than were read by the men," which is altogether a different statement than the one made, "that they did not keep any of them for the people would not read religious papers;" which would have been a lie on my part, for we have five religious papers on file, and sixty volumes of religious reading, by some of the best authors, in our library.

Rev. Mr. Shaw said we had checkers, dice, dominoes, or other games. We have checkers and dominoes, but never had dice, or any other games in the room.... I have never visited a gambling hall, therefore cannot say how they are furnished, but I have yet to hear of one upon whose walls you find such mottoes as "God is love," "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life," "Whosoever will let him take of the water of life freely;" or upon its tables have the Bible that its visitors might learn of the Christ who died for them, or who furnishes them with good wholesome reading, such as Harper's and Frank Leslie's weeklies, Harper's and Scribner's monthly magazines, the Scientific American, the Youth's Companion, the Lever, and many others (all of which he calls chaff). With these and other attractive things he fails to make me see the similarity between our room and a gambling hall.

Mr. Editor, I am quite sure were he better informed with regard to the manner with which the Young Men's Christian Association does its work, he would never have written such an article against an institution which has done so much to elevate young men and lead them to Christ. The reading room, with all its attractions, is not the object, but simply the means used to bring men under good influences and away from sin. Yours truly,

CHAS. E. HEAD,
Sec'y R. R. Y. M. C. A.

THE BRAZEN-FACED LODGE.

BLOOMINGTON, Ill., Sept. 8th, 1883.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Cheek is a slang phrase which in its modern use is well adapted to characterize lodge tactics. We have here the Illinois Wesleyan University, an institution which was well rid of the secret society mania, as they had never been introduced; but during the present year the whole brood have settled down upon us and that by the full consent of the authorities.

The old college building has been fitted up as a preparatory school, and the commercial college banished to the third story.

On entering the building the first and most conspicuous door displays three gold Greek letters. These look extremely cabalistic and are surrounded by stars and other barbaric gewgaws. Mystery and wonder is inspired as you peep into the windows which display heavy curtains parted to show the wonderful hanging toggery of the lodge room. This is simply lodge advertising on the very threshhold of our temple of learning.

Honest farmer Jones coming with his son George Washington to get some "larnin" sees this wonderful cabilistic display and stares with open-mouthed wonder. The mystery of short-hand is nothing to the wonder behind these Greek characters and bolted doors.

Mr. Jones argues in about this way: "There now! I have always been poor and obliged to work for a living because I have never had a chance to learn the strange things I see about here. George must have some book larnin and I am determined he shall know what is behind that door. He shall live high and not be obliged to turn the grindstone like his dad; all for the reason of not knowing what is going on."

So George is initiated and takes his first lessons in secret plotting and chicanery. He will come out of the Wesleyan mill with a taste for cliques, clans, cabals, juntos and rings, Star-route frauds and whisky and Tammany rings. These will be some of the fruits of seeds now planting. O shade of John Wesley, what a harvest!

In conversation with one of the students we inquired what benefits were expected to follow the introduction of the secret societies. He replied that it would make others take an interest in you. They would help you in your lessons and watch with you when sick. This is the old lodge-argument. Time was when people helped the needy wherever found; but now they help those who belong to their lodge and pay their dues. This they boast of and call it benevolence. They sell the social amenities of life to those who pay dues and swear to repay in like manner. Is this the good-will to men which Wesley taught?

It is said that negroes, Chinamen, and Indians readily imitate the vices of the superior race but are slow to learn and practice their virtues. Just so with our young university. It readily adopts the vices and manias of the old institutions, but its virtues it is slow to copy. It is like imitating a mole or wart on your face, because some otherwise handsome person has one. This wen or wart on our university can yield but one fruit here as elsewhere and that is a bitter one. It must be mortifying to the friends of an institution built to promote the interests of science and morality to see it used as an advertising post for the lodge, and a feeder to the secret empire which is growing up in our midst. Would it not be well to enquire where the road ends upon which they have entered?

Then we have another institution built as a temple of justice which has not escaped the greedy impudence of the lodge cheek. We mean the court-house. This magnificent building is justly the pride of our citizens, and in order that it be not disfigured with advertisement there is no bill-posting allowed about the premises. Even the curb-stones and gutters about the square are forbidden to the bill-sticker by order of the supervisors. This they have a perfect right to do. Mammon should not invade the halls of justice. Now with these facts in view, is it not strange to see a full-fledged advertisement of the Masonic lodge cut at the public expense on the northeast corner-stone of the building? Certainly no one is green enough to suppose that the facts that Tom. A. Noakes with his little silver trowel "monkeyed" around this stone when it was laid, was heavy circumstance enough to perpetuate in solid granite; or that future generations will care to know that a fraternity stood around with white gloves and aprons in token of their innocence. No! No! It is simply a cheeky Masonic advertisement and the wonder is that the people will endure it who will not allow the posting of bills even on the curb-stones.

We notice that the fraternity, true to their heathen ancestry, have dated their advertisement A. L. 5868, and we will add for the benefit of such profane cowans as may read this, that the north-east corner is chosen to commemorate the Masonic rite that the body of Hiram Abiff is buried, putrified and resurrected in the north-east corner

That this silly trash should be retailed to the verdant who pay for it we do not complain, but that it should flaunt itself on our public buildings we think we have a right to object. Many think they see in all this but a bit of harmless masquerading, but to us it is a warning of the viper which only waits for strength to strike at the breast which has given it protection. W.

LITERARY.

Vick's Magazine gives its readers some good articles on spring bulbs and winter flowers and garden miscellany useful and valuable. The Foxglove is this month honored with a beautiful colored plate. James Vick, Rochester, N. Y.

Twenty-five years ago Rev. Wm. M. Thayer of Massachusetts, began a new and entertaining style of biography in his life of Nathaniel Banks, as the "Bobbin Boy." Banks was then in the height of his career, having but shortly before been elected Speaker of the House of Representatives after one of the most exciting and prolonged contests. Lives of Lincoln, the "Pioneer Boy," and of Grant, the "Tanner Boy," soon followed, and were among the most popular of juvenile books. A life of Washington, the "Surveyor Boy" by the same author, in similar easy. narrative style, will be hailed by many grown people who remember with delight the lives of Banks and Lincoln. Mr. Thayer writes with an enthusiasm worthy of his subject; with vividly drawn pictures of the times and scenes through which Washiugton passed, quoting the language of his friends and contemporaries, and crowding the pages with appropriate illustrative anecdotes, he makes the times and the characters seem present realities to the reader. His book will at once be accepted as one of the best of the lives of Washington, not for young people only, but for older folks as well. It is not sold by dealers, but only direct by the publisher, who will send a 100-page descriptive catalogue of his attractive and famously cheap publications free on request. John B. Alden, publisher, 18 Vesey St., New York.

WHY SO? OR REASONS FOR RENOUNCING FREEMASONRY.—Since the Good Way removed from St. Joseph to College Mound, Mo., its press has put forth a valuable tract with the above title, written by Rev. Jasper A. Smith, who says that he has prepared it for the public, "from a firm belief that there are thousands of Freemasons, like myself, who are convinced that there are improprieties connected with Masonry, who are 'halting between two opinions,' and who, if properly awakened to duty, would be ready to sever the 'three-fold cord' that binds them so securely to the craft." He also holds it to be a decided conviction of duty that his testimony should be given to the world. Speaking of the Masonic oath he says: "In the obligations there is surely a vain or unnecessary taking the name of God in calling upon him to 'keep steadfast in the performance' of a mere human affair, coupled with a terribly severe penalty unnatural and shocking to every principle of enlightened morality, much more the precepts of the religion of Jesus Christ. When I first heard these penalties I was startled, and had I not considered them a farce, or mere form, I don't think I should have dared to take them. Curiosity, however, led me on, and I became reconciled to them inasmuch as I was not obligated to inflict the penalties on others, but to submit to them myself."

Dr. Gerhard Uhlhorn, whose able work, The Conflict of Christianity with Heathenism, made his name well known on this side of the Atlantic, has prepared a new book, Christian Charity in the Ancient Church, of which Messrs. Scribner will publish the American edition at once. In this he shows that modern charity is the creation of Christianity, by drawing out in detail the difference between the ancient and the modern world. The forms which liberality took in the ancient world, such as the extravagant distributions and special donations in the Roman Empire, are compared with the contributions of the early Christians for the support of the poor and diseased, the care of the church for the orphan and widow, the action of Christiauity on slavery, the new scope and meaning given to hospitality, and the concern manifested for the lot of prisoners and captives. In this review of the earliest Christian charity a picture of the church is drawn which one would not find elsewhere without searching through many volumes in many languages.

The series of separate papers by Dr. Eggleston on "Life in the Thirteen Colonies," which has been appearing in the Century during the past year, will be continued during the coming year, the next being on "Husbaudry in the Colonies," and describing the attempts at silk and wiue culture, with many other curious experiments and visionary projects. Other papers will treat of commerce, and the social conditions, manners and customs of the colonists. The pictures which accompany these papers will all be of historic interest and value.

THE ROYAL BAKER AND PASTRY COOK.—A Royal addition to the kitchen library. It contains over seven hundred receipts pertaining to every branch of culinary department, including baking, roasting, preserving, soups, cakes, jellies, pastry, and all kinds of sweetmeats, including receipts for the most delicious candies, cordials, beverages, and all other necessary knowledge for the chef de cuisine of the most exacting epicure, as well as for the more modest housewife, who desires to prepare for her lord and master a repast that shall be both wholesome and economical. With each receipt is given full aud explicit directions for putting together, manipulating, shaping, baking, and kind of utensil to be used, so that a novice can go through the operation with success; while a special and importaut feature is made of the mode of preparing all kinds of food and delicacies for the sick. The book has been prepared under the direction of Prof. Rudmani, late chef of the New York Cooking School, and is the most valuable of the recent editions upon the subject of cookery that has come to our notice. It is gotten up in the highest style of the printer's art, on tinted paper, with elaborately illuminated covers, etc. We are assured that every can of the "Royal Baking Powder" contains an order for one of these valuable books.

LETTER FROM THE MISSIONARIES IN GREECE.

ANDROS, Greece, Via Syria, Aug. 15, 1883.

DEAR BRO. KELLOGG:—We received your very kind and welcome letter a few days ago and Dr. Walker's kind letter and the check for $42. We thank from our hearts all the dear friends who so kindly contributed towards the Master's work here.

We have just got settled in our new home. We spent a month in the village of Batse on the sea shore, where we made sea baths. Many of the children there became interested and came every day to have us teach them English. Also the people crowded into our room several evenings to hear the organ, and to hear English and Greek hymns, while many joined with us in singing the latter. We see a great change down there since when we first came to Greece. Since we left last October they have another school for boys and a school for the girls. Now they are very anxious for us to spend the winter down there and teach the English language to as many children and young people as will come to us. We do not see any other work for us, so we think to go there and do what we can for these people.

Within three or four miles of Batse is a village called Gavrio. A steamer comes there now every two weeks. It will be a great advantage to us who live so far from the city of Andros.

With Christian love,

MR. AND MRS. A. D. ZARAPHONITHES.

OBITUARY.

It becomes my duty to record the death of my beloved father and brother, DEA. J. E. IRISH, who left us for the Spirit land on the 28th ult., after long enduring the pain of body and trials of mind not infrequently endured by the good and the true. He was born in the town of Aurelius, Cayuga Co., N. Y., on the 16th of April, 1801. His father being a minister of the Gospel, he was early instructed in Biblical knowledge, but did not receive it into his heart till he was twenty-six years of age, at which time he was awakened and led to the Saviour, mainly through the efforts of his young and faithful wife, to whom he had been united five years previous, and who preceded him to the Spirit land about three years.

Soon after he united with the young and growing church of Perry, N. Y., a church which for nearly fifty years bore faithful testimony against all sin, oath-bound secrecy included. In the spring of 1842 he came to Delavon, Wis., and at once united with the Baptist church, then under the very efficient leadership of Elder H. Tapping. This church was a vigorous off-shoot from the Perry church, and like its mother stood as a true and faithful witness for God for more than forty years. He was early elected to the office of deacon, and together with that noble and heroic brother, Dea. Wm. Bartlett, stood shoulder to shoulder in every work of reform. During all these years, his relations to the church were pleasant and agreeable and all his duties promptly met.

But for the last ten years it has been quite other-wise. Conceiving that the church had changed its charter, and consequently its policy and course of action, and, failing to gain satisfaction or an honorable dismission, he withdrew from the church and declared himself no longer responsible for its acts, or amenable to its discipline. In this condition he lived and died,—died quietly as one goes to sleep.

Dea. Irish was not without his faults; and yet, as one said of him. "He was one of God's noblemen." He was a man of positive convictions. When once he saw the right no considerations could turn him from it. He followed the injunction of the wise man—"Buy the truth and sell it not." Hence he was no compromise man. This was sometimes construed as obstinacy or love of opposition; but though from principle he might be led to take the unpopular side of a question, he was always kind and genial, so that his opponents and the world respected and honored him. He entertained remarkably clear views of scripture theology. Few could detect an error in a sermon more readily than he, and when thus detected he was not slow to point it out. For this quality he was by some called a fault-finder. With him every man's doctrine must be squared by the Scriptures.

His moral character was without a blemish, and he evidently intended it should be so. It was early impressed upon the minds of his children (eleven in number) that their conduct must be worthy of a deacon's family—and to them a legacy is left of which they need not be ashamed. When brought to contemplate death as near, he viewed it with composure aud resiguation; made all the arrangements for his funeral; choosing his Anti-masonic brethren as bearers, and the writer to conduct the services, all of which was strictly observed. E. L. HARRIS.

There is in our day a marvellous idolatry of talent It is a strange and grievous thing to see how men bow down before genius and success. Let us draw the distinction sharp and firm betweeu these two things: goodness is one thing, talent is another. When once the idolatry of talent enters the church, theu farewell to spirituality; when men ask their teachers, not for that which will make them more humble and God-like, but for the excitement of an intellectual banquet, then farewell to Christian progress.

BAND OF HOPE BIBLE LESSON.

WOE TO THE DRUNKARD.

11. Woe unto them that rise up early in the morning, that they may follow strong drink; that continue until night, till wine inflame them!

12. And the harp, and the viol, the tabret, and pipe, and wine, are in their feasts; but they regard not the work of the Lord, neither consider the operation of his hands.

13. Therefore my people are gone into captivity, because they have no knowledge; and their honorable men are famished, and their multitude dried up with thirst.

14. Therefore hell hath enlarged herself, and opened her mouth without measure; and their glory, and their multitude, and their pomp, and he that rejoiceth shall descend into it.

15. And the mean man shall be brought down, and the mighty man shall be humbled, and the eyes of the lofty shall be humbled.

16. But the Lord of hosts shall be exalted in judgment, and God that is holy shall be sanctified in righteousness.

17. Then shall the lambs feed after their manner, and the waste places of the fat ones shall strangers eat.

18. Woe unto them that draw iniquity with cords of vanity, and sin as it were with a cartrope:

19. That say, Let him make speed, and hasten his work, that we may see it; and let the counsel of the Holy One of Israel draw nigh and come that we may know it.

20. Woe unto them that call evil good, and good evil; that put darkness for light, and light for darkness; that put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter;

21. Woe unto them that are wise in their own eyes, and prudent in their own sight!

22. Woe unto them that are mighty to drink wine, and men of strength to mingle strong drink!

23. Which justify the wicked for a reward, and take away the righteousness of the righteous from him.

24. Therefore as the fire devoureth the stubble, and the flame consumeth the chaff, so their root shall be as rottenness, and their blossom shall go up as dust; because they have cast away the law of the Lord of Hosts, and despised the word of the Holy One of Israel—Is. 5: 11–24.

GOLDEN TEXT. Woe unto them that call evil good, and good evil; that put darkness for light, and light for darkness; that put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter! Is. 5: 20.

CENTRAL TRUTH. Drunkenness brings woe.

1. God has so made us that we all desire happiness, but clear brains and a good conscience are necessary to real enjoyment. The drunkard has neither.

2. Among the Orientals it was considered especially shameful to be intoxicated in the early part of the day.

3. Drinking deadens the moral nature. The most shocking cases of profanity and impiety are found among hard drinkers.

4. There is no captivity like the appetite for strong drink, unless we except a passion for opium.

5. Many, perhaps most, drunkards were not taught when they were children the terrible effects of alcohol on the human frame. After his appetite is formed it is of little use to tell a man how much it is hurting him, but if he had been thoroughly instructed when a child he might have been afraid to take the first glass, and then the appetite would not have been formed at all.

6. Hell means here the grave 60,000 are computed to die annually in this country and about the same in Great Britain. from intemperance, but it is hard to tell the exact number. It is probably more rather than less.

7. Alcohol like death levels all distinctions. There is no difference between the greatest orator or poet and any other man, when drunk.

8. The Rabbins have a saying that "an evil inclination is like a fine hair-string, but the finishing is like a cart-rope." Men seldom drink to excess when they first begin. They take a single glass, perhaps only once in a while. Then they take more aud take it oftener, and thus become drunkards before they are aware.

9. A drunkard's brain loses in a great measure the power of distinguishing between right and wrong. This is one reason why drink and crime go together.

10. When a man or boy begins to drink he fancies he can leave off at any time. He imagines himself wiser than others who have tried the experiment and failed.

11. According to the statistics of insurance companies, drinking to excess shortens life twenty-eight or thirty per cent., and even moderate drinkers do not at a rule live so long as total abstainers.

PRACTICAL TRUTHS.

The woes of the drunkard are many. (1) A bad conscience. (2) A diseased body. (3) A life of bondage. (4) Liability to early and sudden death. (5) Eternal banishment from God and heaven.

LESSON TALK.

A story is told of a tavern-keeper in Rensselaer county, N. Y., who abandoned the traffic in alcohol after having been engaged in it for several years. Whenever the subject of his selling liquor was referred to he seemed to feel deep sorrow and regret, and a friend one day inquired the cause. In reply he opened his account book. "There," said he, "are forty-four names of men who have been my customers, most of them for years. Thirty-two of these men now lie in a drunkard's grave, and ten out of the remaining twelve are confirmed sots."

The President of the Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company has expressed his opinion most emphatically that moderate drinking shortens life. He says "That habitual, sottish drunkenness should issue in disease and death most people can understand; but that orderly, moderately, decorous indulgence should issue in congested brains, insanity, suicide, paralysis, diseases of kidneys, liver and stomach, pneumonia, rheumatism, and in general, in those diseases which at bottom mean a poison imported into the blood, most persons do not know and are slow to believe." Only in total abstinence can we find safety from the terrible woe God's Word pronounces against the drunkard.

LESSON HYMN.

Mourn for the thousands slain.
The youthful and the strong;
Mourn for the wine-cup's fearful reign,
And the deluded throng.

Mourn for the tarnished gem—
For reason's light divine,
Quenched from the soul's bright diadem
Where God had bid it shine.

Mourn for the lost—but call,
Call to the strong, the free;
Rouse them to shun that dreadful fall
And to the refuge flee.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)

Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.

Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)

Christian Reformed Church.

Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)

Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.

Disciples (in part.)

Friends.

Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.

Mennonites.

Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.

Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)

Moravians.

Plymouth Brethren.

Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.

Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)

United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

CHRISTIAN WORKERS

Who depend on voluntary contributions of Christian people in whole or in part for their support:

J. F. BROWNE, Germantown Ky.

ELI TAPLEY, Columbus, Miss.

J. F. GALLOWAY, Okahumka, Florida.

WM. HAZENBURG, Cape Town, S. Africa.

A. D. ZARAPHONITHES, Smyrna, Turkey.

Contributions for either of these brethren may be forwarded through the Treasurer of the N. C. A. PLEASE DESIGNATE to which one such funds shall be sent.

OLD FACTS IN A NEW FORM.

Do you want the Christian Cynosure for one year? There are three ways to get it:

1. Send the subscription price (single copy) $2.00.

2. Send $8.75 for a club of five, at $1.75 each, and get a copy one year for your services.

3. Send $15.00 for a club of ten at $1.50 each and get a copy extra for yourself.

Names may be sent at different times and papers addressed to different post-offices; but when you send the last name and order your extra copy, please give at the same time the entire list of names in your club, with the address of each, so as to avoid confusion or mistakes.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 20, 1883.

THE KNIGHTS OF ST. JOHN AND MALTA met in Philadelphia, Sept. 12. They reduced the number of representatives; made benefits by encampments optional, not compulsory; and the charge for organizing subordinate lodges was raised from $30 to $100.

"Doubtless the pleasure is as great,
Of being cheated, as to cheat."

THE RELIGIOUS TELESCOPE contains an extraordinary and very singular reply of Rev. D. R. Flickinger to ex-Bishop Wright of the Richmond Star. Its reform animus can be seen in the following excerpts:

"It is a fact that the Board, and its committee, have always given the preference to law-men, other things being equal, in its appointments to mission fields. Some of the so-called anti-law men have been sent out, but I cannot now recall an instance of such a one being appointed without some prominent law-man, or one of the bishops of the church, advising or at least assenting to such appointment."

"I have never belonged to a secret society, nor do I expect to, but I am free to confess that the foolishly fanatical, or fanatically foolish (put it the way it suits you best) views and sayings of some of the advocates of our anti-secrecy law men, weaken rather than strengthen faith in our prohibitory legislation against secret societies."

This is almost too weak to be wicked.

PRAYER AGAINST THE LODGE.

The National Christian Association has always been separate from the American Party. Let atheists, who hate priests; vote against the "Priests, High Priests, and Grand High Priests of the lodge and vote with us. But Christians, must pray as well as vote. Pentecost began in a ten day's prayer meeting. Before slavery fell, there were monthly concerts of prayer wide through the country. Let us now have weekly or monthly prayer meetings for the overthrow of the lodge which was the "power behind the slave power." Cannot Rev. W. W. Blanchard organize one in Paxton, Illinois. Cannot Dea. M. R. Britten organize one at Spring Prairie; Wisconsin; and so throughout. We have "no power at all" against the hosts of darkness, only, as we gain it from Christ by prayer. Wherever there is a United Presbyterian, Wesleyan, Covenanter, or Free Methodist meeting of like principles for prayer, let all who hate the lodge meet with such prayer meetings, and not interfere with churches which pray against the lodge. Where such churches do not exist let there be a gathering, stated or otherwise, of all who can join with one heart before God pleading the promise (Mat. 18:19). If two of you shall agree on earth as teaching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven." Our reform must have its prayer meetings or fail.

THE MOULTING PERIOD.

Every reform has such periods, as every bird has. The anti-secret reform is no exception.

An able Baptist clergyman in the Independent, discussing sects, says, "The Lord only knows how many Presbyterian sects there are;" as if it were a reproach. The Lutherans had not yet gotten beyond the fear of the stake and fagot when they fell into sects. Carlstadt, Zwingle, Luther, and soon Calvin fell into bitter antagonism with each other. The divisions of Presbyterians, like theirs, instead of proving them to be wrong, proves just this: that they have truths which the world and Satan hate, that they are in earnest, and that their faculties and circumstances and tastes make them to differ from each other. Dead men have no squabbles. Neither do dead denominations.

In 1818 the Presbyterian General Assembly resolved, that "the voluntary enslavement of one part of mankind by another, is an atrocious violation of the most precious rights of human nature, utterly inconsistent with the law of God and the precepts of the Gospel." No whirlwinds or divisions followed, for no action was contemplated. Thirteen years later 1831, the Synod of Cincinnati appointed a day of fasting and prayer, and a committee to issue an address to the churches against slavery. They did not exclude slaveholders from fellowship, or refuse to vote for slaveholders. No cyclone followed.

Next year, 1832, Garrison started the Liberator in Boston. It was anti-slavery, anti-Sabbath, anti-voting, non-resistent and no-government. But the power and pungency of its appeals and the rage of the slaveholders who were stung by them began to attract popular attention and inaugurate mobs and discussion.

In April, 1840, one hundred and twenty-one Abolitionists met at Albany, the seat of government for New York, and nominated candidates for the campaign of 1840. Then came the tug of war. In 1848 the name "Liberty" was changed to Free Soil; in 1856 to Republican, and in seven years slavery fell.

The anti-secret reform, which the slavery question displaced in 1832, began where the anti-slavery reform left off, viz., both praying and voting. It proposed, from the first, to exclude adhering Masons from church and state, because the lodge belongs to neither but is the rival and antagonist of both. Dissension and divorce between the Garrisonites and the orthodox wing, extravagance and fanaticisms in some localities, and weariness and backsliding in others; the stupid secession of the Know-Nothings; with rivalships, jealousies and conflicting local interests, and the great division on political action which was decided only by a majority of ten votes in the Albany convention in favor of the Liberty party—these gave hope to the slaveholders and their Northern abettors;

"And the strongest and the bravest have been oftimes heard to say,
My heart, my heart is weary for the greatness of the way."

But these causes only shed the feathers of reforms, and the bird comes out after a temporary weakness, newer, brighter and stronger than ever.

The Cynosure welcomed Mr. Levington's little paper and made no reply to its bitter assaults. It has hailed Prof. Tobey's and ex-Bishop Wright's excellent papers. It has rejoiced in the brave stand of Mr. Needles in Missouri and of Prof. Kimball in New Hampshire. And now there are publishing companies in Michigan and in Iowa, and all these things cannot happen without now and then a moulting period. But they are all heralds and tokens of triumph. Fifteen years ago, who would have talked of a joint stock company in Iowa or Michigan? We bid them all hail and give them our Godspeed. They prove that something has been done in those States. They will no more injure the cause than "dissensions about circumcision" injured the early Christian church. They spread it; and every local paper that starts, but renders a Washington paper more necessary. Mr. Needles has evinced an excellent judgment about a Washington paper; and zeal and liberality and self-denial like his will start one before long. It must be the organ of the American party, as the Cynosure is of the National Christian Association. The Cynosure must be true to its name as the Pole-Star of religious thought. While the Washington paper must invite to the ranks of the American party every man who has a vote in his fist and an American heart in his bosom.

The Prohibition party must inevitably shed its feathers, especially its lodge feathers. There is not, there cannot be, any permanent friendly co-operation between a secret lodge and an open Christian temperance society. Harper's Weekly teems with recipes to "restore the Republican party to its old prestige." They are attempts to galvanize life into a corpse, after the life has gone out of it. It says, truly, "The Democratic party skulks and shuffles, and hopes to slip into power under cover of Republican rascality." "It takes no ground upon the tariff, none upon civil service reform." And this is substantially true of both the old parties. The Anti-monopoly and Labor-reform parties, so-called, are like Polyphemus in his cave, strong, but blind. The leaders dwell in the caves of the lodges, and as these lodges are the vilest of monopolies and rings they give the lie to their professions by their secret, sworn-swindlings, and as they shun all care about the Bible in schools and "the Sabbath made for man," they are, literally, "without God and without hope in the world." When these parties shed their feathers, they shed all there is of them; for, as they have no principles, there is nothing left. They have no object but office and no motive but emolument; and the two leading parties, like stage players, wear the names and uniform of the dead. The very idea of reviving an anti-slavery party in this country is an absurdity.

The only thing needed to ensure the success of the American party is, fairly to make it known. Its principle is American, its methods American, itself American. As soon as its question was taken before the people, fifteen hundred lodges replied by confessing judgment and giving up their charters. And every hour since the argument against it has grown stronger, and the lodge morally weaker and worse.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

No. 215 4½ ST., WASHINGTON.

I desire to acknowledge the receipt of a box of twenty-six volumes, from unknown friends, embracing the writings of leading persons in the Society of Friends, together with a large reference Bible, and a yearly subscription to an excellent weekly paper, known as The Friend. These books and papers are for the use of those visiting the N. C. A. rooms. May the Divine blessing rest on the generous donors. H. H. HINMAN.

—The Kansas State Convention at Topeka next Monday and Tuesday will be held in the Senate chamber of the State House. This is right. It will be a very appropriate meeting for such a place. May there be many echoes of the truth lingering about the walls and echoing in the ears of law-makers when the Kansas Senate again meets.

—In answer to Bro. Ames of Menomonie, Wis., we have to say that Oct. 24 is the time proposed for a Wisconsin State Convention. Let the brethren of that State have the matter pressing upon their hearts, and make provision for a meeting that shall tell for Christ and eternity.

—A well attended and interesting convention for National religious reform was held lately in Saltsburg, Pa., which was addressed by Rev. J. H. Timmons of Tarentum, Pa.

—An error in our composing room puts the department heading for religious news over the temperance department. The mistake may be of value if it suggests to our readers that it is the duty of all the churches to take emphatic action against the tobacco curse and expell it as well as the intoxicating cup from their fellowship not only, but from society.

—Friends ask where the life of Thurlow Weed lately noticed can be obtained. It is sold by subscription by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., of Boston. An effort will be made to have them on sale by the N. C. A. at this office.

—Bro. W. B. Stoddard who has been canvassing for a short time only in Western New York has sent a $50 check as the result of his work for the Cynosure. He has been assisting Bro. Capwell upon his farm until the close of the busy season, and has now taken the field in earnest and with excellent results.

—Dr. Meloy, chairman of the N. C. A. Board, has called a meeting of that body to be held at 2 P. M., Thursday, Sept. 20th. It is hoped that every member can be present with an earnest purpose to push on the work during the present season with tenfold vigor.

—Bro. A. D. Low, of Atlantic, Iowa, concerning whose relation to the old American Baptist, as corresponding editor, a wrong statement wat made in the Cynosure of June 29, 1882, writes to correct the matter and vindicate himself from the supposition of falsehood. Probably Elder Post whose information was ground for the note in these columns, was mistaken respecting Bro. Low's position on the Baptist, as there is no conceivable reason why any one should wish to deprive him of the honor.

—Bro. C. A. S. Temple sends a note confirming the argument on the 25 of December in our columns last week. He says:

"I have just stumbled upon the following in Dr. Clark's Commentary upon Ps. 147: 16–17.:—"At particular times, the cold in the East is so very intense as to kill man and beast. Jacobus Vitriaco, one of the writers in the Gesta Dei per Francos, says that in an expedition in which he was engaged against Mount Tabor, on the 24th of December, the cold was so intense that many of the poor people and the beasts of burthen died of it."—Clark's Com. Ps. 147: 16, 17.

—Secretary Stoddard was in New York city on Saturday, expecting to visit several points in New England early in the week and return soon to Chicago, in time to attend the State meetings at Topeka, Kansas, and Sparta, Ill.

—A note from Bro. Bailey informs us that Bro. J. Tanner, Jr., died at Nashua, N. H., Thursday night last. The funeral services were held on Saturday, and was conducted by Bro. Bailey at the request of the deceased brother. All with whom he was associated will remember him as one of the most ingenuous and earnest of the workers in the reform, faithful and humble, willing to do all that a weak and deseased frame would allow, for the cause of his Lord and Saviour.

—What possible relation can the Senate of the United States have with the secret order of the Grand Army of the Republic? Bro. A. M. Paull of Providence, R. I., sends us a word that deserves to be set in capitals, and must be investigated. He writes: "A comrade of my company lately met me and said he was going to join the G. A. R., being advised to do so by a R. I. Senator in Congress, who told him to the effect he was sure something would be passed in Congress, within six months, highly favorable to the order, and added, 'Don't you lose any time in joining the order.'" Which Senator from Rhode Island is thus in league with the lodge and proselyting for it, Anthony or Aldrich? And what is this action that is to privately legislate favors into the laps of a secret, irresponsible, unAmerican lodge? Mark this, every American! Watch this gate, and the enemy will avoid it.

NEW ENGLAND.

THE NEW ENGLAND BOARD of the National Christian Association has its headquarters at No. 8 Portland St., Worcester. Mass. A full supply of books and tracts constantly on hand, Orders promptly filled. Correspondence solicited.

E. D. BAILEY, N. E. Sec'y

THE OUTLOOK IN REFORM WORK AND POLITICS.

WORCESTER, Mass., Sept., 10, 1883.

One who depends upon the public for resources must be frank with his patrons. Our New England Board meeting leaves a savory memory and will probably result in increasing our resources. It is fair, however, to state publicly what was stated in the Board, viz: there was a deficit of $100 one year ago and nearly $200 the past year, leaving us well towards $300 behind in our expenses. This sum has since been materially reduced, but our deficit is still great enough to "give us pause."

The Board has paid two men regularly the past year, and other work has been incidentally done by others. Mr. Spaulding's services as a canvasser deserve to be honorably mentioned, and they would be continued the coming year if the subscriptions would warrant it. We have, however, been obliged to discontinue his labors for the present, until our income can be somewhat increased.

It is really wonderful to think how much a meagre income will effect when the laborers work for the love of the cause. Every New England State has had more or less work done in it during the past year and some have been thoroughly and repeatedly traversed from end to end by different agents of the Board.

Brother O. C. Bailey has not been working under the New England Board and has relied wholly upon his own exertions for remuneration. He has depended on the liberality of friends where his work was done. This arrangement continues as it has been and he returns to Vermont to-morrow, where his success has been greatest. If Vermont friends appreciate the effort to continue the good work begun they should make frequent remittances for his support.

An effort is being made to continue Bro. Spaulding in the work by raising the means to start him in New Hampshire. This is as it should be. There are men enough in the State with ample means to employ him six months steadily if the determination should seize them. The trouble is while men are studying and meditating and thinking, and thinking and meditating and studying how much (or how little) they can give, the opportunity slips by, another suffering workman faints by the way and another long pause ensues. The King's business demands haste. The leaders can do nothing if the people who support them are slow to respond and refuse to share the responsibility.

Vermont can have a man so long as she will care for him; New Hampshire likewise. The way to do is not to make impossible conditions. Give something now. Give more by and by. Keep giving. Give all you can. Take a personal responsibility. Wait for nobody else. Be a leader in good works. Better than all this—promise to send a fixed sum monthly or quarterly.

A great political opportunity is before us. Are we seizing it? The Republicans of Massachusetts have unreservedly and unblushingly announced, as the sole issue in the next campaign, Butlerism. On this issue they are "going before the people." They ask the people to forget everything else. Temperance men are to be cajoled into voting for a candidate professedly in favor of license just to beat Butler. Civil service, moral reform, every thing is to be set aside for this most noble race! Has it come to this? What brought Butler into the governorship? The mismanagement and corruption of the Republican party. Men, disgusted, determined no longer to be led to the polls to support the sinking fortunes of an overfed party. This was Butler's chance. The State can go no lower in its choice of a governor. Now the only remedy proposed is to go back again to the old regime.

The independent voters have lately had a meeting in Boston, and though they are strangely wanting in what their name signifies, yet they have said some sensible things in their address to the people:

"Civil service reform, but partially accomplished in national affairs, has as yet no footing in state or municipal affairs in Massachusetts. The power of the machine is lessened but not destroyed. The doctrine of "to the victors belong the spoils" appears here under the new form of "the government belongs to its friends." Office as a public trust, to be administered for the benefit of the people, and not of the party, is what the people rightfully demand, and any party that would replace the present administration must be pledged to something purer and better. The time has passed when a nomination means an election, and the people are more critical than ever before of the men and the principles offered to their choice.

The state can be redeemed, but by no half way or timid policy. The independent voters, whom we represent, hold in their hands the decision of the coming contest. They stand ready to assist any party with honest and right principles; but they are equally ready to withhold their votes from any party that weakens in its effort to obtain the reforms which the people demand. No man of untried courage or fidelity can obtain their aid, and, while they are ready, regardless of personal preferences, to assist in securing the best, their votes are not to be had for merely expedient nominations, even to escape an impending disgrace.

Reform in the civil service, reform in the methods of taxation, economy in state affairs, more careful legislation the people will have through parties now existing, or over the remains of parties which lack the ability or the desire to secure these reforms. The time may not yet be for new parties, but only so far as parties now existing have the courage to proclaim and adhere to these principles through victory or defeat will they prevent independent action leading to a reconstruction of party lines or to an active independent organization."

The people everywhere are waiting to see the issue made, and the party which sees the want and first supplies it will confer a blessing on the nation. It is to be hoped the temperance people will not stultify their professions by following in the wake of any such nonsense as is now being prepared for them.

E. D. BAILEY.

REFORM NEWS.

ILLINOIS.

The Illinois State Christian Association organized to expose, withstand and remove Secret Societies, will meet in Annual Convention, at Sparta, Ill., September 26, 27 and 28, beginning Wednesday evening, (26th).

The following prominent speakers have been invited: Hon. S. C. Pomeroy, Washington City; Pres. J. B. McMichael, of Monmouth; Pres. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton; Rev. Jos. Travis and Rev. J. P. Stoddard of Chicago, and others. Important questions respecting the hostility of Freemasons, and other secret orders, to Church and State, and the duty of all to unite in suppressing them, will be discussed. "What shall be done for our State work," should be one of the first. Let central and southern Illinois be fully represented at this meeting. The brethren in Sparta will welcome you to their homes.

Sparta is on the narrow-guage road from St. Louis to Cairo, and is reached best via St. Louis. Or delegates coming by the Illinois Central can leave that line at Tamaroa for the Iron Mountain road, leaving the latter at Percy for the narrow-guage and Sparta. All who cannot come, pray for this meeting.

KANSAS.

The Kansas State Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, will hold its semi-annual Convention in the State House, Topeky, Kansas, commencing at 3 P. M., Sept. 24th, 1883 and continuing through the 25th and 26th.

The following programme is arranged: Addresses on Government Reform, by Rev. D. H. Coulter; on Prohibition, by Rev. C. H. Strong; on Anti-secrecy, Rev. B. F. Worrell; each of these to be followed by discussion. Secretary J. P. Stoddard, ex-Senator Pomeroy and other able speakers will take part. The first and the third degrees of Masonry will be explained by S. E. Starry.

W. W. MCMILLAN, Sec'y.

INDIANA.

TO THE FRIENDS IN INDIANA:—By the concurrence of the Executive Committee I hereby announce the eleventh annual meeting of the State Christian Association to be held at Oakland City, Gibson Co., Oct. 16th, 17th and 18th inclusive, (commencing Tuesday evening, Oct. 16th). Eminent speakers will be there, of whom due notice will be given. We confidently hope the friends in Southern Indiana will help make this a grand meeting by having the meeting well advertized in the annual conferences and other church meetings, by coming themselves, and having others come. S. L. COOK.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 12th, 1883.

I reached this city at 11 o'clock last evening after a continuous trip of twenty-eight hours from Chicago. I was specially fortunate in falling in with pleasant companions from Iowa and Minnesota who were on a pleasure excursion to this city and Baltimore, taking in of course the mountain scenery along the B. and O. R. R. which is grand beyond description and was new to most of the party.

At 8 o'clock this morning I found Bro. Hinman at 215, 4½ street, in good health and heart. After an exchange of greetings and a brief review of business, we started in quest of friends we wished to see, but were peculiarly unfortunate in not finding them. Ex-Senator Pomeroy left for Baltimore and perhaps for New York, yesterday. We could obtain no response from Bro. Ford's door-bell. Bro. Gibson is at his home in Iowa. Bro. Bowes has not returned from Ocean Grove, where, with his family he is spending his "leave of absence;" and as the rain was falling incessantly we concluded to quiet down and wait for the storm to blow over. Bro. Grisham, who has been a faithful and liberal friend to our work, called this evening to enquire after Pres. Blanchard and renew his vows of fidelity to the end.

It is still raining at 8 o'clock but we are hoping for better weather and greater progress on the morrow.

I noticed along our route that the corn crop was badly damaged by frosts in many localities. West of Zanesville, Ohio, darkness prevented any observation of the situation, but along the Muskingum and Monongahela river bottoms the corn seemed to be entirely killed. The upper mountain regions looked fresher than the valleys below, but a few rude cabins and small garden spots are about all the traces of civilization that break the monotony of nature on these rugged highlands, and the frosts or fruitage of these desolate fields have little effect upon values in the centers of commercial exchange.

I have only to report that 215, 4½ street, has undergone no material change since last I saw it. J. P. S.

SHALL I GO TO TOPEKA?

TOPEKA, Kans., Sept. 12th, 1883.

Many friends in Kansas will no doubt ask themselves this question between this and our coming State Meeting. To such let me say, Come if possible.

WE NEED YOU HERE.

The officers of the Association have done all they can. We have secured the Senate Chamber, which is in every respect well suited to our wants. The meeting will be well advertised and able speakers will be in attendance. But to what purpose is this waste if the people do not come out to hear them?

The people of Topeka will not come alone. There are but few in the city who sympathize with the anti-secret movement. There is a United Presbyterian church, a Wesleyan Methodist church, and a holiness band here. These are with us, but they are few in numbers and limited in means. On the other side are the lodges and the churches, the saloons and the politics of a city of 25,000 inhabitants, with all its wealth and social power. In such a city it will be easy to "wet-blanket" the whole movement and smother it unless sympathy and aid shall come in from outside. But if a congregation gathers from outside, full of the Holy Ghost and of fire, the fire will spread even in Topeka.

WE NEED YOUR COUNCILS.

We have a strong foe to meet. The lodge not only has money and men, but possession is nine points in the law, and the lodge has possession. Verily it is no child's play to unlodge him.

I have said, dear friends, that this meeting needs you. May I whisper that

YOU NEED THIS MEETING.

Some tell me, "Well I am opposed to the lodge. I am all right on this question already. I do not need to go to this meeting." As well might the young convert say, "Well, I am all right now, I am on the Lord's side. I don't need to go to church any more."

Nay, verily, we need the aid of just such meetings as this. We do not begin to realize the height and depth and intensity of this conflict. It is a struggle for life between the kingdom of light and the kingdom of darkness. We need—ah how much we need to be awakened from our lathergy on this subject!

It will cost you something to come. Your railroad fare will be something. You may have to pay for lodging while you are here. You will have to leave your business for a few days, and we will no doubt give you an opportunity to contribute for the furtherance of this cause, and you ask

WILL IT PAY?

If it pays to hold such a meeting at all, it pays to make it a success at any cost. Meeting as we will in the Senate Chamber in the Capital of the State, we will be for the time being the observed of all observers. Success here will be a double success, and a failure will be a fall from which it will be hard to rise.

Come then and help us. Come for the sake of Christ whose name the lodges dishonor. Come in the power of the Holy Ghost. And God will crown his own work with success.

P. S. FEEMSTER,
State Agent.

FAITH THAT WORKETH BY LOVE.

Who keepeth not God's word, yet saith,
I know the Lord, is wrong;
In him is not that blessed faith
Through which the truth is strong;
But he who hears and keeps the word
Is not of this world, but of God.

The faith his word hath caused to shine
Will kindle love in thee;
More wouldst thou know of things divine,
Deeper thy love must be;
True faith not only gives the light,
But strength to love and do the right.

A FATHER CONVERTED.

A few years since, says a correspondent of the New York Evangelist, during a powerful outpouring of grace in New England, the Holy Spirit exerted his mighty influence upon a family circle consisting of a father, a mother and five most interesting children. The mother and her five children were most hopefully converted. The father, who was naturally one of the most amiable, retiring, modest men with whom I ever was acquainted, aided his family in attending the numerous meetings, and was not unfrequently seen bowed down and trembling under the power of truth. Still the conversions of his wife and children, in rapid succession, were like so many earthquake shocks to the foundations on which his false hopes had so long rested. But neither the affecting scenes of their distress, nor the ecstacies of their subsequent joy, could melt his heart into contrition. He now felt that he was groping in a dark path, and in wretched loneliness; he who should have been the leader of a pious household was left far behind, a subject of prayer, and an occasion of grief to the circle around him. Thus he remained for weeks.

Ere long preparations were made for gathering the new members into the church, and a day appointed for the examination of candidates. The mother and her five children, with some sixty others, came before the church, and were propounded for admission into its pale. As the day of admission drew near, the father, who had watched their movements with much concern, expressed his regret to his wife that they should make a profession of religion at present, and requested that they should wait for him. The mother, deeply moved, solicited advice of the pastor and other friends; but, after due deliberation, it was concluded that the path of their duty was plain, and that they were bound to follow Christ. With unusual decision and firmness they resolved to do so. As soon as he knew their decision, he became more earnest in his remonstrances, and used every possible argument, especially with the mother, to dissuade her from her purpose, but in vain. He soon changed his tone of entreaty into that of fearful threatening, warning his wife if she had any affection for him, any regard for the peace of the family, to desist from her purpose and wait for him. "No," said the martyr-like woman, "I love you most tenderly, but I love Christ more. I have waited for you for more than twenty years, and now I shall do my duty, and as to the consequences I will leave them with God."

At the close of this interview, which took place Saturday evening, he took his hat, and uttering some threats, left the house, as if never to return to his family again. It was a painful night to mother and children. Might he not become the victim of lasting mania, or in his rage and disappointment suddenly destroy himself? As it afterwards appeared, he retired to his barn, threw himself on the hay-mow, (it being midsummer,) and there rolled and struggled like a wild beast in the net. An awful warfare was waging between an awakened conscience and a desperately rebellious heart. He could not, would not submit. Sabbath morning came—the family, with trembling anxiety for the absent father, prepared to go to the house of God; but, just before the hour of service, his feelings drove him from his hiding place. He was safe, but still unhumbled. He again inquired of his wife if she remained fixed in her purpose, and finding she did, he left the house with dreadful signs of rebellion, throwing out some intimations that he never should return—that fearful consequences might be anticipated. He was soon out of sight, but not out of mind. The family departed; and the father, finding his threats unavailing returned to his house, prepared his person with dispatch, and was soon seen placed in the gallery in a situation favorable for witnessing the ceremony he had opposed so vainly. And when the ceremony of reception took place, and the father looked down and saw his wife and five children, with the rest, kneel around the altar, he burst into tears, and his agitation was great. The step was taken and could not be retraced.

On retiring from the house he felt that he was indeed alone. He began to come to himself—to review the dreadful rebellion of his heart which recent events had brought to light. His heart began to break; and in a few hours his soul was made to rejoice in that Saviour whom he had so recently persecuted. He now felt deeply thankful that his wife had taken so decided a course; and he considered her uniting with the church, the means, in God's hands, of leading him to repentance.

"GI'E HIM ANOTHER CHANCE."

John B. Gough in his lecture, "The Only Remedy," tells this incident of a Cornwall miner:

Two men were sinking a shaft. It was rather a dangerous business they had to do. Their custom was to cut a fuse with a knife; one man then got into a bucket and made a signal to be drawn up. The other got into the bucket when it descended, with one hand on the signal rope and one on the fuse. When he touched the fuse he made a signal, and was at once hauled up. One day they left their knife up above, and rather than ascend for it they cut the fuse with a sharp stone. It took fire.

"The fuse is on fire!" they both exclaimed, as they leaped into the bucket; but the windlass would hold but one at a time—only one could go up. One man instantly leaped out, and said:

"Up with ye, I'll be in heaven in a minute." With lightning speed the bucket was drawn up and the man was saved.

The explosion took place, and they descended, expecting to find the mangled body of the miner; but the fact was that the charge had loosened a mass of rock, and it lay diagonally across the shaft, and with the exception of a few bruises and a little scratching the man was unhurt. When asked why he urged the other to escape, he gave a reason that skeptics would laugh at. (If there is any being on the face of the earth I pity, it is a skeptic.) What did he say?

"Why did you insist on the other man's hastening up?"

"Because I knowed my soul was safe, for I've gi'e it into the hands of him of whom it is said that 'faithfulness is the girdle of his reins,' and I knowed that what I gi'ed him, he' never gi'e up; but t'other chap was an awful wicked lad, and I wanted to gi'e him another chance."

All the infidelity in the world cannot produce such a single act of heroism as that.

"YOUR BROTHER IS DOWN THERE."

Work for God should be earnest and zealous, or else it becomes loathsome. Even God himself cannot abide in it when it becomes lukewarm. He said to the church at Laodicea, "Because thou art neither cold or hot I will spue the out of my mouth." Does some one say, "Yes, but how am I to have that intensity of feeling?" By realizing that amongst the lost there are your own brethren and your own sisters.

A little while back, in the east of London, they were digging a deep drain in the neighborhood of Victoria Park. Some of the shoring gave way, and tons of earth fell down upon several men who were there at work. Of course there was a great deal of excitement; and standing by the brink was a man looking—I grant you with great earnestness—on those who were attempting to dig out the earth. But a woman came up to him, put her hand on his shoulder, and said, "Bill, your brother is down there!" Oh! you should have seen the sudden change. Off went his coat, and then he sprang into the trench, and worked as if he had the strength of ten men. Oh, sirs, amidst the masses of the poor, and the degraded, and the lost, your brother is there!—A. G. Brown.

A CATECHISM.

Do you ever see a counterfeit ten dollar bill? Yes.

Why was it counserfeited? Because it was worth counterfeiting.

Was the ten dollar bill to blame? No.

Did you ever see a scrap of brown paper counterfeited? No.

Why? Because it was not worth counterfeiting.

Did you ever see a counterfeit Christian? Yes, lots of them.

Why was he counterfeited? Because he was worth counterfeiting.

Was he to blame? No.

Did you ever see a counterfeit infidel? No, never.

Why? You answer.

I am through.—Ex.

HOME AND HEALTH.

A CURE OF SCIATICA.—A correspondent, writing London Vanity Fair, says: "A cure for neuralgia and sciatica—and, as I am told, an unfailing one—is too valuable not to be recorded. An English officer, who served with distinction in the war with Napoleon, was once laid up in a small village in France with a severe attack of sciatica. It so happened that at that time a tinman was being employed in the house where he lodged, and this tinman having been himself a soldier, took an interest in the officer's case, and gave him the cure, which, in this instance, succeeded immediately and forever, and which I am about to set down. It is at any rate so simple as to be worth a trial. Take a moderate sized potato, rather large than small, and boil it in one quart of water. Foment the part affected, with the water in which the potato has been boiled, as hot as it can be borne, at night before going to bed; then crush the potato and put it on the affected part as a poultice. Wear this all night, and in the morning heat the water, which should have been preserved over again, and again foment the part with it as hot as it can be borne. This treatment must be persevered with for several days. It occasionally requires to be continued for as much as two or three weeks, but in the shorter or longer time it has never yet failed to be successful."

RHEUMATISM AND ITS TREATMENT.—Rheumatism, like nearly all other diseases, is, at its commencement, little more than an inconvenience that is easily arrested by simple remedies, if applied promptly.

We have seen a sharp attack of rheumatism cured in one hour, by keeping the painful part of the body as near the fire as could be borne, the object being to cause the blood to flow freely. The same thing may be accomplished by brisk rubbing, hence the success of what is known as "the movement cure."

There is no doubt that the condition of the system which favors the development of the rheumatism, may be induced by the too free use of sugar, milk, and starchy food, as white flour and potatoes.

Beneficial results usually follow the almost total abstinence from such foods. If the quantities are diminished from pounds to ounces, there is still enough left to make an attractive bill of fare, in the way of brown bread, lean meats, poultry, fish, and vegetables.

As to clothing, too much importance cannot be attached to the wearing of flannels summer and winter. They are the best protection against those changes of temperature that so often bring mischief, whether rheumatism, pneumonia or other diseases. The greatest care should be taken to have the feet always dry and warm.

But the most important of all things in the prevention and cure of this and many other diseases is frequent and active exercise in the open air. The oxygen of the air we breathe is the greatest of all purifiers. The more out-of-door exercise we take the more air we breathe; and the more air the greater the purification of the blood, and the better the health.—Hall's Journal of Health.

UNSAVORY COOKING.—Mrs. Henry Reeve, in her recently published book on "Cookery and House-keeping," tells us that we can get rid of the abominable smell of cabbage boiling, by putting in the sauce-panful of water a piece of bread tied up in a fine white rag, This simple, and to a certain extent feasible direction, is very probably based on the immemorial maxim that "bread takes,"—that is to say absorbs—"strength;" and a housewife peeling onions may often be seen to place a piece of bread on the point of the knife, in order to intercept the odor of the onion,

It may be remarked that the cooking of vegetables in France—in the northern section thereof at least—is not nearly so offensive as it is with us, for the reason that the French cook their vegetables, with the exception of asparagus, in butter, while we cook all ours in water. The "cuisine au beuerre," is also practiced by the Flemings and Germans; but in the south of France the olfactory sense is appalled by the "cuisine a l'huile," reeking not only with oil which is often rancid, but likewise with the "rank and guilty garlic." Perhaps the cleanest and most inodorous cookery in Europe is that of the Turks. The Osmanlis cook, whenever they can contrive to do so, in the open air, and their furnaces are only a heap of hot ashes piled on a marble slab. In great honses in Continental cities the kitchen is nearly always on the ground floor of the court yard towarps the street, and no kind of odor from the kitchen penetrates into the mansion.—London Telegraph.

LEMONS A CURE FOR CONSUMPTION.—A correspondent of an English medical journal fur-nishes the following recipe: tion: Put a dozen whole lemons in cold water and boil until soft (not too soft), roll and squecze until the juice is all extracted, sweeten the juice enough to be palatable, then drink. Use as many as a dozen a day. Should they cause pain or looseness of the bowels, lessen the quantity, and use five or six a day until better, then begin and use a dozen again. By the time you have used five or six dozen you will gain strength and have an appetite. Of course, as you get better you need not use so many. Follow these directions and we know you will never regret if, if there is any hope for you. Only keep it up faithfully. We know of two cases where both the patients were given up by the physicians, and were in the last stages of eonsumption, yet both were cured by the use of lemons according to the directions we have stated. One lady in particular was bed-ridden and very low; had tried everything that money could procure, but all in vain, when, to please a friend, she was finally persuaded to use the lemons. She began to use them in February, and in April she weighed 140 pounds. She is a well woman today, and likely to live as long as any of us.

CHILDREN'S CORNER.

NEVER OUT OF SIGHT.

There is a little saying
  Which you'll find is always true,
My little boy, my little girl—
  A saying that's for you;
'Tis this, my darling little one,
  With eyes so clear and bright:
"No child in all this careless world
  Is ever out of sight."

No matter whether field or glen,
  Or city's crowded way,
Or pleasure's laugh, or labor's hum,
  Entice your feet to stray;
Some one is always watching you,
  And, whether wrong or right,
No child in all this busy world
  Is ever out of sight.

Some one is always watching you,
  And marking all you do,
To see if all your childhood acts
  Are honest, brave and true;
And watchers of the heavenly world,
  God's angels, pure and white,
In joy or sorrow at your course,
  Are keeping out of sight.

Bear this in mind, my little one,
  And let your aim be high;
You do whatever you may do
  Beneath some seeing eye.
Remember this, my darling one,
  And keep your good name bright.
No child who lives upon the earth
  Is ever out of sight.

SEVENTY TIMES SEVEN.

"If thy brother tresspass against thee seven times a day," read Daisy Ford from her little Daily Food, before her on the bureau, as she brushed the snarls from her brown curls.

"If thy brother tresspass against thee seven times a day, and seven times turn unto thee, saying I repent—thou shalt forgive him."

"Oh, dear!" she exclaimed in dismay. "Must I forgive Tom seven times every day? I suppose if it says so in the Bible I must, but he is so aggravating."

And Daisy put on her collar and blue ribbons with a sigh, and went down to breakfast.

Papa and mamma were not down. Tom was over in the bay window trying to teach Rover a new trick.

"Hallo, sis!" he exclaimed, suspending operations at her entrance. "What's the matter with you? Your face's as long as the moral law with a postscript. Guess we'll have to liven her up a little, won't we, Rover? Let's go for her."

Now Rover was fresh from a long run in the grass, and it had rained in the night.

"Oh, Tom—don't! you'll soil my clean apron, and I'm all ready for school."

But she was too late, the dainty white apron was soiled and rumpled past wearing, and there was nothing left to do but go in search of a fresh one.

"I'm awful sorry. I didn't mean to do anything only wake you up a little," shouted Tom after her, as she went up-stairs.

"One"—was Daisy's only reply, softly to herself.

Tom was vexatious enough at any time, but to-day he seemed possessed.

He carried her books to school for her, and in some way lost out her paper of examples, so she had those to work over. He tipped his inkstand over her copy-book, which she was keeping so neatly for examination day. He borrowed her knife that Aunt Sue gave her on her birthday, and lost it. He put a live toad in her lunch basket. He broke the handle of here new umbrella, using it, in spite of her entreaties, as a bat.

"Can't imagine how it happened," said Tom, "hadn't the remotest idea I was using it hard enough to break it." But it was broken for all that, and Daisy picked up the pieces, saying to herself as she did so, "this makes six times."

Last, but not least, when she came home from Mamie Granger's at night, she found him chasing her pet kitten Snowball around the yard, with a tin pan tied to her tail.

"There," said Daisy, as she set the poor frightened creature at liberty, "it's been awful hard, but I'm through for one day, at any rate, for this makes seven times I've forgiven him."

Half an hour later, as she sat in the sitting-room reading, Tom put his head in at the door.

"I say, Dais, I'm no end sorry, but Snowball ran under the shed—and I tried to catch her—and—she's in a fit. I shouldn't wonder much if she was dying. Can you forgive a feller?"

"No, I can't, and I won't try to either, for this is the eighth time to-day—and I almost hate you," said Daisy, as she brushed past him.

"Come here a moment, Daisy," called mamma from her room, where she had overheard all.

"What do you mean by 'eight times'?"

"Why, mamma, you see my verse this morning said I must forgive my brother seven times a day—so I have, but this is the eighth time, and I needn't, need I?"

"Run and get your Bible," was mamma's reply, and Daisy obeyed with sudden misgivings.

Could it be she had learned the verse wrong?

"Now find Matthew 18:22," said mamma, "and read it aloud.

"Jesus said unto him, I say not uuto you, until seven times, but until seventy times seven."

"Oh, mamma, I can't do that, any way."

"How many times have you done wrong to-day?" asked mamma.

"I don't know, a good many times, I guess," Daisy replied wonderingly.

"More than 'seven' times?" continued mamma.

"I'm afraid so," said Daisy, slowly and reluctantly, as the light began to dawn upon her.

"Be ye kind to one another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you," whispered mamma, softly, leaving her to think it out by herself.

"Oh, dear, there's no end to it if you begin," she sighed.

"Even as God for Christ's sake has forgiven you. I—suppose—God always has something to forgive, too."

By-and-by, after a long time, Daisy got up, and went slowly down-stairs to the sitting-room door.

At the threshold she paused, irresolute for a few moments, then she went quietly in.

Somebody about Tom's size was all curled up on the lounge, with face buried in the pillows.

Daisy went over to him. "I didn't mean what I said, Tom. I will forgive you, and you know I don't hate you."

"You may go out and do anything you've a mind to to Rover—choke him, or drown him, or anything," said Tom in a shaky voice, from the depths of the pillows.

Rover was Tom's idol.

"But I don't wan't to do anything at all to him," replied Daisy, smiling through her tears. "I'll forgive you without; only Tom, won't you try not to plague me quite so much?" And by this time Daisy's voice shook, and her eyes overflowed as she thought of poor Snowball.

"You're a brick, Dais," said Tom, emerging from his retreat, "and I will try to treat you better."

"I say," he added, diving onee more into the pillows, "you might—have Rover, for your own, you know."

"No indeed, Tom. I won't rob you of your pet," responded Daisy promptly, and giving Tom's hand at the same time a little squeeze that told him she appreciated his offer though she refused it.

"And you won't do any more of that horrid counting, will you?" asked Tom presently.

"No," replied Daisy gravely, "I won't, because you see God don't, so I ought not to. I didn't think of that."

MOTHER'S TURN.

"It is mother's turn to be taken care of now."

The speaker was a winsome young girl, whose bright eyes, fresh color, and eager looks told of light-hearted happiness. Just out of school, she had the air of culture, which is an added attraction to a blithe young face. It was mother's turn now. Did she know how my heart went out to her, for her unselfish words?

Too many mothers, in the love of their daughters, entirely overlook the idea that they themselves need recreation. They do without all the easy, pretty and charming things, and say nothing about it; and the daughters do not think there is any self-denial involved. Jennie gets the new dress, and mother wears the old one, turned upside down and wrong side out. Lucy goes on the mountain trip, and mother stays at home and keeps house. Emily is tired of study, and must lie down in the afternoon; but mother, though her back aches, has no time for such an indulgence.

Dear girls, take good care of your mothers. Coax them to let you relieve them of some of the harder duties which for years they have patiently done.

A TOUCHING INCIDENT.—A Chinese leper girl was brought to Miss Houston by her friends, on foot, for nearly a hundred miles, that she might take her to Jesus, for him to lay his hands upon her and cure her of her leprosy. She had heard a native catechist preach on the Scripture narrative, and thought that the missionary lady at Foochow could lead her to that powerful healer. Miss Houston stated that she should never forget that poor girl's look of bitter disappointment when she explained to her that the Lord Jesus was no longer upon earth; but she hastened to tell her of his power still to heal the worst leprosy—that of the soul—and set before her "the old, old story." The leper girl remained for a short time in Foochow, before returning home, and Miss Houston had cause to rejoice over her having really found the Saviour, whom, with much simple trust, all though in iguorance, she had come to that city to seek.

The man who does the best work, other things being equal, is the one who loves his work best.

THE CHURCHES.

TOBACCO DOCTORS.

BY J. W. HODGE, M. D.

Perhaps one of the most shameful and pernicious exhibitions of modern inconsistency is furnished by the medical man who is addicted to the use of tobacco. That any human being should, with "unblushing effrontery," set himself up as an apostle of the healing art, while, at the same time, by depraved indulgences and sensual gratifications, he is habitually violating the natural laws of life and health, and setting a vicious example before a world looking to him as an exponent of physiological law, is sad evidence of professional depravity. Moreover, that such baneful incongruity between the profession and practice of the physician should be regarded generally with such unaccountable nonchalance as to be tamely tolerated by the lay public, while it merits their most indignaut censure and should provoke from them the most trenchant castigation, reminds the philanthropist that this filthy habit is one of the phases of idolatry which as yet remains uncriminated by public sentiment. That the tobacco pest is one of the most grievous scourges of modern civilization no fair-minded person in the exercise of common intelligence will attempt to deny.

The illustrious surgeon, Prof. Higginbottom, of Nottingham, England, said: "Tobacco has no redeeming property whatever, and it is a main cause of ruining our young men, and rendering useless the best efforts of ministers of the gospel. The proverbial drunkenness of our country can only be remedied by laying the axe at the root of its superinducing cause—the thirst-creating power of tobacco-smoking."

A. L. Gibbon, M. D., medical director of the Naval Academy at Annapolis, writes: "Tobacco-smoking creates a thirst for alcoholic stimulants; by its depressing and disturbing effects on the nerve centres, it determines functional disease of the heart, impairs vision, blunts the memory, and prevents mental application."

John Lizars, late Professor of Surgery in the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh, wrote: "Tobacco-smoking creates ulcers on the lips, tongue and tonsils; it produces vertigo, vomiting, dyspepsia, piles, diseased liver, congestion of the brain, apoplexy, palsy, loss of memory, insanity, blindness, deafness, aud functional disease of the heart."

Prof. Solly, senior operating surgeon at St. Thomas' Hospital, writes: "I know of no single vice which does so much harm as tobacco-smoking. It is a snare and a delusion."

In the annual report of the Pennsylvania Hospital for the Insane, published in 1876, seventeen cases of insanity are attributed to the use of tobacco.

An eminent London physician states that a large percentage of the cases of night-deaths—deaths occurring suddenly during sleep—which came under his observation, occurred in men addicted to tobacco-smoking; aud in whom, he says, death was probably induced by cardiac cessation, from the paralyzing effect of tobacco upon the nerve centres.

Quotations of this tenor from the most eminent medical authorities on both sides of the Atlantic might be multiplied almost ad in finitum. In view, then, of these appalling statements coming from the most undoubted sources of authority, should not the parents and citizens of every enlightened community awake to a just appreciation of the magnitude of this evil; and forthwith avail themselves of their rightful authority to prevent the perpetuation of such a vicious habit, by strenuously insisting, at all hazards, upon the observance of right moral and right physical habits, especially on the part of those who "set themselves up" as teachers of yonth and guardians of the public heath? In this way only can the dispersion of these baleful narcotic mists and deadly vapors from the face of society be effected.

The frightful extent to which this pernicious practice prevails at the present time is unprecedented by anything to be found in the annals of recorded time. Tobacco greets us at every corner. Puppies in the guise of officers and disguise of gentlemen, puff their foul impertinence into ladies' faces. It is scarcely possible to travel in any public conveyance without encountering the rudeness and boorishness of smokers, who have become so demoralized by their filthy habit as to ignore the proprieties of social life. As you pass along the crowded thoroughfares of our large cities, you are compelled to inhale the nauseating fumes from cigars and pipes, with the disgusting reflection that you are taking in the foul effluvia from decayed teeth, filthy mouths and diseased lungs. Here, in one great tobacco-brotherhood, united by the strongest narcotic ties, may be found scavengers, doctors, bootblacks, blackguards, and blacklegs, all champing, spitting and puffing in mutual narcotic sympathy—all breathing narcotic incense to the same licentious god.

Tobacco-smoke when drawn into the mouth absorbs the putrid emanations which it finds there and diffuses them in the atmosphere; and, moreover, data have recently been furnished by eminent pathologists, which, if they do not warrant a positive conclusion, they, at least, establish a strong probability in favor of the communicability of certain forms of malignant ulceration of the mouth and respiratory passages, by inhaling the smoke from a diseased person. Is it not an appalling reflection to think that these pestilential vapors which are ever an abomination to the lovers of pure air, and on whose lethal wings are borne at times the malignant germs of disease and death, should thus pervade the common atmosphere to which, in its native purity, all living creatures have an indefeasible right?—American Reformer.

THE CHURCHES.

—Bro. H. L. Hastings, editor of the Christian, Boston, preached to some 10,000 people on the camp ground at Greene. Rhode Island on a late Sabbath.

—Mr. Moody preached in the church founded by him years ago in this city—Chicago Avenue—on Sabbath morning and evening and addressed the Sabbath-school in the afternoon. Mr. Charles Herald led the singing and Pres. C. A. Blanchard assisted in the services. The audience was immense, some 3,500 crowding into seats, aisles, and doors. Mr. Moody preached as usual—plain, pointed, Gospel sermons intended to arouse conviction in the impenitent and lead them to Christ.

—The seventeenth anniversary exercises of the Halsted Street M. E. Sunday-school were held Sabbath afternoon. This school was founded by Mr. S. A. Kean, the banker, who is now its superintendent. It has over 1,600 enrolled scholars, and an average attendance of about 1,000. The present building is furnished by the City Missionary Society. In the evening twenty-three persons were received into full membership to the church from the Sabbath-school.

—It is understood that Mr. Moody and his co-worker Sankey will embark for Ireland October 2nd, where they will spend the winter in gospel labors.

—Rev. S. Rice of Ada, Ohio, for a time associated with Bro. T. K. Doty of Mansfield in the Christian Harvester, intends making Christian literature a special work, and will begin the publication of a paper for advocating holiness and Christian giving.

—There are about one hundred French-Canadian families at West Quincy, Mass., the men being at work in the quarries. Religious services are sustained among them (Baptist) under the direction of Mr. James Robert, who was converted from Roman Catholicism a few months since, and was baptized by Rev. Dr. F. M. Ellis, and received into the Union Temple church, Boston. Seven of the Catholics at West Quincy have also professed conversion and been baptized. An effort is now being made to erect a chapel there.

—The Congregational churches of the various Australian colonies held a conference or jubilee at Sydney, Australia, May 15–23, in celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the introduction of Congregationalism into that quarter of the world. New South Wales, Victoria, Queensland, and New Zealand were represented. Plans were formed for starting a weekly Congregational newspaper to represent all the colonies, and a large impulse seems to have been given to foreign mission work. At the close of the jubilee a series of special meetings was undertaken throughout the churches of Australia, especially in the interest of paying off church debts.

—At the meeting of the Chicago Congregational ministers Sept. 10, Rev. James Powell, Secretary of the Am. Missionary Association, was then called upon for his vacation experiences, and entertained the meeting for an hour with an account of his rambles and observations in England, France, Switzerland and Italy. He regards England as foremost in point of intelligence and education. Switzerland second, France third, and Italy fourth. This opinion he founded upon the educational statistics of the countries mentioned, which showed one-sixth of the population of England in school. In Switerland there is one-seventh, in France one-eighth, and in Italy one-fourteenth. The percentage in school decreases in proportion to the increase of Catholicism. Speaking of temperanee, he said there was none in France, but in England he noticed a gratifying increase in the number of total abstinence men. No wine or beer was served at the meeting of the Congregational Union this year.

—The American Home Missionary Society has just appointed agents for Florida, Southern California, New Mexico and Arizona, and Washington Territory. Discovering that there were about 10,000 Scandinavians in San Francisco and vicinity, the Society has appointed Rev. T. T Frickstad General Missionary for this work, and now there is a call for seventy more men, for places which are waiting for them to-day.

—The Inter-Ocean of Saturday has the following note respecting the approaching Congregational Council: "It may be interesting for many Congregationalists to know there is a probability that there will be no National Council held this year, despite the fact that the season for this triennial gathering is at hand. The arrangements, in charge of Dr. Quint, the general statistician, and editor of the Year Book, have not been brought to that pitch of perfection to give hope of realizing a successful council. Indeed, many of the Boston brethren advocate the postponement until another year of the council. With the Advance of this city, the Boston Congregationalist agrees that the best action under the circumstances is postponement. It is said that Dr. Quint, who is not now an acting pastor, was more or less absorbed watching the play of Senatorial lightning during the recent long and protracted election in New Hampshire, where in Dover, he resides. Concord is the place selected by the committee as the scene of the council should the latter be held." If Dr. Quint's political aspirations so interfere with the affairs of the churches is anyone foolish enough to believe that his Freemasonry is a less incumbrance?

—Queen Victoria, as Empress of India, rules over more Mohammedan subjects than does the Sultan of Turkey, and the Mohammedans in India are only one to four of the Hindus. For the transformation of this vast body of people, there are numerous and powerful agencies at work. From a report just published, it appears that the London Tract Society alone expends over $20,000 on India. In 33 of the native languages is has published as many as 100,000,000 copies of 5,000 different works, and, to judge from the report, it has not done so in vain. In 1851 there were about 100,000 native Christians in India; in 1861 there were 200,000; in 1871 there were 300,000; in 1881 the number had reached 530,000.

—The First Congregational church of Peoria, of which Dea. Moses Pettengill is among the first and largest supporters, has dedicated its new and beautiful house of worship. This house has been some seven or eight years in process of erection. It is built of a gray-colored sand stone, and is massive and cathedral-like in its appearance. It is 70x130 feet. The main audience room is one of the finest and most convenient to be found in the State. It is finished in solid black walnut, and has galleries on all sides. The seating capacity is 850, while, with chairs, over 1,000 can be accommodated. The entire cost has been a little upward of $93,000, and is all paid. The dedication services were conducted by the pastor, Rev. E. Frank Howe, who preached the sermon from 1 Chronicles 29: 16–17. He was assisted by the former pastor, Rev. A. A. Stevens, who is greatly beloved by the people, and is spending his days very happily among them. The organ is a memorial of him and bears his name upon its front. Rev. Mr. Bruee of the First Presbyterian church was present, and took part in the services. This church is the largest in Central Illinois, numbering over 400 members. It has been reported that partor Howe was an active member of the Masonic lodge, which we are assured is a mistake. He was onee a Freemason, but long ago left that company for a better.

—At the recent convention of the Newfoundland Sunday-schools, an increase in Sunday-school membership was reported of from four to five thousand over last year's report. The island now has about 25,000 members in its Sunday-schools. The convention was encouraging and well attended.

—At the Irish Methodist Conference, held a few weeks ago, Dr. William Butler, General Superintendent of the Methodist Missions in Mexico, gave cheering news from that country. He said Mexico was now the most Protestant of all Roman Catholic countries. He remembered when General Santa Anna was Dictator of Mexico, and when no Bible or missionary could enter the land. He had lived to see that man degraded, and visited him with some American gentlemen, and found him in a state of great poverty, in a poor street, supported by a pittance from his clerical friends. There was now no nun or convent, monk or monastery, or Jesuit in all that land. The country was now open to all evangelical churches. He had purchased the Convent of San Francisco, which was built on the site of the old palace of Montezuma, and there the mission had a chapel, school, and book concern. He had also purchased for $10,000 the Inquisition, where the awful cruelties common to such places had been practiced. In that place they now had an institution for training young men for the ministry.

—The American Bible Society, in order to keep up with the demand caused by its general canvass of the country, is turning out more books than ever before, the number being not less than 7,000 a day. It has printed 850,000 of its popular twenty-five cent Bible, and 1,850,000 of its five-cent Testament. The society has now 348 colporteurs, in thirty-four States and Territories, engaged in this re-supply of the country. About one family of six, on the average, is found destitute of the Scriptures, the largest destitution being in the Southern States.

—Sarah P. Brigham writing from Saratoga, N. Y., to the Watchman, says: Those who imagine Saratoga is wholly devoted to gaiety and fashion will be surprised to see how well the daily prayer-meeting is attended. Many clergymen are here taking their annual vacation, and there is no lack of clerical talent and religious fervor in these meetings. Sunday is surprisingly well observed, and the churches are usually well attended. All denominations are represented, and rare religious privileges can be gained here, if one wishes to take advantage of them.

—The Roman Catholics and Protestants of Spencer, Mass., have invited Father O'Connor, pastor of the Independent Catholic church in New York city, to hold services in that town. In order that people of all denominations might hear him he preaches in the M. E. church in the morning, in the Congregational church in the afternoon, and in the Town Hall in the evening. On Monday and Tuesday evenings of this week he will hold special conferences in the same town for the enlightenment and conversion of Roman Catholics, and the best means to be adopted in preaching the Gospel to them.

THE CHRISTIAN CONVENTION.

The convention which is being held this week in Farwell Hall, Chicago, led by Moody and Sankey, has before it the following topics for discussion:

1. How to interest and set at work the lay element of our churches.
2. What shall be done to secure a more general attendance of the people upon public worship.
3. The importance of systematic visitation.
4. The value of neighborhood prayer-meetings. How to organize and conduct them.
5. How can our devotional meetings be made more interesting and profitable?
6. How can the personal and social study of God's word be increased?
7. How may Christians be made to feel their privilege and responsibility as stewards of the property which they hold, and be influenced to use it in the Lord's service?
8. What are the great hindrances to the progress of Christ's kingdom, and how can they be removed?
9. What can the laity of our churches do for Christ?
10. How can the influence of Christian homes be increased?
11. How can we best reach and influence those who habitually neglect the sanctuary?
12. How can we best secure a preparation for Christ's work?
13. What are the best methods of organizing and developing the Christian activity of the entire membership of a church?
14. How may music be best used and controlled in promoting worship and spreading the Gospel?
15. How may our foreign population be evangelized?

—A correspondent of the Interior writes from Canton, China, that the decline of idolatrous worship is so evident as to be observed by non-Christians as well as by Christians. The decrease of worshipers at the prominent temples is marked. These temples are leased to companies who receive the proceeds of worship, paying sometimes six or seven thousand dollars yearly rent. Now the leases go a begging, so great has been the decline of income. The widespread preaching of the Gospel is affirmed to be the cause of this change.

THE

CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE

A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

It is now owned and published by the

IN BRIEF.

An educational convention will be held at Louisville, Ky., on September 19th, the object of which is to consider the question of popular education in the South; how best to promote its interests, and from what source the needed funds may be derived with which to advance its standard to the requirements of the times. It is said that the prevailing sentiment of the convention will be in favor of federal aid to education.

A somewhat singular story about a younger son of the Duke of Argyll is going the rounds. It seems he wished to marry an untitled lady, and not unnaturally asked his father's consent to that step. The Duke replied that personally he had no objection to the match; but, in view of the fact that his eldest son had espoused a daughter of the Queen, he thought it right to take Her Majesty's pleasure on the subject before expressing his formal approval, Her Majesty, thus appealed to, observed that since the death of the Prince Consort she had been in the habit of consulting the Duke of Saxe-Coburg on all family affairs. The matter was therefore referred to Duke Ernest, who replied that since the unification of Germany he had made it a rule to ask for the Emperor's opinion on all important questions. The case now came before the Kaiser, who decided that, as a constitutional sovereign, he was bound to ascertain the views of his Prime Minister. Happily for the now anxious pair of lovers, the Iron Chancellor had no wish to consult anybody, and decided that the marriage might take place.

—Sydney Smith said to his vestry, in reference to a block pavement proposed to be built around St. Paul's, "All you have to do, gentlemen, is to put your heads together, and the thing is done.

—The colored people of Georgia claim that they pay taxes on property valued at $10,000,000, and have a colored majority in sixty counties. This is not such a bad showing for a people who for generations have been bought and sold in the market with cotton and cattle.

—A crowd of people were upon the ferry-bridge at the landing at New Brighton, S. I., on Sunday afternoon, when Edgar Brown, a deck hand, tried to lower it. The extra weight of the people caused the wheel to fly from his grasp. One of the spokes struck him in the face, tearing away part of his cheek and a piece of his upper jaw, and another spoke of the swiftly revolving wheel broke Brown's shoulder bone. Although almost unconscious, the injured man reached over and dropped the ratchet pin into the cog that holds the wheel in place, thereby checking the fall of the bridge, after which he fell back insensible. Had it not been for Brown's bravery and presence of mind, a large number of people would have been thrown into the Kill von Kull, at a place where the tide runs at the rate of five miles an hour. This is heroism.

—A friend who dabbles in stocks walked into a well-known banking house the other day and created considerable excitement by remarking: "I got a pretty good thing last winter. It was 34 then, and to-day it stands at 95." "Well, I should say so!" exclaimed the senior partner. "But what was it?" "It was a thermometer," replied the speculator.

"HOLDEN WITH CORDS."

This story recently appeared as a serial in the Christian Cynosure, and is now fittingly put into a neat book of nearly 400 pages. It is a hard hit at Freemasonry. In an incidental way the story tells much about the manner of conducting lodges, and much about the spirit and methods of Masonry. The story covers the period of the abduction and murdering of William Morgan. The strategic position from which the author writes puts a charm in the book, while it gives a good opportunity to show the workings of the order. We wish all the people would read it.—Religious Telescope.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

FARM NOTES.

It is said that the saving of half a cent a bushel in gathering the corn crop of Kansas would be an aggregate economy of nearly three quarters of a million dollars.

It is said that vine-cuttings grafted on the cactus that grows in our Western desert will thrive and grow productively, despite the want of rain in those regions. This is important if true, and stranger things have come to pass. This presents the idea of making the desert blossom like the rose in a new fashion.

It is shown by experiments that the appearance of the tops of potatoes do not indicate the quantity of tubers. The earliest formations can be obtained from shoots planted as seed. Cutting to one eye to the piece will produce lateness of formation and smaller and fewer tubers. When cut large it will produce better. If cut large and deep it will produce the earliest, largest, and greatest quantity to the stalk, with the most uniformity. Cutting in halves shortens the vegetating eye and produces tubers of ununiform size.

Washing harness with warm water and soap soon injures the leather, All varnishes and blacking containing the properties of varnish are injurious. When harness becomes rusty give it a new coat of grain black. Before applying this wash the grain side of the leather with potash water cold, until all the grease is removed. After the leather is quite dry apply the grain black, and then oil and tallow. This fastens the color and makes the harness flexible and soft. Grained harness can be cleaned by a cloth moistened with kerosene but should be immediately washed and oiled afterward.

FOOD FOR SHEEP.—Where sheep are kept for the double purpose of direct income in wool, mutton, etc., and the manure they make, it is important that the extra food, or that outside of what the pasture furnishes, should be chosen with care. It would be wise for the American farmer to become better acquainted with cotton-seed cake, linseed-oil cake, and like concentrated foods. By feeding, and feeding liberally, of such foods, the sheep not only grow rapidly, but the manure they make is rich in nitrogenous matters and valuable fertiliziag salts. The growth of animals is a means to an end, and when the most money is made from the flock, and the land enriched, the most rapidly the end is gained. The profit of sheep as fertilizers depends largely upon the kind of food that is used.

EARLY GREENS FOR NEXT SPRING.

The city markets in the early part of spring, and often in a mild spell in winter, abound in "greens," and there is no reason why these should not be equally abundant on every farm. Where the meat served is to a great extent salted, green vegetables are not only acceptable, but necessary to health. Cabbage is for many so indigestible, that it cannot be eaten, and where this difficulty does not exist, a variety is always welcome. Spinach, the most delicate and palitable of all the vegetables used as greens, can be raised on any good farm land, and with very little trouble. The soil being well prepared by the use of the plow and harrow, mark it off in fifteen-inch drills, and sow the seed rather thickly, covering it with about half an inch of soil. Use a roller, or pat the soil down firmly with the hoe or back of the spade. Some carefully go over the rows and tread down the soil over them. The fall rains soon bring up the plants; they will grow rapidly and be large enough to gather in September or October. For use at this time, the plants, where they are thickest, are to be cut out at intervals, using a stout knife, leaving the remainder room to grow. Where the winters are severe, scatter straw, leaves or other litter between the rows, and slightly cover the plants. As soon as the ground thaws, cuttings may be made. and if this is done so as to thin the plants a second time, the rest will grow all the larger, and be ready to use later. "Sprouts," as it is called in the market, is a variety of kale, a cabbage that does not head. This is culivated in the same manner as spinach. If a farmer finds that he has more spinach than can be consumed at home, a few barrels of it will meet with a ready sale at the nearest market.—American Agriculturist for August.

DR. JOHN BULL'S

Smith's Tonic Syrup

FEVER and AGUE

Or CHILLS and FEVER.

AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient.

The genuine SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP must have DR. JOHN BULL'S private stamp on each bottle. DR. JOHN BULL only has the right to manufacture and sell the original JOHN J. SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP, of Louisville, Ky. Examine well the label on each bottle. If my private stamp is not on each bottle do not purchase, or you will be deceived.

FULL OF GRAND IDEAS.

"Masonry and Mormonism are political engines with religious driving wheels. Their conductors are kings; their engineers, priests; their motive power, popular depravity combined with popular conscience, and their practical end is the luxury and power of leaders who form men's interests for eternity that they may tax and govern them in time."

The above is a sample of the vigorous and striking thoughts, the grand ideas of which the pamphlet on the Batavia Convention is full. Get this book by all means. Price, post paid, 25 cents each.

NIGHTS IN A BAR-ROOM

T. S Arthur's great temperance book. complete and illustrated. By mail, 5c each; 50c per doz. By express, $3.50 per 100.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC THE GREAT SOURCE OF CRIME.

Leaves from the diary of an old lawyer.—By Hon. A. B Richmond, author of "Court and Prison," etc. A book of intense interest, rivaling the famous "Diary of a Physician," and, in its truthful, terrible pictures of the power and crime of intemperance, excelling the well-known "Ten Nights in a Bar-room." The temperance issue of the present time is Shall prohibition be partial or entire? Shall the branches of the death-bearing tree be pruned and trimmed, or shall the tree itself be cut down and its stump be torn up by the roots? The answer of "Leaves from the Diary" is, "Cut down the tree, tear up the roots, leave not a shoot or shred behind." It is certainly a very strong and eloquent volume Complete edition on fine, heavy paper, with colored lithograph of Sewall's stomach plates By mail, 30c each, $3 per doz. By express, $20 per 100. Abridged edition, by mail, 15c; $1.25 per doz. By express, $9 per 100.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC AND THE SOBER CITIZEN.

An able and telling work, by Rev. J. H. Sherman which brings out the effects of the liquor traffic in a new light. The following are some of the commendations of the first edition

"The author drives the nails of conviction through and clinches them."—N. Y. Christian Advocate.

"Speakers and workers in the temperance field will find valuable aid in this pamphlet. It is crowded with convincing facts "—Zion's Herald

"One of the ablest reviews of the drink curse ever issued from the press."—The Morning and Day of Reform.

"The arguments are put in telling form."—Judge Pittman.

New revised and enlarged edition. By mail, 10c each, $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100.

DRINKS FROM DRUGS.

A startling exposure of the liquor traffic, by El. Johnson. A book that cannot fail to arouse the American people to the gigantic swindle now being perpetrated. The writer was offered $10,000 by a leading brewer to keep still. Liquor not only doctored, but made entirely from drugs. Extracts from a whole library of secret books, giving receipts for making and doctoring; advertisements of essences fac similes of labels, engravings, etc. etc. Claret. port, sherry, champagne, whisky, brandy, gin, rum, etc., all out of one barrel. and made at less than 25 cents a quart. Wine that never saw grape juice; cider that never saw apples; beer factories in place of breweries, fine cream ale without barley or brewing; whisky from arsenic; millions of gallons of liquor that pays no revenue tax. The farmer's corn and barley "all in your eye." A wholesale liquor store in a ten-foot square cellar; more French wine sold in New York City than is produced in the whole of France. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By Express, $6 per 100.

W. C. T. U. ORGANIZATION AND WORK.

A book of general information on how to organize and run successfully a Woman's Christian Temperance Union. This book should be widely distributed among W. C. T. U. presidents, pastor's wives and other representative women. By mail, 10c each; $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100.

HOME PROTECTION.

A lawyer's view of it. By J. C. Wells, attorney-at-law. The question of female suffrage for the protection of home ably discussed from a lawyer's standpoint. A book for the times. By mail. 10c each; $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100.

BAND OF HOPE RECITERS.

172 pages. 164 choice recitations of poetry and prose, containing some of the choisest bits of temperance material for the platform ever uttered, accompanied by an article on elocution. By mail, 10c each. $1 per doz. By express, $6 per 100.

GENERAL TEMPERANCE SONG BOOK.

"Temperance Songs," a Book for Adult Societies.—Eighty-three choice pieces, both words and music (old and new tune combination) choice selections from standard temperance collections, many choice new pieces. Book carefully edited by David C. Cook. Will prove just what is wanted by every temperance society Price in strong cardboard covers, by mail, 10c each; $1 per dozen; by express $5 per 100.

TEMPERANCE ANTHEM BOOK.

Temperance Anthems.—A new idea; nothing else of the kind in existence. Will insure good music by the choir at temperance meetings. Forty-eight pages of choice anthems by ablest writers By mail, 15c each; $1.50 per doz. By express, $10 per 100.

BAND OF HOPE SONG BOOK.

Band of Hope Songs.—Fifty-seven choice pieces for juvenile temperance gatherings, Bands of Hope, etc. Old, familiar tunes, also choice new words and music Words far in advance of anything else issued. By mail, 8c each; 75c per doz. By express, $4 per 100.

DANIEL'S BAND.

A temperance concert exercise, with parts suitable for all ages; entirely new. Songs, recitations, dialogues, etc., of a thoroughly aggressive character; sure to carry weight with the rendering of it. By mail, 5c each; 50c per dozen, By express, $2 per 100.

THE COLD WATER ARMY.

For a primary temperance concert exercise. An entirely new exercise, containing songs and recitations, dialogues, etc., suitable for primary scholars. A pleasing and telling concert on temperance. By mail, 5c each; 50c per dozen. By express, $2 per 100.

For $2.50 The same style of binding, medium size. Postage, 12c.

THE PERSIAN SEAL BINDING

Is very handsome and durable. It is this style of binding which is so much admired by Bible readers. Please notice particularly that these Bibles are kid lined and silk sewed. Many Bibles in this style outwardly are lined with black paper and sewed with thread in place of silk.

For $3.30 The same style of binding, medium size. Postage, 12c.

For $5.75 The same style of binding, large size. Postage, 20c.

LEVANT MOROCCO BINDING.

The Persian Seal bindings are the best kept by most Bible dealers, and usually pass for the best teachers' Bibles made; and, to all appearance, they are so. There is, however, a better wearing binding, of which the Persian Seal is a good imitation; this is known as "Levant Morocco" In all respects the Levant morocco Bible corresponds with the Persian Seal description, except as to leather used for cover which, though looking like the Persian Seal, is stronger, and will last a lifetime.

Prices on genuine Levant Morocco bindings:

For $4.50—Small size. Postage, 10c.
For $5.50—Medium size. Postage, 12c.
For $8.00—Large size. Postage, 20cts.

Handsome Gift Bibles at Low Prices.

For 45c. Embossed morocco cover, gilt edges, gilt title on back. Very neat and durable. This is the handsomest 45c. gift Bible we have ever seen. Postage, 5c.

For 60c. Morocco cover, brass bound and plated, with handsome gilt clasp and gilt edges; two patterns; square and round corners. Exquisite lettering on side; printed in large clear type. Bibles no better are sold as high as $1 and $2. Postage, 6c.

For 70c. Similar size and style of binding to our 60-cent Bible; square corners, brass bound, with clasp and handsome tasseled book-mark; also medallion inserted on side in gold and red.

This was a new importation with the fall of 1882, and a very pretty design. It should be seen to be appreciated. (See cut.) Postage, 6c.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

—It is said the inadvertence of Congress in making the bill regulating postmasters' salaries go into effect at once instead of Oct. 1, the date fixed for the reduction in letter postage, will cost the government $1,5000,000

—Returns to the Agricultural Department at Washington show that the corn crop average since the first of August fell off ten points; and because of an early wet season, short, dry summer, and early frosts, a full yield is impossible. The report on "harvested wheat" shows a reduction in product of 17 per cent, or 86,000,000 bushels less than last year's yield.

—On the Long Island Railroad, near Montauk Junction, a collision between passenger trains occurred Wednesday evening, by which two persons were killed and eight wounded. Both trains were filled with passengers, many being on their way home from the Sheepshead Bay races.

—A bill for the incorporation of the Southern Pacific Company is pending in the New Hampshire Legislature. The scheme of the parties interested is a consolidation of all the railroad and steamboat lines in Texas and Louisiana, the aggregate capital of which would exceed $50,000,000, and own besides, 6,000,000 acres of Texas lands.

—The Western Union Telegraph Company has declared a dividend of 1¾ per cent. The gross earnings of the conpany for the fiscal year ending June 30th were $19,454,902, and the net profits, $7,660,349.

—Latest storm advices from Newfoundland report the wrecks by the rccent great gale of three additional vessels, and the drowning ot sixteen men. Two craft were seen, one on its beam ends and the other bottom up.

—The papers say that Wittenberg celebrated on Thursday the quatre-centenary of Martin Luther's birth. Fifty thousand visitors thronged the streets, which were appropriately decorated, and fine weather prevailed. The Crown Prince of Germany opened Luther Hall, placed a laurel wreath upon the great refromer's grave, and delivered an address, exhorting the people to uphold and defend the evangelical faith. Lectures on Luther's life and works were delivered in various parts of the town, and there were banquets and other festivities in the evening. But according to the authorities Luther was born Nov. 10th.

—A woman named Giroux, of East Templeton, Canada, locked her children, aged 4 and 2, in the house while she went to milk a cow. Returning shortly after she found the house on fire and ingress impossible. The building was soon reduced to ashes, and not the slightest trace of the children could be found.

—The peasants between Glina and Petrinia in Crotia are in full rebellion. The movement is directed chiefly against the land-owners. A strong military force has been dispatched to the scene of the disturbance.

—At the meeting Friday of the French Cabinet, Challemel-Lacour said negotiations with the Chinese Embassador were progressing favorably. The ministers decided in favor of a conciliatory policy, but indorsed the forwarding of re-enforcements to Tonquin.

—Between Hanoi and Santay, in Tonquin, Sept. 1–3, the French forces engaged in a conflict with the Black Flags, the latter being protected by casement forts. On the third day the French carried the enemy's work by a bayonet charge, killing 500 of the Black Flags. The French loss was five officers and fifty-four men killed and wounded.

—A dispatch from Hong Kong, Sept. 11, states that a Chinese mob at Canton burned the houses of several European merchants and also their wharves, causing great consternation among foreign residents, most of whom sought refuge aboard vessels in the river. No violence was offered to persons, and a force of Chinese troops was called out which quickly dispersed the rioters. The riot was caused by a number of Portuguese sailors killing a Chinaman in an affray. The rioting caused a great sensation in all circles, and will, it is feared, result in a collision between the French and Chinese. Two war steamers started from Hong Kong to protect life and property at Canton.

—At Jakoboracz, Croatia, soldiers fired into a concourse of rioters, fifteen of whom were killed and several wounded. The disturbances are increasing, amounting almost to a revolt, and an additional military force is needed. Premier Tisza, of Hungary, had a stormy interview Thursday with the Croatian Notables, at which they promised to fulfill certain conditions not divulged.

—It is stated that both France and China earnestly desire peace. England is tiying her utmost to secure harmony, and Lord Lyons, Embassador at Paris, has spoken strongly to the French Foreign Minister of the danger to commercial interests should war be proclaimed. It is announced, also, that Challemel-Lacour will take a furlough, and the French Premier, Ferry, will assume the functions of his office in the interim.

For seven hours Wednesday the wind blew at the rate of ninety-three miles per hour at Smithvilie, N. C., unroofing dwellings and destroying the wharves and fisheries. Few of the vessels in the harbor held their anchorage.

—Mr. Collins, a student in Lehigh University, at Bethlehem, Pa, was visited by a hazing party of sophomores Wednesday night, and to escape them, jumped from his window eighteen feet to the ground, fracturing the bones of his leg and receiv ing other severe injurles.

Brain worry kills many thousands every year. Dr. Benson's Celery and Chamomile Pills the remedy.

IT WILL PAY TO READ IT.

The speech of Hon. S. C. Pomeroy in Farwell Hall is in pamphlet form. It is a clear, practical discussion of the living questions of the hour, presenting in brief the claims of God to recognition in civil government, reasons for prohibition, and the abolition of the entire lodge system. It is a campaign document that should be not only read but studied by every voter in America.

THE NOYES PORTABLE BOOK CASE.

Holds not only 30 to 50 volumes, but the Unabridged Dictionary, the latter either opened or closed. It is made of dark cherry or black walnut, elegantly finished, and being on casters is practically a Revolving Book Case. Lawyers, ministers, doctors and scholars have found that it fills "the long felt want," and others, with fewer books, find it an ample Book Case. It has attachments for holding large atlases and magazines, also a Reading Machine which removes that embargo on reading, the task of holding up a heavy book by the hour, and makes reading, and study so easy that there is no excuse for ignorance. The "Machine" holds the book by the covers; the leaves are held open with a Leaf Holder, which, by a touch, can be removed or replaced. The book tilts to any angle and is pivoted to turn to any position. A Clamp attaches it to a table or desk. An Extension Arm connects it with the book case or your easy chair, for which purpose attachments are always provided. This elegant outfit is sold at a remarkably low price. Send for circular.

THE PUREST IS THE BEST.

In the selection of SUNDAY-SCHOOL PAPERS, the most important point to be considered is the moral tone of the subject matter. If this is of a questionable character, the papers should be shunned, no matter how large, how attractive, or how low the price. Such papers are

COSTLY AT ANY PRICE.

The country is being flooded with S. S. literature that is largely composed of what may be properly termed "RELIGIOUS FICTION," the tendency of which is to create a distaste for sound reading and foster an appetite for fiction of a more deleterious character.

The engravings of these papers are equally objectionable. In many cases a lady or girl dressed in the height of fashion is made the HEROINE OF A STORY, thus putting the highest sanction to extravagance and pride. With such instructors in our Sunday-schools we cannot expect the children to grow up with a love for sound literature and with correct ideas of Christian propriety. With a view of supplying S. S. papers, of a pure and elevating character, the publishers are issuing

FOUR MONTHLY PAPERS.

They are FREE FROM FICTION, and the cuts are chosen with great care. While they are thus carefully edited, they are not lacking in attractiveness. They are well printed on beautiful tinted paper. The children are delighted with them. The very low price at which this line of S. S. papers is issued, places them within the reach of even schools of limited means
